Perhaps the biggest events on television to occurr over winter break were shown on the official day that UMass opened its doors. Since mid-December, the bets had been high as were the hopes for some sports fans. Rooting for their NFL picks to come through and earn their spot at the Super Bowl, enhancing bragging rights regarding, 1.) "This was indeed the year," 2.) "I told you so," 3.) "I've been a fan from the beginning. I've never jumped on a bandwagon. How can you say that? Can't you give me one team in one sport? After all, I'm a f#$@ing Red Sox fan!!" Whatever your argument was, the football world was surprised when not only were the reigning champs and season favorites St. Louis Rams eliminated, but also the NY Giants had indeed made it to Tampa Bay. After all, how could a team who the previous year had won most of their games through defensive touchdowns make it to the Big Game? But if you are reading this column for a detailed analysis of the game, then stop right now. If you want to read about sports strategy flip to the back page. We've got bigger fish to fry.

First of all, what the hell was up with that half-time show? I'll skip the Backstreet Boys singing the national anthem, because that was actually enjoyable (not many people can screw up the national anthem...with the exception of Roseanne and the Baha Men). Where does *N'Sync get off trying to croon with Aerosmith? Steven Tyler could be these kids' grandfather. Stick to your own songs gentlemen, and don't mess with the musical perfection that is "Walk this Way" and "Dude Looks Like a Lady." And just when I thought Aerosmith was about to shove these kids off-stage, out comes Britney Spears, in her popgoddess glory, wearing a sock. Not just a sock (why would I be complaining about that?) but with her usual tight t-shirt and spandex ensemble, she wore a sweat sock on one arm. Now this is a new one: the girl who stripped in front of MTV in a skin colored, skin tight jump suit and whose performance at the American Music Awards reminded me of a playground filled with hookers and table dancers, now wears a long gym sock on her arm. I wonder how many little Britney-ites in middle America were sporting that look on Monday morning.

But despite the appearance by Britney and *N'Sync, the absolute odd-man-out was Nelly. Don't get me wrong; I like Nelly. In my mind it doesn't get any better than when he sings "E-1," and apparently he likes the sound of it too. After his verse in "Walk this Way," for no apparent reason, "E-1" was repeated more than once. The thing this half-time show had going for it was the fact that it wasn't last year's half time show, which consisted of Christina Aguilera singing amongst a Disney-inspired backdrop which resembled wood nymphs on crack.

Much like the game itself, the commercials were both boring and uninteresting for a majority of the time. There were some standout ads, but the most creative efforts that ran last year were the product of dot-com businesses trying their hardest to be taken seriously in the new millennium. Last year over twenty e-businesses debuted ads during the football extravaganza, which has always been known for smart, expensive and funny ads. Sites like Pets.com and E*trade showed smart and funny commercials, but cost over a million dollars per spot. And although E*trade is still around (despite the lack of air they received during this years game), sites like Pets.com and many of the others went under toward the end of 2000's fiscal year. So this year only three dot-com ads ran national campaigns. Cingular.com was one of the spots sporting the idea that everyone should express themselves as they see fit. Another popular ad was EDS's running of the squirrels, a take on the infamous running of the bulls using squirrels and the madness that surrounds them. EDS was also responsible for the cat herder commercial last year, that, like this year's ad, was funny but unsuccessful in representing their service to the consumer. The winner this year was, without a doubt, Budweiser, influencing millions more to drink their product in excess. One ad featured the comedian Cedric the Entertainer who, while doing a happy dance because he is about to be kissed by the woman in his living room, shakes up a beer and sprays it in her face. The other Bud commercial, which I particularly enjoyed, was their take on the popular and overly played "Whazzup" commercials. Using upper-class people using the phrase "What are you doooooing"? Their response was, "Drinking an import." Meanwhile the "Whazzup" cast stares in disbelief.

After the post-game show that saw the new world champion Baltimore Ravens, CBS aired the first episode of Survivor II. The show, which gained enormous ratings and appeal during the summer for CBS, has now gone into its second season. Taking place in the Australian Outback (according to sources in the Northern part of Queensland), contestants began their quest to outwit, outplay and outlast. Although I couldn't tell much from the first episode, the chemistry between the teams seems like it could be just as enjoyable as the first and the now infamous "alliance" strategy. We saw Deb who began plotting against another Islander because he was sick and "I feel bad for him." However, the plan backfired and every other member of the tribe voted her off. The biggest problem I have with this new season is that it seems that more money was set aside, as it's more of a production than the last one was.

What to Watch

Not only does NBC start a whole new month of our favorite shows, but for those "Friends" fanatics out there, ten extra minutes have been added to each show and the later part of the hour will be filled up by a special twenty minute "Saturday Night Live." Also, "The Mole" is without a doubt ten times better than "Survivor." And for the ultimate voyeur experience watch "Temptation Island." Don't forget this Saturday's premiere of the XFL. I'll be watching. Will you?

Xbox set to battle Dreamcast and Playstation2

By Ed Ronco
The State News (Michigan State U.)

(U-WIRE) EAST LANSING, Mich. – If you build it, they will come. A crowd of almost 400 people gathered in Anthony Hall on Tuesday night to see a demonstration of the Microsoft Xbox, a gaming console developed by the Seattle-based computer company.

The presentation, hosted by Michigan State University's chapter of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, discussed the technical specifications of the Xbox and the process that went into building it.

Andy Kim, president of the group, said he feels the event was a success.

"It was a great presentation," said Kim, an electrical engineering junior. "Probably the largest one all year."

The Xbox is set to debut in the United States this fall. Developer Dan Rosenstein couldn't say much more than that.

Rosenstein said crucial details, such as price, are not being disclosed by Microsoft, but he is predicting a huge public reaction when the system goes on sale.

"People get very passionate about (new gaming systems)," Rosenstein said. "They want to be the first to have it."

The Xbox operates at 733 megahertz, while the Sony PlayStation 2 operates at 294.912.

During the presentation, Rosenstein showed a video demonstrating the graphic capabilities of the Xbox. The video included a scene with hundreds of computer-generated butterflies, each one generating its own shadow.

Ten-year-old Karl Hackman of Laingsburg said he was excited about the Xbox.

"It was cool," Hackman said. "It's good that it's fast. I don't like systems that are slow."

Hackman, who said he does most of his gaming on a Nintendo 64, plans on asking for the Xbox next Christmas.

But not everyone had the same glowing reaction to the Xbox system. Alok Sharma thinks the system may not garner the huge response Microsoft is expecting.

"I'm skeptical," the electrical engineering junior said. "Microsoft can market to tech-heads all they want, but when little kids buy it, that's the question."

Sharma described the presentation as "great," but he calls the Xbox a "big kids' game system."

He also noted that its advanced graphics may not be appealing to users of all ages.

But that doesn't deter Kim.

"The games are going to be unbelievable," he said.

COURTESY OF JOE KUSHICK

UMASS MUSIC
Umass Professor Estela Olevsky, piano, will be performing the third in a series of four piano recitals on Sunday, February 11, at 3pm in Bezanson Recital Hall.

Minuteman focus set on securing tenth win

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team returns to action on Saturday afternoon when it travels to Bronx, N.Y. to take on the Fordham Rams. The Minutemen will be looking to erase the memory of their 162.5-135.5 defeat by Rutgers on Senior Day last Saturday and maintain their slim lead in the Atlantic 10.

If the Minutemen (9-4) want to pick up their tenth win of the season, they will need yet another inspired performance from senior Chris Arsenault. Arsenault, the reigning A-10 Performer of the Week, has won at least one individual event in every meet this season and holds the top time for UMass in five events. Last weekend Arsenault was the only Minuteman to win multiple events, taking both the 100-meter freestyle and the 100-meter butterfly.

Coach Russ Yarworth will also need another big performance from sophomore Tommy Keane if the Minutemen are to defeat the Rams. Keane took the 200-meter freestyle last weekend against Rutgers and was the A-10 Performer of the Week two weeks ago for his performance against George Washington and the University of Maryland Baltimore County.

Fordham (7-6) is trying to get back into the A-10 race and a win against UMass would do wonders to help that cause. However, if the Rams are to be victorious they will need strong performances from the triumvirate of Ben Chisolm, Lance Iochims and Keanan Farrag. These three have the top times for Fordham in 10 of 13 individual events.

The meet will probably come down to which team can perform better in the diving events. UMass freshman Logan Alomar has lead all Minutemen divers this season and will need another strong showing to beat Fordham star John Peter Spear. Like Alomar, Spear has the top score in both the one and three-meter events for the Rams. If Alomar can defeat Spear on Saturday then the Minutemen should be victorious.

It's important for me to get a win but overall I think the team is strong and we can win even if I don't," Alomar said. "I'm just looking to do the best I can and hopefully we'll get the win."

The other freshman who has come up big for the Minutemen this season is Peter Tawczynski. Three weeks ago Tawczynski was named A-10 Rookie of the Week and he hopes to have similar success this weekend and later on at the Atlantic 10 Championships

"I just want to help my team win," Tawczynski said. "It was good to be named Rookie of the Week but I'd rather win it the weekend of A-10's and help us capture the title."

The key to success this season for the Minutemen has been its depth. Eleven different swimmers have picked up first place finishes this season for the Minutemen and this depth has also proved to be important in the relay events.

Three weeks ago at the Rhode Island Invitational the Minutemen won three of four relay events and as a result finished first out of four teams. Similar success on Saturday should clinch victory for UMass.

This is the last dual meet of the season for the Maroon and White before the A-10' and it is not underestimating its importance.

"We're going to use this to get ready for the A-10's," Tawczynski said. "It is a conference meet for us but we just want to make sure that we're ready for A-10's. Winning [at the A-10's in two weeks] is the number one goal."

ARTS

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Train to be an EMT this semester. Tuesday and Thursday nights 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 For more information or to register call 545-1885 Learn to save a life!

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Honda Civic DX 4Door Sedan, red, 75kmi, automatic, sun-roof, cassettplayer, excellent condition. $6000or b/o Call 253-3092

93 Saturn SL2, SDW, 1.9Ltr engine, 5spd, cd player $3500 o/b/o. Must sell 665-3521

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, refer-ences, car, house-work 6-10 hours Tue & Thur. $10/hr 247-5800

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Earn extra money! Become a spare-time travel agent. At www.sharetimetravelagent.com

Put up Posters. $15/wk 2 to 3 hrs. Car, references, reliable. 259-1227

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

Human Services Exciting Opportunities

The Consortium is an agency that supports people with disabilities through education advocacy and services.
Program Coordinator needed to direct and oversee services provided to up to six people with various learning challenges.
Supervisory experience, flexibility, and optimistic attidtude, sense of humor, relible transportation and driver's license required. Excellent benefits. Combination of day time and evening hours. $12/hr starting salary. Send resume to Janice Harris at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 AA/EOE.
Full-time/part-time - Looking to have fun earning extra income with a flexible work schedule? Spend time with people in a supportive atmosphere. Call Lori-Ann Bruyett at (413) 536-2401 to set up a phone interview. AA/EOE.

More Than Just Summer Employment Independent Lake Camp

Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Volleyball, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theatre, Dance, Video, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Skateboarding, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Ropes Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and More. Call 1-800-399-CAMP ask for Dan or Nigel. www.independent-lake.com

French & or German Speaking cadidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or email dcu@remi.com

Earn $$$ promoting artists like Nine Inch Nails, Foo Fighters, Red Hot Chili Peppers, Eminem & The Crystal Method. No experience necessary. Visit www.noizepollution.com for info and then call Mindy @ 800-996-1816.

Undergraduate Business Consultant Gain Accounting Experience, Leadership Skills, and General Business Experience. 10-15 hrs. per week, flexible schedule. Must be self motivated; able to work as part of a team and willing to actively participate in University issues involving the Student Businesses. Sophomores and Juniors are encouraged to apply. Pick up an application at the Center for Student Business, 406 Studnet Union. Questions, call 545-2167. Deadline for apps Thrusday Feb 15th

New Students Program Seeking extroverts for summer orientation positions: May 29th - July 18th. Salary, room meals, health coverage. Call 545-9681 for more info. or pick up an application at the Undergraduate Admission Center. Deadline Feb. 9

STAGE HANDS WANTED at Fine Arts Center. $6.75/hr. Variable schedule-week day availability preferred 9-Noon, 1pm-5 Applications at Production Services RM 146 F.A.C.

RAFT GUIDES WANTED FOR SUMMER 2001: Zoar Outdoor is accepting applications for its whitewater raft guide training program. To request an application call 1-800-532-7483 or visit www.zoaroutdoor.com. Applications due by 2/15/01. EOE.
Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Center for tour guides, student admissions Reps, and summer counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 9
DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions

ENTERTAINMENT

are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527
HAPPY BIRTHDAY MEG & STEVE!

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

We hope you both have a happy 22! Don't party too hard! Love, All of us!

UNIVERSITY BAR-TENDING CLASSES

START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!
Fraternities * Sororities

MISCELLANEOUS

Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com
1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house.

ROOM FOR RENT

Female preferred 549-5975
1 Room Available in three bedroom apt in

ROOMMATE WANTED

Mill Valley. Looking for a nonsmoker who is clean and quiet. $340/month Call 253-0066

Female Seeking roommate for Amherst apt. Cheap rent. Call 256-6244

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of

SERVICES

Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906
One Barenaked Ladies Floor Seat

TICKETS

Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TO SUBLET

2 Bedroom Cliffside Apt. $699/month including everything. Call 253-6760

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplash-tours.com
1-800-426-7710

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available.
Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

TRAVEL

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.spring-breakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring-break.com

RESORT GUARD

Summer Employment Glacier National Park, Montana
The Resort at Glacier St. Mary Lodge
Be a part of the team!
For more information call: 1-800-368-3689
Apply Online @ www.glacierparkjobs.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYIS. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

8 - HSCN Bulletin Board
9 - CBS/2 Hartford
4 - CBS/4 Boston
5 - ABC/40 Springfield
6 - FBS/22 Springfield
7 - HSCN Sports Channel
8 - UPN/61 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC/30 New Britain
11 - Fox/61 Hartford
12 - PBS/24 Hartford
13 - NBC/40 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMASS/Amherst (Academic Channel)
16 - WB/50 New Haven
17 - CSPAN
18 - ESPN2
19 - CNN/SI (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Church of Christ
22 - C-Span
23 - Classic
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - A&E
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - ESPN
30 - Disney
31 - Nickelodeon
32 - Cartoon Network
33 - Nick at Nite
34 - TV Land
35 - Comedy Central
36 - BET
37 - Univision
38 - Spanish/Fashion Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - BET
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING C - Campus FEBRUARY 2, 2001

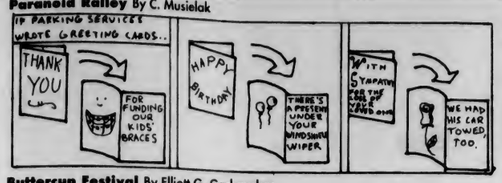
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Prepare-Saints	Pride	Nova "Vanished" (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (N)		Fugitive "And in That Darkness"		Nesh Bridges "Recover Me"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (N)		Fugitive "And in That Darkness"		Nesh Bridges "Recover Me"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends		Sabrina-Witch	Popstars	Popular "Mary Charity" (N)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	7th Heaven "Forget Me Not"		Street Smarts	Blind Date			Sabrina-Witch	Popstars	Popular "Mary Charity" (N)		News	Arrest & Trial
WVIT	10	News		NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood		Providence "Saved by the Bell"		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends			Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 (N)
WWLP	22	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Providence "Saved by the Bell"		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Best of Cosmos (In Stereo)					Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	29	News		ABC News		Seinfeld	Frasier	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 (N)	News
WSBK	1	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld		Frasier		Gary & Mike (N)	Celebrity	Level 9 "It's Magic" (In Stereo)		Frasier	Mad Abt. You
WTBS	72	Rosenne	Rosenne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince			★★★ "Michael" (1996, Fantasy)		John Travolta. Andie MacDowell.			★★★ "Dirty Dancing" (1987)
A&E	23	Night Court	News	Radio	Law & Order	Misconception		Biography: Bugsy Siegel		Competition (N)		Poirot
CNN	22	Worldview		Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire		Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room
COM	36	Sporte Night	Sporte Night	Dolly Show	Stein e Money			Davidson	Davidson	Com.-Presents	Pulp Comice	★★½ "The Man With One Red Shoe" (1985, Comedy)
DISC	21	Wild Discovery	Swamp Hogs	Wild Discovery	Rhino			Toughest Jail in America (N)		Stolen Every 23 Seconds		Cesino Diaries	After Midnight
ESPN	27	Sportscenter		College Beekeeball		Marquette at Memphis. (Live)				Winter X-Games			Sportscenter
LIFE	37	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Natalie Cole"				Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Frequent Flyer" (1996, Drama)		Jack Wagner, Shelley Heck
MTV	31	Real World	To Be Announced							TBA		Making-Video	Celebrity
NICK	33	Pinky & Brain	Catdog		Hey Arnold!	Rugrats		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Thornberrye	Thornberrye	Facts of Life	Roc (In Stereo)
SCIFI	29	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)				Black Scorpion "Love Burns"		Farscape (In Stereo)		Adventures of Julee Verne
TLC	28	Operation "Liver Transplant"			Loet Ark			Police, Camera, Action!		Best Kept Secrets		Bio Terror (N)
TNT	25	ER "May Day" (In Stereo)			Pretender (In Stereo)			★½ "Johnny Mnemonic" (1995, Science Fiction) Keanu Reeves.				"The Pretender 2001" (2001, Drama) Michael T. Weiss
USA	24	Welker, Texas Ranger			JAG (In Stereo)			Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		★★★ "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom" (1984, Adventure) Harrison Ford.			Farmclub.com
HBO	43	5:00 "Berry-Dragon"			Inside the NFL (In Stereo)			★★★ "New Jack City" (1991, Wesley Snipes, R		★★★ "Angel's Dance" (1998, Comedy) James Belushi, R		★★ "The Distinguished Gentleman" (1992)	Eddie Murphy, R
MAX	44	★★★ "A Perfect World" (1993, Drama) Kevin Costner,			PG-13			★★★ "Analyze This" (1999, Comedy) Robert De Niro, R				★★½ "The Distinguished Gentleman" (1992)	Eddie Murphy, R
SHOW	45	★★ "My Blue Heaven" (1990, Comedy) Steve Martin,			PG-13			★★ "Disturbing Behavior" (1998) James Marsden,		Green Mile		Stargate SG-1 (In Stereo)	Stargate SG-1 (In Stereo)

Paranoid Polley By C. Musielak



ID PARKING SERVICES WROTE GREETING CARDS..
THANK YOU
FOR FUNDING OUR KIDS' BRACES
HAPPY BIRTHDAY
THERE'S A PRESENT UNDER YOUR WINDSHIELD WIPER.
WE HAD HIS CAR TOWED TOO.

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

TRADITIONAL PROLETARIAT PRAISES OF MYTH-MAKING HAVE LONG BEEN ABSENT FROM THE AMERICAN WORKING CLASS.
YES. THAT'S WHY THERE'S SUCH VISIBLE TENSION BETWEEN CLASSES— OUR MODERN "PEASANTRY" HAS YET TO ACHIEVE ANY SORT OF SUSTAINING SELF-OBJECTIVATION.
AND HEY— YOUR SISTER'S GREAT IN BED. I MEAN, WOW.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

HMM...
THIS IS ROLAND HEDLEY FOR YAP COM! I HAVE JUST COUNTED A STUFFED BALLOT FOR GORE! FOR YAP COM, I'M ROLAND HEDLEY!
HMM...
THIS IS ROLAND HEDLEY...
COULD I CHANGE SEATS, PLEASE...

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

HEE HEE. I'M FINALLY FINISHED!
WITH WHAT?
I TRACED OVER ALL THE LINES IN THIS COMIC BOOK WITH GLOW-IN-THE-DARK INK. NOW I'LL BE ABLE TO READ IT IN BED AT NIGHT WITHOUT MOM OR DAD KNOWING.
COULDN'T YOU JUST HIDE A FLASHLIGHT UNDER YOUR COVERS?
AM I A GENIUS, OR WHAT?
OK, AM I A BORDER-LINE GENIUS, OR WHAT...
I'M AFRAID TO ASK WHY THIS ISSUE IS SEVEN MONTHS OLD.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

CASUAL DRESS DAY IS HURTING OUR PRODUCTIVITY. WE NEED TO CANCEL IT.
IS IT POSSIBLE THAT OUR REAL PROBLEMS ARE CAUSED BY IRRATIONAL MANAGEMENT?
NO. I THINK COMFORTABLE PANTS ARE THE PROBLEM.
SOUNDS RIGHT.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

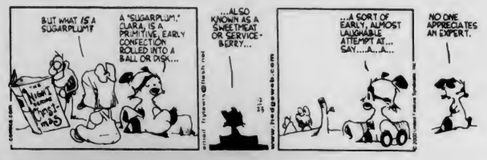
WHAT DOES THIS MEAN "YOU ARE INVITED TO A HOLIDAY PARTY. B.Y.O.B."?
WHAT DO YOU THINK IT MEANS?
UM. "YOU ARE INVITED TO A HOLIDAY PARTY, BECAUSE YOU OWN BOOTS".
HU HU HU HU HU... HMMM...

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

MMMMM... "SCHRODINGER'S CAT"... A NIFTY LITTLE PHYSICS "THOUGHT EXPERIMENT."
OH, PLEASE...
NOW... S'POSE A CAT'S IN A BOX... THE DECAY OF AN ATOM RELEASES CYANIDE, KILLING THE CAT.
SURE
ACCORDING TO QUANTUM RULES, THE ATOM WOULD BE BOTH DECAYED AND NOT DECAYED; THE CAT BOTH ALIVE AND DEAD... UNTIL YOU OPEN THE BOX!
WHY WOULD I WANT TO OPEN THE BOX?
TO SEE IF THE CAT IS DEAD OR ALIVE.
THIS IS A FAT WE'RE TALKING ABOUT.

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis



BUT WHAT IS A SUGARPLUM?
A "SUGARPLUM," CLARA, IS A PRIMITIVE, EARLY CONFECTION ROLLED INTO A BALL OR DISK...
...ALSO KNOWN AS A SWEETMEAT OR SERVICE-BERRY...
...A SORT OF EARLY, ALMOST LAUGHABLE ATTEMPT AT... SAY... A... A...
NO ONE APPRECIATES AN EXPERT.

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You have an important decision facing you today that could change the course of your life – at least temporarily.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You must be sure that you're not making too much out of nothing today. Concentrate on those things that are truly important to you and others.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You will be in a fine position to recognize a few important things about yourself that have gone unnoticed in the recent past.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your cultivated, easygoing manner may cover up some underlying tension for a while, but eventually a friend will see through the veneer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your reactions to unexpected circumstances may surprise even those who know you best. You're turning a corner and approaching new terrain.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – One way or another, you'll be able to find the answer to a perplexing question. Today, you may have to do the unusual to make any real headway.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Remember that it isn't over until you've actually been vanquished – or you give up, whichever comes first. There's no reason to quit!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – There is more to being impressive today than showing off. You must also be willing to share what you know with those around you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You can do much to improve your record at the workplace today simply by focusing on those things that are truly within your grasp.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You can save money today – but you may want to think twice before passing up the bargain of a lifetime. Consider the pros and cons.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may not want to continue along the path you've chosen for yourself. Fear not: It's not too late to change your mind.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You've been doing the same things over and over again lately, and today you'll have the opportunity to break and explore some novelty.

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 36 LOW: 23	HIGH: 28 LOW: 18	HIGH:37 LOW: 21

Work for the Collegian
Help Needed In Graphics

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Broccoli-Rice Casserole (B, F, W) (vegan)

Jamaican 3-Beans (B, H, W) (vegan)

Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegetarian)

Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegan) (H)

DINNER

Chicken Breast with Rice stuffing (B, W)

California Chilli (vegan)

Tofu Fajitas (vegan) (B, H, W)

Carved Ham (F)

Beef Fajitas (H)

Quote of the Day

"Realize the real lies with real eyes."

JAJI.

ACROSS
1 Trunk, in Britain
5 Actress Garr
9 Galileo's home
13 Taj Mahal city
14 Fibs
15 It Goes bad
16 Close by
17 Cuban dance
18 Has debts
19 Town sacred to Apollo
21 Yes, to Jacques
22 Doe's offspring
23 Vow
25 Calcutta attire
27 Comet end
Britzen
31 Baker's gear
35 — Christian Anderson
36 Novelist Bellow
38 Motets
39 Scramble it
40 Makes an effort
42 Greek letter
43 High up
46 Finger motion
47 Flip through 48 Began
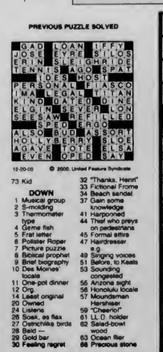
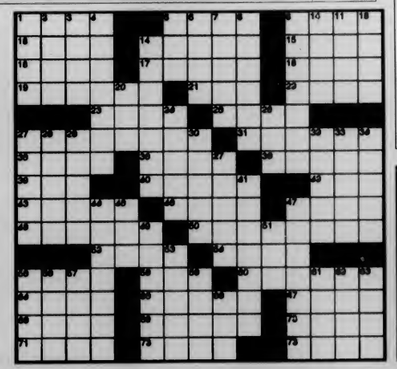
50 Type of card
52 They get the point
54 Not arm
56 Debatable
58 Coroner Cole
60 Tell
64 Mariner Wyatt —
65 Oklahoma Indian
67 Roman road
68 Mens' home
69 Evaluated
70 Baseball's Musial
71 — lang syne
72 Loud noise

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



DOWN
1 Musical group
2 S-mocking
3 Thermometer
4 Game fish
5 First letter
6 Pollster Roper
7 Picture puzzle
8 Biblical prophet
9 Brief biography
10 Des Moines locale
11 One-pot dinner
12 Org.
14 Least original
20 Owned
24 Listens
26 Soak, as flax
27 Ostrichlike birds
28 Bald —
29 Gold bar
30 Feeling regret
32 "Thanks, Henri"
33 Fictional Frome
34 Beach sandal
37 Gain some knowledge
41 Imprisoned
44 Thief who plays in pinstripes
45 Formal attire
47 Hair dresser
49 Singing voices
51 Before, to Keats
53 Sounding congested
55 Arizona sight
56 Honolulu locale
57 Misunderstand
Henshaker
59 "Cheerio!"
61 LL.D. holder
62 Salad-bowl wood
63 Ocean floor
66 Precious stone



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Rob Schulze
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor	Matthew Despres
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Jess Grant, Adi Huseinovic

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Friday, February 2, 2000 8

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

A defining weekend in Hockey East

JARET BARR/ COLLEGIAN

With wins over BU and Lowell this weekend, Jay Shaw and the Massachusetts hockey team could solidify a position in the Hockey East playoffs.

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

For the first time in recent memory, possibly ever, eight teams are competing for seven playoff spots with Boston College, seemingly the only team that has distanced itself from the pack.

Heading into this weekend's action the Massachusetts hockey team finds itself in a position that most teams would envy – controlling its own destiny.

"We have to take care of business on our own," head coach Don Cahoon said. "Clearly we have to prepare for the other teams, but nonetheless just deal with ourselves."

"It's a huge weekend, especially with eight games left," Jeff Turner said. "With the remainder of our schedule it's not hard to see that every game is a big game and every team is equally as big."

UMass (7-16-3, 9-6-1 Hockey East) currently is in a tie for seventh place with Lowell and Saturday the Minutemen invade Tsongas Arena for an all-important matchup with the River Hawks that could determine the fate of the Maroon and White at season's end.

But before Saturday's contest, UMass has to take care of business in a rink that has been quite unkind to the Minutemen, Walter Brown Arena on the campus of Boston University.

"You can't be too concerned about what has happened in the past," Cahoon said. "Our history is now. Our history is what we do from here on in.

"If you start worrying about what happened in the past it's like a self-fulfilling prophecy."

The Maroon and White travel to Beantown tonight for its third contest of the season with the Terriers having dropped a pair during a home-and-home series earlier in the season.

The Terriers come into the contest as one of the hottest teams in the Hockey East having won three straight including a sweep of No. 8 New Hampshire last weekend.

"I spoke to Dick Umile [yesterday] morning from UNH," Cahoon said. "He thought his team had almost as well as it had played at any point in the weekend against BU and they came up with nothing."

After a slow start, BU has come on since entering the conference-laden portion of its schedule. A major factoring in the Terriers' season resurrection has been the play of captain Carl Corazzini. The senior netted three goals and tallied three assists in the previous two games with the Minutemen.

"He just plays good against UMass," Markus Helanen said.

Along with the strong play of Corazzini, BU has also had solid goaltending from the tandem of Jason Tapp and Sean Fields. Tapp was in the net for both BU triumphs earlier in the season.

Maybe the most important game of the weekend is the rubber match against Lowell. The Minutemen stole a win 5-4 in overtime at Tsongas on Nov. 11, a game in which they only mustered 17 shots on goal. On Jan. 25 the River Hawks got revenge as they snatched victory from the jaws of defeat when Yorick Treille scored the game-winning goal after a question-able non-call by referee John Gravallese that led to the eventual tally.

"Each game is huge, but the Lowell game is especially," Helanen said. "We see it as a four-point game."

Not only is the game important within the Hockey East standings, but it is also being played for the Alumni Cup. The Alumni Cup is awarded annually to the winner of the season series.

"We need to make a jump now," Turner said. "If we don't it's going to come down to the last weekend for a playoff spot.

"Win two games in a weekend and we can jump up three spots."

Last season UMass saw itself in a similar situation as it was battling Lowell for the final playoff spot with the Maroon and White getting the nod in the end, but this year is wide open and every game counts.

"We can take our experiences from last year and use that to our advantage," Turner said. "It's a lot different when you're battling against one team then when you're battling against four teams.

"Four teams aren't going to lose two games in a weekend. That adds extra motivation to get one, two, three or four points in a weekend."

It's time for redemption

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team hosts St. Bonaventure on Sunday afternoon, but this contest is more important than the average UMass conference game.

The Minutewomen are looking for redemption.

UMass is coming off a heart-wrenching loss to Rhode Island, a loss in which the Maroon and White could only muster 35 points. The same problems that have bothered the Minutewomen all season long were clear as day throughout the game.

Turnovers, an inability to score points, and poor shooting plagued the team once again. Head coach Joanie O'Brien attributed a majority of the team's problems to the squad's lack of composure. Against the Rams, sophomore center Jen Butler was the only player to score in double digits. The team, as a whole, shot an anemic 24 percent from the field.

Inconsistency is also a huge Maroon and White foe.

On Jan. 28, UMass destroyed Fordham, a team tied with LRI for last place in the Atlantic-10. In that game, five Maroon and White players scored in double-digits. In the Rhode Island loss, only Butler found a way to score more than six points.

To make matters worse, sophomore guard Ebony Pegues injured her left knee in the second half of the URI contest and her status for the immediate future is uncertain. Pegues was on crutches for the remainder of the URI game and chances are slim that she will suit up for Sunday's game.

Pegues's role has been increasing for the Minutewomen as she has developed into a reliable outside shooter. Any long-term loss of Pegues would not only mentally dent the team's confidence, it would subtract a much needed shooter from the bench of an already offensively challenged team.

When St. Bonaventure enters the Mullins Center on Sunday, UMass will be granted the opportunity at redemption. The Minutewomen can prove to themselves, the university, and their fans that, in fact, they are better than the team that could only score 35 points against last place URI. By playing a sound game against the Bonnies, UMass can reestablish itself as a team that is capable of playing the type of Joanie O'Brien basketball that has proven itself successful over the past ten seasons.

But it all begins with fundamentals.

UMass can't afford to turn the ball over 28 times in a game. It can't afford to shoot 24 percent from the field and it needs to shoot better than nine percent from behind the arc. The Maroon and White also needs more than one player to score in double digits. But most of all, the Minutewomen need that ever elusive sense of composure that O'Brien has spoken about so many times this season.

And the road to redemption begins Sunday against the Bonnies.

St. Bonaventure (5-14, 1-7 A-10) is led by a talented frontcourt duo composed of 6-foot-1 forward Gellaine Clarke and 5-foot-11 forward Melissa Fazio. Clarke put up 16 points and Fazio put up eight in the Bonnies first meeting against the Minutewomen, which proved to be a solid 63-54 win for UMass.

UMass was led by its big guns in the first St. Bonaventure match-up of the season in Olean, New York. Senior captain Kathy Coyner put up 15 points and Butler put up 14 from the blocks in the nine-point win. Pegues came off the bench to contribute a vital 14 points to the victory.

The Minutewomen's formula for success on Sunday includes the containment of Fazio and Clarke in the post and the team's ability as a whole to hit the open shot when the situation presents itself. UMass can be its own worst enemy when no one is hitting any shots, but if the team can get solid efforts from Butler, Coyner and one of its role players, the team should pull out the win, which would be the first step toward forgetting about the URI loss.

COMING TOGETHER

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

For once, a team that ventures up to Massachusetts from the Bronx won't actually be favored to win.

But that does not mean that the Fordham Rams are incapable of beating the Massachusetts men's basketball team when they visit the William D. Mullins Center this Saturday. It merely means that if the Minutemen continue playing like they have of late, then they should be able to continue their five game winning streak and at the very least, hold onto their share of first place in the Atlantic 10.

However, a letdown would be costly, as the Maroon and White (9-10, 7-1 A-10) squad can ill afford to lose many more games if its season is going to continue well into March.

"We have to protect our home court and these are the wins you have to have going into the A-10 tournament," UMass point guard Shannon Crooks said.

Head coach James "Bruiser" Flint agreed: "We don't have a good enough record to be losing focus," he added. "We've got to be ready to play at all times."

The last time these two teams squared off, a season ago, UMass was able to hand the Rams an 81-72 defeat behind a career-high 29 points from Shannon Crooks. This was all accomplished without leading scorer Monty Mack, who was out sick for the game. This time around, though, both Mack and Crooks will be in the starting lineup, and they will be matched up against Fordham's two leading scorers, guards Bevon Robin (15.4 ppg) and Jason Harris (11.9 ppg).

"I had a pretty good game last year, but I know I'm not going to be able to shoot as much as I did in that game because I played the two then and now I am going to be at the one," Crooks said. "So I am going to get Monty the ball. He is the shooting guard and it is his last game against Fordham, so he is really going to go at them. I am just going to play my position, not force anything and my time will come when I can put up some shots."

The Rams will obviously try and key on Mack, but lately the UMass two-guard has been getting his points despite the fact that opposing coaches have designed defenses to stop him. He has been able to knot 20 or more points in nine of his last 10 contests, and his teammates will attest that this is not an easy thing to do when you are always at the forefront of an opponent's game plan.

"If they double on me, I don't think it takes any pressure off Monty at all," center Kitwana Rhymer said. "They are still going to be on him."

However, it has not been the play of Mack alone that has allowed the Minutemen to dominate conference play. Rhymer (10.1 ppg), Crooks (9.6 ppg) and Micah Brand (8.6 ppg) have all proven that they can score when needed, and have shown that UMass is far from a one-man team.

"Teams are doing a lot of the same things on us [as they were doing at the beginning of the year]," Crooks said. "They are running some box-and-ones on Monty, they show some zone at us and are switching a lot of defenses, but we seem to adjust to them."

While the Rams will be concentrating on Crooks and Mack, the Maroon and White guards will be looking to stop their counterparts, Robin and Harris. Last year they did an outstanding job of this, holding Harris to 1-of-10 shooting from behind the arc in two meetings, keeping Robin around his scoring average.

Crooks and Mack both played excellent defense against the Rams last year, but it was the play of backup point guard Jonathan DePina that really helped shut down Harris' perimeter game.

"Last time we played Harris we had Jonathan crowd him and not give him any open looks," Crooks said. "And he did a real good job with him."

This time around, the Minutemen will have to do much of the same if they plan on leaving the Mullins Center with their eighth conference win in nine attempts.

"They're really good offensively and they're a much better team than last year," Flint said. "This game is on national TV, on ESPN, so everybody should be pretty pumped up. The key for us is we can't let their guards get off. We need to try to keep them in the half-court and not let them get a lot of easy transition baskets."

Other weapons for Fordham include 6'9" center Duke Freeman-McKamey and Jeff McMillian, one of the conferences best freshman. For one reason or another, the Rams have also used an uncanny ability to play better in the second half as a weapon, but as Mack pointed out, "we have been a second half team, too."

Tip off is slated for noon.

Rams next in A-10 waters

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Sharpen the spears, load the shotguns and pack up the saddlebags because the Minutewomen are going Ram huntin'.

This weekend the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team will brave the steel mountain range of the Bronx, N.Y., looking to return to Amherst in triumph, with a Morgan Coach full of Ram hide.

A dominant junior class and a talented rookie have led UMass to a 9-3 record in 2000-01.

Illinois native Anne Dettloff headlines the group of juniors, who combine experience and talent to make the Maroon and White a tough team to compete with.

Dettloff, who specializes in the freestyle, is rarely bested in the 200-yard version of the event.

Andrea Kazanjian and Becky Hunnewell are two more of a very talented group of juniors. Kazanjian competes regularly in both the butterfly and the freestyle but her strength lies in the latter. The New Yorker excels at the short distance races including the 50 and 100 free, both of which she won in Maryland two weeks ago.

Hunnewell is a backstroke specialist who also competes in the freestyle. What makes these juniors such an integral part of the team is not only that they compete in multiple events but that they are good at all those various events.

Dettloff, Kazanjian and Hunnewell, more often than not, make up the bulk of UMass' lethal relay teams. The free relay and the medley relay have grown into the strongest events for the Maroon and White. That success is a tribute to the depth of the team and the flexibility of many of the swimmers.

Joining the three juniors on the relay teams and in the win column is newcomer Christen Dexter. It hasn't taken the Centerville native very long to put her stamp on the program.

Dexter is nearly unbeatable in the breaststroke and she has consistently won events for the team since her breakout meet against Syracuse in early December. Not only did the freshman break the school record in the 200-breast against the Orangewomen, but she proceeded to shatter her own record two more times since the early December match-up.

Dexter consistently puts wins up on the board for the Maroon and White, as she continues to emerge as one of the top rookies on the team and in the conference.

The juniors and Dexter will be an important factor in the upcoming match against Fordham.

First Dettloff and company must continue their success in the individual events. Dettloff is exceptionally strong in the freestyle and so is Kazanjian. Hunnewell is always strong in the backstroke and Dexter should continue to dominate the breastroke.

Relays have been a UMass strong point for the entire season so it should be safe to assume that they will be again. In every one of the nine Maroon and White wins, the Minutewomen have taken a relay event.

If Dexter and her junior teammates continue to dominate the individual events and the relay teams remain consistent then expect the Rams horns to be blunt come Saturday.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sarah Newell hopes to help UMass swim to victory this Saturday against URI.

Is Valentine the perfect date for you and your loved one? Turn to Arts or she'll shoot.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Team points leader Tim Turner was a power play force for UMass hockey in a pair of games this weekend.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 74 www.dailycollegian.com Monday, February 5, 2001

Is the truth SCARCE?

By Tanya Mannes
Collegian Staff

Students got a crash course in statistics and student activism this weekend at a teach-in in the Campus Center, as Student Coalition Against Racist and Classist Education (SCARCE) members presented data suggesting that the University of Massachusetts has manipulated figures to hide declining minority enrollments.

The focus was clearly on the recruitment, enrollment and retention of African-American, Latino, Asian American and Native American (ALANA) students. Presenter Thomas Taaffe, SCARCE member and Graduate Student Senate (GSS) President, called stricter admissions standards, hard-nosed academic policies and the perceived lack of support and financial aid a "systematic downsizing of social rights."

Taaffe explained the changing policies that influenced the formation of SCARCE. Using UMass' own photocopied reports, he attempted to clarify what some students see as an overwhelming amount of information.

He dissected the changing definitions of "student body" that have allowed UMass to calculate ethnic groups as a percentage of enrolled students in different ways over the years.

The University's Office of Institutional Research creates an Internal Enrollment Count every two years, listing among the statistics the official percentages of minority students.

Taaffe said that in 1992, the University counted ALANA students as a percentage of the whole student body, but in subsequent years, deducted international and non-reporting students from the student body figure before making the calculation.

Thelma DaSilva a sophomore pre-Communications major and Glennice N. Bowen a senior Biology major both members of SCARCE were present at Saturday's teach-in.

DaSilva said she joined because she knew ALANA students who had left UMass because they were on academic probation.

"I came to UMass because I heard it was a diverse population. One of the essay questions when I applied was about diversity. But when you look around, you don't see it. They're hypocrites," she said.

She said one of her goals is to get ALANA students involved.

"A lot of them don't know what's going on. They're focused on graduating," she said. "How did you get in here? People fought for me to get in here."

Bowen discredited the idea that UMass is a global campus.

"They're not making an active push to recruit us [ALANA students and low-income whites]," she said.

She suggested that budget cuts were already disproportionately affecting ALANA students.

"At the Women of Color Network, I know people who worked 20 hours and now work 12. They're getting rid of positions," she said. Many of the students lamented the inability of many, especially African-Americans, to graduate within four years. They cited as a key issue the lack of faculty for overcrowded departments.

Since 1996, the University has chosen to keep many positions unfilled when professors leave or retire, despite growing enrollments in many departments. UMass now has 328 fewer faculty than in 1996, representing a 27 percent drop.

"I'm paying tuition and I have to hear 'over-enrolled' when I pick up the phone," said Bowen.

Taaffe said that the increased competition for scarce resources, such as faculty time, is related to an increasingly profit-based public educational system that rejects minority students and low-income whites.

"Corporations don't want critical thinking; they want you thinking about the brother next to you," he said.

He repeatedly encouraged the students to find and check the reports he quoted and held up for inspection, and gave out instructions to help them utilize the Freedom of Information Act. Aaron Saunders, a sophomore Political Science major was one of the 18 attendees on Saturday.

"I think the wool is being pulled over a lot of people's eyes here," he said.

John A. Sheehan a junior Political Science major said he attended because, "UMass needs to incorporate people in the education process."

Another participant in the workshop, Hanna James, a senior said, "I am fully aware that the number of ALANA students is declining. I came because I wanted more concrete information. I consider myself a person of color. I've been fortunate in my class background but I face other issues."

She described the difficulty of getting financial aid. "I feel it's related to being an ALANA student," she said.

"I'm establishing a pattern so that if someone wants to sue the pants off the University, the documentation is there," Taaffe said.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Students construct fake tombstones in memory of programs that have been terminated due to budget cuts.

Potential harm looms as budget cuts set to take bite from UMass

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Bracing again for the potential harm of academic budget cuts, departments at the University of Massachusetts began to access the damage that a 20-million-dollar budget gap could do to their programs over a two-year period.

Per order of Chancellor David K. Scott, the UMass campus is preparing for the worst by accessing the impact of spending cuts for the 2002 and 2003 academic years. For departments at the school this means academic cuts of 1.5 percent and departmental cuts of 5 percent in just the first year. This could present problems for individual departments that pour much of their funds into faculty and graduate employees.

"There are only three sources of funds to meet shortfalls of this size," said Glen Gordon dean of the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences in a letter to his department chairs. "We can cut the TA (graduate student teaching assistant) budget, the part-timer budgets and the faculty and staff lines."

Department heads within the college have been asked to submit a proposal that outlines the most minimum needs of their individual departments and to explain effects of the worst case scenario for cuts for graduate teaching assistants by 15 percent.

This could be a dire situation for departments such as Communications that already face large class sizes, larger faculty to student ratio and student difficulty in enrolling in required classes. Communications department chair Michael Morgan explained in a statement to the press that with budget cuts the situation would only become more difficult for the department.

"It means the end of the world," he said. "Some of our majors have not been able to get into their required classes because all of our classes are filled to bursting."

Other departments are also trying to come up with plans that will not cut services or lay off any employees. In a statement made to the Daily Hampshire Gazette Deputy Provost John Cunningham said schools within the University could experience cuts ranging from $30,000 to $475,000 next year.

"There's not a sense that there's any easy answers or convenient places to cut," he said.

Other groups on campus such as the office of admissions, the Everywoman's Center and Student Affairs will also lose money through the new budget cuts. According to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos the group will lose between $600,000 and $700,000 in the upcoming year.

"It's never an easy situation when you have to look at cuts. We may have to restructure departments, do some blending and shifting," he said in a statement to the press. "We have to make sure that we control growth in a way that is coherent and reflects our core mission to serve the students."

Similar to last year, these cuts are fueled by increasing costs on campus and decreased contribution from the state. The outlook for funds has not been improved by the announcement from Governor A. Paul Celluci that he would lift the allocations to the University system by less than one percent. The University has also contemplated marginally raising fees, but that the Board of Trustees has expressed opposition to that idea.

As a last resort, these cuts have been proposed and will mean drastic changes across the board for the University.

"There are getting to be desperate times and we have to think of all the possibilities," Gordon wrote in his letter. "There is no way to handle this problem without considerable pain. I obviously need your help and suggestions as to how we can survive in the face of this latest blow."

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this article.

Energy costs continue to increase; Bush supports drilling in wilderness

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

As the country settles into its new administration, it is not just Washington that is feeling the effect of a new conservative era. While tax cuts, health care and abortion monopolize the headlines as defining characteristics of the Bush administration, It is the Western, more quiet regions of the US, that provide the largest battleground between Republicans and Democrats.

One of President George W. Bush's biggest upcoming challenges will be to solve the growing energy crisis, especially in states west of the Rockies. However, with new Interior Secretary, Gale Norton, and Vice President Dick Cheney, it seems that Bush is willing to sacrifice the environment for the sake of lower heating costs.

California is not the only state suffering rising energy costs. Electricity, natural gas, coal and oil prices have risen significantly all over the country, including New England. But the difference between heating homes in Massachusetts and homes in Colorado is that most of the gas and electricity used in the West Coast is also generated there.

The Lovell Chronicle, a regional newspaper in Wyoming, reports that local businesses and districts have felt the effects of a 10 to 15 percent increase in natural gas prices in the last year, and local school districts have paid well over their budgeted amounts for energy already.

But the state of Wyoming, which is now crying out for cheaper energy, is also the state which provides a home for the largest herd of wild elk in the country, not to mention scores of other wildlife in its many parks and national monuments, including Yellowstone National Park, Grand Tetons and Jack Morrow Hills.

What do these two things have in common? Energy. The people of the area need cheaper energy, and more of it, and area energy companies know that there is a huge supply of natural gas and oil resting comfortably under the pristine landscape of these environmental treasures.

So what is the solution to this crisis? Bush believes that the only way to help the economically strapped is to enter into previously untouched and protected lands and extract oil and gas.

Senate Republicans recently drafted an energy policy bill that would allow oil exploration in the wilderness preserves of Alaska, as well as huge tax breaks to gas and oil companies, in the hope of providing relief to the Pacific coast and other western states. The bill includes provisions for oil drilling, new gas pipelines and new hydroelectric power plants.

The bill also includes tax incentives for improving the environmental performance of existing coal-powered plants. The Senate Democrats are also drafting their own energy bill, indicative of the future fights that the Senate will wage over the US energy system.

But as the Senate plays tug-of-war with the latest energy policy bill, residents in Wyoming, Colorado, California, Oregon, Idaho and other western states are still bearing the brunt of the energy problem, and it seems like Clinton may have made their struggle even harder with his conversationalist ideas.

Before leaving office, the former president passed motions to keep millions of acres of western lands out of reach of drilling, mining and logging. Clinton, along with the former Interior Secretary and the Bureau of Land Management, closed off areas such as the Jack Morrow Hills in WY, in an effort to conserve, rather than exploit natural resources.

Opponents of Clinton's environmentalism have argued that the costs of developments are far outweighed by the benefits of it; moreover, a balance can be struck between pipelines and antelope herds.

However, even though most of Clinton's conservation goals will be reached, Bush will be able to have a direct effect on the access to protected lands because the Federal Government in fact, owns the majority of land. Bush is also more inclined to step over Clinton's proposals in an effort to help western economies because of

Turn to DRILLING page 2

Students (don't) voice ALANA concerns

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

Thursday and Friday of last week, the Campus Center Concourse became the place for protest, as five students dressed in black, silently demonstrated their outrage at the ongoing decline in Asian, Latino, African American, Native American (ALANA) and low-income student representation.

With signs taped to their bodies and black tape across their mouths, three of the participants, Glennice Bowen, 21, Johnette Ellis, 19, and Marielin Lopez, 22, hoped to motivate others to recognize future problems concerning budget cuts, and the Distance Learning program, which will theoretically hurt ALANA and low income student admission to the University.

"We want to unite the University because there is power in numbers," said Ellis. "We want them [the administration] to know that what they do in the future will be looked at closely."

According to Bowen, much information and statistics on the drastic drops in ALANA representation has been gained via the Freedom of Information Act after repeated refusal by UMass. Reports from the Office of Institutional Research (OIR), Umass Internal Enrollment Counts, the UMass Factbooks, the Financial Aid Office and the 1999 SARIS Report, show that all ALANA enrollment has dropped – in some cases as much as 61 percent

Other students that are suffering are low-income students, and student parents, whose enrollment dropped 88 percent in one year due to Welfare Reform and political efforts of the Legislature and University administrators.

In addition, a growing number of students are becoming concerned with their inability to get into classes because of budget cuts and future plans for the Distance Learning program, which could ultimately result in a lack of professors.

"I came here with a large amount of students. Every year they take away more and more money, and use it for programs that will ultimately benefit the University's pocket," said Lopez. "Why is all of our money going to Distance Learning which is doing nothing but affecting UMass students negatively?"

Programs such as English as a Second Language, the Women of Color Leadership Network, and several of the ALANA Academic support services have all had severe budget cuts in recent months.

The women felt that the ALANA support services were crucial to nurturing and motivating student of color to succeed. They explained that ALANA students are already hit with social and institutionalized racism, and by cutting these programs, these groups of students would suffer even more.

"We are not wanted or appreciated," said Bowen. "How are you supposed to feel when the whole system doesn't want you to be here? This shows a lack of support towards people of color."

Groups on campus such as the Student Coalition Against Race and Classist Education (SCARCE), are currently holding workshops concerning these issues, and will continue to try to gain support.

"We are starting to get people involved to see what they want to do," said Ellis. "It is up to the people to come and let us know, so we can collaborate and do what is necessary. Students need to realize that we are in a state of emergency, and we need to be responsible as a people of color to make this better."

RYAN BENHAMIEL/ COLLEGIAN

Students demonstrate in the Campus Center Concourse about declining ALANA representation at the University

DAN SANFELLA/COLLEGIAN

Mass attack!

UMass fans came out strong this weekend for the basketball team's romp over Fordham, 85-59.

■ drilling

continued from page 1

Cheney's Wyoming constituencies.

Yet another reason why conservation may have to take a back seat to development is Interior Secretary Gale Norton, a Libertarian from Colorado, whose attitude toward the environment, according to New York's Village Voice, is that, "I hate the government telling me what to do." The Voice also reports Norton as having an incredibly destructive record in environmental affairs, including her decision not to press charges when a gold mine spilled cyanide into a local river and killed all aquatic life in a 17-mile stretch.

Environmentalists are cringing at Bush's appointment and believe that she will be instrumental in opening up wilderness areas to energy production.

Cheney still believes that the demand for natural gas, the cleanest of the fossil fuels, should be taken into account when making decisions about the use of public lands, reports the New York Times. He also wants to see help come to the pockets of the citizens who are paying too much for energy.

The fate of national parks and reserves now rests in Republican hands, but still remains an integral matter in the struggle for energy relief. It has come to highlight the huge differences between the outgoing, liberal, earth-friendly administration, and the incoming, conservative, oil-friendly presidency.

Plane crash evokes memories

By Cassie DeLozier
Daily O'Collegian (Oklahoma State U.)

(U-WIRE) STILLWATER, Okla.–While Oklahoma State University supporters are mourning the loss of the 10 lives taken by the Jan. 27 plane crash, other universities can't help but remember their own tragic losses.

It was Oct. 2, 1970, and the Wichita State football team boarded a plane that would take them to Logan, Utah, from Denver. The Martin 404 aircraft, which was 5,165 pounds over the maximum allowable weight, crashed when it could not climb over an obstructing mountain or successfully reverse the course.

"We lost 29 people in that crash," said Jim Rhatigan, former vice president for academic affairs at Wichita State. "Our situation was a lot like the one at OSU."

"Students and staff went through many different stages of emotions," Rhatigan said. "At first, people were traumatized; then they just couldn't believe that it had happened.

"After some time, there was recognition and then finally grieving – it really took some time for people to start healing."

Al Marinai, who was a sophomore at California Polytechnic State University in 1980, has haunting memories of his own. The Cal Poly football team had just lost to Bowling Green State University 50-6. The players pushed the twin-engine C-46 out of the hanger and onto the runway. Shortly after takeoff, the plane jerked to the side, slammed into the concrete runway still underneath it and split in two.

Of the 46 passengers, 22 died.

"That was 40 years ago – almost 41," Marinai said. "I still think about it."

Marinai, who was being scouted by professional football teams, was the most injured survivor and spent the next three years in the hospital and has permanent injuries. But he said the most traumatic part of the crash was the emotional impact.

"You can't help but think of those young lives, what they could have been, what they could have done," he said. "There were a lot of broken hearts."

Another aspect of the crash that bothered Marinai was the circumstances that surrounded the crash.

The plane, which was put in the hanger due to weather conditions, was overloaded by 2,009 pounds. The captain's license had been revoked prior to the flight.

Norm Gomes, a student at Cal Poly at the time, was out of town when he heard the news. His roommate was aboard the plane.

"I heard it on the radio while I was driving," Gomes said. "I called a number the radio had given, and they listed off the people that had died. My roommate wasn't one of them."

Gomes said he was torn by his emotions.

"I felt grief for those who died, but I couldn't help but feel relieved for my roommate and thankful for those who had lived."

The campus mourned the loss of their football team.

"It was kind of like a rainstorm," Gomes said. "Everything shut down, and people emotionally boarded themselves up. Then there was a flood of emotions and eventually, an eeriness that was left behind."

Al Marinai never went back to Cal Poly – he said there were too many memories.

"It will haunt you," he said. "I haven't flown since that night." Unlike Cal Poly and the crash of 1960, OSU has supported the victim's families.

"For a while, it was like it didn't happen," Gomes said. "They started having reunions of the survivors after a few years, but they really didn't seem to put out much effort to comfort the families of the victims.

"Some memorial stuff was done but nothing outstanding."

Rhatigan said he thinks the support from OSU administration has been tremendous.

"OSU has responded to this tragedy and handled everything very well," he said. "I think they should all be very proud of the people at their institution."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Try
Your Campus Meal
Plan
and we guarantee you'll eat with us again.

Give us your opinion and we'll give you 5 free meals on campus.

UMASS

Simply Purchase a meal plan from Your Campus Meal Plan (Commuter or Economy) by February 16th, use the meal plan and tell us what you think by February 23rd 2001. We'll give you 5 free meals to be used at any retail food outlet on campus, including snack bars. Guaranteed! To find out more about Your Campus Meal Plan please call the Meal Plan Office at 545-1362 or visit our website www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices. Sign up available at Campus Center's Cashiers office.

Terms and Conditions : To qualify, you must purchase a Commuter or Economy meal plan by February 16th 2001. Feedback must be submitted no later than February 23rd 2001 by completing a customer satisfaction questionnaire available at cashier stations and at the Meal Plan Office. Return the questionnaire to the meal plan office in the Franklin Dining Hall by mail or in person and the five free meals will be posted to Your Campus Meal Plan account within 72 hours. All meals must be used before May 25th 2001. Any unused meals will be void after May 25th 2001. Your campus meal plan is only available to juniors (with 54 or more credits), seniors, grads and commuter students.

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

"Monkey business" in WA

By Mark Santschi
The Daily (U. Washington)

(U-WIRE) SEATTLE – If asked five years ago when a cure for AIDS would be available, David Anderson would have said, "We'll have one ready in five years."

Anderson, assistant director for research resources at the Washington Primate Research Center, is now aware that a cure for AIDS is far more elusive than anyone could have imagined.

Fortunately for Anderson and his colleagues, research monkeys are available to lend a hand – or a body.

In 1952, American physician Jonus Salk – who also used monkeys in his research – developed the first effective polio vaccine. The vaccine led to a 90 percent decline in polio diagnoses in the United States by 1960 and the eradication of the virus in the Western Hemisphere in 1991.

Today's medical researchers are facing a far greater adversary in AIDS. Unlike polio, which exists in only three forms, the AIDS virus is capable of myriad mutations.

"There are tens of thousands of different AIDS viruses out there, and they're all different," Anderson said. "(There is a vaccine) that can protect against the AIDS virus. The problem is, it's not able quite yet to handle all the breadth of viruses."

The Washington Primate Research Center, which has facilities at the University of Washington's Health and Sciences Center and in downtown Seattle, is one of only eight primate research centers in the United States. The UW's research includes studies in endocrinology, disease models, AIDS research, virology, neurology and immunogenetics.

"We probably do more research than any of the other centers, and it's largely because of our placement," Anderson said. "We're right in the middle of one of the biggest research centers in the country."

While the center breeds a small number of its primates – macaques and baboons, it receives most of the animals from Tulane University or from Tinjil Island, eight miles off the coast of Indonesia.

The center also has an Infant Primate Research Laboratory, which houses and cares for infant and pregnant primates requiring "round-the-clock care. In addition, the laboratory provides researchers with "normative standards of development for both clinical and experimental comparisons."

"I don't know of any other (infant-primate research laboratory) in the world that's set up like (the UW's), that has the amount of normative data behind it," Anderson said.

The result is that fewer primates need to be used in research because the research has already been done, and documented.

"Monkeys are the most expensive type of animal to use in a research setting," Anderson stated, "so people don't do this type of research unless they've got good reason to do it."

Another issue Anderson must consider is ethics.

"I wouldn't have anybody working in this facility who didn't (care about the animals) because I wouldn't trust a person like that. They have to care about the animals and want to do the very best we can for them."

The animals are cared for by trained animal technicians, who feed the animals and maintain the cages, as well as a veterinary staff and other staff members that offer the animals a "mentally enriching environment" by interacting with them, as well as supplying toys and treats.

Still, despite the attentive handling of the animals, the center is sometimes criticized for its method of research.

"There are people in society who object to the use of animals in research," Anderson said. "That's easy to see. We have a protest or two here every year. I certainly don't think less of people for taking that position."

Anderson explained that the study of animals has allowed researchers to make tremendous strides toward cures for viruses such as AIDS and diseases such as cancer. Such strides are only the beginning, but without research animals, they might have been nearly impossible to achieve.

"(We'd) like to be able to say we can do (the research that we are doing) with computers or in a petri dish or something like that, but (we) can't because most of the stuff that's out there we don't know yet," Anderson said.

The Washington Primate Research Center collaborates with other primate research centers around the country, making sure that no time and effort is being wasted through repetitive research. Still, the research – much of which consists of studying human genes – is tedious and often frustrating, and as a result, a cure for AIDS or cancer is not expected anytime soon.

"It's like somebody gave (us) a jigsaw puzzle with literally hundreds of millions of pieces in it," Anderson said of the human gene structure, "and (we) don't have the picture of what it's supposed to look like at the end yet."

Despite the never-ending stream of questions that researchers are presented with, Anderson does not see a point in giving up. Sometimes, when his job discourages him, he visits his grandparents in the hospital and takes notice of his surroundings.

"I'll see all these people that really need some help, so that kind of puts it in perspective for me. There's going to be a given amount of disease out there, and the question is, 'What are we going to do about it?' And I'll always try to do something."

MAUREEN MASKE/COLLEGIAN

Virtual darkroom

Two students explore the possibilities of manipulating photographs with the computer program Adobe Photoshop.

Our friends Josh and Brendan visit www.daily collegian.com every-day...in between surfing the "adult" sites, of course.

Peer Health Education

What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and...

- ☐ A. Contracting an STI
- ☐ B. Getting Pregnant
- ☐ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.

Get Involved
Make a difference
Earn 6 credits

Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education,
A 2 semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at Umass.

Call Health Education at 577-5181 to add the class.
Class meets Tuesday at 4:00 pm in Morrill IV, Room 404.

THINGS TO DO:
- GO TO CLASS
- PLAY VIDEO GAMES
- WORKOUT
- SEE A MOVIE

WHAT COULD YOU DO...
IF YOU WERE DONE WITH WORK BY 9AM??

THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR STUDENTS TO DELIVER NEWSPAPERS MONDAY THRU FRIDAY
INTERESTED: CALL SHAWN @ 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

The will of the people:
keep clean elections

"The people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts find and declare that the current way of paying for campaigns undermines democracy in the Commonwealth."

This is the beginning of the Clean Elections Act, a law passed by referendum in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in 1998. The law has many functions, but its primary purpose may be summarized simply: it endeavors to even the playing field for all candidates by the elimination of soft money contributions from national parties to state candidates.

These are all voluntary measures, but any candidate who agrees to spending and donation limits, among other things, is guaranteed a certain amount of government money for their campaign – thus, even candidates who are not indebted to private interests or national parties have a chance at conducting a fair campaign with a certain expectation being an active and vital participant in a public election.

This measure was voted into law with a safe 67% of the population of Massachusetts in support. If the measure had been up for reapproval in this past year's election, it stands to reason that the percentage of victory would have been even higher, what with the emergence of campaign finance reform as a major national issue and Senator John McCain's high-profile presidential candidacy with that as one of his primary planks.

This law is now in danger.

It has been reported that Thomas Finneran, the Democratic Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, is planning on launching an all-out assault on Clean Election in the upcoming weeks and months.

Finneran's power is, for all intents and purposes, boundless in the House. Just recently, he forced through a vote which overturned the term limit on the Speakership, in essence giving him the job for as long as he wishes to maintain it... and then he punished mercilessly those Democrats who dared vote against the measure.

There is little doubt that Finneran could, if not checked, take all the bite out of Clean Elections, and make it a simple sham of a regulation with no bite and no enforcement.

This is why he must not remain unchecked.

Governor Paul Celluci has already come out in support of Clean Election and the non-destroying of the law. Other rank-and-file Republicans and even a few stalwart Democrats (quickly smacked down by the dictatorial Finneran) have also made plain that they will not stand for the law to be gutted.

We must support these politicians and others like them, and come out in a common voice to prevent Finneran and his followers from destroying this law on order to propagate their own existence. The people of Massachusetts spoke once to put Clean Elections in place – now we must speak again to maintain this much-needed fair play device.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

Glimpsing Jerusalem

BATIA CHARPAKIS

I will never forget the night it all started. My friends were in my dorm room just chilling out. The phone rang: "Hello...," I queried politely. "Hi. Is Batia there?" A female voice asked. "This is she," I replied a little guardedly. I'm always leery about strangers calling.

"Well, this is Sarah Raful from Hillel, and I just have one question to ask you..."

"OK..." I answered, prompting her to continue. In all honesty the name didn't really sound familiar to me, and I feared she was a telemarketer trying to sell me something.

"Do you want to go to Israel?" Now that was a strange question indeed.

"Yes, I do I want to go to Israel."

"Well, congratulations, honey, you're going..."

The scene replayed over and over in my mind while in the El-Al terminal waiting for our flight to be called. I stood to the side and looked around me. There were religious and non-religious women with babies bouncing on their hips. There were men off to another side of the terminal dressed in Talitot, traditional praying shawls, and reciting Maariv, the evening prayer. Many were speaking Hebrew. Eleven and half-hours later, we landed in Ben Gurion airport. We were all exhausted but our excitement lent us the strength to carry on. This would be a common theme for the rest of the trip.

We got through customs and baggage and waited for missing members of our group to arrive. Then a man led us down a hallway to the exit. A tall girl waited at the exit doors with a flower, a bag and a huge poster welcoming me to Israel. It was my best friend whom greeting me in such a fashion We had met three years earlier in school. She's Israeli and, came to America because her father was on sabbatical. We had not seen each other in three years. That was my first image of Israel.

There would be other images of Israel that I would take home with me. The market place of Ben Yehuda Street is one of these images. I was on a mission, searching for a ring in the shape of the Western Wall with my sister's name on it. My friends and I tried one shop after another with no success. We went into a promising-looking shop called Peninat Yerushalyim, or Jewels of Jerusalem. We stepped inside. I asked a salesman if he had any of these rings available. He replied he did and that I should choose which one I want. We bargained for a half-hour and we were at a stalemate. Another salesman came over and the bargaining continued again. In the end we both came away happy. I would meet up with this salesman a few more times while in Jerusalem. He would greet me the same way each time: with a loud, carrying "Shalom!" and a large welcoming hand gesture. Each time he did this, I would hide my face.

Another experience was visiting the Western Wall. In the synagogue, during every holiday, my friends and I would sing B'shana Haba'a B'Yerushalyim, or next year in Jerusalem. Now here were all of us from UMass, all 59 of us, just one group out of hundreds of young Jewish-American students participating in the Birthright Israel 2001 trip. Our group leaders took us through the old city and made us wait in an enclosed alleyway. Our tension grew. My friend and I grabbed each other's hands for strength and support. The leaders told all of us to hold hands and close our eyes. Trust them, they said. They wouldn't let anything happen to us. We let go of our very human fear of the unknown, closed our eyes while we held each other's hands, and started to walk. They placed each of us near a cold metal fence. I stood there with my eyes closed listening to the muted hush of prayer and movement. Tears ran down my face. I opened my eyes and there it was: the Wall in all its glory. So huge from where we stood that the people looked like dolls. I stood there crying and thinking, "I'm finally here. I'm finally here."

At that moment we were in Jerusalem. The leaders took us down to visit the Wall up close. The women all walked as one to the women's section. Modestly dressed women prayed in front of the Wall. I waited till a woman finished praying and I stood in front of the Wall. I reached my hand out and touched it. It was a warm day...but the Wall was cool. The stone was smooth under my fingers, worn by millions of hands touching it over thousands of years. Hundreds of thoughts ran through my mind, racing like bothersome gnats. I closed my eyes, put my forehead to the Wall and said the Shema, a traditional Jewish prayer. "Hear, O Israel, the Lord is Our G-d, the Lord is One."

Batia Charpak is a UMass student.

"Life moves pretty fast. If you don't stop and look around..."

RYAN BENHARRIS

"Life moves pretty fast. If you don't stop and look around for a while, you may miss it."

How many people out there used this quote from Ferris Bueller's Day Off for their high school yearbook? Of course you did, because that's about as predictable as college life itself.

If you dare, join me in a journey into four years of college. If you're a senior, close your eyes and envision what you were like as a freshman. If you're a freshman, try to picture what life will be like as a senior. If you're a sophomore or a junior, just put the beer down and listen for a second.

It seems as though college life goes through a very specific pattern. As someone who is almost ready to move on from college and enter an extraordinarily scary job market, I suppose I can be arrogant enough to give you my take on the world I know.

Looking back, I guess I could say how much easier life is when you're a freshman. Honestly though, I don't think it was easier, just different. You enter college scared. You're terrified of what will happen, who your roommate will be and how different the food will taste. You're afraid of classes, and worried that you won't fit in. You ask everyone you see for directions on your way to everywhere because you have no clue where the hell you're going. After about a week, you're completely over that. You all of a sudden become spellbound with concepts like, "jello fights," "hallway soccer, "porno parties," and all sorts of other things you've never heard of before. One word describes your life: alcohol. You think that there is nothing worth doing without it. Everything from studying to praying involves booze. You hear horror stories about RAs, like, "they only live to write you up" or "how they cook and eat children." This is proven to you when you're written up for doing absolutely nothing wrong. It's not your fault that you were drinking from a keg that someone left in the shower. You didn't put it there. Bastards!

You're fascinated because there's a guy at the end of the hall who can buy beer. You get all dressed up to go the dining commons because there may be some sexy ladies there. You go to parties on your floor, and Round Robins in your building. All of which are in someone else's room that you "kinda know." If you're a guy, you listen to Pink Floyd, Snoop Dogg and Dave Matthews exclusively. If you're a woman, you listen to a wide array of N'Sync, Fiona Apple, Britney Spears and, of course, Dave Friggen Matthews. You attend every single class (for the first few weeks at least) and have a huge group of people you sit with. You and your friends all talk loudly about the random guy you hooked up with the weekend before, who spent the entire night puking in the women's bathroom. On Thursdays you talk incessantly about how great last night's Dawson's Creek was, whether you're a man or woman. You actually miss home, and by the first long weekend, you've gotten sick twice and had three conversations with your RA about how homesick you are.

Sophomores think they're the kings/queens of the world. You can even tell who is a sophomore just by how they walk on campus. They definitely know their way around, and will stop to tell everyone how to get anywhere. You know the names and phone numbers of every place that will deliver food after 1 a.m. You have figured out a way to manipulate the system so you don't have classes on Friday and you think it's the greatest accomplishment since the invention of the wheel. You have lounge furniture in your room, and know the systematic way on how to get it in and out of there without getting caught. All of a sudden your RA is not the evil person who writes people up, but someone who's only a year older than you. You recognize him because he's the guy who raised his hand and talked a lot in your Intro to Psychology class last year. You don't get dressed up to go to the dining hall. Instead, you condemn the food to hell and sit in your room with nothing but your boxers on, watching crappy movies on TV, starving yourself because you want to lose weight. The guy who buys beer at the end of the hallway does not fascinate you anymore. Instead, you tell everyone that he's one of your best friends that can "hook you up!" The parties and Round Robins are now in your room. By the end of the year, you're a bit sick of dorm life, but certainly don't want to go home. You hate your roommate. You want to be an RA, but can't, because of the time you got drunk, ripped the bulletin board down, peed in the stairwell and got written up. You long for your junior year so you can live off campus, get off the meal plan and have some real fun.

When you're a junior, you may move off campus, but some don't. Some become RAs. Some people even drop out. Parties in the dorms are starting to become almost as lame as the frat parties that you thought were so terrific two years ago. You finally realize that no classes on Friday means you have class until midnight on Monday-Thursday and it's not worth it. If you've stayed on campus, you start having weird revelations about how awful the residence halls are. There is a new "buyer" at the end of the hall, but you've stopped using him to buy you beer. He's in a couple of your classes. Your RA is the same age or younger than you. You work three jobs, go to school full time, and still can't understand why your parents don't take you seriously. When you do go to class, you sit by yourself, and the only classes that you want to attend are the small 20 person discussions. You're sick of the big lectures, and you can't pay attention because of the annoying group of freshmen who always sit in front of you and won't shut up about Dawson's Creek. Plus, you've been caught reading the Collegian three times by the professor, and you're abandantly sick of being yelled at by someone who, since he doesn't know your name, calls you "Sir" or "Miss." The only reason you're in a huge lecture like Nutrition 130 anyway is because you need credits and a GPA booster. Near the end of your junior year, you have disturbing revelations about the opposite sex. You find one, or maybe two people to constantly whine to about how awful your love life is, and "what you wouldn't give to be able to find someone to fix it." If you're a guy you start hitting on everyone. You start coming up with ideologies like, "nice guys never get any" and "all women want is someone to treat them like crap because that's a challenge, and since I don't have it in me to be a prick, I guess women will never want me" to try to justify how pathetic you actually are. If you're a woman, you're sick of not having anyone, but tired of being hit on by drunken idiots. You keep telling yourself that senior year will be great.

Well, you're a senior. First of all, you're back to being scared again. Only this time, unlike your freshman year, you have no clue what you're terrified of. Everything seems incredibly different. You still live in the residence halls, and you hate them worse than the dining commons. Only, the dining halls don't matter to you because you're not on the meal plan anymore. You ARE the guy at the end of the hall who can buy beer, and because of this, every Thursday, Friday and Saturday night you have so many freshman girls coming in and out of your room with a fistful of cash that passersby would think you're a full fledged pimp. For the first time in your life you've skipped class on the first day of school. You don't care though, because "you'll only be getting the syllabus," and it's Nutrition 130, which you failed last year. You've already heard the professors' long story about how the class is over enrolled, and it abundantly sucks anyway, so drop it to make room for the people who "really want to be there."

The thought of a party in the dorm is hilarious to you. You tell the people on your floor who are all younger than you (and this includes your RA who also buys booze from you) "I do all of my partying off campus." What that actually means is that you go to your friend's apartment in Puffton on Saturday nights and play Mario Kart while drinking Guinness, and fall asleep. Your parents didn't take you seriously a year ago, but you'd give anything to go back to that, because you're pretty sure that they have no interest in what you're doing what so ever now. Your theories about "nice guys not getting any," are also sidesplitting jokes to you. Instead you begin to understand that you're relentlessly cursed, and regardless of whatever you want, you'll never get it. You're still a grumbler, but now, you've turned that one or two people that you whine to into an entire campus. But you still remember those original one or two original people. They're called your best friends. If you're a guy, you've given up on hitting on anyone, especially people older than you, because you are genuinely exhausted from being rejected and terrified of it happening again. This is ironic because you used to take rejection with a grain of salt and laugh about it a week later. This obviously coincides with the fear of rejection from whatever you want to do after college. If you're a woman, you've made it your job to warn the freshman, sophomores and juniors about the dangers of hooking up with drunken idiots. Men and women both go to the bars because they're the last place of solitude that will welcome you regardless of who you are, simply because you're there to purchase the one constant throughout college: alcohol. The other reason why the bars are so great is because someone else always wants to go, so you're never alone. May rolls around much too soon, but in an indescribable way, not soon enough. You spend the entire graduation ceremony remembering your high school graduation when all you could think about was how great the next four years would be.

They are great though. Regardless of what happens in college, it is impossible to come out of it unchanged. You simply cannot leave here with nothing in your pocket and emptiness in your mind. Though your heart may have been broken several hundred times, and your brain may be half dead from a disproportionate ratio of booze to knowledge, everyone should be happy that both are still functioning. Life moves pretty fast. Please, for the love of God, stop and look around, because if you miss it, then I am so, so sorry for you.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist.

Valentine's subtle genius dissected

By Kurt Polesky, Tim Letteney and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Valentine isn't so much a film as it is art. We tried to figure out the best way to review this cinematic masterpiece, but the only thing we could think to do was transcribe our discussion of this work of Biblical proportions.

Sam: On the very face of it, I have to give this film 15 out of 10. No, 17. The sheer depth of the writing, the clever ability of the script to shed all of that logical progression of events baggage was stunning. And the conclusion was easily the most amazing ending ever. Ever. Bar-none, hands down, balls to the wall incredible. Valentine is our generation's Il Dolce Vita, or perhaps even, Nailgun Massacre.

Kurt: I'll have to agree with Sam that Valentine was our generation's Il Dolce Vita. However, I don't think he gives it quite enough praise. I mean, 17 out of 10 – come on Sam, I'm thinking more of a 18 out of 10 (on a 1-10 scale with 10 being the highest). Rarely does a film succeed on as many levels as Valentine does. Plus, it has Denise Richards.

Tim: Sam and Kurt both raise interesting points about the sheer brilliance of Valentine. Alas I feel that constricting this film to the restraints of a numbered rating understates its power. I was shaking from the macabre atmosphere. I was stunned from the depth and the range of the characters, and my God...a cupid mask...how inventive. I see this movie as a commentary on the times. For it is always our loved ones, our "angels" if you will, that tear out our hearts and finger-paint the walls with our intensely misdirected love.

Sam: Preach that gospel brother Tim; preach that gospel. Valentine indicated to me, if no one else, that the stunning collection of quality teen horror films over the past few years seems sure to continue. Urban Legend 2: Final Cut, I Still Know What You Did Last Summer, The Faculty and, of course, Cruel Intentions. Valentine dared to walk the fiery coals of alcoholism, Caligula like parties of sin and debauchery, thin girls being called "fat," and the world of overly artistic deaths. What other movie would challenge the viewers in quite the same way that director Jamie Banks has? After wowing us with his stunning debut, Urban Legend, his second film Valentine has really entered the canon of the best. It should anyway.

Kurt: Although I don't appreciate Sam's witticism about Cruel Intentions being a horror movie, seems he thinks it is horror-ble, I do agree with him on other points. For one, the film most definitely challenged the viewer on many levels. Also, as Tim so astutely stated, the movie was truly a "commentary of the times." I felt a close identification with many of the characters (not the buck-toothed loser who couldn't get any of the girls to dance with them at a junior high dance of course), I myself was once locked in a hot tub while a maniac wearing a Cupid mask attempted to kill me with a drill, so this hit close to home for me.

Tim: Director/virtuoso Jamie Banks has created a millestone in the slasher genre. This movie is as revolutionary as Alfred Hitchcock's Psycho. Lets face it though; Alfred Hitchcock is no Jamie Banks. This movie will be used as a reference point for all future slasher flics. New and up-in-coming directors would be foolish not to borrow from Bank's successful formula. Do yourself a favor; bring a notebook to the theatre when you go to see this film. I guarantee that you will learn more from this director than you will from any of your professors.

Sam: Something's ticking at me though, nagging at me and my mental condition. I can't think of what it is. Like I've got a little bit of anger, some sort of internal rage, something just chomping away at my insides. Valentine was so brilliant, so good; it just feels like something isn't right, something wasn't appropriate. I can't think of what it might be. The film was stunning. The acting was amazing. Just the whole of it wowed me, stunned me, but something's wrong. Anybody have any thoughts about what it might be?

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Marley Shelton, Denise Richards and great teeth.

Kurt: I'm not sure what could possibly be nagging at you Sam. This film had it all: the acting, the script, and the visually stunning actresses – I mean visually stunning set. What more could one ask for? Perhaps what may have thrown you off a bit was something that has yet to be mentioned, the revolutionary climactic death scene. Not to ruin for any of our readers who for some reason haven't found the time to view this masterpiece, but the scene at the end where a gun is used to make the final killing was something new to the horror genre. Another thing that might be bothering you is "fatty." I mean Dorothy. Come on... what a cow.

Tim: I am guessing that the internal rage that Sam is experiencing is due to the poor reception that Valentine has received from the general public. Is our society so blind that they cannot recognize good film making? Must poor movies such as The Wedding Planner and Scary Movie always claim the number one spot? Or perhaps I am the blind one. Maybe this movie just satiated my need to see horror movies at the local cinema. I think I might have a problem. My blood lust has leaked into my days and I feel as though my mask of sanity is begging to slip. Please excuse me; I have to go return some videotapes.

Sam: I think maybe I'm concerned that this cinematic brilliance made only $10,000,000 at the box office, or perhaps my anger is based in some sort of deeper feeling of sheer pain at having watched what might be the second worst film of all time behind the inane Battlefield Earth. I feel so conflicted, so up-in-the-proverbial-air about this film. Part of me tells me it was soul-crushingly bad. Part of me tells me it was worse than Battlefield Earth. Another tells me it was just plain horrible. So many different analyses available for my brain, a brain that can't possibly comprehend the painful vision I witnessed Friday night, a brain that praised this movie as recently as thirty lines ago in this very article, I'm horrified and scared, shocked and saddened by own inability to correctly describe the sheer awfulness of Valentine. I'm stunned and the only thing keeping me going was the brilliant ending. Ahem.

Kurt: Come on Sam, why the sudden change of heart? Comparing this film to Battlefield Earth is a slap in the face. I mean seriously, Valentine did have an entertaining quality to it. Another thing that needs to be considered is who the film is aimed at. Is this the kind of movie aimed at sophisticated horror movie fans? No. Instead it is aimed at the Scream, Urban Legends crowd that just want a cheap scare, ridiculous plot twist, and a "surprise" ending to satisfy them.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Marley Shelton's gotta gun...

Tim: Scream is a different story Kurt. Though It was aimed at the same target audience as Valentine it had a lot more depth to it. It didn't steal from previous horror movies it referenced them. Valentine sucked. The only reason I haven't spoken poorly about Valentine yet it because I am trying to fit in at the Collegian. Sam and Kurt said they liked it, so I figured I should like it. But isn't that the way it is, every God damn time. Save your money kiddies.

Sam: Tim, Kurt, I respect your opinion about this film. I respect the fact you went to see this film with me. I respect the fact that you didn't holler expletives at the screen when the film was over as I did. I respect the both you.

What I don't respect is the sheer horrific nature of the quality, and I'm not, in anyway, referring the to the fact that this was a horror film. I'm referring to the lack of quality, the lack of deaths, the lack of anything at all worth anything at all that should have been deepsixed on the loading docks. But no, it itself forced upon an unsuspecting public who had come to believe that the film would be good. "Twist" ending? No way. It was an awful ending that had nothing to do with anything that was even hinted at during the film. There wasn't the slightest shred, the weakest whiff, the craziest clue that the killer was whom it actually ended up being. Of course, I'll leave the ending up to each of the film's viewers to guess, as I'd hate to ruin it.

Except I will say that it's the main character's boyfriend, her god damned boyfriend, as if that had anything to do with the plot, as if anything at all pointed to him being the killer. "Shock" ending my ass. This ending sucked. This movie sucked. Everything about Valentine sucked.

Politically-charged syrup coats Chocolat, mixing romance with morality lessons

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

CHOCOLAT
directed by Lasse Hallström with Juliette Binoche, Judi Dench, Johnny Depp
playing at Cinemark 15, Hadley

Chocolat, quite intentionally, has all of the makings of a modern-day fairy tale: it takes place in an isolated town in the French countryside in the recent past (c. 1960), its heroine exhibits pseudo-magical talents, its characters inhabit easily-identifiable notches in a moral framework and it spends considerable time alternating between humorous and didactic modes. Additionally, however, and perhaps unintentionally, it takes on traits of a romantic comedy, a social treatise on the perils of classism and unchecked religious fervor, and an examination of small-town politics. These various influences, thrown together with a plot that feels far too contrived and manipulative to maintain a sense of authenticity, but which desperately wants its audience to sympathize with its characters on account of their realness, combine ultimately into a clunky tale. A tale, which, at times displays undeniable charm and appeal, offers little more than heavy-handed fluff.

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Juliette Binoche and her controversial chocolaterie.

The story opens with Vianne Rocher (Juliette Binoche) and her daughter Anou moving into a small French town at the beginning of the season of Lent and setting about opening a chocolaterie. Being an old-fashioned and deeply religious town, the townspeople, and especially its proud, paternal mayor Comte de Reynaud (Alfred Molina), view the arrival of the colorful, exuberant, non-churchgoing and unmarried young mother and her shop of sweet temptations with suspicion and distrust. Vianne, however, begins making friends, displaying a talent for prescribing sweets that raise the spirits of the gloomy townspeople, awakening libidos and patching familial relationships. The arrival of the gypsy-esque Roux (Johnny Depp) adds tension to the situation, both as a romantic interest for Vianne, and as an object of the insular townspeople's hostility.

Somewhere around the middle of the film, we learn that Vianne is descended from a line of similarly talented women, forever cursed to wander from town to town, employing their confectionery talents for the benefit of others until called away by the cold north wind. And no, it doesn't sound any less cheesy the way the movie tells it.

As with any good fairy-tale, this one has a take-home message: stop and taste the chocolate. The contrast between Vianne's godless good cheer and the demonstrably ineffective religious devotion of the townspeople is forever in the audience's face, and even to this liberal, anti-establishment reviewer, the dichotomy appeared false and unnecessarily critical of the church. The film takes too much glee in painting the religiousness of the mayor as self-serving and disconnected from true spirituality, and this anti-faith ranting becomes more distracting and distasteful as the movie goes on.

Other aspects of the movie begin to grate on the audience's nerves as well: the characters all speak in French accents which range from authentic (Binoche is a native Parisian) to bad and obviously affected, and Vianne's smile, her damn sunny smile, claims more screen time than any smile ought to.

With all of this fault-naming out of the way, however, it must be admitted that much of the film is enjoyable, if guiltily so; the acting is good, Binoche especially shining in the few scenes of true emotional weight. The supporting cast, including Judi Dench (Shakespeare in Love) and Carrie-Anne Moss (The Matrix), holds its own.

Chocolat would like you to walk away with a renewed vitality and lust for life, and a greater appreciation for the numerous little moments that make it worth living. It's doubtful that you actually will walk away with this, but, if you can weather the high-fructose peachiness, you might just walk away with a smile.

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

The Oscar-toting Judi Dench.

A look at this year's Golden Globe fashion

I love gowns and tuxes, but I hate stuffy parties, which is why the Golden Globes are my absolute favorite awards show. It's laid back and people laugh, but everyone is decked out. Totally my style of bash; however, I didn't get to go this year. The Style File invitation/press pass must have been lost in the shuffle of me moving from my dorm back home. It's a shame, but worry not, I still watched it like everyone else... on my little 13-inch television, pen and paper in hand.

I pre-gamed with the E! Golden Globes Pre-Show, hosted by two of my least favorite people... the Rivers Women – Joan and Melissa. I cannot stand back stabbers – they act so effusive and star struck when they see everyone on the red carpet, but as soon as Saturday rolls around, they trash everyone during their Fashion Review.

Style File
WITH SHAUNA BILLINGS

The place was glittering, full of Old Hollywood style with women in long gowns and men looking dashing in tuxedos. Strapless gowns were the look of this awards show for women, with many women opting for pink and black. Men were ditching the traditional bow tie for a long tie. I do feel bad for guys though – they have limited fashion opportunity during black tie... but it's hard for them to go wrong, as tuxes look great on all guys.

Worst Facial Hair – Tom Hanks. Last year he had that nasty beard that he grew for Cast Away, and now this year he shows up with an evil little caterpillar mustache. I'm hoping it's for a new role he has, but seriously... ew!

Worst Dye Job – Freddie Prinze Jr. I love Freddie Prinze Jr.; he's cute, he's charming and he stars in all those cheesy romantic comedies I so love... therefore I was absolutely crushed when he arrived at the awards show sporting a very brassy peroxide job. He's loaded, and I could have done a better job for him at a sink in my dorm. Sad, very sad. However, he did redeem himself with his outfit, which was a black tux, black shirt and light pink tie... I thought it looked great. It was modern and different from what others were wearing.

Worst Portrayal of Rags – Sarah Jessica Parker. People have looked good In rags before – Cinderella, Audrey Hepburn in My Fair Lady – but S.J.P. does not make it to the list. While I loved the color of her light pink strapless sarong, she had to keep pulling it up and holding it together as she walked. Seems like she could afford a safety pin. And what was with the weird Hawaiian lei or whatever she hung on the side of it?

Worst Use of a Safety Pin – Charlize Theron. So Sarah Jessica Parker couldn't afford a safety pin? Well Charlize Theron used lots of them and got a little cocky... her dress was all slits held together to keep her decent. She's so beautiful; I feel she should have opted for a more classy dress than the black halter dress with deep V's at the neckline, below the bust and at the stomach. And the corsage just looked goofy.

Worst... What?!? – Bjork. First off, I give Bjork credit for doing her own thing. She rocks. However, I would be remiss if I didn't include her on my list of No-Nos. The puffy geisha-do, crossed with the sequined Michael Jackson t-shirt and beaded owl bag and complimented with the fur tube she wore over her arms and middle was the weirdest thing I've seen since I used to dress up my Barbies. I was just concerned the whole time about how she'd move her arms!

Worst Use of Barney's Carcass – Iara Flynn Boyle. I really liked Lara's periwinkle sequined gown, but then she ruined it by tossing on this hideous purple fur wrap. I wondered how she was able to lift that monstrosity. She's become so incredibly thin, I would have thought it would have knocked her over.

Worst Lingerie Goof – Marg Helgenberger. Her black, red and pink flowered dress might have been all right if the designer had let it be a strapless and low backed gown, but he decided to toss a black bra into the mix, which made it look like Helgenberger (from Erin Brockovich and CSI – but I have no clue who she is either) was tacky enough to throw a regular bra on with a gown – truly horrible.

But I don't want to sound catty, so I'm going to leave you with my best dressed list. Dylan McDermott looked very handsome in a traditional tuxedo look. Matthew McConaughey spiced up his black tux with a pale blue shirt and matching long tie, which looked really fantastic. Hilary Swank looked like a mermaid in her silvery Calvin Klein dress. Callista Flockhart looked radiant in a pink ruffled dress that would have looked terrible on anyone else. The short dress with slit ruffled sleeves added bulk to her thin frame and her curled hair made her look very romantic... she looked beautiful. Jennifer Lopez looked like a Grecian goddess in her one-shouldered white satin dress, and I loved the diamonds she added to her curled updo. Renee Zellweger, who nearly missed accepting her award due to a lipstick on teeth debacle that sent her to the ladies room, looked very old-Hollywood in her black satin strapless ball gown with a modern slit up to her thigh.

And for Best Dressed, it's a tie. Debra Messing glowed and looked stunning in a black and white horizontally striped gown with a spaghetti strap halter. And Julia Robert wore the simplest dress of the night – a high necked, long sleeved black dress, yet looked more beautiful than I've ever seen her look. She closed her acceptance speech for the Best Actress Award with "I won! I'm just shamelessly filled with joy!" That joy just radiated from her million-watt smile – the best accessory of the night.

Shauna Billings is a Collegian columnist.

Miracle Orchestra to flood Iron Horse with improv fusion

By Joe Cordozo
Collegian Staff

This Thursday night at the Iron Horse is a show that is not to be missed. The Miracle Orchestra, an improvisational fusion band out of Boston will be combining forces with The Squad for an evening of jam-insanity. The Miracle Orchestra has toured nationally, building a fan base for their improvisational style. Their jams are built on their incredibly tight drummer and bassist who individually are incredible musicians. They played at the Skybox last fall, and are looking forward to playing the Iron Horse.

Drummer Bill Carbone, said, "We've played the Iron Horse a few times, and it's a beautiful club, definitely one of the nicest in the northeast. We're excited to come back and hope that it will be a great show."

Carbone also gave a little history about the band, and explained how they got to be where they are now.

"Geoff Scott and myself grew up together in CT. We moved to Boston together to go to school and play music. We didn't really play at all our first year, but got a bit more ambitious the second year. We had met Garrett Sayers in CT as well and done some jazz standards gigs together. As soon as we found out that he was coming to Boston, we snagged him!" he said. "He was really the only bass player that could have worked.

"My first night at New England Conservatory there was a big jazz jam. Everyone was timid, trying to play perfect bebop solos and whatnot. Jared Sims got up and ripped the loudest nastiest solo I've ever heard in my life. I knew right away that he was going to be a part of it too," he said. "There were others that came in and out, but the four of us were the matrix and here we are now."

Miracle Orchestra recently released an album, Forks, Bends, and Spoons, on Grapeshot Records, and after a February stint around the Northeast, they will embark on a national tour. The group had taken a break for about a month and a half, but is now excited to go back on the road and explore a new sound.

"We played our first gigs last week. It was like being in a new band. Everyone came back playing differently, it was great," said Carbone. "A short term goal is to use more space in the music. We're taking a lot from DJ's that we've been listening to. We've been pretty high energy guys for quite some time, and I feel like we're learning how to focus that energy more efficiently."

The Miracle Orchestra always puts on a good show, but for those who want to be there as they explore new musical territory, this one will be great.

The Miracle Orchestra plays the Iron Horse in Northampton on Thursday February 8. The Squad will open the show at 9:30pm. Tickets are $5.

UCLA alums finally tasting fruits of music industry labors

By Mary Williams
Daily Bruin (U. California Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – Being signed to a major label at its first show at the Whisky, then selling over 1 million copies of its debut album, "Hybrid Theory," makes it seem like success almost came too easily for Linkin Park.

But with the band starting out on its fifth of a seemingly never-ending series of nation-crossing tours, no one can say that the group isn't working hard for its fans.

"Now, when I get to Des Moines, I'm like, 'Oh, I'm here again,'" said University of California at Los Angeles alumnus and Linkin Park guitarist Brad Delson, in a recent phone interview.

"Places you'd never think to go to are suddenly really familiar. Like, we're in Sacramento, and I recognize the pizza place. It's really weird."

Before the members of the band became so knowledgeable about the ins and outs of America's heartland, however, they were putting in years of work under conditions that were less than ideal.

In their college years, UCLA roommates Delson and Dave Farrell, the original and newly returned bass player for Linkin Park, would have to move their equipment from their dorm room or apartment to a rented rehearsal space each night to practice, and then move it back again.

"I would go to class, and then at night Dave and I would pack all our gear into my Honda and we'd drive all the way across town to Hollywood, to a really shady rehearsal space which you'd rent out by the hour," Delson said. "If you've never been to one of these places, you don't want to ever go. It's so sketchy."

"We did that for years. So we've definitely worked really hard for a long time," he continued. "It's just that the last six months have been a kind of really steep curve in terms of how much exposure we've been getting and how much success we've had with our record."

Along with Delson and Farrell, Linkin Park also includes vocalists Chester Bennington and Mike Shinoda, drummer Rob Bourdon and DJ Joe Hahn.

In the early years of the band, before it began its first tour, its members focused on songwriting rather than performing. Everyone in the group takes part in the songwriting process, according to Delson.

"Someone will come up with an idea, like (Shinoda) will come up with a beat, or I'll come up with a guitar part, and people will come in and bring other things to the table, and then the song will evolve as more and more layers get added to it," he said. "Technology allows you to really flexibly move things around and try different parts in different places in the song, which allows us to perfect not just the parts but the song as a whole, in other words, the structure of it and the composition," he continued.

This long and careful songwriting process is not entirely foolproof, however. "We actually forgot to curse on the record," Delson said, laughing. "Mike and Chester had worked so hard on the lyrics, really to express them as honestly as possible, how they were feeling about certain things that were happening in their lives, and afterwards they honestly realized that they had forgotten to be obscene."

The album is indeed entirely obscenity-free, although this may give listeners the wrong impression of the band, Delson explained.

"Some people go, 'Oh, you guys are a Christian band,' because there's no cursing, and then they come to the show and they'll definitely hear the f-word flying around, and you're like, 'Oh wow,'" he said.

Southern Californians can hear for themselves at the Dragon Festival this Saturday. Linkin Park heads up a bill including GZA and B-Real at the 11-hour concert in San Bernardino.

"It really embodies the vibe and the styles of music that we're interested in and the groups that we're interested in playing with," Delson said.

"It's just going to be an all-around awesome show with an awesome vibe, and we're not playing actually in L.A., so that's the closest to a hometown show that we're going to do."

The show is part of Linkin Park's Street Soldiers headliner tour with Taproot. Hip hop group Styles of Beyond is opening the shows on the West Coast and rock group Alien Ant Farm will be opening for the rest of the tour.

Linkin Park isn't showing any signs of letting up after its tour ends in late February on the East Coast. Immediately following the tour, it plans to tour in Europe with the Deftones, a band Delson cites as an influence for Linkin Park in addition to being one of his favorite bands.

"It's ridiculously great. I still feel like I'm going to wake up and someone is going to tell me it was a practical joke, and that we're not really opening for them, at which point I'd be like, 'You know what? I should've expected that,'" he said. "We're kind of blown away that they actually asked us to tour with them just because we're such big fans."

The band met the Deftones through a concert in Atlanta in which both groups were playing.

"My manager was like, 'Dude, go say hi. Give them a CD,' and I was so nervous I couldn't do it. I swear, I was holding the CD and I was thinking about how I was going to say hi, and give it to them, and finally I just copped out and I gave it to Mike. I'm like, 'I can't do it. Just go give them the CD.'"

Fortunately for Linkin Park, Shinoda did give the Deftones the CD, and now the group can add touring with its idol to its list of hard-earned accomplishments.

COURTESY DISNEY - PIXAR PICTURES

Don't look under the bed

Walt Disney Pictures and Pixar Animation Studios have teamed to bring Monsters, Inc. to the big screen.

Help an artist write for Arts.
Come down to the Collegian office and talk to us.

Fiddler Eliza Carthy blends folk and pop – and delivers

By Krissy Claes
The University News (Saint Louis U.)

ELIZA CARTHY
Angels and Cigarettes
Warner Brothers

(U-WIRE) ST. LOUIS – Eliza Carthy would have made a great punk rocker. Electric blue tendrils frame her face, studded with piercings like the provocative topics that sprout from her lyrics. But she wields an instrument punk rockers would find unfamiliar: the fiddle.

Her new album, Angels and Cigarettes, is a progressive marriage of folk and pop. Carthy has arrived at mainstream's front door bearing the fruits of her many years of labor as a folk musician. Like any fruit basket Angels and Cigarettes is bound to contain something you like.

Carthy grew up in Britain, immersed in folk music. She played the fiddle in her parents' band, Waterson: Carthy. Angels and Cigarettes is Carthy's fourth full-length solo release, but it is being crowned her crossover album. Carthy sings and plays the fiddle and other string instruments. The addition of pop to her potion may indeed attract more listeners, but only certain parts of this album radiate with quality.

"Whispers of Summer" opens up the album with an infectious lilt. It sounds like the middle of July, with a bittersweet chorus about summer love. "This warm breeze is clogging my eyes."

Carthy's fiddling has the authentic sound of a musician entertaining down at the local pub. The chorus is harmonized with a few additional tracks of Carthy's vocals in order to boost the intensity and richness of her voice.

All the songs on the album contain layering of vocal tracks, usually during the chorus. Although this can enrich the sound, it becomes dizzying after awhile. Carthy's virtuosity at the fiddle compensates for some of the bland vocal lines, but others remain either flat or drown in harmony.

A successful example of vocal layering occurs on the second track, "Train Song." This song resembles the velvety sound of Sarah McLachlan's Fumbling Towards Ecstasy. Carthy reveals in the liner notes that this song is a story that is "probably fantasy, a run developmental pursuit." She chants, "I'm in trouble 'cos I've been watching/ watching from your bedroom window/ and I don't want to see you alone no more."

"Beautiful Girl" asserts itself as one of the album's shining moments. Its commentary about beauty in our society flourishes within this complex song. It is a pretty song that incorporates zinging and electronic sounds that modernize the feel of the tune. The lyrics reflect empathy for beautiful people who have been stereotyped, and distaste for society's claim that beauty is paramount.

"And the fun never ends and her friends say she's oh such a lovely lass/ wait 'til she ages and maybe they'll say how she's losing all her class."

"Whole" is a funky, R&B track, a sexy example of Carthy's vocal talent. She laments, "I could climb all the way inside you and be you for a day." Its chorus is catchy and emotive, a highlight of the album. Angels and Cigarettes slips toward self-absorption in the second half of the album salvaged only by the amazing string arrangements that appear in curious places. "The Company of Men" is a blunt soliloquy of a song that belongs in a campy musical, not this album, and its presence is only slightly amusing. Carthy needs to be better acclimated to the pop landscape before she can reach her peak, but anyone looking for edgy folk talent will enjoy Angels and Cigarettes' beauty and antics.

we throw all kinds of [obstacles] at you.
tuition isn't one of them.
Sure, we'll have you climbing walls. But if you qualify for a 2- or 3-year scholarship, tuition's one obstacle you won't have to worry about. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. And get a leg up on your future.
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
Come and see what everyone is talking about!
UMASS ARMY ROTC @ (413) 545-2321

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.

Classes.....Covered ☑ Tuition.....Covered ☑ Health Insurance....?
GET COVERED!
The Chickering Group in partnership with UMASS Amherst offers a Spring Term Health Insurance Plan for the period February 1, 2001 through September 1, 2001. Deadline to enroll for Spring Term is February 12, 2001.
Plan Highlights include:
• Access to local and national Preferred Provider Networks through Aetna U.S. Healthcare.
• Low out-of-pocket expenses.
• Elimination of out-of-pocket expenses for many UHS services.
• Expanded Mental Health / Substance Abuse Coverage.
• Access to the Aetna U.S. Healthcare Prescription Drug Network.
To receive information call The Chickering Group directly at (877) 480-4167.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Jeff Turner provided power-play fireworks for UMass by banging home a second-chance goal against Lowell on Saturday.

Brown Arena leaves hockey feeling blue

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – One of these days, the Massachusetts hockey team will win a game at the campus rink of Boston University.

However, since the Terriers are planning to build a new facility to replace Walter Brown Arena within the next few years, a change of scenery might be considered a change for the better.

UMass entered Friday night's Hockey East contest with the Terriers hoping to snap a 0-for-14 streak at Walter Brown Arena. Instead, the Minutemen encountered a red-hot BU team who scored four unanswered goals in a span of 4:42 to capture a 5-1 victory over the Minutemen.

"I wasn't too pleased all-around," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "We struggle in this building and I struggle in this building. I'm waiting for the day when we have a team that can come in here and skate with them."

The Terriers [11-12-2, 8-7-2 in Hockey East] dominated the first period and a half of play before the Minutemen finally woke up midway through the second frame.

After BU forward Brian Collins netted the game first goal at 16:07 of the opening stanza, UMass sophomore winger Brad Nizwantowski tallied the equalizer at 15:56 mark of the second period. The Peabody native dug the puck out from behind the Terriers' cage, then slid a shot between the right leg of BU goalie Sean Fields and the right post to knot the game momentarily.

"I thought that UMass got themselves back in the game emotionally and on the scoreboard in the last eight or nine minutes of the second period," BU hockey coach Jack Parker said. "We started out real well in the second, but we goofed up and gave up a couple of breakaways [which were stopped by Fields]. It could have been 2-1 or 3-1 then going into the third period."

Just when it seemed like the Minutemen had some momentum on their side, Martin Miljko and Nizwantowski each took penalties that handed the Terriers a two-man advantage. Of course, BU cashed in on the chance when Carl Corazzini flipped a shot past Markus Helanen with only seven seconds remaining in the second period.

Although still in the game on the scoreboard, the Minutemen fell victim to the Terriers' renewed sense of urgency in the opening minutes of the third period.

Things started to fall apart early on in the frame when a funny carom resulted in the third BU goal. Freddy Meyer's shot from the right point bounced off of the back boards and ended up right on the stick of Jack Baker, who banged the puck into an empty cage.

"We got a huge goal in the first minute of the third, and that was the difference in the game," Parker said. "First we got the five-on-three that we capitalized on, and then the five-on-four that we capitalized on. Those were two big goals obviously."

The Terriers tacked on two more goals to seal up the win within the next three and a half minutes. Collins' floater from the left circle eluded Helanen only 27 seconds after Baker's marker and made it 4-1. John Cronin closed out the four-goal differential with his second goal of the season at 4:35.

"My plan wasn't to lose 5-1," Cahoon said. "That whole series at the end of the second period and start of the third was the game. Our problem is that once we've fallen behind, we're not the kind of team that has proved that it can come back from a two or three goal deficit."

In fact, as Cahoon alluded to, the Minutemen have yet to win a game this year in which they have trailed at the start of the third period [0-14-1].

UMass faced Lowell on Saturday night with the hope of gaining a split out of the weekend pair. To see how they did, check out the related story.

River Hawks clinch win and tie-breaker over stumbling UMass

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

A night after coming off an embarrassing loss at the hands of Boston University, the Massachusetts hockey team had a chance to leave its final two-game road trip of the season on a positive note.

Unfortunately for UMass (7-18-3, 6-11-3 Hockey East) what transpired on the ice at Tsongas Arena was a far too familiar sight – another loss.

With the win Lowell improved to 13-11-3 overall and 6-8-3 HE. But more importantly the River Hawks secured two crucial points in the conference and the tie-breaker if the two teams were to finish in a tie and claimed the Alumni Cup for the fourth year in a row.

"We got two crucial points tonight," Lowell head coach Tim Whitehead said. "We've climbed to fifth, but we can't get too far ahead of ourselves."

Lowell got on the board first when Ed McGrane scored the first of his two power play goals at the 15:47 mark of the first period. Brad Rooney fed a pass to McGrane at the left faceoff circle. The forward then attacked the net and slipped a shot past goalie Mike Johnson for the lead, a lead that would never be relinquished.

McGrane would double the River Hawk lead again on the power play at the 13:24 mark of the second period when Yorick Treille found the sophomore all alone at the side of the cage for the eventual game-winning goal.

"The biggest thing for us was that we were moving the puck well [on the power play]," McGrane said. "As soon as we had possession, [UMass] kind of backed off and that gave our guys time to see openings and find seams. We just had it together tonight and were able to drive to the net."

"Penalties hurt us as we haven't been a good penalty kill team all year," UMass head coach Don Cahoon said. "Continually, we've made major blunders on the PK, which we made two tonight, and they capitalized."

The Minutemen would score their only goal of the game on the power play early in the third period when Tim Turner muscled his way through traffic and banged home the rebound of a Samuli Isikanen slap shot.

But just as it looked as if the Maroon and White were rejuvenated, the River Hawks stormed back for two quick goals to put the game out of reach.

Less than two minutes after Turner cut the Lowell lead in half, a defensive blunder by the Minutemen allowed a breakaway to Lowell's Ron Hainsey.

While one-on-one with Johnson the defenseman made a quick fake and fired a shot through the goalies five-hole for the tally.

Moments after giving up a breakaway to Hainsey, UMass, again, allowed a defenseman to streak in alone on Johnson.

Darryl Green took advantage of an odd-man that resulted in the breakaway and the game's final goal.

The freshman made a series of fakes on Johnson and slipped a shot that hit the left post and trickled behind the junior for the goal.

In goal for the River Hawks for the win was Hockey East Goaltender of the Month Jimi St. John. The junior made 25 saves on the night en route to the win.

"I think he's done a real good job," Cahoon said. "I've seen him a couple of times against us and a few more occasions and he does a nice job of squaring himself to the shooter and playing the puck."

"He's really stabilized our defense," Whitehead said. "The guys are doing a great job in front of him and that's been a great combo."

Information from USCHO.com was used in this story.

Minutewomen bounce back at expense of Bonnies

"Cannonballs" spell offensive explosion as sophomore guard maximizes surprise start

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

It couldn't have gotten much worse Wednesday for the Massachusetts women's basketball team. Being shot down by Rhode Island, the cellar-dwellers of the Atlantic-10, was bad enough for the besieged squad.

However, after today's MRI on sophomore Ebony Pegues is completed, the UMass roster will most likely be one Minutewoman short for the rest of the season.

"Do I think she's going to be out for the year? Probably," head coach Joanie O'Brien said. "But at this stage of the game, it's not that big of a deal. We just crossed a bridge. If they tell us tomorrow (that she tore her ACL), then that's what it is."

Yesterday, when the Minutewomen took the floor for their conference match-up with St. Bonaventure, Pegues hopped to the end of the bench. It was from that position that she watched her team beat up the Bonnies, 76-45 to secure win No. 10 of the 2000-01 campaign.

Sophomore Kristen Cannon went 5-for-10 from the field and 3-for-6 from behind the arc on her way to a game-high 17 points. Prior to the battle, Cannon had played a total of 16 minutes the entire season. But with Pegues gone, O'Brien was forced to mix things up, subsequently giving the "Cannon-ball" her first career start.

"When somebody goes down somebody has to step up into a different role," O'Brien said. "And when bad things happen you have to find a silver lining. Maybe with Ebony going down, this is Kristen's silver lining to step up. And hopefully she can continue this."

"I felt really comfortable out there," Cannon said. "I was given the opportunity and I just took advantage of it."

It took only fourteen seconds for Cannon to light up, as she drilled a three-pointer to give UMass the 3-0 lead. Just over a minute later, she released another one of her patented rainbow shots and nailed her second three-pointer of the contest.

"She came out and took the most of her opportunity," St. Bonaventure head coach Jim Crowley said. "She knocked down two early shots and her confidence went from there.

"I think other people fed from that," he continued. "You have a kid who's been working hard all year in practice – gets a chance to play – and she delivers. Her teammates are going to feed off that and they certainly did."

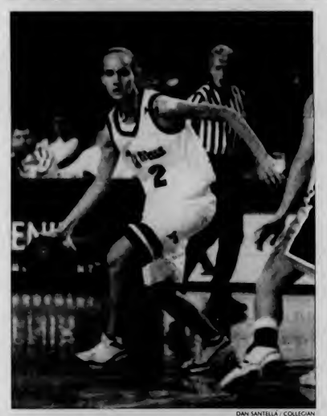
With 13:35 left in the first half, sophomore Jen Butler (10 points) picked up a loose ball just outside the paint and banked a fall-away jumper to give the Minutewomen an 18-8 lead. About two minutes later, senior Kathy Coyner (15 points, 13 in first half) sank a three-pointer, upping the Maroon and White advantage to 21-9. The assault was on, and UMass wouldn't look back. In the second half, the Maroon and White extended its lead to as much as 34 points.

"Joanie's teams have always played great defense and she deserves a ton of credit for getting them ready after a tough loss to Rhode Island," Crowley said. "They don't miss a beat and they buried us today."

The Minutewomen were stifling on the defensive side of the ball, on the good end of the Bonnies 29 turnovers. The UMass press, combined with the strong presence of Butler and junior Caroline Nehls frustrated the St. Bonaventure offense to its 14-for-45, 31 percent shooting.

UMass had four players in double figures and hit just under 50 percent of its shots, a dramatic improvement on its 24 percent disaster in Rhode Island.

A huge scare for UMass came late in the first half when Butler went down with a leg injury. She did not return and will have x-rays done today.



DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Second-year guard Kristin Cannon looks for a seam in the St. Bonaventure defense. Cannon notched a game-high 17 points in her first career start Yesterday at the Mullins Center.

MATTHEW BENCAL

With sophomore guard Ebony Pegues injured, the Massachusetts women's basketball team needed one of its role players to step up. In it's last game against Rhode Island, head coach Joanie O'Brien watched her squad turn the ball over 28 times and score a mere 35 points. Obviously, changes were needed.

Enter Kristin Cannon to the starting lineup. Cannon has seen very limited action on the court this season, with her role restricted to three-point shooting in desperate situations. Her career high in points scored coming into yesterday's game against St. Bonaventure was a humble five.

Furthermore, Cannon hasn't seen any considerable time on the hardwood since the Minutewomen's sole exhibition game of the pre-season against the University of Latvia. Cannon shined by shooting a perfect 7-7 from the field en route to her game high 17 points in the squad's 84-49 win.

But 20 games have passed since Cannon lit up the Mullins Center against Latvia, and she since had been subtracted from the O'Brien's equation for success.

That equation for success, combined with the loss of Pegues and a disappointing loss at URI, needed to be changed. O'Brien had been shaking up the starting lineup recently, but it appeared that Cannon had been forgotten about.

To the surprise of the UMass women's hoops community, Cannon started in her first game ever against the Bonnies. On the team's first possession, the rock was dished out to Cannon behind the arc and she threw up one of her patented rainbow bombs, and it hit the bottom of the net for the first three points of the game.

"Obviously, they didn't know that I was going to start," Cannon said. "They had a post player on me, she was five feet off me, so I just shot it."

Cannon didn't stop there. A minute and a half later, Cannon hit another trey that put UMass up 9-2.

"The first few possessions of the game, they didn't respect her enough to step out, and she was able to knock down a couple of threes," O'Brien said. "That really opened things up pretty quickly."

The "Cannon-ball" ended up playing for 31 minutes, the most action she has ever seen in one game in her Maroon and White career. She finished up the 76-45 UMass win with a game and career high 17 points. She was consistent all day long, shooting three-for-six in three point land and five-for-10 from the field. She was adequate on defense, with two steals, but it was obvious that Cannon appreciated her time on the floor when she dove on the floor for a loose ball when the game was already out of reach.

"I felt real comfortable out there," Cannon said. "I just got an opportunity, and I took advantage of it."

Matthew Bencal is a Collegian columnist.

The Sub
"featuring pizza, spaghetti dinners calzones, subs & salads"
PIZZA SUBS GYROS
phone: 549-5150
"OCMP & credit cards accepted"

ΣΦΕ
Come check out the most diverse non-hanging Fraternity on Campus
• Mon. Feb 5 - Indoor wiffle ball tournament
• Tues. Feb 6 - Games night with twister and 007
• Wed. Feb 7- Temptation Island night
Refreshments will be served all night so bring a friend!
Take either the Orchard Hill bus up to Yellow Lot or call Josh @ 549-9407 for info or rides.

CARPE DIEM !!!
The ALWAYS CALENDAR
PERPETUAL FOR DESK OR WALL
$15
www.stencil.com

THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY OF PARIS
Two 5-week Summer Sessions
Session I: June 3-July 5
Session II: July 9-Aug. 10
Over 100 Courses
French Immersion
Other Special Programs
Tel: (33/1) 40 62 06 14
Fax: (33/1) 40 62 07 17
or in NY (212) 983-1414 summer@aup.fr
www.aup.edu
Summer in Paris 2001

presents the 'Art of Living' Workshop
February 9th-14th
• 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, and increased awareness
• Yoga, breathing, and meditation techniques in a fun atmosphere
• Brings the mind to the present moment and allows you to give your 100% to everything you do
• Held in over 100 countries- recognized by the United Nations and World Health Organization

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Train to be an EMT this semester. Tuesday and Thursday nights 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 For more information or to register call 545-1885 Learn to save a life!

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

92 Honda Civic DX 4Door Sedan, red, 75kmi, automatic, sunroof, cassettplayer, excellent condition. $6000or b/o Call 253-3092

93 Saturn SL2, SDW, 1.9Ltr engine, 5spd, cd player $3500 o/b/o. Must sell 665-3521

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, housework 6-10 hours Tue & Thur. $10/hr 247-5800

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Put up Posters. $15/wk 2 to 3 hrs. Car, references, reliable. 259-1227

Single Dad and business owner too busy to do everything. I need help! Shopping, light cleaning, errands, bills, etc. Compensation negotiable. Very part-time, flexible schedule. Need to have car. Phone # 413-253-4640 ask for James

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.50 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-782-4514

paul_bebo@abtassoc.com

Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Cape Verde, Portuguese, Chinese, Korean, Japanese. Call ESL Office at Amherst Public School 413-549-9857. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Human Services Exciting Opportunities The Consortium is an agency that supports people with disabilities through education advocacy and services. Program Coordinator needed to direct and oversee services provided to up to six people with various learning challenges. Supervisory experience, flexibility, and optimistic attitude, sense of humor, relible transportation and driver's license required. Excellent benefits. Combination of day time and evening hours. $12/hr starting salary. Send resume to Janice Harris at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 AA/EOE. Full-time/part-time - Looking to have fun earning extra income with a flexible work schedule? Spend time with people in a supportive atmosphere. Call Lori-Ann Bruyett at (413) 536-2401 to set up a phone interview. AA/EOE.

Earn $$$ promoting artists like Nine Inch Nails, Foo Fighters, Red Hot Chili Peppers, Eminem & The Crystal Method. No experience necessary. Visit www.noizepollution.com for info and then call Mindy @ 800-996-1816.

WATNED: Native Speakers of American English for listening experiments $8/hr ph545-6837

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

French & or Germen Speaking candidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or email dco@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

New Students Program Seeking extroverts for summer orientation positions: May 29th - July 18th. Salary, room meals, health coverage. Call 545-9681 for more info. or pick up an application at the Undergraduate Admission Center. Deadline Feb. 9

More Than Just Summer Employment Independent Lake Camp

Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Volleyball, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theatre, Dance, Video, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Skateboarding, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Ropes Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and More. Call 1-800-399-CAMP ask for Dan or Nigel. www.independent-lake.com

RAFT GUIDES WANTED FOR SUMMER 2001: Zoar Outdoor is accepting applications for its whitewater raft guide training program. To request an application call 1-800-532-7483 or visit www.zoaroutdoor.com. Applications due by 2/15/01. EOE.

EMPLOYMENT

Undergraduate Business Consultent

Gain Accounting Experience, Leadership Skills, and General Business Experience. 10-15 hrs. per week, flexible schedule. Must be self motivated; able to work as part of a team and willing to actively participate in University issues involving the Student Businesses. Sophomores and Juniors are encouraged to apply. Pick up an application at the Center for Student Business, 406 Studnet Union. Questions, call 545-2167. Deadline for apps Thrusday Feb 15th

STAGE HANDS WANTED at Fine Arts Center. $6.75/hr. Variable schedule-week day availability preferred 9-Noon, 1pm-5 Applications at Production Services RM 146 F.A.C.

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Center for tour guides, student admissions Reps, and summer counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 9

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons Recreational & competitive boxing 256-0364

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON. STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female Seeking roommate for Amherst apt. Cheap rent. Call 256-6244

1 Room Available in three bedroom apt in Mill Valley. Looking for a nonsmoker who is clean and quiet. $340/month Call 253-0066

Roommate Needed ASAP. Share 3 bedroom apt w/2 nice guys. Great location on Main Street. Call Tyler at 253-2687

Female Wanted ASAP 1 room open in 4 room apartment in Hadley on bus route. $295 a month 582-9164

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

SERVICES

TREADING WATER? Hire a Life Coach! I help AOO and other students to excel by providing them with help in organizational skills as well as motivation and support. To schedule a free introductory session, call (732) 432-4876 or e-mail me at barry@successfulu.com SuccessfulU. "Turning goals Into Reality." Visit my website: http://www.successfulu.com

TICKETS

One Boreneked Ladies Floor Seat Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TO SUBLET

2 Bedroom Cliffside Apt. $899/month including everything. Call 253-6760

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

SPRING BREAK

Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

TRAVEL

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

Summer Employment Glacier National Park, Montana The Resort at Glacier St. Mary Lodge

Be a part of the team!

For more information call: 1-800-368-3689 Apply Online @ www.glacierparkjobs.com

Need to Advertise? Advertise with the BEST!! Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS3 Hartford
4 - CBS, 4 Boston
5 - ABC40 Springfield
6 - FOX, 57 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN, 20 Hartford
9 - HSCN Movie Channel
10 - NBC, 30 New Britain
11 - FOX, 61 Hartford
12 - UPN, 64 Hartford
13 - WB, 40 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UPN, 22 (Amherst Channel)
16 - WB, 30 New Haven
17 - Sports
18 - ESPN2
19 - CBS, 3 (Boston Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Good to Gavel
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifestyle
26 - USA
27 - TNT
28 - TNT
29 - A&E
30 - Nick at Nite
31 - TV Land
32 - Comedy Central
33 - BET
34 - Univision
35 - Discovery Channel Network
36 - College TV Network
37 - MTV2
38 - MTV3
39 - VH1
40 - The Learning Channel

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 5, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience		Sinking the Lusitania (N)		Connecticut Journal Rewind
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WVIT	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	"Inside the Osmonds" (2001, Biography) Bruce McGill.				Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "Kiss" (In Stereo)		Roswell "Disturbing Behavior"		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	In Style: Celebrity Weddings		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "At by Myself"		Street Smarts	Blind Date	7th Heaven "Kiss" (In Stereo)		Roswell "Disturbing Behavior"		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	In Style: Celebrity Weddings		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Boston Public (N) (In Stereo)		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	In Style: Celebrity Weddings		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (In Stereo) (Part 2 of 3)		Antiques Roadshow (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)		Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	"Inside the Osmonds" (2001, Biography) Bruce McGill.				Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Moesha (N)	Parkers (N)	Hughleys	Girlfriends	Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	22	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"Philadelphia" (1993, Drama) Tom Hanks, Denzel Washington.						"Ghosts of Mississippi" (1996) Alec Baldwin.
A&E	23	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "In Memory of..."		Biography: Jerry Orbach		100 Centre Street (N)		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Sanctuary"
CNN	24	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)			Wolf Blitzer		CNN Tonight		Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	25	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Stripes" (1981, Comedy)		Bill Murray, Harold Ramis.			Uncomfortably	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	26	Supernature: Encounters		Supernature: Extra Sensory		Bloodsuckers!		Ultimate Guide "Submarines"		Stranded (N)		Justice Files "I Am Innocent"
ESPN	27	Sportscenter		College Basketball	St. John's at Notre Dame, (Live)			College Basketball Iowa State at Kansas, (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	29	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: "Dixie Carter"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"In the Name of Love: A Texas Tragedy" (1995, Drama)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	31	Direct Effect	Senseless	Cribs Finest	Kathy Griffin	VJ for a Day	TRL (In Stereo)			Say What Krka	Super Bowl	Real World	Undressed
NICK	32	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	It's Company	It's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	35	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Rising Star"		Final Wave "Asylum" (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Dressed" (N)		Lexx: The Series "Battle"		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	28	Critical Condition: Life		Secrets of Forensic Science		Junkyard Wars "Power Pullers"		Crunch: Sports Collisions		Crunch: Sports Collisions		Junkyard Wars "Power Pullers"
TNT	30	ER "City One" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Bomb Squad"		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo)				"The Pretender 2001" (2001, Drama) Michael T. Weiss.
USA	33	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Code Blue" (In Stereo)		Noah Bridges (In Stereo)				"Rivals Parts" (1997, Comedy) Howard Stern, Robin Quivers, (In Stereo)		Martin
HBO	43	"Forces of Nature" (1999, Romance) Sandra Bullock.		"PG-13"		"Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith.		"PG-13"		Do You Believe in Miracles?		"The Mamas" (1999)
MAX	45	(5:00) "Trapper"		"Nick of Time" (1995) Johnny Depp.				"Sl: Ellroy's Fire" (1993, Drama) Rob Lowe. (In Stereo)		"...Double Jeopardy" (1997) Stephen Rea.		"Child Factor"
SHOW	55	(4:35)		"A Night at the Roxbury" (1998) Will Ferrell.				"Urban Legend" (1998, Horror) Jared Leto. (In Stereo)		Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		"Something Wild" (1986)

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I WORRY THAT CASUAL DRESS DAYS ENCOURAGE FLIRTATIOUS BEHAVIOR.
I MEAN, LOOK HOW ADORABLE I AM IN MY TURTLENECK SWEATER. HOW ARE THE LADIES SUPPOSED TO CONCENTRATE?
DO YOU THINK I SHOULD PUT WARNING CONES AROUND MY CUBICLE?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

STOP FIDGETING WITH YOUR COLLAR AND DO IT. LET'S GO, MISTER. I DON'T HAVE ALL DAY. OUR COMPANY WILL BE HERE SOON AND I WANT YOU TO LOOK NICE.
OK, NOW THE OTHER ONE. COME ON

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

SO WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO FOR A BUSINESS PLAN?
I DUNNO. OUR TIMING STINKS. A LOT OF E-TAILERS ARE TANKING
I KNOW SOMEBODY OUGHT TO JUST BUY UP THEIR WAREHOUSES OF VENTORES AND SELL THEM ON THE WEB AT A DISCOUNT.
BUSINESS PLAN! BUSINESS PLAN!

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

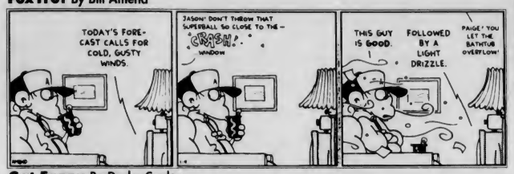
Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Grades don't mean anything here at Umass, my young freshman friend...
All that really matters is how much beer you can drink.
Your MGD-PA, if you will.

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE JANE AUSTEN NOVEL?
SENSE AND SENSIBILITY. HOW ABOUT YOU?
EMMA
EMMA! WHATEVER, LOSSY.
I LIKE MAKING MODELS OF ANIMAL SKELETONS WITH TWISTED WIRE. ALSO, I LIKE POKING MY SISTER W THE EYE WITH TWISTED WIRE

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



TODAY'S FORECAST CALLS FOR COLD, GUSTY WINDS.
JASON! DON'T THROW THAT SUPERBALL SO CLOSE TO THE — CRASH! WINDOW
THIS GUY IS GOOD.
FOLLOWED BY A LIGHT DRIZZLE.
PAGE! YOU LET THE BATHTUB OVERFLOW!

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

HI ERIN THIS IS SCOTT FROM YOUR PHYSICS CLASS YEAH I'M THE ONE WITH THE SPIKEY HAIR ANYWAY I WAS WONDERING IF PERHAPS THERE'S MAYBE SOME CHANCE YOU WANNA GO OUT SOMETIME... WHAT?
I'M SORRY! I'LL NEVER BOTHER YOU AGAIN! PLEASE DON'T CALL THE POLICE!
WAIT WHAT DID YOU SAY?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

'MORNING SARGE
WHOA WHAT THE HECK HAPPENED TO YOU?
BUCK!
WHAT DO YOU MEAN? I'VE BEEN SLEEPING WHAT DO YOU THINK I DO, PLAY TAG ON THE TAIL ON THE DONKEY? ALL NIGHT?
HEY, WHAT YOU DO IN YOUR OWN BEDROOM IS NONE OF MY BUSINESS

Horoscopes

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Today, more people around you will differ in their beliefs from yours. Rather than clash with all of them, listen respectfully to their opinions.

Pisces (Feb. 19- March 20) –Your individuality will really shine today. So for the best day possible, try showing off the qualities that make you different and unique.

Aries (March 21- April 19) –Take time for both. Today you'll have dual needs. On one hand, you'll want to take part in social activities. And at the same time, you'll need some time alone. Fortunately, you can and should do both!

Taurus (April 20- May 20) –To feel your best today, spend more time socializing with others. Attending a party would fit the bill perfectly! But, that's not the only solution. You can also go to any crowded public place where you can mingle with lots of people.

Gemini (May 21- June 20) –Today your leadership skills are stronger than usual. So much so, that you should put yourself into situations where you can take a greater leadership role.

Cancer (June 21- July 22) –Make up your mind! Today spending too long making decisions won't benefit you. In fact, it could cause you some unnecessary grief. That's because today you'll tend to overanalyze your options. The simple solution to this problem is to make decisions more quickly, especially on unimportant matters.

the simplest manner possible.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) –While long-term trends in your life may not be going exactly the way you want them to, you certainly have plenty of short-term pleasures to enjoy – especially today. Feel free to indulge in things that you might normally say no to. There is a great opportunity now to form an extremely powerful bond with someone close to you.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 35 LOW: 30	HIGH: 39 LOW: 24	HIGH: 43 LOW: 20

Leo (July 23- Aug. 22) – Can you avoid money? Today you may want to try! That's because today your judgment regarding the use of money is at below normal levels. Try putting off any major purchases or investments.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) –Relationship elevator going up. Today you'll want to spend more time with someone you find special. That's because today the stage is set for your relationships to improve and mature. If possible, try planning something unique with that someone special.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) –Today romance is a much greater possibility! So what can you do to improve your chances? You needn't say a word. That's because today your nonverbal signals are the key to improving your chances of making a love connection. When meeting people today, let your eyes and smile express your true intentions.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Great day to focus on bettering your health. That's because today your health and physical well-being are in stronger focus. To help achieve the best results today, try to focus mostly on eating healthy foods, and on getting enough rest for your body to rebuild its natural defenses.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec.21) –Back to the simple things. Today, simplicity is your key to having the most successful and satisfying day. That means you'll want to avoid situations that seem overly complex. Instead, choose to do things in

The Collegian needs help in graphics. Work for us. We know you need cash to buy nice things for Valentine's Day.

Quote of the Day

"Remember when your dog ate my fish and you lied to me and told me I never had any? Then why'd I have the bowl, Bart? Why'd I have the bowl?"

-Millhouse

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED COMPANY

298-BEDS (2337)/ 298-BEDS(2337)

228 College Street, Amherst

FINALLY!! Amherst has a mattress & futon store conveniently located near downtown, next to The Spirit Haus on Rt. 9

GRAND OPENING & OPEN HOUSE

(FREE FOOD!!!)

SAT. MARCH 31 10-6
SUN. APRIL 1 12-5

futons-mattresses-beds-daybeds decorative pillows-lamps-storage platform beds-room dividers-rugs interior plants-end/coffee tables cots-foam-puff/pouf/papasan, ETC

ACROSS
1 Young foxes
5 Sheiks' attire
9 You could hear — drop
13 Border on
14 Willowy
15 — Jessica Parker
17 Himalayan enigma
18 South American country
19 Work very hard
20 Commuter's home
22 Sparkle
24 Actor Schroder
25 Exit
26 Looks at the books
29 Very small
31 Looks pleased
32 Dreads
33 Kind of scene
36 Quite excited
37 Delicious
38 Glen
39 Stimpy's toon pal
40 Prices
41 More agreeable
42 Harbors
43 Frank
44 Grills
47 Depose
48 Holiday item
50 Squeaked
54 Ms. Lucci
55 Nowhere near
57 Actor Cooper
58 Pack rat
59 Celebration
60 Fashion magazine
61 Minus
62 Corset stiffener
63 Fruit part

DOWN
1 Comedian Denny
2 Wild mountain goat
3 "Swan Lake" costume
4 Rousing
5 Tomato jellies
6 Dissolute
7 Ventilate
8 Self-righteously complacent
9 Pivots
10 Mere
11 In a snit
12 Cathedral parts
16 His and —
21 Scraps
23 Suspicious
26 Petri-dish medium
27 Be persuasive
28 Singer Celine
29 Quizzer
30 Has a snack
32 Quick
33 Nurturing spice
34 Bullfight bravos
35 Entertainer Parks
37 Weightlifter's pride
38 Wine buyers' concerns
40 Nabs
41 Win by a —
42 Jigsaw units
43 Cheer
44 "So long" and "ciao"
45 Kind of route
46 Relish-tray item
47 Florida citrus center
49 Jokers
51 Cabbagelike plant
52 Gardner of mysteries
53 Did a salon job
56 Pudgy

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

BOOT TERI PISA
AGRA ALES ROTS
NEAR RUMBA OWES OCEAN PHOU
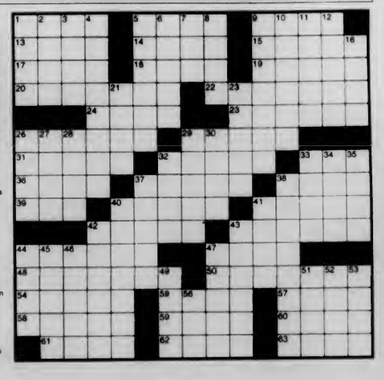
OATH BART
RETINGERED TEEM
EGG TRIES RHO
ALOFT NAP
STOUT GRETTING
SIXTEEN NARY
MOOT ARE RELAYE
EARP OSAGE SITER
BEATATIES PAN
AUDS SLAM TYKE

12-21-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate



Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Kielbasa
Grinder

Carrot
Onion Schine
(vegetarian)
(B, H, W)

Beans & Rice
(vegan)

African Vegetable Stew
(vegan)
(B, H, W)

Baked
Teriyaki Tofu
(vegan)

DINNER

Breaded
Pork Chops

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam White
Photo Technician — Dan Santello
Copy Editor — Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor — Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff — Margie Smelkinson

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, February 5, 2001 | 10

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass digs in atop A-10 mountain

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Ronell Blizzard rejects a shot by Fordham's Jeff McMillan during UMass' 85-59 romp over the Rams. The junior forward rang up three blocks, part of nine total Minuteman swats, in the win.

Fordham latest to fall as Minutemen remain strong

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

When Fordham guard Bevon Robin drove in for a layup two minutes into last Saturday's game, it tied the score at two.

Unfortunately for the Rams, that would be about the only time throughout the whole game in which it looked like they actually had a chance of winning, as the Massachusetts men's basketball team absolutely destroyed Fordham, 85-59 at the William D. Mullins Center.

It was the most points in a game the Minutemen have scored all season, and it improved their record to 10-10 (8-1 Atlantic 10), making it the first time since November 25 that the Maroon and White have been at or above the .500 mark. This was in sharp contrast to the struggling Rams, who once had a good record but who are now only at 11-10 (3-6 A-10) on the year.

"It's a big step [getting to .500]," said UMass forward Micah Brand, who dropped 10 points and five rebounds to go along with excellent defensive play throughout the contest. "This is a big win for us. We are back even and we just have to go from here."

With the score tied at two, Minuteman shooting guard Monty Mack drilled a three to put his team up for good. Forty seconds later, Kitwana Rhymer showed why he is one of the top shot blockers in the nation by swatting Fordham big man, Duke Freeman-McKamey, from behind. Shannon Crooks then picked up the loose ball, drove the length of the floor, and made a beautiful dish to the streaking Mack for two.

When Rhymer hit a jump hook with 16:41 remaining, it extended the lead to 9-2. This was quickly pushed to a 13-point lead when Mack drilled one three from the top of the key, and then hit another trifecta on the next possession from the right elbow.

All of this mêlée forced a Ram timeout, but it failed to work, as Fordham would be unable to close the gap into single digits for the remainder of the game.

"Today we didn't play well on either end of the court," said Fordham coach Bob Hill. "We didn't have any presence rebounding and when it was in the balance, we could not make a shot. We are not a very good team right now."

Toward the end of the first half, the Rams began to press the Minutemen, but it failed miserably, as UMass consistently broke down the pressure defense with ease and converted a number of easy baskets. Maroon and White forward Jackie Rogers especially benefited from the change in the defensive scheme, as he sandwiched two layups around a Winston Smith foul line jumper to extend his team's lead to 33-15.

By the end of the half, this lead would be pushed up to 42-24, and despite the fact that Mack continued his good play of late with 14 first half points, it was mainly the big men that seemed to ignite the team and send the Minutemen into the locker room with a very comfortable advantage.

For one thing, the big men were patrolling the paint inside. Fordham's leading scorer Robin was the only player who could solve the UMass defense, as he totaled 13 points in the frame on his way to 21 for the game, but no other Ram could muster more than a basket in the first half. Jeff McMillan and Freeman-McKamey especially struggled, going a combined 6-for-23 from the field in the contest.

It was not just bad shooting that forced them into this atrocious field goal percentage, however, as Rhymer, Brand and Ronell Blizzard all picked up three blocks on the game, and altered countless other shots on the inside. Meanwhile, Rogers and Eric Williams were doing their part on the offensive end, as they totaled 16 and eight points respectively.

"At the beginning of the year a lot of shots were being missed and a lot of rebounds were not being gotten," said Brand. "Now if myself and Kit don't have a good night, we know Jackie and Eric are going to come down and knock in shots and get some rebounds."

"If someone gets into foul trouble we are not losing a beat when [Rogers] comes into the game," added head coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "And with Eric it is the same thing."

In the second half, the Minutemen kept their lead around 20 for most of the frame, but the highlight of the half came in the last minute when walk-on Dwayne Killings came off the bench and calmly canned a three from the left corner for his first collegiate points.

Monty Mack led all scorers with 22.

Take me to your conference leader

Every good turnaround needs a conspiracy theory

ADAM WHITE

Who are you, and what have you done with the Minutemen?

It is as if an alien ship swooped down during one Mullins Center practice and abducted each and every member of the Massachusetts men's basketball team. They were replaced by a squad of tenacious roundball warriors, capable of functioning as one on the court and dissecting each and every opponent with otherworldly precision.

Capable of going 8-1 in the Atlantic 10 to claim a share of first place, all but erasing the 2-9 debacle composed by their Earthly predecessors.

The Rams of Fordham were left rubbing their eyes in disbelief after Saturday's not-so-close 85-59 encounter with UMass at the Mullins.

Their defenses had been useless against an aggressive Maroon and White squad that shot over 50 percent from the field, scored 20 of the game's first 24 points.

They were stunned repeatedly by UMass' deadly accurate fire from deep space (8-of-15 from three-point range).

Their resistance was futile against the Minutemen's reserve army of Jackie Rogers, Ronell Blizzard and Jonathan DePina (a combined 21 points, 15 rebounds and three blocks off the bench).

UMass employed some sort of cloaking device against two of FU's biggest weapons, making guard Jason Harris (four points) and forward Jeff McMillan (five points) all but disappear.

Is this a different group of athletes hitting the hardwood for coach James "Bruiser" Flint? The numbers would certainly support the whole abduction-conspiracy theory. Take the stats of the 2-9 pre-conference squad versus the 8-1 Atlantic 10-leading current group and even the most Scully-esque skeptic would have to consider that these aren't the same b-ball beings.

Return of the Jedi: First and foremost, the team's leader and biggest scoring threat has finally become just that, after enduring a miserable early-season funk. Monty Mack appeared to be under some sort of mind control against teams like Connecticut (three points) and Boston University (seven points) in December when he struggled to get open looks against straight box-and-one defenses that he had seemingly mastered last season.

The preseason A-10 Player of the Year shot a horrendous 29 percent (46-of-157) from the field during the team's 2-9 stretch, including a vile 0-for-9 outing against the Huskies and a forgettable 6-of-23 showing against North Carolina.

Flint sat down with his young Jedi over winter break and implored him to "use the force," i.e. the many picks and screens of his teammates, to get the open shots that he'd need for his offense to come alive. The results in the second half of the season have been nothing short of extraordinary: Mack has averaged 22 points per game on 46 percent shooting from the field (71-of-156) with mostly wide-open looks off screens and curls.

The Predator: He came from a distant land, looking to beat the biggest and best he could find and prove he was indeed the king of the frontcourt. He's Kitwana Rhymer of the Virgin Islands, of course, but this 6-foot-10 paint predator had an equally sizeable problem in the team's first 11 games: he couldn't stay on the floor.

Rhymer averaged only 22 minutes of play over that span, including 37 minutes total against Iona, Marquette and Ohio State.

Though Rhymer's numbers over that span looked promising (8.6 points, 6.5 rebounds per game), it became obvious that he'd have to stay on the floor longer if he was to become a force in the Atlantic 10 jungle.

Well, four double-doubles later it has become obvious that No. 33 must be stopped when teams are designing their defensive game plans against the Minutemen. Rhymer used his out-of-this-world strength to dominate Dayton (15 points, 13 rebounds) and destroy Duquesne (15 points, 12 boards) and has drawn countless double-teams in the process that has helped long-range gunners like Mack and Shannon Crooks "stay on target."

Space Jam: His weird multi-colored "space shoes" draw as much attention as his 6-foot-8 frame when he checks into games. But watch his feet too long, and Eric Williams will blow right by you for an easy put-back. The burly transfer spent much of the early season as a silent member of the Maroon and White bench corps, but he has stepped up recently and played a huge part in the team's resurgence.

"Space Jam" ripped down a game-high 10 rebounds against Rhode Island on Jan. 30, after totaling 10 points and nine boards in wins over George Washington and Xavier. UMass' six-game win streak has seen Williams shoot 57 percent (8-of-14) from the field with 22 rebounds in only 61 total minutes of play. Prorate those stats over six full games, and man his teammates call "E" is a huge part of the "W's" that his team is enjoying.

Men in Black: The officials seemed to play as big a part in UMass' nine early-season losses as any single player: opponents attempted a staggering 302 foul shots (17 per game). New rules about contact in the paint and hand checking befuddled Flint's troops, especially in their first four games (39 free throws attempted by the opposing team per game).

After the team's 91-76 loss to Oregon on Dec. 2, both the players and the coach of the Ducks admitted that the barrage of whistles made the game less of a basketball contest and more of a charity stripe shoot-off. And a snowball effect occurred from there, as frustration over calls led to sloppy play defensively for the Minutemen.

The officials seemed to have settled down tremendously since the onset of conference action, allowing a freer flow to the game without turning into a hack-a-thon in the process. Though the overall numbers don't reflect that huge of a difference (opponents have averaged 21 foul shots per game over the last nine games) the games themselves have been much more basketball-centric: Rhode Island's Zach Marbury attempted 13 of his team's 16 freebies on Jan. 30, and Dayton attempted only seven foul shots total in its Jan. 18 loss at the Mullins Center.

Temple's John Chaney, however, would probably beg to differ with the argument that the refereeing has gotten better. His 20-minute tirade after the Owls' 65-64 overtime loss in Philadelphia included several choice comments about "three blind men," "policemen beating people with sticks" and "courage."

Losing gracefully? Clearly an alien concept to the aging Chaney. Maybe he'll be the next one taken up by whatever interstellar beings have taken control of UMass.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Fordham's Duke Freeman-McKamey experiences a white-out as Minutemen Jackie Rogers (left), Kit Rhymer and Jonathan DePina flood the paint for a UMass rebound.

Do you have any idea what this is? Check out Arts on page 5 to find out!

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

UMass hoops continued its winning ways with a weekend slam dunk 'W' over the Bonnies

ARTS p. 5 SPORTS p. 8

Volume CVII Issue 75 www.dailycollegian.com Tuesday February 6, 2001

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

The march continues...

Two of the Atlantic 10's best big men, Duke Freeman-McKamey of Fordham and Kit Rhymer of UMass, tip-off in weekend basketball action. Rhymer won the tip and the Minutemen won the game; read about the Maroon and White's next potential victim on the back page.

New numbers, tough math to define Senate elections

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Semantics can be a tricky thing, especially when it comes to Student Government Association elections. Starting last semester and, now, continuing this semester, a swirl of controversy surrounding the definition of "on-campus non-residence hall" students has erupted among the SGA.

On campus, non-residence hall is one of the three electoral districts used by the SGA to define the make-up of the Senate – the other two being "on campus residential" and "off-campus or commuter." The problem, which became quite obvious last semester during the Senate trial and subsequent Judicial ruling, is that seemingly only the SGA defines an "on campus, non-residence hall" area.

"I don't know who does [use that definition]," Dave Vaillancourt of Housing Services said. "You'd have to talk to a historian to find that out." Vaillancourt explained that his responsibilities extend only to residential housing and that he was unfamiliar with the exact definitions outlined in the SGA By-laws.

In a Dec. 6 ruling, Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez ruled last September's SGA elections and, as a result, the Senate, unconstitutional. The Judiciary's decision was based on a number of factors, including the misrepresentation of the above-named electoral districts. The defense, which consisted of Senate Speaker Jim Eltringham and TJ Roy, claimed that these districts had not been observed in even the most recent SGA elections, but to no avail.

In a memo dated Feb. 1 of this year and addressed to Eltringham, Registrar Elizabeth Pyle attempted to clarify these discrepancies. The memo was sent in response to Eltringham's Jan. 25 request for University population numbers. However, in the memo, Pyle outlined two potential problems with the SGA request.

First, the "official" University numbers have not yet been determined; therefore, the numbers which were given to Eltringham and which will be used to determine Senate apportionment, were only estimates.

"This is a time of significant 'flux' in numbers," Pyle's memo stated. "You have told me that the SGA's need for numbers is immediate, and that you cannot wait until later in the semester when official and more stable numbers will be available. So, I am responding at this time by providing numbers that we must all see as an accurate reflection of the information in my possession at this time, but not as numbers the University would consider to be official statistics for the Spring 2001 semster."

Vaillancourt explained that any "definite" numbers would be hard to nail down at any time, and that it was prudent for the University to wait before making residential counts.

"The official count isn't until the fifth week of the semester," he said.

"Any moment you run numbers, somebody is going to withdraw, change rooms or any number of things," Pyle agreed. "There is so much flux this early in the semester that generally we like to wait."

The second problem brought up by Pyle's memo was the terminology defined in the SGA By-laws. The memo explained that some of the SGA category names are not consistent with University definitions. Therefore, the Registrar's Office was forced to make interpretations in light of past practices for SGA elections.

"One of the problems is that the SGA doesn't necessarily have a set definition for these categories," said Pyle. "In responding to that kind of request, they're calling for us to interpret these names."

Eltringham elaborated on this statement, explaining that this matter has always been a gray area for the SGA.

"Whenever this particular By-law was written, whoever was doing it didn't really check to see how the University defined residency," he said. "We define it with the caveat as 'defined by the University.'"

The memo broke down the undergraduate populations as follows: 9913 on campus, residential students; 482 on campus, non-residential students and 6851 off-campus students. Those numbers translate into 28 senators from the off-campus area and two senators from the on-campus, non-residential area. The latter area, which includes fraternity and sorority houses, was lumped into the off-campus area for the September elections. Subsequently, 32 Delta Chi members assumed most of the 34 Senate seats allotted to the off-campus area. Many believe that the Greek involvement in the SGA was one of the main reasons for contending the elections.

Eltringham does not anticipate any problems with the upcoming Senate elections, because he is taking extra precautions to document all the residential numbers, which he receives from the University. He did, however, express concern about the seeming absence of the Hillel House from the on campus, non-residential area and the number of senators allotted to that area.

"Having those [fraternities, sororities, students living in Lincoln apartments and presumably Hillel] together in three seats is not going to represent all those concerns," he said. "It's a little tricky and it calls into question our democratic ideals."

Former Michigan President lashes out at Nike's swoosh, new UM apparel deal

By Courtney Crimmins
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

(U-WIRE) ANN ARBOR – The athletic apparel deal with Nike recently signed by University of Michigan President Lee Bollinger has drawn fire from various critics, but none have as great an understanding of Bollinger's pressures than his predecessor, James Duderstadt.

"We are not in the business of creating a commercially viable institution. We are educators. Nike is not buying a football team, it is buying a university," Duderstadt said in an interview.

Duderstadt, who served as University president from 1988 to 1996, wrote on the issue in his first book, "Intercollegiate Athletics and the American University: A University's President's Perspective," which came out in October of last year.

He has written other books on subjects ranging from higher education to nuclear reactors and is currently working on another book due out within a year.

"A University for the Twenty-First Century," another book of Duderstadt's released in August 2000, warns of trouble in the future of public universities as they move into the digital age.

"The University will change more in the next decade than in the past 200 years," Duderstadt said. "There is great difficulty when leading during changing times."

The book deals with the changes higher education institutions will have to make to keep up with the times. His next book, "The Future of the Public University," will deal specifically with large public universities that have a diverse curriculum – the kind Duderstadt said he thinks will have the most trouble adjusting.

"Schools have to strike a balance between characteristics that have served society in the past and those that will benefit it in the future," Duderstadt said.

As a former president and a current University professor, Duderstadt has always been committed to making sure the University is not left behind in its job of meeting the needs of society.

"He got Michigan started on a program to get ready to respond to the information age and heading in the right direction," said Philip Power, a University regent during Duderstadt's presidency.

Duderstadt said he believes the small liberal arts colleges will have the easiest time adjusting but that he has not lost hope for the University.

"The Harvards and Oberlins will be very nimble in changing while still protecting their values. Some people think that universities won't survive, but not me of course," Duderstadt said.

Duderstadt said that as society changes, so will its needs, thus changing the kind of education required for success.

"The needs of society are no longer confined to four years, it is a lifetime of learning," he said.

Duderstadt has made his commitment to the University evident in his 32 years here. As a professor, he teaches a class for graduate students to prepare them for academic careers, as well as a first-year class on the dangers of technology.

"You can't understand what the University is about unless you teach. In addition, serving as a leader of a university gave me a much broader view," Duderstadt said.

MAUREEN MAHER / COLLEGIAN

Blizzard Biking

UMass student, Andrij Bamber, is about to ride his bike home through the blizzard.

UMass student released after weekend stabbing

A University of Massachusetts student was treated and released from Cooley Dickinson Hospital for multiple stab wounds that he sustained early Sunday morning at an off-campus party on Hobart Lane.

The twenty-one-year-old male victim, whose name was not available at press time, was originally from Saugus, Ma.

The victim's roommates reported the incident at 3:02 a.m. at which time the student was transported from his home at the Townhouse Apartments to the hospital.

"He had stab wounds in several different parts of his body," said Amherst Police Sgt. Ronald Young in a statement to the press.

According to the Amherst police department, the stabbing occurred as a result of an argument that the victim was having with at least three other men at the party. He sustained approximately five stab wounds.

"He was treated and released for stab wounds that were not life threatening," UMass spokeswoman Barbara Pitoniak explained. "The wounds required stitches."

No further information was available about the incident or the victim at press time.

- Melissa Hammel

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this article

Racial slurs, flag waving result in fraternity's ban

By Sarah Snyder
Daily Texan (University of Texas)

(U-WIRE) AUSTIN, TX – University of North Texas administrators handed down a decision Friday to put a five-year ban on the Kappa Alpha Order fraternity chapter, following reports of racially-motivated harassment that occurred Jan. 27.

The chapter can no longer participate in university activities as an organization and must vacate its house as soon as other suitable housing is found.

The university administration's investigation, which concluded Friday, reported that approximately 35 Kappa Alpha members shouted racial slurs at African-American football recruits who were touring the student union.

The fraternity members, who were present at a separate event, also waved a Confederate flag at the prospective students, said witnesses who summoned the university's police department.

Peter Wells, a government junior and president of the Kappa Alpha fraternity chapter at the University, said he is embarrassed by the actions of his UNT counterpart.

"Everybody around here is very much embarrassed," Wells said. "I don't represent that chapter at all."

University officials were left to piece together the incident by questioning the witnesses, UNT spokesman Roddy Wolper said.

Wolper added that while the fraternity members had First Amendment rights to speak, they were in violation of the Code of Student Conduct and Discipline.

"The speech itself is constitutionally protected," Wolper said. "However, there were infractions of the university's code of conduct."

Violations to the code include verbal abuse and intimidation, disruption of university activities and disorderly conduct. In addition, Kappa Alpha was punished for furnishing misleading information about the incident.

Members of the national headquarters of Kappa Alpha Order could not be reached for comment.

The fraternity must petition in 2006 if it wants to return to campus. Wolper said university officials nickname the punishment the "death penalty," because the group will have to rebuild into a new organization to garner enough support to be accepted again.

UNT President Norval Pohl said the punishment fit the violation.

"The death-penalty nature of the disciplinary action is warranted by the seriousness of the incident," Pohl said in a press release Saturday.

However, Christina Rodriguez, a UNT kinesiology freshman, said the fraternity should be banned permanently.

"I did not think that their suspension was severe enough," Rodriguez said. "They should get rid of [the fraternity] altogether because it's not doing us any good and it's giving us a bad name."

A group of 500-700 students protested Wednesday, some delivering petitions to the president's office that included recommendations on how to punish Kappa Alpha.

According to the fraternity's mission statement, it "seeks to create a lifetime experience which centers on reverence to God, duty, honor, character and gentlemanly conduct as inspired by Robert E. Lee, our spiritual founder."

Wells said the mission statement and the actions of the UNT Kappa Alphas should not confuse others into thinking all those in the fraternity are racist.

"That's what makes everything real hazy," Wells said. "Yes, he did fight for the Confederate side, but that's not what we appreciate about him. We appreciate his personality qualities."

Students have organized a "unity march" for Wednesday that is open to all members of the UNT community.

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD

starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs

GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY

One King St. Northampton 584-3324 M
Wed 10-6 Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 253-3324 M
Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

SPRING BREAK
Sun - Surf - Party
up to 7 night room package From Only $279 Per student Exchange to Port Spring Break week
BIGGEST POOL DECK PARTIES
FREE INTERNET CAFE 24 Hours
Tropical Beaches of Florida FREE Brochures & Reservations
Toll Free 1-877-257-5431
www.springbreak2.com

Write For News!

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA

Why not be a bartender?
- Only professional school in Western MA
- Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
- National certification in alcohol awareness
- Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
- Special UMass student discount
- Conveniently located in West Springfield

Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

The Sub
"featuring pizza, spaghetti dinners calzones, subs & salads"

"OCMP & credit cards accepted"
phone: 549-5150

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON

Teach Next Year
Graduate College of Education

Question #1: Would you love to teach in Boston?

Question #2: Do you believe you can bring your talent and emerging expertise to high school students?

Question #3: Can you see yourself in a classroom at a dynamic urban high school?

If your answer to all three questions is yes, consider becoming part of an active school-university partnership through enrollment in Teach Next Year at UMass Boston.

Teach Next Year offers:
- a one-year route to teacher certification and a master's degree through an experimental, experiential school-based program;
- a full year of graduate study at UMass Boston integrated with teaching at Boston's Dorchester High School;
- the first steps along your pathway to a career as a high school teacher.

Do you qualify?
Applicants must have a bachelor's degree in one of the liberal arts or sciences, or anticipate earning one by June. Teach Next Year is designed for college graduates who have records of leadership and achievement and who seek the opportunity to begin teaching in an urban high school. Persons of all backgrounds are encouraged to apply.

Costs?
Each Teach Next Year participant receives a full-tuition grant, a waiver of most fees, and a $10,000 graduate assistantship.

Priority consideration is given to applications completed by March 15, 2001. Please call or email us for more information:

UMASS BOSTON
617.287.7662
june.kuzmeskus@umb.edu

UMass Yoga & Me... presents the 'Art of Living' Workshop

February 9th-14th
* 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, and increased awareness
* Yoga, breathing, and meditation techniques in a fun atmosphere
* Brings the mind to the present moment and allows you to give your 100% to everything you do
* Held in over 100 countries- recognized by the United Nations and World Health Organization

ΣΦΕ Come check out the most diverse non-hazing Fraternity on Campus
- Mon. Feb 5 - Indoor wiffle ball tournament
- Tues. Feb 6 - Games night with twister and 007
- Wed. Feb 7- Temptation Island night

Refreshments will be served all night so bring a friend!
Take either the Orchard Hill bus up to Yellow Lot or call Josh @ 549-9407 for info or rides.

Try Your Campus Meal Plan and we guarantee you'll eat with us again.

Give us your opinion and we'll give you 5 free meals on campus.

UMASS

Simply Purchase a meal plan from Your Campus Meal Plan (Commuter or Economy) by February 16th, use the meal plan and tell us what you think by February 23rd 2001. We'll give you 5 free meals to be used at any retail food outlet on campus, including snack bars. Guaranteed! To find out more about Your Campus Meal Plan please call the Meal Plan Office at 545-1362 or visit our website www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices. Sign up available at Campus Center's Cashiers office.

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

Terms and Conditions : To qualify, you must purchase a Commuter or Economy meal plan by February 16th 2001. Feedback must be submitted no later than February 23rd 2001 by completing a customer satisfaction questionnaire available at cashier stations and at the Meal Plan Office. Return the questionnaire to the meal plan office in the Franklin Dining Hall by mail or in person and the five free meals will be posted to Your Campus Meal Plan account within 72 hours. All meals must be used before May 25th 2001. Any unused meals will be void after May 25th 2001. Your campus meal plan is only available to juniors (with 54 or more credits), seniors, grads and commuter students.

THINGS TO DO:
- GO TO CLASS
- PLAY VIDEO GAMES
- WORKOUT
- SEE A MOVIE

WHAT COULD YOU DO...
IF YOU WERE DONE WITH WORK BY 9AM ??

THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR STUDENTS TO DELIVER NEWSPAPERS MONDAY THRU FRIDAY
INTERESTED: CALL SHAWN @ 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hemmel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT
(31 years of service -- and counting!)
A STUDENT/ COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT – AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

YOU CAN EARN 1-2 CREDITS

Tues Feb. 6
Wed. Feb. 7

SPRING SEMESTER 2001
Recruitment Nights*
6:30 - 8:30 PM
(Note: Prompt starting time!!!)

Gain valuable experience
Rewarding, challenging, and FUN

•you must attend ONE of thesee meetings. No exceptions, even if you participated before
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 8th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries, YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer while earning credit

Silver Fimo Plaster Beads Leather Silkpainting Copper Tie-dye Screenprinting Brass Photo Marbling Buttonmaking Stained Glass AND MORE

Student Union Craft Center

We Offer: FREE MEMBERSHIP AND INSTRUCTION TO ALL UMASS STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF. MEMBERS FROM THE FOUR COLLEGES MUST PAY A SMALL FEE, $15/SEMESTER OR $25 FOR THE YEAR.

AS A MEMBER OF THE STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER YOU CAN USE THE FACILITIES ANY TIME DURING OUR DROP IN HOURS

MONDAY	CLOSED
TUESDAY - THURSDAY	11:00-5:00
FRIDAY	11:00-6:00
SATURDAY-SUNDAY	1:00-6:00

We Offer: SMALL EVENING WORKSHOPS THROUGHOUT THE SEMESTER, THESE WORKSHOPS ALLOW FOR INDIVIDUAL ATTENTION AS YOU LEARN NEW SKILLS AND TECHNIQUES

PHONE 545-2096
www.umass.edu/rso/craftctr

THE CRAFT CENTER IS LOCATED IN THE BASEMENT OF THE STUDENT UNION

HIRING SKILLED STUDENTS

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB

Free HFC T-Shirt

The Areas's Most Complete Club • 256-6446

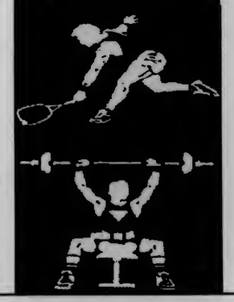
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Road
Off Rt.9 2 miles East of Town Center

- PVTA bus route to Rolling Green
- Pool
- Aerobics
- Aqua-aerobics
- Steps
- Nautilus Circuit
- Racquetball
- Free Weights
- Jacuzzi
- Yoga
- Kickboxing
- Saunas
- Massage
- Bikes
- Indoor tennis & Basketball
- Rowers
- Treadmills

MasterCard VISA

Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($169) & get a free HFC T-shirt



The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Bush tax cut
widens dangerous gap

While President George W. Bush has made education one of his major campaign proposals, perhaps his largest and farthest-reaching proposal is his massive $1.6 trillion tax cut.

Expressing a feeling that the Federal Government should trust the American public with its own money, the proposed tax cut would go across the board, benefiting both the rich and the poor, the wealthy and those who go without.

It is with that fact that The Daily Collegian must disagree.

While Alan Greenspan and some Democrats have come out in support of the plan that all Republicans have signed on to, the plan is unwieldy and unnecessary. The Republicans have been well known as the party of the rich – giving a massive tax cut to those same rich individuals is unnecessary. There are people in this country who are definitely deserving of a tax cut, especially those in the lower tax brackets who pay considerable tax rates despite low salaries.

However, while there are those that deserve tax cuts, there are definitely those that have no business having things get any easier for them. Part of the reason our nation, our government, is doing so well is some of these same supposedly high taxes. That money pays for programs, for education, for the military, for all of the things that Bush is supposedly so concerned about. All of that said, there is no reason to reduce the tax burden on the top percents of this nation just because those who make far less will be getting a tax break.

Also of considerable concern is the disturbing fact that Bush has come out and said he refuses to consider any sort of change in his legislation, especially when it comes to the tax-break for the top of this country.

He was quoted as telling Reuters news service that while he's heard the complaints that this tax-break will only serve to widen the growing gap between the haves and the have-nots, Bush's primary concern is with the fact that the percentage cuts that lower classes are getting are slightly larger than those in the upper tax breaks. While Bush may be hearing the complaints, the fact that he isn't acknowledging the existence of that gap is truly questionable; for it is perhaps the greatest ongoing social problem in the United States, a place where everybody is supposed to have a chance. This country is spiraling towards – and some would argue that we're already there – a place where money is the only determining factor in personal success.

That growing gap is dangerous in America, and will get only worse with an unnecessary tax cut that is designed to help Bush's closest friends, his greatest supporters, his closest friends. The presence of that ongoing gap is a problem that needs an immediate solution.

The Daily Collegian does not believe that George W. Bush's tax-cut proposal is that solution and in fact, it might just makes things worse. We can only hope that his first national political lesson is one of moderation, one wherein he learns to compromise.

Write for Ed-op!

The Top 5 of UMass

So, I finally saw the movie High Fidelity over break. For anyone that hasn't seen it, I recommend it. It's a pretty good movie about adult relationships with some absolutely classic John Cusack direct to the camera monologues. To quote a friend, "It's an emotional sequel to Say Anything."

As the film opens, Cusack debates what came first – the music or the misery. Do we listen to music because we are miserable or are we miserable because we listen to music? He wonders what kind of psychological damage is done to people after listening to thousands of pop songs about unrequited love and breaking up and such.

I know exactly what he's talking about, all too well. So, I start thinking: "John, the last thing I need you to do is give me another reason to write a heart wrenching column glorifying the finer points of pain and dejection. The people have had enough."

I watch a movie. I get an idea for a column. What can I say? That's how my mind works. This time was no exception. I keep watching.

About half an hour later – a reprieve. I won't have to write about misery and the like. Cusack's character Rob and his co-workers, a pair of know-it-all music geeks, start making "Top 5" lists. Top 5 records to play on a Monday morning, Top 5 songs about death, Top 5 side 1, track 1 songs, etc. Later, Rob says to the camera, "It's not what you're like, but what you like that's important. Film, music, books, these things matter. I know it sounds petty, but it's true."

"Now, that's an idea for a column," I think to myself. After all, this page is called Editorial/Opinion and most lists are just that, someone or some group's opinion. I've been here at UMass for almost four years now, and in that time I'm supposed to have grown smarter, wiser and more eloquent. My opinions should count more now than ever before, right? And that's what this column is – an homage to High Fidelity yes – but more so a collection of my opinions on almost everything. Popular culture and this University are included.

Before I unleash this fury though, let me first say a few things to qualify the following. I'm not a big fan of lists. In fact, I generally dislike them. After three different viewings, nobody can convince me that Citizen Kane is the best movie of the previous 100 years, as The American Film Institute would have us believe. I don't think The Beatles, The Backstreet Boys and Garbage should be mentioned together in any context, especially when discussing pop songs, as Rolling Stone magazine and MTV would have us believe. At least Entertainment Weekly got their "100 Greatest Moments in Television" right for the most part. The assassination of JFK (#1 on said list) will forever live in TV infamy, though I still think, and will argue to my death, that "Seinfeld" changed its genre and possibly the medium more than any other show ever. Does that make its debut a better, a "greater," TV moment than JFK's death? Who knows?

The second reason that I hate lists is because they're final. Once they're made, they can't be unmade. They remain in black and white, open to inevitable and interminable scrutiny. So, if you see me on campus after reading this and want to discuss something, then feel free to stop me, yell at me, hurt me or just insult me. In fact, I'll even give you a few to start you off. I'm scrawny and pasty white. I'm stubborn and generally sarcastic. My mom's crazy. My face is too long and my nose is too big. I honestly believe Third Eye Blind is a good band. I have more pictures of Katie Holmes in my room than you can imagine. The only TV program that I watch anymore is "Dawson's Creek." If any of the above disqualifies my opinions, then so be it. Otherwise, here's what I think.

Top 5 DC Meals
Chicken quesadillas
Worcester breakfast sandwiches
Sweet potato quesadillas
Chicken pot pie
Hungarian Noodle Bake

Top 5 Movies of the last 5 Years
Jerry Maguire '96
Good Will Hunting '97
Shakespeare in Love '98
Fight Club '99
Almost Famous '00

Top 5 Most Talked about classes at UMass
Social Dance
College Writing 112
Biology of Cancer and Aids
Intro. To Philosophy
Computers and Society

Top 5 Albums of the last 5 Years
Radiohead – OK Computer
Hole – Celebrity Skin
Beck – Odelay
Better than Ezra – Friction Baby
Wyclef Jean – The Carnival

Top 5 Classes I've taken at UMass
Modern Fiction – Professor Clingman
Eletronic Journalism – Professor Davis
American Political Thought – Professor Sedgwick
Advertising as a Social Communication – Professor Jhally
Writing and Teaching Writing – Professor Herrington

Top 5 Most Underrated Movies of the Last 5 Years
Three Kings
Being John Malkovich
Twelve Monkeys
Donnie Brasco
Grosse Pointe Blank

Top 5 Places to Study
Any hallway in Sylvan
Any library floor above 20
Any Orchard Hill lounge
The Route 9 Dunkin' Donuts
The Collegian productivity room

Top 5 Bands that You Don't Listen to, but Should Fountains of Wayne
Better than Ezra
Belle and Sebastian
The Devlins
Elliot Smith

Top 5 Books I've Read at UMass
Light in August by William Faulkner
All the Pretty Horses by Cormac McCarthy
Things Fall Apart by Chinua Achebe
Idylls of the King by Alfred Lord Tennyson
The Virginian by Owen Wister

Of course, it's all just my opinion and I could be wrong. At least, I'll admit it though.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian Columnist.

A beautiful day

January 13th, 2000, 7:25 a.m. The orange line, bound from Melrose into the heart of Boston, is virtually empty on this Saturday morning. No chatter or conversation, but rather the cold grind of steel on steel. The lonely ride ends at Downtown Crossing and I am, along with my friends – Rob and Ming – coughed up by the subway into the frigid air. The clock hanging across from HMV Records reads a cool 23 degrees.

Few people mill about at this hour, and those that do wear the shoes of the working force, likely headed for a long day in the world of retail. I've come with more noble pursuits, however, in my mind at least. Very little can pull me out of bed on a Saturday morning at such an hour, and even less can do so with such enthusiasm. This morning has been a long time coming, and we've erected it with open arms.

U2 tickets. 10 a.m. On sale for those blessed with a bit of luck and willing to brave the cold, potentially very long lines.

7:55 a.m. – "Still haven't found what we're looking for..."

No less than six Ticketmaster outlets are scattered across the city of Boston, offering the potential consumer the opportunity to plot where he/she favors the odds of getting tickets. Not just tickets, but good tickets.

If a game played countless times each year by the savvy concert-goers and the not-so-savvy homeless people that are often paid to sit in lines by greedy scalpers, Rob, Ming and I decide that the HMV at Downtown Crossing was as good a place as any – a mere stone's throw from Filene's, and a short trip to either Newbury Street or Faneuil Hall. It was decided that HMV was to be the hub from which we could hatch and change, if need be, our plans.

It's incredible, really, how many of the people in line with us that morning were of Irish descent and in desperate search of an open liquor establishment. My stomach struggles with coffee at that time of the morning, never mind a shot or two of whatever it takes to keep these guys warm. Friendly folks, though, and we found ourselves fortunate enough to be sitting only four people deep in the growing line. The longer the wait, however, the thinner the patience grows, and once friendly faces have morphed into the enemy, the people that could very well show up at the eleventh hour and steal away the last of the tickets. It's your worst nightmare while waiting in line, the thought that they could very well run out before you get to the window. For the serious fan, the wait is as much a part of the experience as the show itself, and any deviation in that routine is a call for great alarm. We were getting to that point, and quickly.

8:15 a.m. – "Don't worry everything's just fine, just fine..."

Our nerves were running high, very high, and we began second-guessing our choice of a Ticketmaster. The line was growing quickly, and the random numbering system by which the tickets would be distributed was worrying us. There's no way in Hell, we kept saying, that we're being put at the end of this line. Rob is perhaps the most passionate U2 fan this planet has ever seen, and the prospect of not getting a Golden Ticket was beginning to take a visible toll on him. We decided it was time to act, to make use of our numbers and scout out a location that offered us – Rob specifically – a stronger peace of mind. Leaving Ming to hold down the fort, we ventured to Faneuil Hall in search of happiness.

We found it. A Ticketmaster booth and not a single person in sight. It was as if we had stumbled across the Holy Grail, something so sacred and yet so naked and vulnerable. Never mind that by the time we returned with Ming a few people had gathered there, or that this Ticketmaster was also breaking hearts by way of random numbering. It oozed a comfort and personality the other had lacked; something spoke to us there and asked us to stay.

It was about the time that we had firmly made up our minds and dug our heels into the cobblestone of Quincy Market when The Viper first sauntered past us. He spoke low and moved quickly, never fully revealing his face or purpose. He spit out old, hackneyed ticket-buying wisdom at us. "You know," he whispered, "tickets here are distributed by random numbering. Being early doesn't help." He floated off into the middle of Quincy Market somewhere, his long coat trailing behind, leaving us hugely disappointed that his supposed wisdom fell far short of his furtive exterior. He'd trail by a few more times. The man moved in mysterious ways.

9:35 a.m. – "For me, U2 is a lifestyle." – Rob

Twenty-five minutes. Less than a half-hour away from showtime, and we sat quietly with our fates gripped tightly in our hands. Small, red tickets had been handed out, the very things that would send us to a show or the back of the line. We passed the time with coffee and unrelated conversation to keep our minds off of the rapidly approaching moment of truth. Each of us wondered quietly if our efforts would be rewarded.

The woman in charge mixed the numbers in a bag, tossing and turning them, mirroring the movement of our stomachs to a nauseating degree. She finally got around to doing her job, and pulled the number of the person that was to head the line.

It was Ming.

The realization of what had happened took a moment to sink in. It's that moment where everyone thinks they have won, where their mind tricks them into thinking the number they hold has been called. After the initial shock, however, it couldn't have been clearer: we were the first three people in line. We were getting tickets. We were going to see U2.

We had our tickets in hand 10 minutes later, and were suddenly put under the watching eye of the people at the end of the line. I truly felt bad for them. It could just have easily been me. It wasn't this time, though, and we were all quite aware of that. Life can be very good. Sometimes it just takes the small things to get there.

Prologue –

Arrived home to find out that second and third shows had been added. Jumped online and somehow scored tickets to the second, and managed to call Rob before he caught a plane that would take him back to school in Miami. That's where the tour opener happens to be, and he tells me he somehow got his hands on those. A few weeks later, on another cold Saturday morning, Rob lets me know that yes, we've indeed got tickets for the fourth Boston show as well.

Now that's Rock 'n' Roll.

Matthew J. Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

Lost and found

It takes a whole lot to make me angry. I mean a lot. I'm the kind of person that is relaxed and lets things slide. When I get mad, people need to back off, 'cause I can be mean. Today I'm really, really mad. In fact, you might just want to excuse anything I say for the next few weeks.

I'm writing this on Monday, the first full day I've been back to UMass. I've just come from the UMass Police Station, literally ten minutes ago. This afternoon I walked to my car, to go to my physical therapy appointment for my busted leg, and I've come to the realization that my car has been stolen.

For the past TWO months I've owned this car. A nice blue Volkswagon Jetta. I've only had this car for two months. I haven't even gotten a yellow lot sticker yet because I'm on a waiting list. At UMass there has to be at least five thousand Jetta's. I'm here for one day and mine gets stolen. It's my luck that it got stolen. Something has happened to me at the beginning of every semester that I've been here. First semester, as a freshmen, my wisdom teeth got infected and I had to go home the first weekend. Ever since, it has gotten progressively worse and now my car's been stolen. I'm expecting to be hit by a Mack truck at the beginning of next fall.

My car was a great car. My parents got it for me in November and it's the best gift I've ever got. I just put a new stereo in it a few weeks ago. It was great on gas. I only had to fill it every other week. I locked my car and the face plate was taken off the stereo. All I had in the car was a crap pair of North Face sneakers, and I'm sure the thief didn't want those. I hope whoever stole it gets really annoyed by the broken cd sensor that I hadn't fixed yet. That thing is going to get really, really annoying because it makes this loud buzzing noise. Especially since there's no stereo to listen to.

Someone really had to go to some length to pick out my car and take it. It was parked in the fifth row of the Southwest yellow lot, in the middle of the row, locked. I didn't have anything valuable showing, and the front drivers seat was being held up by a Louisville Slugger. It gave the car character.

There are a few scenarios that I can think of as to why my car would be stolen.

Like in that movie Final Destination, life is just out to get me.

Someone stole it for parts.

Likely situation, but out of all the Jettas at UMass, what was so attractive that someone thought, "Hey, the blue one's a good choice?" They could have had black or red or any other color. The parts all would be the same.

It was too cold to walk to go out last night, so my car was picked as the vehicle of choice.

Another likely situation, but the baseball bat would have been in the way, only leaving room for four people.

Maybe the person was really short and trying out for baseball, and wanted the Slugger. But they could have just taken that and left my car.

There're a few things that I hope happen. If the person who stole it is a guy, I hope he gets completely ragged on for driving a periwinkle blue car – clearly a girl's color. I'm also hoping that as the person was driving in a real fast getaway, the car stalled out as it tends to do in the cold, and goes flying through the front windshield. This could be likely because the seatbelts are a little tricky. They literally buckle up, like they were electric. That'll teach him or her a lesson. Maybe the person was completely stupid and got pulled over, and got themselves arrested. I can only hope. I'm kind of wishing they will get annoyed with the oil light and just leave it on the side of the road to be found, so that I can have it back.

For the past few months, that car has been my livelihood. I know it sounds kind of shallow. The Jetta was a Christmas present from my parents, so I didn't have to borrow their car to go to work anymore. I've wanted a Jetta since I've been able to drive. Before I had my car I hated driving, and having my own car made me want to drive all the time. I had even just put in a honey-dew melon smelly-thing from Yankee Candle. I loved that car more than anything in my life right now (besides, of course, my family and my best friend).

But now someone decided it would be fun to jack my car. I'm more hurt and sad than angry. I'll miss the Jetta. If anyone in my family's car could have been stolen, it should have been my mom's. It's a '98 Lincoln and probably wouldn't get past the end of the driveway. It's a piece.

Three hours later.

So my friend Melissa and I, who bought me flowers because my car was stolen, decided to go out to dinner in light of my bad mood. We walked down to the Southwest yellow lot, the place I hate the most in this world at this point. As Melissa and I settle into the "Scott" for a meal at the Bee (Applebee's), I asked her to drive through the lot just so I could wish for my car to be back.

Low and behold, there in the fourth row, second car in, is my car.

That's right. My car was exactly where I had said I had left it. I swear to anything that I parked it farther down in the fourth row, but nope, it was in the second spot. Somehow, myself and two security officers failed to find a blue Jetta in all 65 cars in the lot at the time. It's all my fault really. No one really knows what my car looks like besides me. Two officers wouldn't know it was mine.

You will never know what Melissa and my faces looked like. I was shocked and stunned and neither of us could stop laughing. Then I had to set my embarrassment aside and go up to the police station to tell them I had found my lost car. I had to tell them that, yes, my car was right where I had left it.

I failed to find my own car in the yellow lot, and it was only in the fourth row. I keep typing this because as I write this piece, I still can't get over my own stupidity. I am a complete moron.

There are a few truths made evident in this story.

1) Maybe I just shouldn't own a car. I'm not bright enough to remember where the hell I put it.

2) Don't go to the police unless you are ABSOLUTELY positive your car is stolen. However, I was told by security I should go to the police.

3) I can never admit that I am wrong. Even after I found my car in the same exact spot that I had parked it, I still tried to convince myself that someone got into my car, moved it up the row, parked it the same way I had, and locked the doors as a trick against me.

So make sure that next time you park your car in a lot, you write down where you put it. And the fifteen times I searched the lot for my car didn't compare to the one search where I actually did find it. Fifteen times is never enough. Go for the sixteenth. I also want to apologize to Melissa who bought me flowers, Jessica who gave me a card, my roommate who took me to do my errands that I had needed to do and the Police Officer who told me that it wasn't the first time that this happened. Yeah, right.

It figures that I would lose my car in the yellow lot. If you and I were friends, you would completely expect this. I continue to surprise myself with my own stupidity.

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

Professor exhibits muddled work

EXPRESSIONIST PAINTINGS
James Hendricks
Herter Gallery
Jan. 30 – Feb. 28

Titled Expressionist Paintings, Professor James Hendricks's work is currently decorating the walls of Herter Gallery like puffy paint sweatshirts gone awry. A series comprising mostly of monochromatic self-indulgent explorations with paint, with titles such as Vibrant Red, the show is also accompanied by a set of paintings bearing a spectrum of iridescent paints (maybe he should consider patenting these sparkle-tones before Revlon gets a hold of them.) Characterized by splashes, pools, blobs, nubs, streaks and gashes, the paintings display an out-of-this-world aesthetic, with reference to celestial bodies, galaxies and the like. Maybe they would go over better if they were relocated to a Star Trek convention. Merely exploring the visceral effects of the supposed "super palette," these paintings are a classic display of "art for art's sake."

The eye-candy that Hendricks has chosen to provide us with is unfortunately sugar-free. Resembling a cross between Yves Klein and Jackson Pollock, the work does justice to neither. His work harks to a time long ago, when color fields and drip paintings were championed by the likes of art critic Clement Greenberg, who marketed painters such as Pollock, Rothko and Kline, as the fathers of Abstract Expressionism. While this movement in its heyday was considered an avant-garde break from tradition, it subscribed to the very ideals of its predecessors; namely: 1) Painting is the highest form of artistic production. 2) Large paintings are more important than smaller ones. 3) Aesthetic value is the primary factor in evaluating artistic worth. While Abstract Expressionism had its place in modern art history, its greatest downfall was its failure to consider the subjectivity of the human agent, and its relationship with the world of art.

Hendricks's work, void of any aspiration to critique or conceptualize, is rendered as a mere appropriation of the elevated formal truths of High Modernism. His work is regressively modern in its support of formal truths and abstract structures that are considered to be universal. It is widely accepted within contemporary thought that notions of universality and absolute truth have been a form of authoritarianism; only multiple subjectivities and truths can accurately account for the human experience.

In essence, large splatter paintings resembling tar on the side of the road bear no relevance to the world of contemporary thought and artistic practice. However, if this were 1950 would Hendricks's work measure up to the likes of Pollock? Hopefully posing this question will not cause old Jackson, the James Dean of the art world, to roll over in his grave, most likely onto his bottle of Jack Daniels.

Collegian Staff.

James Hedricks's Rapture

COURTESY HERTER ART GALLERY

Dispatch strikes a fine stylistic balance at sold-out Pearl St.

By David Piper
Collegian Correspondent

DISPATCH
Pearl Street
February 3, 2001

Mixing musical genres can be a beautiful, or a dangerous, thing. At its best it can bring together diverse styles of music, melding them into one cohesive whole. At its worst, it can result in a disjointed collision of sounds in the midst of an aural identity crisis.

Dispatch is a band whose sound draws from a wide range of influences: the rhythmic sung/spoken lyrics of reggae, the gentle guitar-driven lilt of ska, the distorted guitar hooks of hardcore and the extended roller-coaster ride solos of modern jam bands. The band, formerly known as One Fell Swoop, got its start at Middlebury College in 1995. Since then they have experienced increasing popularity, gaining a huge boost from Napster and other electronic forms of distribution.

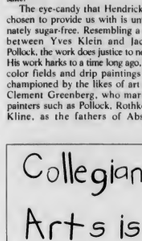
Their show at Pearl Street last Saturday drew a capacity crowd of area college and high school students. The opening band, Dr. Awkward (the name is a palindrome, and can be read either backwards or forwards), gave a decent warm-up performance that was marred mostly by the exaggerated stage antics of their lead singer. Dispatch received a warm welcome and then delved into songs from their recent release Who Are We Living For?

The audience was enthusiastic about "Open Up," the band's second song. The lyrics take the first person perspective of a prisoner on his final journey from the cell to the gallows. Although it seems to send a loose anti-death penalty message, the song is more focused on conveying the persona of a man on the run from, well..., "the Man." The idea seems to be a common one throughout Dispatch's lyrics. Lines like "They were looking for me when I came to / They were looking for me when I came back / said hey you, you're looking very suspicious / I said relax man get off my back" could either evoke images of a lonely vigilante road warrior, or of the neo-nineties Hippie.

Midway in the band's set they paused to let frontmen Chad Urmston and Pete Heimbold, affectionately called "Chetro" and "Repete" by their fans, swap places. What I thought would be a momentary switch; a quick Interlude to display the bands versatility, turned out to be a central part of Dispatch's act. Urmston and Heimbold possess equally impressive skills as guitarists, singers, soloists and bassists. Urmston delivered most of the band's reggae influenced numbers in a sharp, articulate voice while Heimbold had a more soulful, crooning style, reminiscent for a few moments of the Chili Peppers' Anthony Keidis. Brad Corrigan (or "Braddigan"), despite being stuck behind the drum set most of the time, also lent some nice upper harmonies throughout the show.

A few songs later, another personal swap brought drummer Corrigan out front to play acoustic guitar and sing while Urmston played hand percussion. Corrigan took a harmonica solo, and the overall folk sound gave the set a nice sense of variety. All three members stayed out front for "Cut It & Match It," a hip-hop number with only a bare-bones acoustic guitar accompaniment that freed up the other band members for some stage antics. The song's rough-around-the-edges mentality succeeded in rilling up the crowd before the show's homestretch. The band closed with "The General," a rock anthem describing a disillusioned general pardoning his soldiers, saying "I have seen the other side / and they're not worth fighting." The sing along chorus of "Go now you are forgiven" seemed to be directed not only at a fictitious group of soldiers, but also at a cheering, crowd-surfing audience that had come to forget the outside world with the help of their favorite band.

Before leaving the stage, Chet Urmston thanked his family for attending the show, and Pete Hiembold asked the crowd, "We want to take the country by storm; we're for independent music, are you with us?" It's this endearing humbleness and desire to stay close to their fans that has helped launch this young band's career. They also wield their hybrid style of reggae and rock well, with an energy and liveliness that many lesser rock bands, struggling for success, might have lost along the way. If their growing fan base is any indication, Dispatch may have a chance at attaining their lofty goals.



A look at Fire & Water Café

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Staff

Located on 5 Old South St. in Northampton, the cafe Fire & Water may not be the best place to get in the mood for a wild kegger, but it's definitely a pleasant, intellectual little coffee shop with chill music, and it's probably a better place to study than your average dorm room.

Barista and Northampton local Sarah-Pepper Ryan describes the cliental as "a little bit of everybody. But everyone's laid back. Most people leave whatever stress they have outside when the walk through the door. The café is very approachable. People here are always really nice. Even when it's crowded, its relaxed. Nobody pushes."

According to Ryan, the music, live seven nights per week, includes a medley of "a lot of folk, reggae, electronic, spoken word and open mike.

Wednesday is open poetry night and Monday is open night for singing." On Sunday night the sparse mellow crowd corresponded to the low-key instrumental jazz, including mostly small groups clean-cut of students. A middle-aged man sat alone and watched the musicians. A couple of young woman lounged together reading books. But last month's performance of "Gooselove & Antara" drew a wilder packed house of tattooed, shaved head activists.

UMASS NSE student from New Mexico, Sara McCormick encourages even the uninitiated to give the poetry night a try. "I'm not an avid poetry reader, but it was really awesome. There were really good people. Afterwards a jazz band played. I know absolutely nothing about poetry, but everything about it had a really good feeling."

The off kilter ambiance is truly unique, combining new age spirituality with hippy social defiance – but in a mellow way. With an entrance that's easy to miss, painted brick walls, and a low, bare ceiling that reveals the rafters and the piping, this comfy little hole in the wall feels like a sophisticated version of that basement you hung out in during high school. Beneath the hanging plants, the walls are covered in eclectic photos and drawings: a black and white glossy of Elvis, a faded 19th Century photo of an elderly American Indian, the picture of a little girl kissing a pregnant woman's swollen belly, and a sketch of a Middle Eastern Village. Warm lighting is provided by an abundance of colorful outdoor-style Christmas lights, and an illuminated paper globe that hangs in the center of the room.

Perhaps most differentiating of this particular cafe is the alter in the corner, dedicated to the owner's son Jesse Drooker. "One thing the owners like people to know," explains Ryan, "is that Fire & Water was build around the spirit of Jesse Drooker, who was born six years ago with a heart condition and lived 19 days. He's been nicknamed the Salmon Boy, because he lived his life fighting upstream. Now the owners like to say he's swimming in spiritual waters." Decorating the alter, a dark wooden boudoir with a mirror backboard, are pictures of the infant Jesse, toys, rocks, and fresh flowers. Hanging above are a butterfly mobile and a painted cardboard star.

Leslie Wells, a UMASS third year music student calls the niche her "favorite cafe," explaining, "I really like the atmosphere. It's really warm and has a lot of music I'm drawn to. I just enjoy it."

Apart from the expected assortment of coffees and teas, you can also get appropriately "granola"-style cookies and sandwiches. "All the food's vegetarian," advertises Ryan, "and about 50% of its Vegan." After a brief pause she admits, "Well, we do have tuna fish, but all the food's natural."

we throw all kinds of [obstacles] at you.
tuition isn't one of them.
Sure, we'll have you climbing walls. But if you qualify for a 2- or 3-year scholarship, tuition's one obstacle you won't have to worry about. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. And get a leg up on your future.
LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
Come and see what everyone is talking about!
UMASS ARMY ROTC @ (413) 545-2321

Redefining the starving artist

Like some sort of walking zombie, Lara Flynn Boyle stood on stage at the Golden Globe awards. Desperate for food, she appeared to be no different than some of the starving children on the television's, the only difference being that she chose not to feed herself.

We had to stop the movie we were watching and rewind to verify that Angelina Jolie's arm was truly that bony in Gone in 60 Seconds. It was like some sort of disturbing zombie, some sort of ethereal creation on the screen, floating there because she certainly lacked the strength to stand on her own.

There's a character in Valentine who's called fat, she's the fat one, the one with the big ass. She wears it on her sleeve like a cancer victim, like there's something wrong with her. This actress, the relatively unknown Jessica Capshaw, has a healthy body.

The words fat or big or anything from that same vein – they're not even applicable in her situation.

Kate Winslet, after having a child and having long been a protestor against Hollywood's ridiculous assumption about what women should look like, admitted that she was dieting to lose some of the baby fat that she'd gained during her pregnancy for fear she wouldn't be able to get work in the middle of California.

When Reviving Ophelia came out several years ago, it was perhaps the biggest name of an emerging study of just how much the media's images of women were destroying developing young girls. Suddenly, a much-needed howl of protest from women (and some men) were accusing the media of using such unrealistically thin, such unbelievably waifish individuals that the girls with no other women to look up to in pop-culture were attempting to emulate that singular body type. And of course, that sort of rabid emulation that comes with a common teenager's developing self-esteem led to eating disorders and crushed self-confidence.

The media attempted to defend itself as inanely as it always had. Seventeen claimed that they could only find thin models, that's why they used them, others claimed that such thin bodies weren't the fault of the starving Calista Flockhart's of this world, others suggested that the media didn't impact as much as was claimed, but nothing was ever really done about the problem. And then, as is predictably the case in America culture, if one side needs to be looked at, then so does the other, and thus boys, especially after school-shootings, started to be analyzed.

And the teenage girls were forgotten.

There is obviously still a large collection of rotting zombies walking around Hollywood, continually getting work as actresses. The problems haven't gone away because of Reviving Ophelia or any of the other books that came out decrying what the media was doing to the psyche of young women. But while the problems remain, the much-needed protest of Hollywood and the media in general has disappeared, the tension about how damaging these images are has been reduced to a frictionless condition. Without any sort of cogent protest, without any sort of focused complaint, who honestly believes that the media will ever even consider a change?

FOGGY MEDIA

The problem with the media is that it never changes. It's so willing to follow itself that it will never dare to branch out and try something different. The same issues are always written about, the same photos are always published, and in our cut-and-dry popular culture, media mavens are only willing to do what the next one is doing, not ride the cutting edge.

Be that cutting edge daring to use the scandalously normal Kate Winslet, use models that don't necessarily avoid food for days at a time, or perhaps just attempt to have more of a diversity in the women that make "it" and by diversity, that doesn't mean having ultrathin black girls next to ultrathin white girls. There's no real good reason why the media can't be slightly more representative of society as a whole.

Our society isn't one of zombies, it isn't that solely consists of Lara Flyn Boyle's and Angelina Jolie's, because while they certainly have their spot in this world (as anorexia victims), Kate Winslet's do too. It is troublesome that they don't seem to have their spots. It's worse that the only people that do are so unrealistic as to be called unbelievable by some, and it's most disturbing that an important movement within the media was quelled long before it had enough time to gestate.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Train to be an EMT this semester Tuesday and Thursday nights 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost $600 For more information or to register call 545-1885 Learn to save a life!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Month Free! Sunny 2 bdrm apartment Shutesbury $790 rent/heat/electricity 1/2 quiet tenants 15 minutes to Umass 259-1245

Running Out of Space? Need a Bigger Place? *Deluxe 2-bedroom apartments available *Free heat and hot water *On the free PVTA busline Minutes for UMASS!!! Back to school spring semester specials 1/2 off security deposit $100 off 1st month's rent Call Sugarloaf Estates (413) 665-3856

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack, Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

92 Honda Civic DX 4Door Sedan, red, 75kmi, automatic, sliniroof, cassettplayer, excellent condition $6000or b/o Call 253-3092

93 Saturn SL2, SDW, 1.9Ltr engine, 5spd, cd player $3500 o/b/o Must sell 665-3521

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, housework 6-10 hours Tue & Thur. $10/hr 247-5800

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

French & or German Speaking candidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or email dcu@rami.com

Single Dad and business owner too busy to do everything. I need help! Shopping, light cleaning, errands, bills, etc. Compensation negotiable. Very part-time, flexible schedule. Need to have car. Phone # 413-253-4640 ask for James

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

New Students Program Seeking extroverts for summer orientation positions: May 29th - July 18th. Salary, room meals, health coverage. Call 545-9681 for more info. or pick up an application at the Undergraduate Admission Center. Deadline Feb. 9

EMPLOYMENT

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Cape Verde, Portuguese, Chinese, Korean, Japanese. Call ESL Office at Amherst Public School 413-549-9857. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.50 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

Undergraduate Business Consultant Gain Accounting Experience, Leadership Skills, and General Business Experience. 10-15 hrs. per week, flexible schedule. Must be self motivated; able to work as part of a team and willing to actively participate in University issues involving the Student Businesses. Sophomores and Juniors are encouraged to apply. Pick up an application at the Center for Student Business, 406 Student Union. Questions, call 545-2167. Deadline for apps Thursday Feb 15th

EMPLOYMENT

Human Services Exciting Opportunities The Consortium is an agency that supports people with disabilities through education advocacy and services. Program Coordinator needed to direct and oversee services provided to up to six people with various learning challenges. Supervisory experience, flexibility, and optimistic attitude, sense of humor, relible transportation and driver's license required. Combination of day time and evening hours. $12/hr starting salary. Send resume to Janice Harris at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 AA/EDE. Full-time/part-time - Looking to have fun earning extra income with a flexible work schedule? Spend time with people in a supportive atmosphere. Call Lori-Ann Bruyett at (413) 536-2401 to set up a phone interview. AA/EOE.

RAFT GUIDES WANTED FOR SUMMER 2001: Zoar Outdoor is accepting applications for its whitewater raft guide training program. To request an application call 1-800-532-7483 or visit www.zoaroutdoor.com. Applications due by 2/15/01. EDE.

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Center for tour guides, student admissions Reps, and summer counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 9

EMPLOYMENT

More Than Just Summer Employment Independent Lake Camp Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Volleyball, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theatre, Dance, Video, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Skateboarding, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Ropes Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and More. Call 1-800-399-CAMP ask for Dan or Nigel. www.independent-lake.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Speakers: 12" woofers, 5" liquid cooled mid-range, horn tweeters, 125watt powerful, only has about 20 hours of play time. Call Rory 253-3934 $299/pr

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161. Call 253-2378

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons Recreational & competitive boxing 256-0364

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roommate to share room in 2bdrm apt in Mill Valley $287.50/mo include. Heat & hot water. Female preferred 253-4798 Mari

1 Room Available in three bedroom apt in Mill Valley. Looking for a nonsmoker who is clean and quiet. $340/month Call 253-0066

Roommate Needed ASAP. Share 3 bedroom apt w/2 nice guys. Great location on Main Street. Call Tyler at 253-2687

Female Wented ASAP 1 room open in 4 room apartment in Hadley on bus route. $295 a month 582-9164

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female Seeking roommate for Amherst apt. Cheap rent. Call 256-6244

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TICKETS FOR SALE

One Boreanked Ladies Floor Seat Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TO SUBLET

2 Badroom Cliffside Apt. $699/month including everything. Call 253-676

TRAVEL

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $449. Air, Hotel, Transfers, parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break Still Available! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do it on the Web! Go to www.StudentCity.com or call 1-800-293-1443 for info.

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

Wantad! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE. WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

what are you waiting for??

advertise today!!

call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS 3 Hartford
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC-40 Springfield
6 - PBS 57 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - PBS 24 Hartford
13 - NBC 40 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMATV (Automatic Channel)
16 - WB 59 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - ESPN2
19 - UMASS TV (Studio Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Guest to Guest
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TNT
28 - TBS
29 - A&E
30 - Nickelodeon
31 - Comedy Central
32 - MTV
33 - Univision
34 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - BET
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING C - Campus FEBRUARY 6, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scientific American Frontiers		Nova "Nazi Prison Escape"		Frontline "Elian Gonzalez"		Sports Heroes	People-Here
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Miracles" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "3 1/2 Narrow"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Miracles" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "3 1/2 Narrow"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Mole (N) (In Stereo)		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	NYPD Blue "Fools Russian"		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Happy Anniversary"		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	7th Heaven "Words" (In Stereo)		Jim Calhoun	College Basketball	Providence at Connecticut. (Live)		UConn Post		News	Arrest & Trial	College Basketball
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Mole (N) (In Stereo)		Dark Angel "Art Attack" (N)		News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scientific American Frontiers		Nova "Nazi Prison Escape"		Frontline "Elian Gonzalez"		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Mole (N) (In Stereo)		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	NYPD Blue "Fools Russian"		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	"Dangerous Ground" (1997, Drama) Ice Cube. (In Stereo)		Frasier		Mad Abt. You		Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: Indiana Pacers at Miami Heat. (Live)				Inside NBA		"Surviving the Game" (1994)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Reboot	Biography: Jimmy Hoffa		City Confidential (N)		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Animal Instinct"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★½ "Volunteers" (1985, Comedy) Tom Hanks, John Candy.				Battlebots	Battlebots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Pythons		Wild Discovery: Indonesia		Prosecutors-Justice		New Detectives "Broken Vows"		FBI Files "A Stranger in Town"		Justice Files "Double Lives"
ESPN	53	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Michigan State at Illinois. (Live)				Winter X-Games				Sportscenter
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Someone Is Watching" (1999, Suspense) Stefanie Powers.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Super Bowl	Celebrity	Cribs	VJ for a Day	TRL (In Stereo)		Real World	Real World	Making-Video	Undressed	Diary
NICK	59	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	60	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "Beyond the Veil"		Outer Limits "Trial by Fire"		Outer Limits "Perimeter"		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	28	Critical Condition: 24 Hours		Secrets of Forensic Science		Trauma: Life in the ER		Code Blue: Witching Hour (N)		Leeches, Maggots & Bees		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	54	ER "Going Home" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Prison Story"		★★½ "Turner & Hooch" (1989, Comedy) Tom Hanks.				★★½ "Dragnet" (1987, Comedy) Dan Aykroyd, Tom Hanks.
USA	29	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Cowboys & Colassos"		Nash Bridges "The Vero"		"The Last Producer" (2001, Comedy-Drama) Burt Reynolds.				"The Last Producer" (2001)
HBO	35	(5:30) "Life With Mikey" (1993)		★★½ "Brokedown Palace" (1999, Drama) Claire Danes, Billy Connolly. PG-13				★★★ "Dancing In September" (2000) Nicole Ari Parker. "NR"				Ds "The Blizzard of 01"
MAX	37	(4:45)		★★½ "The End of the Affair" (1999, Drama) "R"		★★½ "Beverly Hills Cop II" (1987, Comedy) Eddie Murphy. "R"		★★½ "The Clean and Narrow" (2000, Drama) "R"				★★ "Event"
SHOW	36	★★ "Lovertboy" (1989, Comedy) Patrick Dempsey. PG-13						★★★ "Sleepy Hollow" (1999, Horror) Johnny Depp. "R"		Beggars and Choosers (N)		Queer as Folk

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

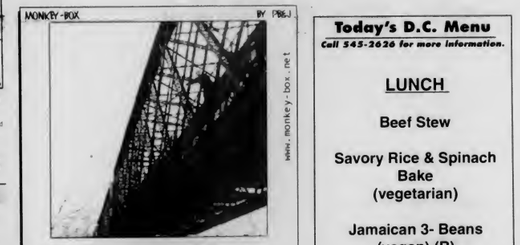
FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Horoscopes

Aries - March 21 - April 19 - This is one of those days in which your heart is pounding with excitement, but for some reason there is a quiet voice inside you warning that you may be getting yourself into a great deal of trouble. An enthusiastic approach towards love may be necessary, but today may not be the best day to take action. People are going to be a bit too sensitive and not necessarily that impressed with what you pathetically declare come on. Hold back and give the other person room.

Leo - July 23 - Aug. 22 - Your heart may be feeling extra loving today, which is good, since you well probably need it. There is mostly likely someone close to you who needs a lift of some sort. You may find yourself like a tow truck that has come to pull you out of the ditch. Be careful when you hook up the chains, and be sure not to scratch the bumpers or pull too hard all at once.

Sagittarius - Nov. 22 - Dec. 21 - Break through the gridlock of moodiness of the day. Burst out in song when anything drops the street. Encourage others to sing back to you, as if your life were an ongoing opera. Your creativity in extra strong at this point, so let it shine in unexpected areas of your world. You have the wonderful ability to turn even the most boring and mundane situations into something exciting. Make the most of it!

Taurus - April 20 - May 20 - Be more aggressive when it comes to your intentions regarding a romantic situation. It would be a great idea to impress your lover with a delicious, home-cooked meal on a night like this. Put a bit more spark into the equation and re-light the candle that might have recently gone out. Don't hesitate to be the instigator in love. Otherwise you might miss out.

Virgo - Aug 23 - Sept. 22 - You may be feeling like mother hen today, guarding her defenseless chicks from the evil fox. You are smart to not automatically treat any knock on the coop door. Use the peephole - you wouldn't want to miss a fending from the farmer, either. Others are likely to be aggressive when it comes to moving in on your territory. Be strong and assure your neighbors that everything will be fine.

Capricorn - Dec. 22 - Jan. 19 - You are apt to be pleased with restlessness, to the point that you may be completely incapable of getting anything done. If you sense that this is happening to you even in the slightest degree, stop whatever you are doing and take a break. Your work is not worth the sacrifice of your sanity. Consider going to a spa, or call up a friend with a pleasin to you and make some warm, relaxing walks for as long as you want.

Gemini - May 21 - June 21 - It would be a good idea to reevaluate both - then women today in a comfortable, open setting. Say what you feel without of abuses just concentrating on what you think. By such as good a listener to others as you expect them to be by you. Join a craft circle or take up a knitting class. Your creativity is looking for an outlet on a day like this, so you might as well share this gift among friends. Do it!

Libra - Sept 23 - Oct. 23 - You may be a bit confused today. More than likely, it will be hard for you to get an accurate reading on your emotions. One of your most automatic responses in a situation like this is to turn to a close partner for advice. Unfortunately, this advice may throw you into even more of a tizzy. What you need more than anything is to spend some quality time alone, read a good book, and catch up on your reading.

Aquarius - Jan. 20 - Feb. 18 - Be careful of exerting your will too strongly towards someone who really isn't entirely receptive to it. Be clear on exactly how other people are feeling at this time. When it comes to love and romance, be gentle. You have a yellow light meaning that it is OK to proceed, but use extra caution in making sure that the other person is receptive to your advances. Don't come across as too aggressive and end up making a fool of yourself.

Cancer - June 22 - July 22 - Stick with what comes naturally to you. If something feels difficult or strained, then it is a sure sign that your energy is best utilized elsewhere. However, don't turn away until you are sure that what you are coming up against is actually a confusion force instead of your own skewed sense of reality. It could be that you are being overly sensitive about a given situation, and thereby making up scenarios that don't even exist.

Scorpio - Oct. 24 - Nov. 21 - Count your emotions and make sure that you are not in your own mind before you take action today. This is a terrific time for you to get things started, following through to completion should it be a problem. The difficult part is taking that first step. This can be easily done on a day like today, so don't miss this opportunity when your intuitive sense is extra keen.

Pisces - Feb. 19 - Mar. 20 - Overall, this should be a pretty good day for you as long as you don't become overly interested about certain things. Your awareness is bound to be extra sharp today so use this ability to stay alert and open to what is going on around you. Perhaps you are feeling a bit restless when it comes to matters of the heart. This is a sign telling you to stop, fidgeting and take action. Do it!

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 39 LOW: 24	HIGH: 42 LOW: 24	HIGH: 43 LOW: 29

Quote of the Day

"Please God, may we have a snow day?"

–Sam Wilkinson

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Beef Stew

Savory Rice & Spinach Bake (vegetarian)

Jamaican 3- Beans (vegan) (B)

Caribbean Jerk Tofu (vegan) (H, W)

African Vegetable Stew (vegan) (F)

DINNER

Crab Newburg

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

Ginger Black Beans

Catherine says eat your vegetables!

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED COMPANY
289-BEDS (2337)/ 256-BEDS(2337)
326 College Street, Amherst
FINALLY!!! Amherst has a mattress & futon store conveniently located near downtown, next to The Spirit Haus on Rt. 9
GRAND OPENING & OPEN HOUSE
(FREE FOOD!!!)
SAT. MARCH 31 10-6
SUN. APRIL 1 12-5
futone-mattresses-beds-daybeds decorative pillows-lamps-storage platform beds- room dividers-rugs mirrors-plants-end/coffee tables cots-foam-put//pool/papasan, ETC

ACROSS
1 "The Georgia Peach"
5 Prince of India
9 Zigzag through traffic
14 Manchurian border river
15 Physical: e.g.
16 Take a break
17 Recital piece
18 Thin coin
19 Mlle. Cara
20 Philip Morris product
22 Spots
23 Broadway offering
26 Honey maker
27 Ended an argument
30 Cutting tool
31 Scare
36 North Carolina county
37 Tense
38 XX minus VI
39 Hardest to eat, as fish
42 Knight's title
43 Wading bird
45 Off-course
46 Sports palace
48 Halfway
50 Excessively prim
51 Conquistador's gold
52 Photo session
54 Parsley, e.g.
58 Sea inlet
62 Campaigner's concern
63 Eye amorously
65 On a cruise
66 Prop for Judge Judy
67 Cast a sidelong glance
68 Claim on property

DOWN
1 Acting group
2 Melville work
3 Daffodil starter
4 More liberal
5 Baggage carrier
6 Principle
7 Traffic problem
8 Sermon end
9 Jots down
10 Spookiest
11 Actor Baldwin
12 Wind-direction indicator
13 Former mates
21 Cookie piece
23 Theater awards
25 Helps out
27 Saying
28 Cover story
29 Dickens Copperfield
31 Newsman Huntley
32 Caravan stops
33 Bankshots
34 Wander off
35 Ever and —
40 Spicy stews
41 Fortunetelling card
44 Mooched
47 Ceremonies
49 Bay windows
50 Tough questions
53 — of Troy
54 Musicians' jobs
55 Rani's servant
56 "* review"
57 Wrestler's grip
59 Where Cambodia is 60 Lurch
61 Sharp pull
64 "Wow!"

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

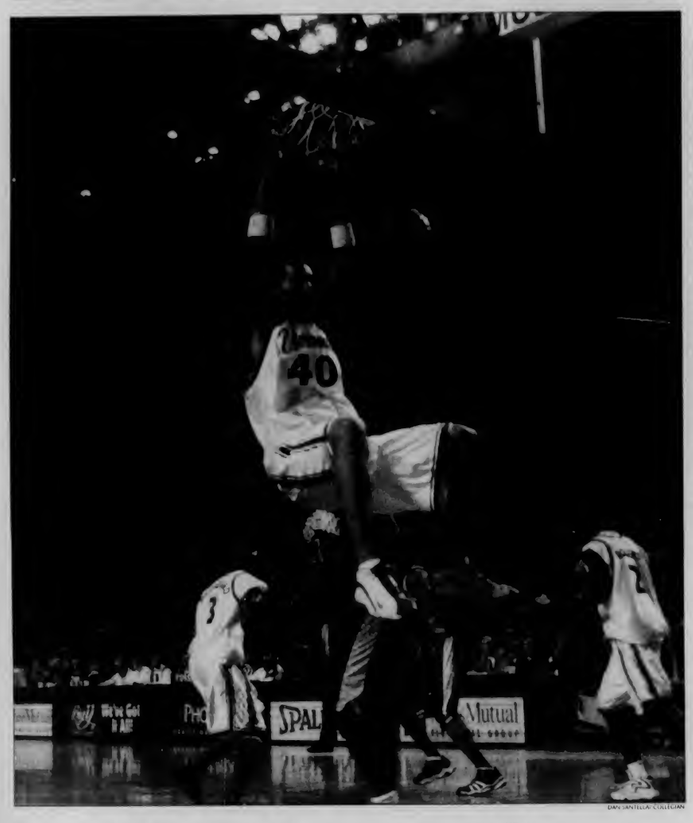
12-22-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

RETURN OF THE LIVING DAYTON



Micah Brand and the Minutemen will look to slam the coffin lid shut on Dayton's postseason hopes tonight at UD arena.

DAVID STILLA/ COLLEGIAN

Flyers to rise from A-10 dead and attack UMass

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

It was like some sort of roundball slasher flick: the Massachusetts men's basketball team left Dayton for dead on the floor of the William D. Mullins Center on January 18, having shot the Flyers five times from the free throw line in the last 1:14 of play.

But in the spirit of Jason and Michael Myers, the Flyers are back for their revenge. The Minutemen will have to shoot straight and avoid Dayton's traps if they hope to escape UD Arena alive, and with a win, in conference action tonight.

UMass (10-10, 8-1 Atlantic 10) enters arguably the toughest stretch of its season at Dayton, having to then host revenge-minded Xavier and Temple within 11 days. All three teams fell prey to the Maroon and White during its conference rebirth that began on Jan. 6, and both the Owls and Musketeers have managed to stay within a game of A-10 frontrunner UMass thus far.

Minuteman coach James "Bruiser" Flint warns that his team can ill-afford to take opponents like the Flyers (15-9, 4-5 A-10) lightly if it hopes to hang on to the conference's top stop.

"This team isn't looking at records, or really at standings either," Flint said. "These guys have to just come and play, pure and simple. We can't afford to lose concentration and look past anyone."

UMass' recent success has seen tremendous inside-outside balance from the team's front and backcourts, but its last clash with the Flyers was the one exception. The Minutemen abused the undersized Flyers down low for practically the entire game, with center Kitwanu Rhymer and forwards Micah Brand and Jackie Rogers outscoring the entire Dayton front line 49-29.

Dayton coach Oliver Purnell marveled at how year-in and year-out, UMass seems to dominate his teams down low. "I think it's just the big people that they have," Purnell said. "Marcus Camby and Lari Ketner were great big men; Rhymer is another great big man and Brand isn't too far behind."

Such paint power was necessary, however, as UMass' backcourt trio of Monty Mack, Shannon Crooks and Jonathan DePina combined for only 11 total points on 4-of-19 shooting from the field. Flyer guard Tony Stanley provided almost enough punch for UD to steal the win, scoring a game-high 23 points and adding a swipe and a swat on the other end of the hardwood.

"The development of Tony Stanley as a player has been fun to watch," Purnell said. "He has gotten to the point that he is a tremendous threat both on the offensive and defensive ends of the floor. He has worked very hard to make himself a complete player."

Purnell's speed-centric lineup also relies heavily on senior Yuanta Holland, forced to man the middle as Dayton's only semblance of a pivot. At 6-foot-7 and 220 pounds, Holland possesses the bulk to bang with many of the conference's smaller centers and leave willowy 6-foot-9 redshirt freshman Keith Waleskowski room to move in the UD frontcourt.

"[Holland] is big, quick and mobile, and he brings a lot of ability to the court," Purnell said. "He not only has tremendous athletic ability, but he is very skillful for a player his size."

Whereas Rhymer, Brand and Rogers nearly won the first game against Dayton on their own, Flint has had a full supporting cast to count on in the team's more recent wins. In the five games since the Dayton win, junior forward Ronell Blizzard has racked up 12 points, eight rebounds and six blocks in only 17 average minutes of floor time.

Teaming with Rogers and junior Eric Williams, Blizzard gives Flint a variety of personnel combinations to combat the smaller, quicker lineups that teams such as Dayton possess.

"Our depth has finally started to come through for us," Flint said. "Ronell and a few other guys are really starting to play outstanding off the bench."

That depth could become a big factor in Dayton, where the Minutemen must contend not only with the Flyer lineup but also the usually rambunctious crowd at UD Arena. In the past 13 years, 99 percent of Dayton's home games have drawn at least 10,000 fans, and the team has led the A-10 in home attendance for five straight seasons.

In other words, the crowd around Blackburn Court will no doubt be screaming for blood at tonight's 7:30 tip-off. A loss would seemingly eliminate Dayton from contention for the regular-season conference title, giving UMass one less team to worry about as it continues its unlikely run at postseason play.

"Coach has told us about developing that killer instinct," Mack said after a recent win. Tonight is a perfect theatre for the Minutemen to put that b-ball bloodlust on display.

Minutewomen torch Rams; Allery sweeps diving field, freshman Dexter stays hot

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Supremacy, dominance, superiority, preeminence, ascendancy, incomparability – the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team exhibited all of these traits while handing the Rams a good old fashioned beating on Saturday.

The Minutewomen forced their will upon Fordham, defeating them 143.5 to 98.5.

With the win over the Atlantic 10 rival Rams, UMass moves to 10-3 on the year, tying a school record for wins. The record is co-held by the 1996-97 team, which also went 10-3.

Kate Allery swept the diving events with scores of 245.25 on the one-meter and 253.05 on the three-meter events.

The relay events again proved reliable for the Maroon and White as the 400-yard medley team of Lauren Rowell, Christen Dexter, Andrea Kazanjian and Anne Dettloff took first with a time of 4:01.22.

The 400-yard free relay team of Shauna Nielson, Lizzy Boyle, Molly Buckley and Dettloff were also victorious.

Dexter continued her dominance in the breaststroke, winning the 200-yard race in 2:23.59. The freshman has been an essential tool in the success of the Minutewomen as she competes in both the relays and the breaststroke.

Dettloff won the 200-yard free in a time of 1:57.10, while Kazanjian claimed first in the 50-yard free in 24.85.

Nielson, a freshman, scored another victory in the 1000-yard free, finishing with a time of 10:55.90.

Freshman Diana Alberti also got a win in the 200-yard fly, finishing with a time of 2:11.85.

The Minutewomen will return to the pool on Friday, February 9th and Saturday, February 10th when they travel to Storrs, Connecticut for the UConn Husky Invitational.

The Atlantic 10 swimming championships are scheduled for February 15th through February 17th in Buffalo, NY.

UMass deep-sixes pesky Rams

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team got in on this weekend's Ram bashing with a 153-87 thrashing of Fordham.

The win wrapped up a solid Saturday for every Maroon and White battalion that faced off with pesky Fordham. The men's basketball and women's swimming and diving teams also cruised to easy wins over the Rams on the afternoon.

The Minutemen (10-4) won nine of the 13 events on Saturday en route to the victory. This was the last dual meet of the season for the Maroon and White.

Freshman Logan Alomar was the only Minuteman to pick up multiple individual victories as he won both the one and three-meter diving events. Alomar tallied a score of 265.2 in the one-meter and 268.5 in the three-meter. It was the third time this season that the freshman from Silver Spring, Md. has won both events.

In the pool it was a balanced effort for UMass as five different Minutemen notched first place finishes.

"We try and base our success on depth," said UMass head coach Russ Yarworth. "We have a few star performers but they can't win a championship on their own, it has to be a total team effort."

Tommy Keane led a triumvirate of sophomores who picked up victories for UMass. Keane took the 500-meter freestyle in a time of 4:50.85. It's the third consecutive meet that Keane has picked up a victory.

Other sophomore winners for the Minutemen were Chad Arnold in the 200-meter freestyle with a time of 1:48.81 and Scott Peterson in the 1000 freestyle. Peterson finished in a time of 10:24.93 to pick up his first victory of the year.

Senior Chris Arsenault once again was victorious for the Maroon and White as he took the 200-meter Individual Medley in 1:54.99. Arsenault, the four-time Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week, has won at least one event in each of UMass' meets this season.

Billy Brown rounded out the Minuteman winners by taking the 200-meter breaststroke. Brown, a senior from Fullerton, CA, clocked in with a time of 2:09.64 to win the event for the second consecutive meet.

Once more, the UMass relay teams came up big as they took both relay events of the day. In the 400-meter medley relay it was a quartet of seniors who swam past the Rams. Arsenault, Brown and fellow seniors Joe Martin and Mike Sabina, the only four seniors on the Minuteman squad, combined to finish with a time of 3:31.65.

Sabina, Arsenault and Arnold were also in on the UMass triumph in the 400-meter freestyle relay. These three combined with junior Ryan Fisher to win the event with a time of 3:11.25.

"The relays are what our team really gets behind," said Yarworth. "If we can get out and do well in those and get the 40 points then we usually do well."

In their last dual meet before the Atlantic 10 Championships the Minutemen were looking to get back on track and pick up some positive momentum.

"I think it was really important for us to do well," said Keane. "It gives us a lot of confidence heading into A-10's and hopefully we'll be able to keep it going."

The Minutemen return to action on Friday as they compete at the University of Connecticut Husky Invitational. This two-day meet will be the final tune up for UMass before the A-10's which are held Feb. 15-17 in Buffalo, N.Y.

MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Joe Martin and the Massachusetts men's swimming team Ram-med Rhode Island last weekend for the conference victory.

Rage Against the Machine released their latest and final album Renegades. Check out the review.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Winston Smith and the UMass men's basketball team dropped a hard-fought game to Dayton last night at UD Arena to end a six-game win streak.

SPORTS p. 1

Volume CVII Issue 76 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, February 7, 2001

University closes as snow covers campus

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Snow blanketed the University of Massachusetts all day Monday and well into Tuesday inhibiting driving and forcing almost everything to be closed. Roads were icy, cars were blocked into parking spaces and snowball fights encompassed Monday night. When students woke up early Tuesday morning, they were welcomed with a day off from classes, and a very empty campus.

"I spent an hour digging out my car," said Jane Mitchom, a University student on exchange from France. "It's so inconvenient because you have to shovel," she explained. "At home you don't have to shovel so much."

Students saw many difficulties presented by the in climate weather. The most prominent difficulty was obviously the closing of the entire University.

"The campus is closed, and that's basically all I know," said UMass News Director Barbara Pitoniak. "I guess in this situation it was just twenty inches of wet snow." She said, to her knowledge, the preparations and procedures went off without incidence.

Pitoniak explained that, after being closed from around 2:30 p.m. on Monday, the announcement that it would be closed again on Tuesday was made around 5:00 a.m.

Pitoniak also assured that the missed classes would be replaced in an appropriate way. "I'm sure arrangements will be made for quizzes and exams," she said.

Pitoniak could not recall the last time the University was closed, but explained that it is very unusual that something like that occurs, especially for two days in a row. "It [a closed campus] happens very rarely," she said.

The University operates a twenty-four hour snow hotline for students to call if they want to find out whether the campus will or will not be open on each day of class. Pitoniak, who runs the snow hotline claims that it is the best place to get the information, but also said that people always call other places such as the news office.

Mikael Simnailed an Undergraduate Student from Bulgaria, who lives in the residence halls said he used the snow hotline to discover that classes were not being held today.

As always, safety became a prime concern during the emergency situation. Thankfully, no major injuries were reported as of yesterday.

"It's all pretty normal," said Bernette Melby, Director of UMass Health Services. "We always see injuries, but I don't believe we had a higher number today"

Melby said icy rain has caused some problems, but Health Services has not seen an unusual amount of people. "We always know that when there's snow, it's a great time to go sledding and snowboarding," she explained. "The injuries that we've seen today are similar to those on good skiing weekends. Just different kinds of lumps and bumps."

The early week's storm may be behind, but that certainly does not mean that winter is over. A possibility of more snow is in the forecast for Thursday afternoon.

COURTESY PHOTO

And the winner is...

Blair Morgan outlasted 16-year old Tucker Hibbert to take home gold in the Sno-cross event at the Winter X-Games held last weekend at Mount Snow, Vt. Read all about the games in sports.

Community service learning fair today; many opportunities for volunteering

By Jessica May
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Office of Community Service Learning at Commonwealth College will sponsor its Eighth Annual Community Service Fair today from 11:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Students will have the opportunity to meet with over 70 representatives from campus service organizations such as Circle K, fraternities, sororities and other RSOs as well as off campus agencies including BigBrother/BigSister, Amherst Survival Center and Nueva Esperanza. Service agencies are represented from as far east as Worcester, but mainly from the Amherst/Springfield/Northampton area specializing in fields concerning human services, the environment, law/advocacy, government and arts and culture pertaining to various volunteer and internship prospects.

"The goals for the Community Service Fair are to provide the entire campus community the opportunity to be involved in larger program, not just through community service, but through service learning," commented Maleah Thorpe, Major Events Coordinator, UMass Office of Community Service Learning at Commonwealth College.

Opportunities will be available for students to learn more about volunteering and placement opportunities related to community service learning courses they are enrolled in as well as information about post-college volunteer endeavors with such agencies as AmeriCorps and the Peace Corps.

Field Experience staff from the Campus Career Network will be on-site answering questions regarding internships.

The Community Service Fair also welcomes faculty interested in developing a community service learning component to a course to talk to representatives from the service agencies. University employees who would like to learn about services in volunteering provided by local agencies are encouraged to attend.

Community service learning is a way for students to become more involved in the community given more work experience through regular course work.

"It's a unique opportunity. It's a chance to talk to people coordinating different projects," Thorpe said.

Liquor stores busy despite snow

By Jessica May and Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

It was business as usual at local liquor stores yesterday, in spite of the drunken mayhem, which ensued during Monday's snowfall and the following day off.

"[Business] was down, but only because it was pretty treacherous" driving on Monday, said Rich Kellogg, owner of Big Guy Liquors in Amherst. "Actually, everyone seems laid up and enjoying the snow day off."

While business was the same at Liquors 44, the clientele was noticeable different, according to Eric, a Liquors 44 clerk.

"The elderly customers that tend to come [during the day] are down, but the students are up," Eric said, also noting that the alcohol superstore actually lost business on Monday but to being forced to close about an hour early.

As for the Spirit Haus, things were slightly more interesting. On condition of anonymity, a Haus employee admitted that business had risen drastically last night after three p.m., with several individuals calling to inquire as to which kegs where available. Exactly which kegs were available had not been revealed as of press time.

It was known that the alcoholic beverage of choice in all establishments was the old UMass favorite: beer. Big Guy Liquors stated that Busch Light was his best-selling product of the snow day, while Eric at Liquors 44 also said that beer was the beverage of choice.

If in fact University of Massachusetts students were consuming alcohol, they were careful and responsible.

"There were no known injuries or accidents related to alcohol," reported the Amherst Police Department.

The UMass Police Department was unavailable for comment at press time.

University Health Services also had the same news to report. There were not any patients treated last night due to alcohol consumption.

Despite early closings of area businesses, UMass students found many different way to keep themselves busy.

Brian Tice was quoted as saying that he spent last evening consuming a lot of alcohol.

Sophomore Kennedy resident Jay Fielding took last night's snow storm as a sign to participate in about a 200 person snowball fight in the Northeast Quad as well as playing football.

"I didn't do much of anything. I made valentines," said Van Meter resident Allegra Holland.

Sigma Alpha Mu member Jeff Sonas recaptured his youth by playing in the snow last night.

"I went to the DC and hung out there because it was so crappy out," said Freshman Mike Kaplan, who Monday night also took part in a snowball fight in Sylvan.

Many students took today's snow day as an opportunity to catch up on their favorite television shows as well as to do some homework.

Sam Wilkinson contributed to this article.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Ouch...

This UMass student was one of many who took advantage of the day off by sledding in the Orchard Hill/Central area yesterday afternoon.

Definition of on-campus non-residence hall situation remains

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Semantics can be a tricky thing, especially when it comes to Student Government Association elections. Starting last semester and, now, continuing this semester, a swirl of controversy surrounding the definition of "on-campus non-residence hall" students has erupted among members of the SGA.

On campus, non-residence hall is one of the three electoral districts used by the SGA to define the makeup of the Senate – the other two being "on campus-residential" and "off-campus or commuter." The problem, which became quite obvious last semester during the Senate trial and subsequent judicial ruling, is that seemingly only the SGA defines an "on campus, non-residence hall" area.

"I don't know who does [use that definition]," Dave Vaillancourt of Housing Services said. "You'd have to talk to a historian to find that out." Vaillancourt explained that his responsibilities extend only to residential housing and that he was unfamiliar with the exact definitions outlined in the SGA By-laws.

In a Dec. 6 ruling, Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez ruled last September's SGA elections and, as a result, the Senate, unconstitutional. The Judiciary's decision was based on a number of factors, including the misrepresentation of the above-named electoral districts. The defense, which consisted of Senate Speaker Jim Ethringham and TJ Roy, claimed that these districts had not been observed in even the most recent SGA elections, but that defense was to no avail.

In a memo dated Feb. 1 of this year and addressed to Ethringham, Registrar Elizabeth Pyle attempted to clarify these discrepancies. The memo was sent in response to Ethringham's Jan. 25 request for University population numbers. However, in the memo, Pyle outlines two potential problems with the SGA request.

First, the "official" University numbers have not yet been determined; therefore, the numbers, which were given to Ethringham and which will be used to determine Senate apportionment, are only estimates.

"This is a time of significant 'flux' in numbers," Pyle's memo stated. "You have told me that the SGA's need for numbers is immediate, and that you cannot wait until later in the semester when official and more stable numbers will be available. So, I am responding at this time by providing numbers that we must all see as an accurate reflection of the information in my possession at this time, but not as numbers the University would consider to be official statistics for the Spring 2001 semster."

Vaillancourt explained that any "definite" numbers would always be hard to nail down at any time, and that

Turn to SGA page 2

Due to the cancellation of classes yesterday, some articles appeared in the February 6 edition of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

SGA

continued from page 1

it was prudent for the University to wait to make residential counts.

"The official count isn't until the fifth week of the semester," he said.

"Any moment you run numbers, somebody is going to with draw, change rooms or any number of things," Pyle agreed. "There is so much flux this early in the semester that generally we like to wait."

The second problem brought up by Pyle's memo was the terminology defined in the SGA By-laws. The memo explained that some of the SGA category names are not consistent with University definitions. Therefore, the Registrar's Office was forced to make interpretations in light of past practices for SGA elections.

"One of the problems is that the SGA doesn't necessarily have a set definition for these categories," said Pyle. "In responding to that kind of request, they're calling for us to interpret these names."

Hurnphan elaborated on this statement, explaining that this matter has always been a gray area for the SGA.

"Whenever this particular By-law was written, whoever was doing it, didn't really check to see how the University defined residency," he said. "We define it with the caveat as 'defined by the University.'

The memo broke down the undergraduate populations as follows: 9913 on campus, residential students, 482 on campus, non-residential students and 6851 off-campus students. Those numbers translate into 28 senators from the off-campus area and two senators from the on-campus, non-residential area. The latter area, which includes fraternity and sorority houses, was lumped into the off-campus area for the September elections. Subsequently, 32 Greek members assumed most of the 34 Senate seats allotted to the off-campus area. Many believe that the Greek involvement in the SGA was one of the main reasons for contesting the elections.

Hurlingham did not anticipate any problems with the upcoming Senate elections, because he is taking extra precautions to document all the residential numbers, which he receives from the University. He did, however, express concern about the seeming absence of the Hillel House from the on campus, non-residential area and the number of senators allotted to that area.

"Having those [fraternities, sororities, students living in Lincoln apartments and presumably Hillel] together in three seats is not going to represent all those concerns," he said. "It's a little tricky and it calls into question our democratic ideals."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Putting the plows to work!

Plows had to be out in full force as more than 18 inches of snow fell on the UMass campus on Monday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. Became the College Agent in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1938. The Collegian has been published daily since 1960 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Broussard Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Maitres Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargunta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Attention Seniors
Want to be an Owner?
Consider a sales career with Berry Insurance.
- A professional designation.
- Full marketing and sales support.
- Comprehensive "one on one" training.
- Competitive Salary, bonus plan, and car allowance.

irakligerman@onceandone.com

ΣΦΕ
Come check out the most diverse non-hazing Fraternity on Campus
- Mon. Feb 5 - Indoor wiffle ball tournament
- Tues. Feb 6 - Games night with twister and 007
- Wed. Feb 7- Temptation Island night

Refreshments will be served all night so bring a friend!
Take either the Orchard Hill bus up to Yellow Lot or call Josh @ 549-9407 for info or rides.

WRITE FOR NEWS...
OR BE EXTERMINATED!!!

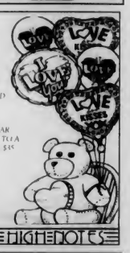
SEND YOUR VALENTINE A SPECIAL DELIVERY

SWEET TREAT BASKET: A CHAMPAGNE GLASS FULL OF M&M'S, A BOX OF HERSHEY'S KISSES, CHOCOLATE CHIP COOKIES AND A VALENTINE BEAR, ALL WRAPPED IN A BEAUTIFUL BASKET $35

TEDDY GRAM: IMAGINE THE FUN OF RECEIVING A TELEGRAM TEDDY BEAR WHEN YOU OPEN THE TOP. A MYLAR BALLOON TO ATTACH OUT. THE BALLOON IS ATTACHED TO A TEDDY BEAR WITH A CANDY BUCKET OF KISSES $45

COOKIE BOUQUET: ONE DOZEN LONG STEM CHOCOLATE CHIP COOKIES WRAPPED IN RED AND ORANGE FOIL & ROLLED $25

WE SHIP ANYWHERE IN THE US
ORDER BY 2/9/2001
1-800-494-3388



TIGHTKNOTS

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

A Passion for Jewish Studies
AT BOSTON'S HEBREW COLLEGE JEWISH STUDIES IS
Text STUDY is the heart of our curriculum — and a hallmark of our graduates. If you share our passion, find out how you can advance professionally or start a new career by calling 800-866-4814 or 617-278-4948.
HEBREW COLLEGE
מכללה העברית
43 HAWES STREET • BROOKLINE, MA 02446
www.hebrewcollege.edu • admissions@hebrewcollege.edu

Atlantis
Behind Antonios Pizza in Amherst
TUES. Drum & Bass w/ Dj Kid VICIOUS
WEDS. "B-Ski's Bins" Hip Hop, Funk & Soul
FREE Nachos 10-11 pm
THURS. Hip Hop w/Dj Double O.C.
FRI. "House On the Rocks" w/dj's Hush & Salty
SAT. Hip Hop w/Dj Trendz
"Ladies Night" - Ladies get in FREE
SUN. Salsa-No Cover
NO COVER $2 COVER AFTER 11pm

cover your butt.
better yet, help cover your [tuition].
College can mean maneuvering through a lot of different obstacles, but tuition payments shouldn't be one of them. In Army ROTC, you'll have a shot at a scholarship worth thousands. And make friends you can count on. Talk to an Army ROTC advisor today. We've got you covered.
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
Come and see what everyone is talking about!!
UMASS ARMY ROTC 545-2321

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT
(31 years of service -- and counting!)
A STUDENT/ COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT -- AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
YOU CAN EARN 1-2 CREDITS
Gain valuable experience
Rewarding, challenging, and FUN
Tues Feb. 6
Wed. Feb. 7
SPRING SEMESTER 2001
Recruitment Nights*
6:30 - 8:30 PM
(Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
•you must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you participated before
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 8th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer while earning credit

Cultural Events Calendar

SOCIAL EVENTS

UMASS – "Spring Festival," an annual cultural event and dance sponsored by the Vietnamese Student Association, will take place in the Campus Center Auditorium on Saturday, February 10. Cultural performances will be presented from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., followed by a dance from 9:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. Admission is free.

UMASS – "Carnival!" The English Speaking Caribbean Association presents this taste of Carnival as it is celebrated in the islands of the Caribbean. The event will take place in the Student Union Ballroom from 6:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturday, February 10. Tickets are $10 general public, $8 students.

FILM/VIDEO SCREENINGS

UMASS – "Live Nude Girls Unite!" This documentary follows a group of San Francisco sex workers and strippers who organized the first union in the United States to represent exotic dancers. It will be followed by a lecture and discussion with the filmmaker, Julia Query. The event will take place in Mahar Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, February 8. For more information, call the Everywoman's Center at (413) 586-3016.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Wedding in Galilee," filmed In Israel in Hebrew and Arabic (subtitled). This film about a traditional wedding in a Palestinian village won the 1987 Cannes Critics Award. It will be shown in Seelye 106 on Monday, February 12 at 7 p.m. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Born at Home: A documentary on indigenous childbirth practices and practitioners." This film documents traditional birth practices in India, and argues that modern institutions undermine the body knowledge of women served by indigenous midwives. A discussion will follow. The event will take place at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Tuesday, February 13 at 7:30 p.m. For more information, call (413) 538-2275. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Paying the Price: Killing the Children of Iraq." This documentary by award-winning journalist John Pilger will be followed by a discussion. The film will be shown at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Thursday, February 15 at 7:00 p.m. Admission is free

COMMUNITY

UMASS – The Community Service Fair is an opportunity for students, faculty, and staff to talk with representatives from over 60 social service and non-profit organizations from the area about community service learning, volunteering, internships, and independent study options. The fair will be held in the Student Union Ballroom from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Wednesday, February 7. For more information, call (413) 545-2015. Admission is free. Accessible.

UMASS – The ALANA Career Fair will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Tuesday, February 13. Students of all majors are invited to meet 60+ organizations offering internships, coops, and full-time jobs. For more information, call (413) 545-6252.

LECTURE/READING/DISCUSSION

SMITH COLLEGE – "Prelude to a Concert: Music from the Ashes." This symposium, which focuses on the music of Jewish musicians who were imprisoned in Theriesienstadt and eventually murdered, is part of the Anatomy of Exile project of the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute. Featured presenter Adrian Sunshine is music director of the London Chamber Players. The event will take place in the Alumnae House Living Room on Wednesday, February 7 at 8 p.m. For more information, call Rene Heawlow at (413) 585-4292. Admission is free.

HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Grassroots Organizing through a Nepali Perspective." Renu Sharma and Tara Upreti, organizers of the Women's Foundation of Nepal, will speak about how they initiate fundamental social change through women's community activism. The event will take place in Franklin Patterson Hall, Main Lecture Hall on Wednesday, February 7 at 7:30 p.m. Refreshments will be served. For more information, call (413) 559-5909.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Effecting Fundamental Social Change: Women's Community Activism in Nepal." Two officers of the Women's Foundation of Nepal, Renu Sharma (Secretary General) and Tara Upreti (President) will discuss why the foundation was started, its current programs and goals, and the importance and challenges of community-led development. The event is sponsored by the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute, and will take place at 4:30 p.m. in Seelye 106 on Thursday, February 8. For more information, call Rene Heaslow at (413) 585-4292.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Negotiating Gender in Aboriginal Australia." Claire Smith of Flinders University, South Australia (Archaeology) will speak at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Monday, February 12 at 4:30 p.m. For more information, call (413) 538-2275. Admission is free.

AMHERST – "Mystery Desserts." For mystery buffs and aspiring writers, the Friends of the Jones Library has planned an evening of crime and sweet things, featuring a panel of writers from the New England Chapter of Sisters in Crime as well as a dessert buffet. All four women are published authors who share the Sister's in Crime's goal of assisting aspiring and current female mystery authors. Seating is limited for this event, which will be held at Jones Library at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, February 15. To pre-register, call (413) 256-4090. Admission is free.

AMHERST – "Working with Young Dads: Experiences from the Field." A panel of young fathers has been invited to participate in this discussion facilitated by Mark Emerson, the director of the Holyoke Area Healthy Families Program at the MSPCC. The event will take place at Jones Library from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. on Thursday, February 15. To register and for more information, call (413) 253-9887, extension 20.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Gender in Post-Soviet HIV Prevention Mobilization: Challenges of the Living for Tomorrow Project." Jill Lewis of Hampshire College (Literature and Gender Studies) will speak at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Monday, February 19 at 4:30 p.m. For more information, call (413) 538-2275. Admission is free.

UMASS – "W.E.B. Du Bois and the Problem of the Twenty-first Century." David Levering Lewis, Pulitzer Prize-winning biographer of educator and civil rights pioneer Du Bois, will speak at on Friday, February 23 at 4 p.m. in Special Collections and Archives on the 25th floor of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. A 133rd birthday celebration for Du Bois will follow. For more information, contact Linda Seidman at (413) 545-2780.

CONFERENCE

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "A Life of Opposition: Prudence Crandall, Women's Minds, and Religious Choice in the 19th Century." This colloquium will examine the repercussions of white abolitionist Prudence Crandall's bold step of opening a high school for black women in Connecticut in 1833, as well as how her Quaker education and background, and later conversion to the Baptist faith, influenced her perspective. The event will take place at the Five College Women's Resource Center at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, February 20. Admission is free.

THEATER/DANCE

UMASS – "Brother Man." The Black Student Union presents this performance, which is comprised of various short comic sketches and monologues on contemporary and general black community issues. Performance will be by the Oversoul Theater Collective under the direction of Mwalim (Morgan James Peters), in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. on Friday, February 9. Tickets are $5 general public, $3 students.

UMASS – "The Vagina Monologues." Based on interviews with a diverse group of hundreds of women, "The Vagina Monologues" explores questions often pondered but seldom asked about the relationship between women and their vaginas. The performance will take place in Bowker Auditorium at 7 p.m. on February 14. Tickets go on sale February 1 by phone, and are available through the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

UMASS – "The Garth Fagan Dance Company" will perform "USAfrica" in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, February 15. For tickets, call the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

UMASS – "Mapapa African Acrobats," presented by Something Every Friday, will perform at 8 p.m. on Friday, February 16 in Bowker Auditorium. For more information, call (413) 545-1278. Admission is free.

UMASS – "Slanguage" is a production of the New World Theater Universes, an exciting ensemble of five multidisciplinary performers, fuses poetry, theater, jazz, hip-hop, politics, down home blues, and Spanish boleros to break the bounds of traditional theater. The performance will take place in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. on Thursday, February 22. For more information, call (413) 545-1972 For tickets, call the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

UMASS – One-act play information meeting and auditions at the Hillel House. Actors, tech, prop and costume creators needed for a one-act play to be staged this spring. Bring your talents to an information meeting at 7 p.m. on Thursday, February 8 at the Hillel House. Participate in auditions at 7 p.m. on Monday, February 12, and Tuesday, February 13. For more information, call the Hillel House (549-1710), or contact Leah Weiss at ldweiss@student.umass.edu

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – "The Center Series" presents Stephon Harris, vibraphone, in a performance to mark African-American History Month on Thursday, February 8 at 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. For tickets, call the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

SMITH COLLEGE – "A Touch of Class Featuring The Boys Choir of Harlem, Inc." This classical music event will kick off African-American History Month on Thursday, February 8 at 7 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall. Tickets are $15 general public, $5 seniors and Five College students. Admission is free for Smith College students. Tickets are available at B-Side Records, or at the Northampton Box Office (586-8686).

SMITH COLLEGE – "Ernst Wallfisch Memorial Concert: Music from the Ashes." This concert will feature Adrian Sunshine, music director of the London Chamber Players, and Ilori Wallfisch, professor of music emerita. The event will take place in Sweeney's Concert Hall in Sage Hall at 8 p.m. on Friday, February 9. For more information, call Rene Heaslow at (413) 585-4292. Admission is free.

NORTHAMPTON – "Ritmo y Candela/Rhythm and Fire." Fifteen Latino musicians will perform at the Academy of Music at 2 p.m. on Sunday, February 11. Tickets are $10 in advance (available at For the Record in Amherst) and $12 at the door.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – "Wally Cardona Quartet: Trance Technology." The Wally Cardona Quartet and a live DJ will unite ancient rites, modern technology, and rigorous structure in this performance. "Trance Technology" offers a window into the use of music and dance as a transcendent and spiritual experience for the 21st century. The significance of trance travels beyond both cultural and age barriers and has roots in many ancient religious ceremonies. The event will take place in the Main Dance Studio at 8 p.m. on Thursday, February 8. Tickets are $10 general public, $5 students. For more information, call the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – "DREAMING: Prophesies, Speculations, and Good Guesses" is part of a series of African-American History Month events. This group exhibition of works reflects a visionary gaze into the personal and social future of society. It will be shown at the Augusta Savage Gallery from February 12 to March 9, with an opening reception on Monday, February 12 from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. For more information, call (413) 545-5177.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Biblical Women." A reception and gallery talk will be held for this exhibit of story quilts by artist Lee Porter in the Alumnae House Gallery, from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Friday, February 23. Through March 3. For more information, call (413) 585-2043.

This calendar, which previews local events of interest to underrepresented groups on campus and in the community, runs on Wednesdays. Submit notices of events to Tanya Maitres, Diversity Editor. Standard entry forms are available in the Collegian office.

Redefine... success boundaries friendship
strength differences courage
Join us at U Mass for an information meeting and view the new Peace Corps film featuring volunteers in Ghana, Turkmenistan, Armenia and Nicaragua.

Thursday February 15th 7pm
Campus Center Room 903
or stop by our information table in the Campus Center all week
Feb 5-9 from 10 am - 2 pm
Redefine your world in the Peace Corps.
www.peacecorps.gov 1-800-424-8580.

SMOOTHE LEWIS
LIVE AT THE PUB!
10-1
Jammin' your favorite Rolling Stones, Greatful Dead and Phish covers along with their originals and more!
18 + welcome
THE PUB
21 + to drink

HAIR CUTS NOW $20 with KATE Wed. & Sat.
ERIC SCOT
79 South Pleasant Street
Amherst
413.256.3440
Experience the art of hair for less.

UMass Yoga & Meditation Club
presents the 'Art of Living' Workshop

February 9th-14th
* 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, and increased awareness
* Yoga, breathing, and meditation techniques in a fun atmosphere
* Brings the mind to the present moment and allows you to give your 100% to everything you do
* Held in over 100 countries- recognized by the United Nations and World Health Organization
Where: Rm ... Cafe, UMass
When: ... pm
★ FREE Class

you know that little voice inside that says "I can't"?
this summer,
[crush it].
Bring your "can-do" attitude to Camp Challenge. Where you'll get paid to learn how to become a leader and acquire skills that'll help you meet the challenges you'll face in your career. Apply today at the Army ROTC department, with no obligation. Before that voice tells you to take a vacation.
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
Scholarship, Credits, No-Military Obligations
UMASS ARMY ROTC @ (413) 545-2321

I LOVE THE COLLEGIAN!

Do YOU??? Send in letters to the editor and tell us what you think about what you read

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

An innocent snow
A holy experience

We were being looked out for two nights ago when a tremendous snowfall blanketed our fine University of Massachusetts. After six to ten inches were expected, two feet of the white fluffy flakes fell from the skies, preventing students from making it to classes and forcing the University administration to cancel classes.

How sweet it was.

Like sixth graders, everyone The Daily Collegian knew anxiously awaited some sort of announcement about classes.

Would they be delayed?

Would they be canceled?

Of course, while delay would be good, cancellation would be better, and no doubt there was a shimmering tension hovering over the UMass campus late Monday night into early Tuesday before the announcement was made. But when it was, there was a great cheer, or perhaps simply a sigh of nervous relief that for once, for one brief day, students were going to be allowed out of classes.

And it wasn't to protest anything. It wasn't because there was some sort of scare on campus. It wasn't because there had been some sort of disaster.

It was because the heavens willed it upon us, and it was a day for innocent mischief.

Whether students were sleeping or sipping, studying or sledding, yesterday's snow day was a trip back in our lives, a brief break from the hectic lives that we all no doubt lead.

There was a giant snowball fight in the Orchard Hill bowl that found its way down to Northeast. There were erotic snowmen and snowwomen built in Southwest. People were sledding in Central.

And everyone else was digging out, or simply lounging around in their pajamas at two in the afternoon, hoping that somebody was going to deliver food.

Yesterday was great, not necessarily because we got a day off of school, although that certainly didn't hurt, but because it gave everyone here the brief opportunity to be a kid again, to hope that classes would be cancelled and to celebrate when they were.

Quite frankly, The Daily Collegian was certainly shocked that the University gave its students this sort of opportunity – as near as we can tell, classes hadn't been canceled here in at least four years, since Clinton was in the White House, since the Patriots had been to the Super Bowl, since UMass went to the Final Four.

We're not going to offer thanks to the University administration because, after all, it was the right decision to make, but for all of the belly-aching and complaining, sometimes, on the rarest of rare occasions, the University makes a decision that is right.

This was one of those decisions, a time that whomever it is that makes these decisions made a good one, a right one, a justified one. There are plenty of reasons to be angry and upset, afraid and enraged, but yesterday was a great day for relaxing with friends, being a kid again or sleeping the day away.

Here's hoping you had a good one and here's hoping we have another one soon.

The political Dukes of Amherst

SAM WILKINSON

Not being an Amherst native, I was unfamiliar with their quaint custom of having a Select Board, a body that smells suspiciously like a City Council, except without the mayor. There's a fellow about who's attempting to get a mayor into the town, but will likely fail because the old guard that protects the holy Amherst castle across the street from Newbury Comics will never allow it to happen.

Of course, that isn't the only sin of the Select Board, a body that is, as they say in clever New Englander speak, "wicked" against our fair students here at the University of Massachusetts. Among the fun fun fun proposals by the Amherst Select Board, other than their opposition to our students parking in what they like to call their town, was one in which the Southwest voting booth was removed.

Well, it wasn't quite that malicious – they just didn't set aside enough money to put a brand spanking new voting machine in Southwest.

I tried to call the town to get some confirmation, and while the Town Manager wasn't in, and while the Select Board lady, who was sort of polite, claimed to have no idea about this, the equally guarded woman at the Town Clerk's office shunted me on the phone and wouldn't take a message. My singular thought on this was that our quaint little town was giving me the run-around-shaft. I finally reached the Town Clerk who told me that Amherst wasn't trying to prevent students from voting in their elections, it was just that UMass had to buy our own voting machines. Of course, the Bangs Community Center didn't have to buy it's own machine and neither did any other precinct for that matter. Except for UMass.

But they weren't trying to prevent the student vote.

While UMass students seem to be like some foul cancer to the leadership of Amherst, those sweeties over at Amherst College are like town darlings. Why, I don't know and cannot possibly begin to fathom. Oh wait, sure I can: they attend a school that brings prestige to the town, while we attend a school that brings nothing more than a torrential flood of students into an area that should be prestigious. Hadley got Mt. Holyoke, Northampton got Smith, the middle-of-the-sticks boonies got Hampshire, and Amherst got Amherst...and UMass. It is almost as if they are bitter about it.

Wait, they are bitter about it. That's why they're constantly doing their best to take it out on our students. That keg law, the one where you can't have a keg in Amherst town limits – who is that aimed at? It might be those wild, wily, slippery, scaly snakes over at the College, but c'mon. If UMass is known for one thing, with apologies to the excellent faculty and staff at the college, as well as everyone who works towards a more diverse world, it's throwing wicked good keg parties. Hell, our News Editor had a killer one last weekend.

Officer Zahn over at the Amherst Police Department helpfully explained the policy to me when I called, and it really isn't the APD that's the problem, it's the Select Board that created the following, shall we say, suspect policy. Suppose you, my good reader, want to throw the aforementioned wicked kegger and you live within Amherst. You better get a permit from the APD cause our local Rocco P. Coltrane might show up if you don't and if your kegs aren't registered, first time offenders pay fifty bucks a barrel. Second timers watch it doubled, third timers watch it tripled, so on, so forth. Course, if you register a keg, I think the police will probably end up watching your place a little more carefully. After all, they know there's going to be beer there, and they know that nobody ever really cards at a party.

But it isn't the barrel parties or the silliest of silly regulations that are the problems, it's the Select Board. While led by Hill Boss Hog, they're the people who passed these anti-student measures, they're the ones who constantly oppose UMass, and they're the ones who haven't let Anne Awad do much of a damned thing since she won her election last year, beating none other than the Big Bossman. She denies that she's being blackballed, but her supporters claim otherwise and a number of 4-1 votes suggests that a student's politician is in a clear minority on the Select Board. Who helped her win that election, I wonder?

Could have been concerned elderly residents.

Could have been angered Suhway workers.

Could have been frustrated Amherst College professors.

Nope. It was none other than a cadre of UMass students who showed up in none other than Southwest to vote! What a strange coincidence that it is now that voting station that is up in the air. Sure, they could have challenged the Bangs Community Center voting station, perhaps the most suggestively named voting station ever, but no, they just happened to choose the voting station on the UMass campus.

Let's be honest – for the good people at the Amherst Select Board, UMass being here is enough, too much almost, for them to handle. The last thing they want us to do is vote in their elections, and hence, the end of the voting booth. Anne Awad hasn't been able to do a damned thing since her election, there are still three and half anti-UMass stalwarts (Carl Seppla's up in the air). According to one campus politician, one of the people on the board can be nice. A suspect situation for sure.

What's to be done? Our situation currently is that we live in a town that doesn't understand that we, not anybody else, are the backbone of the local economy. We make Judie's run, we keep Mystery Train in business, and we make Amherst thrive in an area that is just so financially depressed. Unfortunately, the local governmental establishment doesn't seem able to acknowledge that, never mind our right to have a voice in their local politics. So here's the only option – while they're trying to get rid of our voting booth, our students must flex their voteric muscles in upcoming elections, hopefully putting student-friendly individuals on the Select Board.

Sounds like a cheesy cry, and maybe it's a hunka hunka gorgonzola, but in the face of a local politic that wants to rid our students of the right to participate, nay, swing their elections, maybe gouda's the way to go.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PREJ
www.monkey-box.net
CRITICS THOUGHT SHE WAS PAST HER PRIME, BUT, ONCE AGAIN, 22-YEAR OLD KRISTEN PROVED THAT SHE WAS THE HIDE-AND-GO-SEEK CHAMPION OF THE WORLD.
© 2001

DO YOU HAVE SOMETHING TO SAY???
WRITE FOR ED/OP!
WE NEED MORE WRITERS!

Win a date with some boring girls

BRYAN MCALLISTER

I was reading the Collegian before class last week, and, on the back page, there was an ad for MassLive.com featuring the famous "Web Cam Girls." I love MassLive.com – it seems like a cool place to work, and they gave me a free laundry bag last semester. I'm not sure about this so-called "Antonio's camera" that they have (who wants to watch people eat pizza?), but the "Web Cam Girls" is clearly the greatest idea since the "Save Our Beer" rally in my freshman year. Or the hiring of Chancellor Scott or "Distance Learning" or President Bush getting elected, or the design of the Fine Arts Center or "Country-fried chicken" at the DX or long, windy, annoying sentences.

The list goes on and on. I admit – and you know you did it too – I checked out the web site early last semester when I was basking in my new-laundry-bag glory.

And it sucked.

Not that this wasn't obvious from looking at the ads, but we were all still a little disappointed for one reason: No nudity.

This is the essential ingredient of any successful voyeur website. I mean, what was MassLive.com thinking? Do people really want to log on to the site and see if Laura completed her math homework? To see if Deanna talked to the cute boy before class? To see if Ruth can make spaghetti? No offense to these nice girls, but we hear enough about everyday drama from our friends. We're all little personal therapists and listeners. We don't want anymore.

All we want is...exploitation!

MassLive.com knows this, and has done a very good job lately with advertising the hinting and the teasing. Their new ads claim that these girls "confess all!" and that everything is "uncensored." Right. Does it matter? The camera is set up in the girls' living room, and when I was bored one day and checked it out last semester, its plain and clear that pretty much, the only things you see are Ruth, Deanna, and Laura hanging out, watching TV or eating breakfast. That's entertainment! Laura eats Cheerios? So many secrets!

In the Collegian last week, there was an ad for sending emails to the Web Cam girls. You can send emails to them, and they'll read them all, and select the best email. And you can win prizes, something for Valentines Day for you and your "date."

First of all, anyone who's sending emails to the Web Cam girls probably doesn't have a date.

Second of all, can you imagine what these emails will be like? Luckily, the Web Cam girls decided to share some of the emails with me, and here they are, reproduced with incredible accuracy. Or I just made them up.

Dear Web Cam Girls,

Hi. You are so cute in your pictures. Especially Laura who I think looks a little bit like Jennifer Aniston combined with Courtney Cox. Except the old Courtney Cox, from "Family Ties," with a little bit of Jennifer Lopez thrown in and even some Cameron Diaz. Laura - would you ever go out on a date with me? I like long walks, beaches, cuddling, and the Blue Wall. I'm a chemistry major but I think chemistry isn't just about chemicals – if you know what I mean.

Email my heart,

Steven

Dear Web Cam Girls,

I like your site. I've been looking at your apartment, and trying to figure out what apartment complex you live in. Is it the Townhouses? The carpet kind of looks like The Boulders. I live there. Maybe we could take out the trash sometime together, or pay our rent in groups. Maybe you live in Colonial Village? I don't think it's Puffton because it looks too big for Puffton. But maybe the Townhouses. I've never been there. Maybe Alpine Commons? Let me know...this guessing game is fun!

Love,

Harold

Dear Web Cam Girls,

Yo...how come u never have slumber partys in ur pad? Do u ever have the urge to invite a lot of girls over, and talk about &*(#% in your underwear? Maybe throw some pillows around and get kind of wild? I've heard this arc what REALLY goes on. I'm an HRTA major. I live in Southwest, I bench press 250 and I'm tall dark, handsome. U probably know me already from the gym. I'm that guy you always want to talk to, but then you think I'm too good for you. Yo that's not true.

Yours babys,

Stefano

Dear Web Cam Girls,

Hi. My name is Albert. I live in Sylvan. There's not really much to do here, so I check your site a lot. Actually, I check it probably every 5 minutes to see what you guys are doing. Today, when Deanna told Laura she was a bitch, I cried. That was so dramatic. Is Laura okay? Sometimes I invite my friend Petey over and we cheer and eat popcorn and watch you guys watch TV. I can't believe you like "Will and Grace" too! Maybe we're soulmates – me, you guys, and Petey.

Bye,

Albert

P.S. Petey says he'll be at the Holyoke Mall at 7 if you guys want to shop at J.C. Penney with him.

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian columnist.

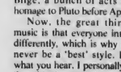
Super Bowl kills rock

In a century or so, music historians will look back on January 28th, 2001, as the final nail in the coffin of Rock and Roll. From now on, as 'artists' (if they can even be called that) and groups keep looking better and better, their music will sound worse and worse.

I am of course referring to the Super Bowl halftime show, which turned out to be even lamer than the actual game. If Aerosmith had not made an appearance, the stage would have been populated by, with the possible exception of Mary J. Blige, a bunch of acts who pay homage to Pluto before Apollo.

Now, the great thing about music is that everyone interprets it differently, which is why there can never be a 'best' style. It's all in what you hear. I personally hear the 'kaa-ching' sound of a cash register whenever I'm put in the unenviable position of being forced to stomach N'Sync or Britney Spears.



SIMON PONGRATZ

The fact that Aerosmith played at all is rather disturbing. I have liked them for a very long time, but ever since they manufactured "Don't Wanna Miss a Thing" for that movie I won't watch, I've begun to find their stuff rather aggravating. Despite their recent devolution to sappy, commercial pop, Aerosmith still ranks among the greats of Rock and Roll. Who could ever doubt the genius of "Big Ten Inch....Record?"

I hesitate to use the cliché 'sell-out,' because I don't really know what that means. I only know that everyone started saying that about Phish a couple years ago, though I always liked them and probably always will. But I thought that when bands got together to play, they did so out of mutual respect for one another. Can Aerosmith, the guardians, the torch bearers, the embodiment of everything raw and nasty (read: great) about Rock and Roll, really respect Britney? After the performance Sunday, if they ever did, they probably don't anymore.

Not that the songs that dominate the airwaves today sound bad. In fact, they continue to sound better and better, at least the studio recordings. But in refining their sound to such an extent, all the character gets sucked out, which is why Miles Davis would never do more than one take of a song. Screw the mistakes...they give the song soul. Ah yes, soul, the one thing missing from the glamorous, refined sounds of today's lucrative plastic bands.

One scene from the concert reminded me of last summer's Allman Brother's Band show. I've been to five or six shows, all at Great Woods (I still refuse to call it the Tweeter Center), but I'll probably never go again. I really felt uncomfortable there, surrounded by teeny-boppers who looked like they should have been at the Super Bowl halftime show, all with glowsticks in their mouths. I felt as though I was at a rave, but for the blues emanating from the stage. I really felt old and out of touch, as did all of my friends. It had never been like that before...I mean, I would expect that crowd at a Dave show, or Barenaked Ladies, but the Allman's? It was an epiphany.

The glowsticks were also prominent at the Super Bowl, and maybe they were all the same people at the Allman Brother's show...but for them I have advice – stick to Britney and Nsttink (thanks Tom). At least leave something sacred.

There, my ranting is done. To say that I don't follow football is an understatement, because I didn't even know which two teams were playing until Saturday (yes, the day before). But Super Bowl Sunday is a day like no other, and while I enjoy the beer and chips as much as any die hard football fan, certain things about the Super Bowl ceremony I found strange and even disturbing.

Sitting on the couch at 655 Main, I watched President Bush II address the nation, saying something about 'loving your neighbor.' I think he's done pretty well so far, except for nominating the unpalatable John Ashcroft for consigliere...I mean, um, Attorney General. But it was very funny to see him on the spot, speaking in jumbled sentences and not saying anything meaningful. Teleprompter, anyone?

By the way, when did Super Bowl Sunday become national pride day? What was with that B2 Spirit flying over the stadium, followed by the Thunderbirds (or was it the Blue Angels)? I don't know what kind of message they were trying to send, but to have a day like Super Bowl Sunday represented by a stealth aircraft that delivers tactical nuclear weapons seems to be an oxymoron. At certain points during the opening 'ceremony,' I began to feel like I was watching a Veterans Day parade. I have no problem with honoring those who fought in the Gulf War or any war for that matter, but the overall message seemed to be one of blatant militarism. As Gibbon notes in "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," an empire's ceremonies get more and more elaborate as the state itself declines. Ave, Caesar.

Everything being as it is, I guess it was the perfect game for this election year. Boring, meaningless and in the end, unsatisfying. The game even seemed to play out just like the election (minus the recount, of course). At least in the Super Bowl, there was a clear winner. It would have been a real trip if the score had been something like 28-24: Giants by a touchdown, which was later declared invalid, making the Ravens the winners.

But absent that kind of irony, we should all begin to get used to lame, pointless wastes of time like Superbowl XXXV, because I think we're in for a strange four years. And as Dr. Hunter S. Thompson says, "get familiar with cannibalism."

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the Editor
Liberals not the enemy

This past Friday, while I sat in the Graduate Lounge drinking tea and reading the daily edition of the Collegian I found myself fired up by the editorial, "Letting the liberals set sail", by George Thomas. I wasn't so concerned about the suggestion to place Alec Baldwin on a boat or a plane and send him out of the country, because that in itself would be no great loss. What did set my mind racing was the misperception that was expressed regarding President Bush's executive order to cut funding to international family-planning services. This executive order isn't such a travesty because somehow it "is an extreme act that will bring a quick end to abortion rights in America". It is a travesty because it denies women across the globe, whom often live in impoverished and oppressed communities, the right to gynecological care, education, and an opportunity for empowerment.

In a report by the United Nations Population Fund, if women had the power to make decisions about sexual activity and its consequences 80 million unwanted pregnancies, 20 million unsafe abortions, 500,000 maternal deaths, and 333 million sexually transmitted infections could be prevented. There are in countries where the population is exploding draining already limited resources. Overcrowding in cities is causing the emergence of new and deadly diseases, in addition to proliferating the spread of HIV. Ninety-five percent of HIV infected persons live in lesser-developed counties, many of these being women in their childbearing years. Furthermore, it has been estimated that the group of young women entering childbearing years will be the greatest ever, while there will be over three billion individuals under the age of 25.

What does this all have to do with George W.'s executive order you ask? His decision cuts right at the heart of efforts to empower women to take charge of their own bi fies and sexuality in places of the world where women can not write a response to an article such as this because of a lack of education or fear of violence. In parts of the world where it is believe that the cure for AIDS is to have sex with a virgin. In parts of the world where young girls are kidnapped and sold into prostitution. In parts of the world where women's genitals are mutilated. Unfortunately, the list goes on.

This decision goes far beyond my fear of Roe vs. Wade being overturned. It is a decision that will accomplish immeasurable damage to women and men everywhere. It is yet again another example of why religion does not belong in politics, and why politics needs to better understand humanity.

The most ironic part of George W.'s decision is that tax money hasn't paid for an overseas abortion since 1973. So I say, in my humble opinion, "let the liberals set sail!!", because at least they haven't missed the boat.

Danielle Bachand
Graduate Student

The wild beast was taken to the propor authorities who pet it a lot and named it Fluffy.

Ryan Benharris' column would have appeared in this space... but he wandered lost into the Mullins Center Yellow Lot during the storm and was eaten by a wolf. He will be missed.

The UMass Daily Collegian is hiring!

We are always looking for talented writers, photographers and editors. Come down to the Collegian and speak to :

Dave Tirpack the ARTS EDITOR....
if you are interested in writing movie, music, theatre or gallery reviews

Rob Schulze the ED/OP EDITOR... if you want to write (you guessed it) an ed/op column

Adam [illegible] the NEWS EDITOR...

Bryan Smith the SPORTS EDITOR... if you want to cover UMass sports

Maureen Maske the PHOTO EDITOR... if you are interested in taking photos for news, arts [illegible]

Tanya Mannes the DIVERSITY EDITOR... if you are interested in joining our new diversity [illegible]

Sam Wilkinson the MANAGING EDITOR
if you are interested in anything, and he'll point you in the right direction

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING

Arts Editor •
David Goupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Fool for Love Seduces

By Danielle Saltrese
Collegian Correspondent

Even with such an immaterial set, a singular wall (which signifies more), the bare furnishings of a lone twin bed, a side night stand, and one modest cocktail table, too spare to enclose, Sam Shepard's Fool for Love still confines the audience to a damp, tightly quartered room; a room teeming with sultry glances, ambiguous insults, and an irredeemable past.

Eddie, played by Chamaio Cheyenne-Rindge, has returned to May, played by Beth Cartier, after an absence that makes it apparent that a "third party" is involved. Frustrated with Eddie's recurrent impulse to flee, May struggles to liberate herself. However, she also has to sort out a "connection" they share in a more restrictive sense, one with paralyzing potential. The bond they share is interwoven between sharp sexual resonance and a painful experience linked between them.

What is it that takes Eddie away? There are notices of other women. However, they seem rather like an occupation than a lure. There is something else. Mr. Shepard created an account of their past, in which neither one is responsible, and one that carries a loaded punch every time they glimpse at one another. It's a metaphor of the forbidden fruit, this oscillation between desire and its consequences. If they remain together, they are, quite literally, a constant reminder of their Father's trespasses, which has become their pain.

Ms. Cartier shows us May's convictions. Eddie immobilizes her so she must crawl. Her parted legs and bent head illuminate her hopelessness. We know how strong she has to grow to fight Eddie. But Ms. Cartier never quite makes herself vulnerable enough to let us feel what that is like. Given, Fool for Love embraces a violent, antagonizing pace, one meant to strain the faith of love to provide. Yet the beauty of Mr. Shepard's orchestration is found in the stark contrast between those dark dismal instances and the ones when soft lips reach the lids of closed eyes. There are glimpses of a fiery engagement in Ms. Cartier's eyes but, often, gesture and voice muffle these contrary emotions. We have to feel that bit of tenderness that keeps bringing Eddie back. Even with her voluptuous backside summoning Eddie, she fails to fully seduce.

When Chamaio Cheyenne-Rindge's upper lip cocks a snarl with a half-shy smile in the likeness of 'The King' it's telling of other southern rebellious nuances he's grasped. Like an intemperate boyishness entertained with fancy trick roping that's immediately sedated by the soft curve a woman's neck. And akin to the romantic vision of a lost cowboy, with the exception of a few bumbling moments, Mr. Cheyenne-Ridge exacts a scorching temper that sometimes gets misplaced, as Eddie is prone to do.

Humorous relief is scattered throughout. As one of these amusing asides, Bradford Landry gives a well-mannered performance of Martin, a sincere small town character who lends an ear to Eddie and May's story. Although by the end of his performance, he appeared miraculously cured of a stutter. As a third eye and participant is the Old Man played by Jeffrey Bergman. He's part of the secret welding Eddie and May together but the character seems to suffer from False Memory Syndrome. (See the play and you'll know what I'm talking about.)

"You're gonna erase me," is one of the fearful accusations May hurls at Eddie. But for anyone who's ever been in love the threat is genuine. Effacing the connection throws doubt on the experience already recorded. It's counter-intuitive. But that's part of why Eddie just can't let go. He'd not only erase May, he'd also erase himself.

Three new albums expand age of electronic-style experimentation

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

JUNO REACTOR
Shango
Metropolis

RED SNAPPER
Our Aim Is To Satisfy Red Snapper
Warp/Matador

BRASSY
Got it Made
Wiiija/the Beggars Group

COURTESY OF EVA VERMANDEL

Brassy fuses rock and electronic on new album

When electronic music artists step into the studio and see the expansive panel of buttons, knobs, levers, and flashing lights in front of them, everyone surveys the territory differently. Fatboy Slim or Daft Punk sees the panel and their eyes widen; like a kid in a candy store they can't wait to start making sounds and bouncing around, hoping each track put down is more fun than the last. Trent Reznor or Hednoite sees the panel and see a cathartic outlet; they can't wait to release their tortured souls through the music and hope the final work provides an accurate picture of things that can't be expressed solely through words.

Juno Reactor (now solely Ben Watkins) sees the panel and sees the whole world. Combining everything from Latin-tinged guitars to African percussion to old-fashioned soul in his latest release Shango, Watkins has embedded a rewardingly expansive sound into his already strong techno roots. Shango has wide eyes for the future, but is very aware of all it can't leave behind. "Pitoloko" starts the album with a bang (hat), incorporating the excellent guitar work from Steve Stevens into the fastest and most propulsive beats on the record. The song starts with a vocal sample ("I hate robbing banks!"), and the adrenaline-pumping energy of the song combined with the climate-setting samples of gunshots and explosions would make the track a brilliant score for any stylish bank robbery on film.

Straightforward dance-techno is not forgotten amongst the experimentation, but it's not particularly compelling. "Insects" is serviceable while "Nitrogen (Part One)" and "Nitrogen (Part Two)" are accessible with an industrial flair (Part One being the better of the two), and can be looked at as the play-it-safe section of an album trying to branch out and beyond established styles. The greatest treasures, however, lie in the experimental material. "Masters of the Universe" features trancey, bluesy female vocals that give way to speedy percussion and danceable beats. "Hulefam" begins with what sounds like African tribal drumming and chants, and Watkins adds electronic riffs that may not gel into a cohesive picture, but sounds great. Some may find themselves lost in atmospheric tracks like "Song for Ancestors" and "Solaris," or uncomfortable with the demonic sounding murmurs on "Badmo," but they really help create a mood for the record, and Shango certainly feels like a complete, and refined work rather than a collection of songs. With this album Watkins has taken his style in a bold and worthy direction, and by augmenting his previous sound rather than canning it he's taken it to a vital and exciting new level.

Red Snapper sees the panel and sees a popularity contest. The title of their most recent record is a good indication; Our Aim Is To Satisfy Red Snapper is (with close competition from Brassy) the most self-consciously cool album of the bunch. A chic, abstract mix of glossy electronica (or supposedly acid jazz) with occasional female vocals, and hip packaging with photos of city lights and city streets with all kinds of weird graphical inserts. It almost makes me want to break out my silk smoking jacket and ascot, order a vodka on the rocks and wear sunglasses indoors. Thankfully, Red Snapper's sounds are usually as cool as they would like to have you believe.

The opening cut, "Keeping Pigs Together," is the kind of sleek tune that makes you feel like you're on the cover of the album, cruising the streets at night, all full of yourself. A wicked drum loop carries the most weight, while the atmospherics coast by smooth and easy. The album has trouble reaching that level of consistency again, but that's no problem. "Some Kind of Kink" has a sneaky, funky guitar riff that, like the blue vocals on "The Rough and The Quick," doesn't hold up well, but a little instant gratification spread out throughout the tracks doesn't hurt. Sure, a track or two may float by without really grabbing you, but the best moments here are the subtle, building ones. "Alaska Street" has what sounds like a church bell, taking you to an icy and serene place before cranking out a full-on house anthem. While the beats pound, though, the sound of the church bell returns, sounding honest and emotional. Our Aim Is To Satisfy Red Snapper aims to hide the sentimental behind a mask of cool, but when Red Snapper really lets their feelings shine through I'll be truly satisfied.

Brassy sees the panel and is like a kid in need of Ritalin opening up a toy chest. Frantically sampling and discarding toy after toy, Brassy doesn't like to stick with a sound too long; they're always looking for the next fix. This keeps every song on Got It Made under four minutes and the flow moving faster than a music video, with all of the confidence. "Nothing can compete with the B-R-A-double S-Y beat!"

Thankfully, it's not phony confidence, as the playfulness of Got It Made doesn't hide behind the beats, it recruits them and uses them to the fullest. It also helps to have a bubbly singer whose pep takes the music head on, and the energy of vocalist/guitarist Muffin Spencer is backed by an excellent live band consisting of bassist/vocalist Karen Frost, guitarist Stefan Gordon, and DJ Swett (a.k.a. Jonny Barrington) on the drums and decks. It's hard to figure out what Muffin is saying or talking about much of the time, but it doesn't take long to figure out that the music does the talking here. The jungle beats of "You Got It," inventively augmented by guitars, are among the most propulsive on the record, although some rocking breakdowns, like on "No Competition" and "Work It Out," are in the running, and have you wondering how an electronic release can pack so much punch so quick. The feel of Got It Made may seem cold and uninviting at times, but this is a group with no identity crisis: they want to rock and that in itself makes them very endearing.

All three artists use the panel very differently to reach the same goal. Juno Reactor makes the panel a bridge to world styles, Red Snapper's professional sounds sometimes show a hint of emotion gleaming the edge of the panel, and Brassy uses the panel as a background in front of which they strike a rock star pose. In every case, though, these are no coattail riders, they are using the panel in new and exciting ways that make them worthy wielders of one of music's most controversial and exciting tools.

Pat McGee Band gives yet another stellar show at Pearl St. Nightclub

By Justin Cormier
Collegian Correspondent

COURTESY OF RON HOLTZ

The Pat McGee Band rocks at Pearl Street

This past Thursday, the Pearl St. Nightclub hosted an evening of great rock music, as the Pat McGee Band graced the stage and gave a solid performance. The Virginia band has become a favorite in the area due to their great live show and frequent stops in Northampton while on tour.

The show was opened up by the Hartford-based Rane, playing songs that they "wrote all by themselves without any help." The group showed a good deal of talent, with their standard rock guitar/bass/drum backed up with the unique sound of their percussionist's xylophone. Nicely placed backing vocals from their head-nodding bassist and an excellent extended instrumental closer made Rane's set well worth showing up early.

After a short break, Pat McGee and company took the stage to a deafening roar of applause. Immediately apparent was the absence of Al Walsh, the singer/acoustic guitar player who recently left the band to dedicate himself to his family and solo career. This was only the third performance without Al, and the band was noticeably unused to playing without his mandolin and banjo parts, as well as the lack of three-part melodies that was one of the band's trademarks.

The set consisted of a good mix of old and new tunes, as well as a handful rarely played gems. "Identity" opened, with Pat immediately throwing down electric guitar parts, instantly removing any doubt that he is a gifted soloist. The upbeat "Girl From Athens" followed to get the crowd moving, and continued with the poppy "Anybody," which was originally planned to be the band's second single. After the slow "Nobody Knows," the boys cranked it up again with "Who Stole Her From Heaven," which was played with Pat's silver Fender rather than the usual acoustic, giving it much more energy and bite. A conga drum solo from the band's percussionist Charly McEwan also spiced up the song and received a hefty dose of loud positive feedback.

In between songs, Pat chatted with the crowd about the recent happenings with the band. He asked the college aged audience if they had seen the band the preceding Monday on the "Late Late show with Craig Kilbourn," and also told the story of playing for former President Clinton in January at a farewell party for the White House staff in Washington. And as per usual, he politely asked the packed house to support the band's latest album, Shine, and to petition radio stations to play the band's current single, "Rebecca."

After a few more solid songs, the band pulled out the classic "Can't Miss What You Never Had," which featured Pat at his quick-fingered best. The blistering guitar solo, given texture by keys man Jonathon Williams on the Hammond organ, left the crowd in awe and ready for more. Following a few all-acoustic tunes, the band finished strong, with the powerful "On Your Way Out of Here," which displays Williams' amazing voice dodging in and out of McGee's lead vocals to produce an amazing duet style chorus. "Rebecca," far and away the band's most popular song due to it's catchy sound and excellent acoustic picking, led into the fast, happy, electric-led "Hero" to end the set.

Urged to return by the unending screaming and cheering of the Northampton crowd, the band thanked everyone for coming and for all of their support. The crazy response from the audience showed how effective the band's hard work has been over the years, playing 200-plus shows a year and returning to venues like Pearl St. every three to five months to bring their fans the music which they love to play. Launching into a rendition of the Rolling Stones' "Sympathy for the Devil," their encore brought down the house, and clearly they had fun doing it.

The Pat McGee Band has built themselves an amazing grassroots following since the lead singer gathered the group of talented musicians in 1996. Their near nonstop touring schedule and energetic live show has propelled them to major label status and will carry them far in the future. Check out their Giant/Warner Bros. debut, Shine, and be sure to catch the show next time they make their way to Pearl St.

Renegades lacks usual Rage edge

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

RAGE AGAINST THE MACHINE
Renegades
Epic

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

Rage Against the Machine released a new album recently.

The band broke up on a bad note, with an arrest after an MTV awards show and a final blowout between Tom Morello and Zach de la Rocha, and while both incidents might have been memorable, the same doesn't apply for their last album, Renegades.

They've established themselves as a hyper-political rock band in a music world that is rabidly devoid of other such groups, so an album of covers, especially ones that seem to lack any heart, any confidence, any qualities at all just doesn't fit with what the band does. Perhaps they've double bound themselves, always wanting to do the unconventional, but then by doing something so conventional, they've lost their ability to create something truly intriguing.

And perhaps that's the real failure here: Renegades just isn't all that interesting.

Sure, the cover of Afrika Bambaataa's "Renegades of Funk" is an interesting song, driving by its very nature in that typical, tired RATM sort of way, what with de la Rocha screaming and Morello pounding on the guitar, but "Bulls on Parade" was better as far as singles go. Covers of esoterica, well, that isn't so bad necessarily, but it really isn't all that good.

As such, there's a Devo cover, "Beautiful World" which is suspiciously slow, as if the band had ingested depressant after depressant until they were just incapable of doing their usual thing. And while that's a good thing, there's a cover of Bob Dylan's "Maggie's Farm" as if somehow that Minnesota crooner hadn't done enough with that song that RATM could possibly add something.

Not true.

The RATM cover is devoid of the necessary emotion, the necessary feeling that the solitary figure of Dylan brought to such a lonely song. Arrogance? Neah, this album serves as a way for RATM to give the proverbial big-ups to some of their favorites, but a cover of the Springsteen's "Ghost of Tom Joad"? Not only is that esoteric by its very nature, but perhaps a song from one of Springsteen's least regarded albums. And the cover isn't all that good. Neither Is the "Kick Out The Jams" cover, nor the "Microphone Fiend" nor the "I'm Housin" one. The Rolling Stones "Street Fighting Man" doesn't need to be covered.

In fact, none of the covers is particularly good. And while the live cover of "How I Could Just Kill a Man" with Cypress Hill is interesting enough (who knew B. Real could scream along with music rather than just being high out of his skull?), it certainly doesn't really do anything more than sound like Zach inviting someone on stage to scream with him.

That's the problem with the Renegades: RATM is incapable of adding anything to an already solid collection of songs. Rage Against the Machine makes these songs just as solid in their extremely typical way, with a hardened Tom Morello grinding away while Zach screams his blurred sort of scream. One can easily get that on any of the band's collections of original music and as such, this album really isn't worth the time or money.

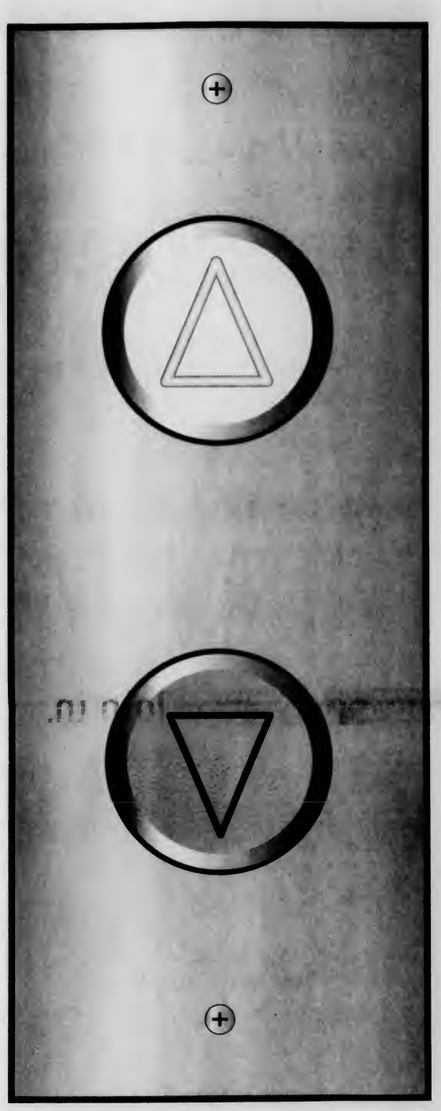
ELEMENTARY CHILDREN IN LOW-INCOME AREAS ARE READING THREE GRADES BEHIND THEIR SUBURBAN PEERS.

LIZ DWYER'S THIRD GRADERS BEGAN THE YEAR THAT FAR BEHIND. IN ONE YEAR, SHE'S CAUGHT THEM UP AND PUT THEM ON A LEVEL PLAYING FIELD.

WE NEED MORE LIZ DWYERS.

INFORMATION SESSION
Wednesday, February 14, 2001 • 4:00 p.m.
University of Massachusetts
Room 201 Machmer

TEACHFORAMERICA
1-800-TFA-1230 WWW.TEACHFORAMERICA.ORG
SECOND APPLICATION DEADLINE IS FEBRUARY 26, 2001



Going up.

As you begin your ascent to the top, remember, it's what you learn along the way that counts. At Ernst & Young, you can have endless learning opportunities working with leading companies in leading industries. So when you get to your destination, you'll belong there. Ride with us.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

Minutewomen deep-six pesky Fordham

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team got in on this weekend's Ram bashing with a 153-87 thrashing of Fordham.

The win wrapped up a solid Saturday for every Maroon and White battalion that faced off with pesky Fordham. The men's basketball and women's swimming and diving teams also cruised to easy wins over the Rams on the afternoon.

The Minutemen (10-4) won nine of the 13 events on Saturday en route to the victory. This was the last dual meet of the season for the Maroon and White.

Freshman Logan Alomar was the only Minuteman to pick up multiple individual victories as he won both the one and three-meter diving events. Alomar tallied a score of 265.2 in the one-meter and 268.5 in the three-meter. It was the third time this season that the freshman from Silver Spring, Md. has won both events.

In the pool it was a balanced effort for UMass as five different Minutemen notched first place finishes.

"We try and base our success on depth," said UMass head coach Russ Yarworth. "We have a few star performers but they can't win a championship on their own, it has to be a total team effort."

Tommy Keane led a triumvirate of sophomores who picked up victories for UMass. Keane took the 500-meter freestyle in a time of 4:50.85. It's the third consecutive meet that Keane has picked up a victory.

Other sophomore winners for the Minutemen were Chad Arnold in the 200-meter freestyle with a time of 1:48.81 and Scott Peterson in the 1000 freestyle. Peterson finished in a time of 10:24.95 to pick up his first victory of the year.

Senior Chris Arsenault once again was victorious for the Maroon and White as he took the 200-meter Individual Medley in 1:54.99. Arsenault, the four-time Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week, has won at least one event in each of UMass' meets this season.

Billy Brown rounded out the Minuteman winners by taking the 200-meter breaststroke. Brown, a senior from Fullerton, CA, clocked in with a time of 2:09.64 to win the event for the second consecutive meet.

Once more, the UMass relay teams came up big as they took both relay events of the day. In the 400-meter medley relay it was a quartet of seniors who swam past the Rams. Arsenault, Brown and fellow seniors Joe Martin and Mike Sabina, the only four seniors on the Minuteman squad, combined to finish with a time of 3:31.65.

Sabina, Arsenault and Arnold were also in on the UMass triumph in the 400-meter freestyle relay. These three combined with junior Ryan Fisher to win the event with a time of 3:11.25.

"The relays are what our team really gets behind," said Yarworth. "If we can get out and do well in those and get the 40 points then we usually do well."

In their last dual meet before the Atlantic 10 Championships the Minutemen were looking to get back on track and pick up some positive momentum.

"I think it was really important for us to do well," said Keane "It gives us a lot of confidence heading into A-10's and hopefully we'll be able to keep it going."

The Minutemen return to action on Friday as they compete at the University of Connecticut Husky Invitational. This two-day meet will be the final tune up for UMass before the A-10's which are held Feb. 15-17 in Buffalo, NY.

Verizon Wireless

Introducing Mobile Messenger℠

Now you can chat without talking.

Loud concert? No problem. Quiet libraries? A cinch. Now you can send and receive text messages right from your wireless phone without losing your voice or disturbing a soul. You can exchange messages one on one, or to a group of friends—whether they're across the room or across the country. So now nothing can keep you from staying connected.

Simple. Affordable. National.

Join in.

Drive responsibly. Call with care. Verizon Wireless.

verizonwireless

verizonwireless.com 1.800.2 JOIN IN

COMMUNICATIONS STORES

BOSTON, MA — Summer Street (Across from Macy's) 617 946-0500; 745 Boylston Street (Across from Lord & Taylor) 617 266-9060

BURLINGTON, MA — Burlington Mall (Next to Lord & Taylor) 781 221-0480

CAMBRIDGE, MA — 87 Brattle St (3 blks from Quincy Mkt) 617 868-0300

CHESTNUT HILL, MA — Route 9 (One Wonderful Place) 617 731-2080

MARLBOROUGH, MA — Solomon Pond Mall 508 624-9070

NORTH ATTLEBORO, MA — Emerald Square Mall (Lower level next to Sears) 508 695-5077

SAUGUS, MA — Kmart Plaza (Next to Square One Mall) 781 941-0101

SHREWSBURY, MA — 77 Boston Turnpike (Route 9) 508 797-0900

Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Price Plans. Credit approval required. $175 early termination fee. CDMA Web Enabled phone required. All calls subject to taxes, tolls and other charges. Available where compatible digital service is provided. Two-way messaging

Men's S&D romps rival Fordham

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Supremacy, dominance, superiority, preeminence, ascendancy, incomparability – the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team exhibited all of these traits while handing the Rams a good old fashioned beating on Saturday.

The Minutewomen forced their will upon Fordham, defeating them 143.5 to 98.5.

With the win over the Atlantic 10 rival Rams, UMass moves to 10-3 on the year, tying a school record for wins. The record is co-held by the 1996-97 team, which also went 10-3.

Kate Allery swept the diving events with scores of 245.23 on the one-meter and 233.05 on the three-meter events.

The relay events again proved reliable for the Maroon and White as the 400-yard medley team of Lauren Rowell, Christen Dexter, Andrea Kazanjian and Anne Dettloff took first with a time of 4:01.22.

The 400-yard free relay team of Shauna Nielson, Lizzy Boyle, Molly Buckley and Dettloff were also victorious.

Dexter continued her dominance in the breaststroke, winning the 200-yard race in 2:23.59.

The freshman has been n essential tool in the success of the Minutewomen as she competes in both the relays and the breaststroke.

Dettloff won the 200-yard free in a time of 1:57.10, while Kazanjian claimed first in the 50-yard free in 24.85.

Nielson, a freshman, scored another victory in the 1000-yard free, finishing with a time of 10:55.90.

Freshman Diana Alberti also got a win in the 200-yard fly, finishing with a time of 2:11.83.

The Minutewomen will return to the pool on Friday, February 9th and Saturday, February 10th when they travel to Storrs, Connecticut for the UConn Husky Invitational.

The Atlantic 10 swimming championships are scheduled for February 15th through February 17th in Buffalo, NY.

Women's gym falls to WVU

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

Imagine throwing yourself head over heels to land on two feet on a two-inch wide bar. The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team was strung on the balance beam last Friday against West Virginia, but fell in the end in a loss to the Mountaineers, 194.400-191.925.

Twenty-third ranked WVU came to Boyden Gymnasium to finish first on all four events, just off an appearance at the NCAA championships last spring. With the loss the Minutewomen drop to 2-4 on the season.

Head coach Dave Kuzara was well aware of the challenge that his team would face against such a prominent team. With WVU having three nationally ranked gymnasts, UMass went in to the meet on Friday to do the best that they could.

"We've had a great week of practice. West Virginia is really talented though," Kuzara said.

The Minutewomen were looking to improve their scores on the season as well, not just the win. UMass took that giant step towards the rest of their season by surpassing that goal by over three points.

The start that the women's gymnastics team has had has not discouraged them from working toward the next meet. With four meets already passed, the Minutewomen have exceeded last season's finish at this time.

As the season progresses each member of the team is making vast improvements. With five sophomores on the team as well as two freshmen, the Minutewomen are young, but they have a lot of experience under their belts.

"Everyone's getting more confident. We'll be tough," Kuzara said.

Sophomores Katie Teft and Jen Gendron shined for the Minutewomen as they earned strong finishes for their events. Teft completed her first full routine on the uneven bars since a severe ankle sprain three weeks ago in Michigan. Teft earned a tie for first place on the bars at 9.925. Gendron, last week was named Co-Gymnast of the Week in the Atlantic 10, tied for third on the balance beam with a career-high of 9.825.

"I was really excited [being named co-gymnast]. This was my first time," Gendron said.

Gendron competes in the all-around for the Minutewomen and the floor exercise is her strongest and favorite to compete in.

Friday's competition was also a career high on the vault for senior Tracey Chew, at 9.775. Senior Mary Moore earned a career high on the balance beam exercise at 9.90.

The Minutewomen singing a chorus of "I Will Survive opened the meet," a feat they hope to accomplish for the remainder of the season.

UMass will be in in action Saturday when they take on New Hampshire in Durham.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Train to be an EMT this semester. Tuesday and Thursday nights 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost $600 For more information or to register call 545-1885 Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Cheap heating oil; join the Pioneer Valley Oil Cooperative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Month Free! Sunny 2 bdrm apartment Shutesbury $790 rent/heat/electricity 1/2 quiet tenants 15 minutes to Umass 259-1245

Running Out of Space? Need a Bigger Place?
*Deluxe 2 bedroom apartments available
*Free heat and hot water
*On the free PVTA busline
Minutes for UMASS!!! Back to school spring semester specials 1/2 off security deposit
$100 off 1st month's rent Call Sugarloof Estates (413) 665-3856

AUTO FOR SALE

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained. $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

1996 Nissan Pathfinder XE. 85,000K highway miles, gray metallic, v-6, 5spd manual, sunroof, Kenwood CD. $10,000 D/B/D Dave 413-273-8990

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Honda Civic DX 4Door Sedan, red, 75kmi, automatic, sunroof, cassettplayer, excellent condition. $6000or b/o Call 253-3092

93 Saturn SL2, SDW, 1.9Ltr engine, 5spd, cd player $3500 o/b/o. Must sell 665-3521

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experiance, references, car, housework 6-10 hours Tue & Thur. $10/hr 247-5800

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Work Study Job: Join our staff as a Peer Housing Counselor. Must be available mornings. $7.00/hr. Call 545-0865 and ask for Barbara or come by Commuter Service, 428 Student union

French & or German Speaking candidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or email dcu@remi.com

Single Dad and business owner too busy to do everything. I need help! Shopping, light cleaning, errands, bills, etc. Compensation negotiable. Very part-time, flexible schedule. Need to have car. Phone # 413-253-4640 ask for James

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

EMPLOYMENT

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Cape Verde, Portuguese, Chinese, Korean, Japanese. Call ESL Office at Amherst Public School 413-549-9857. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.50 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Center for tour guides, student admissions Reps, and summer counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 9

EMPLOYMENT

Human Services Exciting Opportunities The Consortium is an agency that supports people with disabilities through education advocacy and services. Program Coordinator needed to direct and oversee services provided to up to six people with various learning challenges. Supervisory experience, flexibility, and optimistic attitude, sense of humor, reliable transportation and driver's license required. Excellent benefits. Combination of day time and evening hours. $12/hr starting salary. Send resume to Janice Harris at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 AA/EOE. Full-time/part-time - Looking to have fun earning extra income with a flexible work schedule? Spend time with people in a supportive atmosphere. Call Lori-Ann Bruyett at (413) 536-2401 to set up a phone interview. AA/EOE.

More Than Just Summer Employment Independent Lake Camp Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Volleyball, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theatre, Dance, Video, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Skateboarding, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Ropes Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and More. Call 1-800-399-CAMP ask for Dan or Nigel. www.independent-lake.com

EMPLOYMENT

New Students Program Seeking extroverts for summer orientation positions: May 29th - July 18th. Salary, room meals, health coverage. Call 545-9681 for more info. or pick up an application at the Undergraduate Admission Center. Deadline Feb. 9

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union.

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Speakers: 12" woofers, 5" liquid cooled mid-range, horn tweeters, 125watt powerful, only has about 20 hours of play time. Call Rory 253-3934 $299/pr

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons Recreational & competitive boxing 256-0364

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roommate to share room in 2bdrm apt in Mill Valley. $287.50/mo include. Heat & hot water. Female preferred 253-4798 Mari

1 Room Available in three bedroom apt in Mill Valley. Looking for a nonsmoker who is clean and quiet. $340/month Call 253-0066

Roommate Needed ASAP. Share 3 bedroom apt w/2 nice guys. Great location on Main Street. Call Tyler at 253-2687

Female Wanted ASAP 1 room open in 4 room apartment in Hadley on bus route. $295 a month 582-9164

Female Seeking roommate for Amherst apt. Cheap rent. Call 256-6244

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TICKETS FOR SALE

One Barenaked Ladies Floor Seet Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Last Minute Deals! Cancun, Bahamas, Florida, Jamaica & Mazatlan. Join MTV and Baywatch for Spring Break! Call for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $449. Air, Hotel, Transfers, parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHDLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guaranteel 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

Need a JOB? Need a ROOMMATE? What are you waiting for?? Advertise TODAY!! The Daily Collegian Classifieds Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS Hartford
4	CBS Boston
5	ABC 40 Springfield
6	FOX 61 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	UPN 20 Hartford
9	HSCN New Music Channel
10	NBC 30 New Britain
11	FOX 61 Hartford
12	UPN 40 Springfield
13	Educational Channel
14	WGBY Academic Channel
15	WB 56 New Haven
16	UHC
17	UPN 18 Providence Channel
18	WB 56 New Haven
19	Access Channel
20	Cable Cast
21	C-SPAN
22	C-SPAN Headline News
23	Lifetime
24	USA
25	Fox
26	TNT
27	Discovery
28	Nickelodeon
29	Cartoon Network
30	Weather Nite
31	TV Land
32	Friends Central
33	BET
34	Lifetime
35	Bloomberg Financial Network
36	College TV Network
37	MTV
38	MTV 2
39	VH1

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 7, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	32	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Women's College Basketball: Connecticut at Virginia Tech. (Live)			World of Nations	Geographic	Rhythm of the People		Puerto Rican Passages
WFSB	3	(3)	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Bette (N)	Welcome-N.Y.	"Jewel" (2001, Drama) Farrah Fawcett, Premiere. (In Stereo)			News	Late Show
WBZ	4	(4)	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Bette (N)	Welcome-N.Y.	"Jewel" (2001, Drama) Farrah Fawcett, Premiere. (In Stereo)			News	Late Show
WCVB	5	(5)	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	Once and Again "Suspicion"	News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Jack & Jill "Chivas and Lies"		News	Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Ed "The Music Box" (In Stereo)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Jack & Jill "Chivas and Lies"		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Ed "The Music Box" (In Stereo)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	'70s Show	Grounded-Life	Temptation Island (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Ed "The Music Box" (In Stereo)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	(4)	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Championship Ballroom Dancing		"Cats Eyes: Living"		Pride		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	25	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	Once and Again "Suspicion"	News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	7 Days "Raven" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager "Prophecy"		Fresier	Med Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	42		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	43		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Jonathan Winters		American Justice: Duty...		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Hotel Room"
CNN	45	21	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wall Blitzer		The Point	Larry King Live	CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	47	26	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Cheech & Chong's Next Movie" (1980) Cheech Marin.				South Park	TV Funhouse	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	48		Wild Discovery: Treasures		Wild Discovery: Indonesia		Mysteries of the Pyramids		Ancient Earthquakes: Cities		Deadline Discovery (N)		Justice Files	"Doing Time"
ESPN	51		Sportscenter		College Basketball: Virginia at North Carolina State. (Live)		College Basketball: Duke at Clemson. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	52		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Lynda Carter"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Don't Talk to Strangers" (1994, Suspense) Shanna Reed.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53		Direct Effect	Making-Video	Snowed In (In Stereo)						Snowed In (In Stereo)		Undressed	Kathy Griffin
NICK	55		Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Bredy Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	59		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "No Compromises"		Specs: Above and Beyond		"Asteroid" (1997, Science Fiction) Annabella Sciorra.				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	60	24	Critical Condition: British E.R.		Secrets of Forensic Science		Monster Machines				Monster Machines: Miners		Monster Machines
TNT	62		ER "Hit and Run" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Bazooka Jarod."		NBA Basketball: Sacramento Kings at Minnesota Timberwolves. (In Stereo Live)
USA	63		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Rendezvous" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Knockout"		"The Terminator" (1984) Arnold Schwarzenegger.				Martin
HBO	65		(5:45) "The Witches" (1990, Fantasy) "PG"		(4:) "Anna and the King" (1999, Drama) Jodie Foster. (In Stereo) "PG-13"						Oz "The Blizzard of 01"		The Corner
MAX	67		(4:45)		"One Man's Hero" (1999, Drama) Tom Berenger. "R"				"The 4th Floor" (1999) Juliete Lewis. "R"				"Girl, Interrupted" (1999, Drama) Winona Ryder. "R"
SHOW	69		"Finding Buck McHenry" (2000, Drama) Michael Schiffman.				"Bojangles" (2001, Biography) Gregory Hines.				Bojangles		Soul Food (N)	Rasurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)

Dilbert By Scott Adams

MY PROJECT WILL SAVE THE COMPANY A MILLION DOLLARS.
MINE SAVES TWENTY MILLION
MY PROJECT WILL TAKE A YEAR TO COMPLETE.
MINE TAKES A WEEK.
TOPPER. I HAVE HALF A MIND...
I HAVE ONE PERCENT OF A MIND

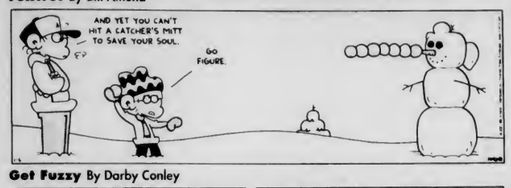
Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

FLIPPING THE INVENTORS OF VIBRANCY A BUSINESS? LOVE IT!
THANKS
WHEN THE VENTURE CAP. ITALISTS HEAR ABOUT OUR PLAN, THEY'LL BE BEATING DOWN OUR DOORS!
ALL WE GOTTA DO IS AUCTION UP THIS SUCKER!
START AUCTIN' OUT ME. I'LL BE BACK IN AN HOUR!
UH. WHERE ARE YOU GOING?
TO ORDER A MUG CRUSHIN' YOU AUGHT ONE?

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

AS HONEY PROSPECTS HER SEARCH FOR CLUES IN DOWNTOWN COON RAPIDS...
SORRY, MISS.
NAH. NEVER SEEN HIM BEFORE.
A MAN WHERE CONCERNED.
GOOD LUCK, MISS.
THANKS.
MOST WERE. NOT.
WELL? I DON'T HAVE ALL DAY.
NO...NO. IT'S NOT HIM.

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

IT'S FRIDAY NIGHT, DUDE. WE SHOULD BE DOING SOMETHING.
HEY. YOU WANNA GO TO FLAT TOPS'?
YEAH, I HAVEN'T PLAYED BILLIARDS IN AGES! BACK IN COLLEGE, I WAS QUITE THE POOL SHARK. REMEMBER?
WAS IT A DIFFICULT TRANSITION FROM THAT TO TOILET WEASEL?
GO TO YOUR CLOSET!
WAIT. YOU'RE A WHAT?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

LOOK AT THOSE GEESE HEADED SOUTH IN A PERFECT "V" FORMATION.
HOW DO THEY KNOW WHAT DIRECTION TO GO IN THIS SAYS WE'RE OVER THE SOUTHERN TIP OF GREENLAND.
I TOLD YOU NOT TO BUY ELECTRONICS ONLINE!
PROBABLY SOME SORT OF INSTINCTUAL THING.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I HATE WORKING FOR TIPS
NO. I ORDERED THE R.F.P.
MAYBE YOU WERE THINKING R.F.P. BUT YOU SAID SPEC BINDER. YOU ARROGANT COW!
WITH ANY LUCK, SHE'LL SAY, "YOU HAD ME AT COW."

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

MMM, SWEETIE, YOU SMELL WONDERFUL.
I DON'T WHAT THIS NEW SCENT IS THAT YOU'RE WEARING, BUT...
HUBBA, HUBBA, ROWRWR!
DID MOM TELL YOU SHE SPILLED YOUR BOTTLE OF "MANLY WOODSMAN" COLOGNE TODAY?
YES, AND LET'S NOT GO THERE, OK?

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – There is no need for you to do things in a dangerous or reckless manner today. You, unlike some others, have time on your side.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may be traveling a narrow path to get where you're going, and it would be wise for you to steer clear of any distractions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may find that you're waiting on others a little more than you would like – but breaking away from the pack right now is unwise.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're well on your way to providing yourself, but today you may have to take a step or two backward to regain your balance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your grasp of difficult concepts and situations will serve you well all day long – and should enable you to communicate better than most.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Your heart and your mind may be battling for supremacy today, but all the while your pocketbook really knows the score. Be more realistic!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Now is the time for you to take a more aggressive, bold stance – particularly when career development hangs on the balance. Don't be shy!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Others are likely to find that your creativity can make the difference today between moderate success and resounding triumph.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – While you respect the way things have been done in the past, there is no reason why you can't begin developing valid new methods of your own.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You can capitalize on a chance development today – but only if you are in the right place at the right time. Keep all scheduled appointments.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You know how to navigate carefully and how to get where you're going quickly and efficiently, but today a more leisurely approach is okay.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Now is the time to play catch-up with a friend who has a major new project in the works. Chances are you'll want to be involved.

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 41 LOW: 26	HIGH: 35 LOW: 16	HIGH: 39 LOW: 27

Quote of the Day

"Truth can be outraged by silence quite as cruelly as by speach."

Amelia E. Barr

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Fried Clams

Greek Style Tofu (vegan)

Vegetarian Paella (vegan) (B, H, W)

DINNER

Roast Turkey (B, F)

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Wild Mushroom Strudel (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Beef Forestier (H, W)

Spinach Mushroom Strudel (vegetarian)

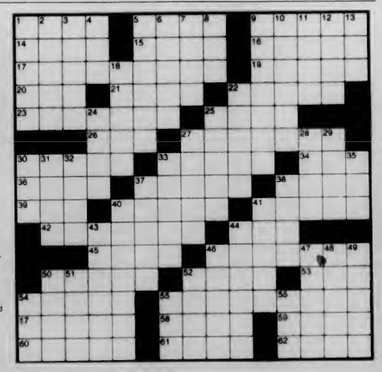
AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
&
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thurs Xaivier rock &Clever
Sat Art Steele Band blues &more!
Sun Funk and Monk jazz in cool
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst 413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS
1 Humid
5 Locale
9 Din
14 Woodwind
15 Jai —
16 Chloe
17 Winter crystal
19 Gushes (out)
20 Electric —
21 Hertz rival
22 Cyclonic targets
23 Bushed
25 Prickly seeds
26 TV accessory
27 Nursing concern
30 Fine mist
33 Stair post
34 Rower's need
36 Eager
37 Grinding tooth
38 Tijuana coin
39 Vote for
40 In good time
41 Thought about
42 Stipulation
44 Forbid
45 Stripe
46 Spock and Seuss
50 Skate
52 Alpha follower
53 Mauna —
54 Unsuspecting
56 Decorative papers
57 Singing Chipmunk
58 Mock butter
59 Gorillas
60 Meadow sound
61 Semester
62 Sly

DOWN
1 Gave medicine
2 Dogpatch name
3 Do-re-mi
4 Church seat
5 Tray
6 Kilt material
7 Shade trees
8 Dead heat
9 Air passage
10 Lock horns with
11 Piece of news
12 Beates or herne
13 Begley and Harris
18 Imagine
22 Ice-fishing tool
24 Dreaded czar
25 Path
27 "Hot!"
28 Rejections
29 Let up
30 Moon's place
31 Chirp
32 Back
33 Vikings
35 Singer Stewart
37 Lobster supplier
40 Football option
42 Obvious
43 Parrot
43 Singer Newton-John
44 Underside
46 Put off
47 Giraffe's cousin
48 Drive away
49 Smart-mouthed
50 Nerve
51 Not taped
52 Liver's output
54 Share
55 Fetched
58 Uncooked

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

C	O	B	B		R	A	J	A		W	E	A	V	E
A	M	U	R		E	X	I	L	E		R	E	L	A
S	O	L	O		D	I	M	E		I	R	E	N	E
T	O	B	A	C	C	O		N	O	T	I	C	E	S
			M	A	D	E	U	P		S	C	I	S	S	O	R	S
A	L	A	R	M		A	S	H	E	S		T	A	U	T
X	I	V		B	O	N		E	S	T		S	U	R
I	B	I	S		L	O	S	T		A	R	E	N	A
M	I	D	D	O	P	I	N		P	I	S	S	E	Y
			O	R	D		S	H	O	O	T
G	A	R	N	I	S	H		E	S	T	U	A	R	Y
I	M	A	G	E		O	D	I	L	E		A	S	E	A
G	A	V	E	L		L	E	E	R		L	I	E	N
G	H	E	D	I	N	E		S	A	L	A	M	I



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Kara Stokes, Augusta Landauro

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS
Wednesday, February 7, 2001 12
Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

All good things must come to an end

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Winston Smith and the rest of the Minutemen had their season-high six-game winning streak snapped at UD Arena to A-10 foe and host Dayton, 89-76, last night.

Mack nets 2000th in loss to Dayton

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Last night's game against the University of Dayton meant a lot to the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

Not only were the Minutemen riding a six-game winning streak, but they were also attempting to jump above the .500 mark for the first time since the opening game of the year. It could even be safe to say that UMass was playing as well as it ever had in the five years that head coach James "Bruiser" Flint has been at the helm in Amherst, and his team knew that it had to continue playing well if it had any chance of playing in the NCAA tournament this March.

Unfortunately for the Maroon and White, it will now have to be close to flawless down the stretch, as Dayton crushed Flint's squad, 89-76 at the Blackburn Court in UD Arena. With the loss, Massachusetts fell to 10-11 (8-2 Atlantic 10) while the Flyers improved to 14-9 (5-5 A-10).

"We didn't come out and play like we had been playing the last month or so," Flint said. "They beat us up and down the floor."

Bright spots were few and far between for UMass. Micah Brand played excellent inside on the offensive end, totaling a career-high 23 points and keeping his team close in the first half, but it would not be enough.

Monty Mack also had 23 points for the Maroon and White, but he needed to hoist up 25 shots in order to do so. Still, it was yet another 20-point game for the sharpshooter, which is something he has been able to accomplish in 11 of his team's last 12 contests.

Mack was also able to total his 2,000th career point when he hit a free throw late in the second half. And, despite his atrocious night from the field (7-for-25, 3-for-15 in the first half), Flint still had nothing but praise for his senior leader.

"I am proud of him," Flint said. "He is one of the best players in the history of the school and one of the best players in the history of the Atlantic 10."

Yesterday's relatively high scoring contest differed sharply from the first meeting between the two teams earlier in the year, in which Dayton was dominated on the inside on its way to a 62-57 defeat. This time the Flyers controlled the inside, outrebounding UMass 34-25, and scoring 26 points in the paint to the Maroon and White's 10.

In the last meeting between the two A-10 rivals, the main reason the Minutemen won was because they were scoring once they got the ball inside, but yesterday, Brand was the only inside presence among the Massachusetts big men, as Kitwana Rhymer, Jackie Rogers and Eric Williams combined for 12 points.

Another reason that Dayton pulled out the win was because they had a balanced scoring attack that could strike from long range or from the low blocks. Yuanta Holland led the way with 18 points on 7-for-9 shooting, and at times he could not be stopped down low. Tony Stanley also had another excellent game, totaling 17 points, and Nate Green and Keith Waleskowski chipped in by netting 16 points apiece.

At the beginning of the game, neither team could score, as the first three and a half minutes were played without a point being scored. But eventually, both teams started hitting their respective grooves. Two Brand free throws capped an 8-0 run that gave the Minutemen an early five-point advantage, but soon after, Stanley was able to knot the score at 10 with a long three ball.

When Mack drilled a three from the top of the key it gave his team a 20-15 lead, but from that point on, Dayton would control the contest, ending the half on a 28-11 run.

Things would fail to get any better at the beginning of the second frame, as a Ramod Marshall jump hook extended the Flier lead to 30-31.

UMass would then run off nine straight points on only three possessions, courtesy of a Rhymer three-point play and two long range bombs from Mack, but that would be as close as the Minutemen would get, as Rhyner was quickly forced to the bench with his fourth foul.

"When we got to within 10, Kit got called for an offensive foul," Flint said. "They came down, hit a three, and put it back up to 13."

From that point on, the Maroon and White would fail to make a serious run, and it seemed clear that it would drop its first game since its Jan. 13 defeat at the hands of St. Bonaventure.

From marksmen to masons: big stars fizzle in loss

ADAM WHITE

You live by your big stars, and you die by your big stars.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team doesn't have an endless bench like Florida, Illinois or North Carolina. Coach James "Bruiser" Flint can't make substitutions at will and beat any given opponent with eight to 10 different guys.

He has a handful (rarely) of talented impact players, and a bunch of solid "team" guys who know their roles and how they can chip in to the Maroon and White effort. So when the Minutemen are savoring victory, it's usually the same two or three guys who are consistently making the big plays.

And when they're tasting defeat, it's usually those same guys who aren't.

When UMass watches the tape of its 89-76 loss to the Flyers of Dayton at UD Arena last night, two players are going to be painfully reminded of the early-season demons that they have worked so hard to exorcise. Throughout the team's 2-9 nightmare, Monty Mack struggled to find his stroke and Kitwana Rhymer strained to stay out of foul trouble and remain on the floor.

Last night, both players suffered some sort of roundball relapse and the Maroon and White faithful learned just how crucial these two guys are to the team's success.

Mack entered the game 20 points shy of 2,000 for his career, and perhaps that impending milestone somehow disrupted the All-America candidate's concentration. After stroking a three amidst an early 8-0 UMass run, Mack went from marksman to mason and began lofting bricks like it was his job. His last two shots of the first half were an airball three attempt and a wild spinning lane prayer that also missed badly.

By the time the Minutemen loped off the court on the short end of a 43-31 score, Mack had already 'misfired on 12 of 15 field goal attempts.

Rhymer, on the other hand, took himself out of the game before he even had a chance to make any sort of impact whatsoever. It's possible that the fiery center was salivating at the chance to bully UD's undersized front line the had 19 points and 13 rebounds in the teams' Jan. 18 meeting), but two quick fouls put Rhymer on the bench to stay less than 10 minutes into the first half.

The Flyers responded to Rhymer's absence by plundering the UMass middle for a bevy of easy baskets that spelled a 26-10 points-in-the-paint edge by halftime. UD sophomore forward Nate Green, who had managed only six points against the Minutemen earlier this year, used essentially the same up-and-under move to ring up and-ones on UMass' Jackie Rogers and Eric Williams within a two-minute stretch.

"Every time they got the ball inside, they either got fouled or scored," Flint said. "Kit got in early foul trouble and from that point on, we were never really in it."

Green finished 6-of-8 from the field for 16 points, one of four Flyers in double figures.

The second half saw both players heat up with a spurt of glorious hoops that almost turned the tide back to the Minutemen. Rhymer was seemingly fired up when Green canned a left-hander right in front of him in the post; the UMass senior responded with a strong move to the hoop with Dayton's Keith Waleskowski draped all over him for a three-point play that cut the deficit to 50-34.

Mack followed with successive threes, the first off an inbound play and the second in Flyer Tony Stanley's eye at the top of the key. Rhymer then tore down a tough defensive board, leaving UMass with a chance to trim Dayton's lead down to single digits with roughly 15 minutes to play.

But on the very next trip down the floor, Rhymer was whistled for his third foul trying to clear space under the hoop. Again, the 6-foot-10 giant was banished to the bench, and again Dayton responded with easy inside hoops (courtesy of Yuanta Holland and Green) to push the game further out of reach.

Rhymer's line for the night: 19 minutes, five points, four fouls.

Mack's frustration appeared to peak around the 4:10 mark, when his tentative three attempt in the right corner was blocked and turned into a transition bucket for the Flyers. The tri-captain committed his third turnover less than a minute later, after which Flint was slapped with a technical foul by referee Gary Bova. The coach was then T'd up again and tossed from the game with 1:29 to go.

"I apologize for getting thrown out of the game," Flint said. "But it was frustrating."

Mack did indeed reach the 2K plateau, swishing a pair of freebies and a final trifecta to finish with 23 on the night. But the glory must have indeed had a bitter aftertaste for the preseason Atlantic 10 Player of the Year, who connected on only 7-of-25 field goal attempts (6-of-16 from three) when the next closest Minuteman took less than half as many shots (Micah Brand, 7-of-10).

This loss can't be pinned on any single player or trend within the game; there were really a whole bunch of places where the Minutemen just didn't get the job done. But when you come to rely so heavily on the play of guys like Monty Mack and Kitwana Rhymer, off nights for them can translate into long nights and big losses for the team.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

Redemption: Morgan takes Winter-X gold

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

MOUNT SNOW, Vt.- His name is Blair Morgan, but to the standard X-Game aficionado, he is known simply as Superman.

To his legions of adoring fans, Morgan's green and black snowsuit and his Arctic Cat logo are parallel to red and blue tights and the famous shielded "S."

It would seem appropriate for Morgan's high flying theatrics to be dramatized by the famous movie theme, after all the Canadian has no problem leaping tall moguls in a single bound.

Despite his myriad of mid-air maneuvers, Morgan has yet to claim Winter X gold in his featured event – snocross.

Morgan's skill at piloting his number 3c Arctic Cat snowmobile had not yet enabled him to finagle his way into a first place finish – that is until the 2001 games.

Garnering the title of favorite did not help the Canadian in recent years, as destiny and luck have never been on the northerner's side.

"I think I should have won it the last four times. I just had some bad luck." The champion said after his victory.

This year high school prodigy Tucker Hibbert was the odds on favorite to win; that seemed to suit Morgan just fine.

Hibbert, who took the Gold in 2000, spoiled what seemed to be Morgan's year of destiny. His win last year only tossed more wood onto the fire of a burning rivalry that could not be quelled by the frigid air of Mount Snow.

When asked about the rivalry Morgan responded. "I think more pressure is on him," as Hibbert is in the position of defending the title.

This year Morgan would not be denied but his victory did not come without controversy.

After three rounds of qualifying, Hibbert emerged with three wins, and the way he was racing the teenager could probably have won them in reverse.

The qualifying rounds set up a final that featured 1998 champion Chris Vincent, Hibbert and Morgan.

Hibbert showed first, shooting the hole right from the start and taking a lead that grew with every lap.

Then half way through a six-lap race, Hibbert made what could only be classified as a rookie mistake. Call it fate, call it destiny, call it what you will, but when Hibbert wiped out on the mid-race jump, Morgan leaped at the chance, and captured the checkered flag.

"Even though he crashed, that's part of racing, you've got to keep it riverside up," said Morgan after his victory.

The win was sweet revenge for the Canadian. Taking the gold was sweet, but revenge was the fact that the kid didn't win.

COURTESY ESPN

Tara Dakides competed at the Winter X-Games held at Mount Snow, Vt. over the weekend. the event pictured above is women's slope style.

X-traordinary trip to Vermont for X-Games

ERIC SODERSTROM

MOUNT SNOW, Vt. – I set off with absolutely no sense of direction. It was 10 o'clock in the morning and I had stopped to eavesdrop on two middle aged men wearing fluorescent green ski pants and what looked to be the newest pair of Nike All-Condition-Gear snowshoes.

A few minutes later, after trudging uphill through knee-deep mounds of snow in my low-cut sneakers, I found a solid patch of hardened flurry to stand on and focus in on my surroundings.

Looking left: I saw a huge sloping wall of ice. On my right: another gigantic sloping wall of ice. About 50 feet in front of me: Massachusetts native Todd Richards pulling an alley-oop-chicken-salad air into a fakie-back-side rodeo... I think.

Positioned in the middle of the Super-Pipe outlet, I realized that my press-pass didn't guarantee me the safety being enjoyed by all the other spectators watching from atop the enormous lee-chute.

I decided to slide back down the mountain. Hot chocolate awaited me in the heated press tent.

Now, I've been to Europe twice since August. And both times, I suffered a bit from that entire culture-shock phenomenon. That's normal, right?

But last Friday, when I took the opportunity to attend the ESPN Winter X-Games at Mount Snow in Vermont, I was completely overwhelmed. I'm not going to lie to you. It was exciting. I just wasn't ready for the Indianapolis 500 of snow-mobiling. And that's exactly what I got – the Olympics of extreme sports with snowball fights abundant in the X-gallery.

My Winter X-Game experience took place at the finish line of Sno-Cross – the roller-derby equivalent of snow-mobiling. And it was definitely electrifying. Seeing 900-pound machines fight for space in mid-air is worth standing in single-digit weather. Trust me.

Sno-Cross phenom Tucker Hibbert is 19-years old. At this year's X, his goal was to defend his gold from last year's competition. That ambition fell hard on the second-to-last-jump of the final, however, when Hibbert's sled tilted sideways, subsequently flinging the young boy and his mobile to the ground.

"I think he's O.K.," Blaire Morgan, gold-medal beneficiary from Hibbert's mistake said. "He said his butt hurts really bad."

That's what Morgan said to me, twenty minutes after his rival was almost crushed by his own snowmobile. I can't wait until next year.

Oh yeah, here's your guide to the Winter X-Games: Wear boots.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian Columnist.

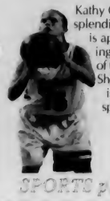
Check out The Source in Arts on page 6.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN



Kathy Coyner's splendid career is approaching the end of the road. She reflects in today's sports section.

ARTS p. 6 SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 77 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, February 8, 2001

Williams to replace Scott

"I have always been impressed with the heart of the people here- faculty staff and students. I look forward to working with the University's many constituencies after July 1 in my new role.

- Marcellette Williams, newly named Interim Chancellor

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Deputy Chancellor Marcellette Williams will succeed Chancellor David Scott when Scott steps down on the first of July. The Board of Trustees approved Williams unanimously yesterday morning.

President William Bulger announced the appointment of Williams as interim Chancellor on Monday, ending months of speculation.

"I have had the good fortune of working with Dr. Williams for the past five years and have been deeply impressed with her commitment, dedication and judgment," Bulger said. "I am certain that she will perform with great distinction."

Deputy Chancellor Williams is quite pleased with the appointment.

"We have an excellent faculty and staff and an exceptional student body," Williams said. "I have always been impressed with the heart of the people here- faculty staff and students. I look forward to working with the University's many constituencies after July 1 in my new role."

Williams will make a fine replacement, according to Chancellor Scott.

"I can think of no other person who better exemplifies the type of leader academe needs today than Marecellette Williams," Scott said.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian shares Scott's sentiments.

"I told Chair Grace Fey that if I had been given the option of choosing the interim Chancellor myself, I would have picked Marcie [Dr. Williams]," Avakian said. "I have every confidence in Dr. Williams."

Williams has been Deputy Chancellor of the Amherst campus since 1994, and is a tenured professor of English and Comparative Literature. Williams graduated from Michigan State University in 1968. Her postgraduate and doctorate work at MSU led up to a teaching post there in 1981, at various points chairing the English Department. In the 80s and early 90s Williams held a variety of administrative and academic posts at MSU.

Williams first met Scott while Scott was a physics professor at MSU. Williams ran into Scott again at honor society function.

"When I talked him there, he was the provost at Michigan," Williams told the Collegian in 1994.

Tuesday fire ravages student home

By Jessica May
Collegian Staff

A fire Tuesday night engulfed the apartment of two University of Massachusetts students.

John Rugo and David Bernstein, residents at 50 Townehouse Apartments, lost all of their belongings in the fire that struck Tuesday night. The cause has yet to be determined.

The tenants returned to their home from sledding to find a fire smoldering in the living room. They called 911 on a cellular phone that went directly to the Northampton State Police barracks.

The Amherst Fire Department arrived at 6:33 p.m. and was on scene until 11:41 p.m. cleaning up the fire. A ladder truck, four engines and a total of 42 individuals were sent to fight, while firefighters from Northampton and Belchertown were called to staff the stations in case of other emergencies.

The apartment was located in the middle of a four apartment building, receiving the brunt of the damage. Firefighters were able to stop the blaze before it significantly damaged either side apartments.

The adjacent apartments did not suffer any structural damage, but did, however, endure slight smoke damage, said Acting Assistant Fire Chief Timothy Atteridge.

Fire Captain Timothy Masloski said that when his crew arrived the fire had spread from the ceiling hallway down to the first floor.

The sliding glass door was blown out due to immense heat causing the lintel to fall out and the wall to partially collapse, added Fire Chief Keith Hoyle.

"We're thankful no one was hurt," stated Townehouse Apartments Manager Judy Johnson.

Townehouse Apartments management has relocated Rugo and Bernstein to temporary housing in another unit.

Damage to the apartment is estimated at $90,000, and the residents said they did not have renter's insurance for their possessions.

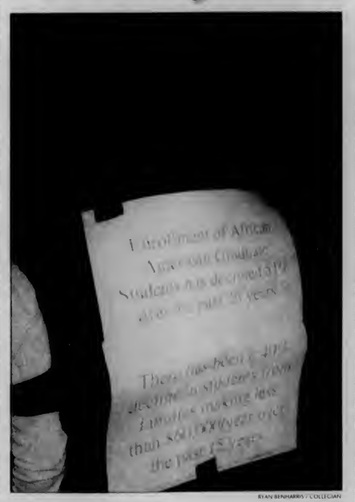
The fire is currenlly under investigation by Amherst Police and Fire Departments as well as the State Fire Marshal's Office.

Information for this article was taken from the Hampshire Gazette.

SHALINI MARTI / COLLEGIAN

The front of residence of a Townhouses residence where two students lost everything they owned to a fire Tuesday night.

Not just black and white



RYAN BENJAMIN / COLLEGIAN

Students protest the decline in ALANA numbers last week in the Campus Center. (right) Students taped their mouths in a metephorical show of silence.

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

This is the first of two features about ALANA issues at the University of Massachusetts

There is a real problem here at UMass: the massive under-representation of ALANA students.

Many factors need to be taken into account as to why this problem exists. However, the truth of the matter is that it all depends on whom you ask.

The group ALANA includes all people of color, such as American Indian, Alaskan Native, Asian, Pacific Islander, Non-Hispanic Black, Cape Verdean, Hispanic and Multi-racial students.

According to a Factbook, printed by the Office of Institutional Research (OIR), the numbers, and more importantly, the percentages of ALANA students at the University have taken a real dive over the past five years.

The total number of freshmen enrolled in Fall of 1996 was 3,985, and only 753 of those students, that is 18.9 percent, were ALANA students. The numbers dropped slightly with the freshmen class of 1997 where 696, or 18.6 percent of the students were ALANA out of a class of 3,737.

In the fall of 1998, the number of ALANA students took a dramatic plunge down to 16.9 percent of the freshmen class – only 655 students in a class of 3,866. Again in 1999, the numbers dropped to 605 ALANA students out of a class of 4,060 people. The total fell to only 14.9 percent.

With the most recent freshmen class in the Fall of 2000, the numbers have risen slightly to 15.4 percent of the class. But still, ALANA students only make up 575 students out of a class of 3,731 people.

Depending on whom you question, the causes for these low numbers and the recent drops in enrollment range from admissions standards to school expenses and family income, to SAT scores and high school GPAs, to imprecise data reporting to the fund cutting of certain programs, to recent legislative actions, to racism.

Dean of Enrollment Services Joseph Marshall explained how his department has had to bring in smaller freshmen classes recently in order to help keep the already quite large class size numbers from rising even more.

In doing so, he claimed that the numbers of all ethnicity groups have dropped, but the percentages have remained predominantly the same these past few years, averaging that ALANA students make up about 17 percent of the undergraduate student body when the percentages from all the classes are combined.

"We first started to notice a major decline in ALANA students with the freshmen class in the fall of 1997 after the admissions requirements were first changed," Marshall said. "At that time, students had to have a higher GPA and SAT score as compared to past years in order to be accepted."

In addition, Marshall mention that for freshmen entering this past fall, the University changed its requirements once again, setting the minimum high school GPA requirement at 2.0.

Since the average of the students' high school GPAs has risen by only 0.07 points since the enactment of the new GPA requirement, one is left to question if the new guidelines truly did make much of a difference in enrollment, especially considering that ALANA students have risen in percentage this year, however slight that percentage may be.

In fact, one is left to wonder if the new GPA requirements left any effect upon students, for the average high school GPA among freshmen in the fall of 1998 to 1999 rose by 0.10 points without the aid of any official admissions action.

Director of the Office of ALANA Affairs Nelson Acosta believes the real issue lies within the admission process itself.

"Over the past few years, admissions has changed their guidelines in order to be more fair," he said. "The question is: more fair to whom?"

Acosta recalled, "I worked in admissions for seven years [before the new requirements took affect], and I know that during that time, we would never accept students with less than a 2.0 high school GPA unless it was a very rare and special circumstance."

He remarked how it bothers him to hear stereotypes claiming that ALANA students generally have lower grades and SAT scores than Non-Hispanic White students.

"I know of many cases where non-

Turn to ALANA page 2

Check out the Collegian's view on this issue in Editorial/Opinion page 4.

ALANA students were accepted to the University as a special case when they did not meet all the criteria, such as students with endorsement letters from legislators or UMass alumni," he added.

While Acosta admitted that there are many considerations made during the admissions process, he adamantly remarked, "To say that the numbers of ALANA students have dropped because the minimum GPA was raised to a 2.0 is ridiculous."

Marshall also worries that the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System test (MCAS), the new standardized test that Massachusetts high school students need to pass in order to graduate, will take its toll among ALANA students' numbers in next year's freshmen class.

■ ALANA

continued from page 1

"I've read in the newspapers every now and again that the MCAS failure rates among minorities are running high, so we're not sure how the test will affect next year's class," Marshall said.

However Acosta disputed, "Most students who'll have trouble passing this test probably wouldn't be admitted into the University anyway. It's ridiculous to think that people of color aren't qualified. To think that the percentage that won't pass the test will affect the percentage of ALANA students' enrollment is ludicrous."

Still the issue at heart remains in who will have the access in best preparing for this standardized test. Acosta expressed his concerns that lower class students would be less prepared for the MCAS than upper and/or middle class ones, commenting that the main difference between a state and private school is access.

"In our country, people of color in the middle class income bracket are very low percent," he said, "and so everyone is not on a level playing field. If all schools had the same opportunities by forcing them to take out larger amounts in loans.

"The University also recently cut wages of student jobs, such as part time salaries in the dining halls. For low income students, these jobs were a major source of income to help them pay for school," said Gonzalez.

According to Acosta, racism is another cause that keeps the ALANA numbers so low.

"Our campus is very beautiful, but it is not always welcoming to ALANA people because over 80 percent of the student body is white," he said. "When students leave their homes, they leave behind their leave their families and support networks. This may bring stress to both white and ALANA students, but in addition to that ALANA students must also deal with racism and peoples' ignorance towards people of color."

Another factor to examine is the diversity of different ethnicities among acceptance rates vs. the enrollment rates, for according to the OIR Factbook, there has been a decline in acceptance rates for all ALANA students. In 1997, 81.6 percent of the ALANA applicants were accepted, whereas in 1999 that percentage dropped to only 61.2 percent.

In particular, there has been a dramatic decline in Non-Hispanic Black, Cape Verdean, and Hispanic students' acceptance rates from 1997 to 1999, while American Indian, Alaskan Native, Asian, Pacific Islander, and non-Hispanic white students' acceptance rates have remained relatively the same during those years.

> "Over the past few years, admissions has changed their guidelines in order to be more fair," Director of the Office of ALANA Affairs Nelson Acosta said. "The question is: more fair to whom?"

For example, 77.0 percent of all non-Hispanic Black applicants for the freshman class of fall 1997 were accepted, but only 46.3 percent of those applicants were accepted for the freshmen class of fall 1999.

However, this dramatic drop was not common among all ethnicities, for 85.0 percent of all Asian and Pacific Islander students applying for the freshmen class of Fall 1997 were accepted. That percentage only slightly decreased with the applicants for the freshmen class of fall 1999 with 80.0 percent.

Non-Hispanic White students hardly saw any lose in acceptance rates from applicants for the freshmen class of fall 1997, where 71.8 percent were accepted, to applicants for the freshmen class of fall 1999, where 70.8 percent were accepted.

Marshall said that any major drops in acceptance rates, thus affecting drops in enrollment rates, during this time was a result from the 1998 Boston Latin court case, where a federal court declared that a race-based policy used to admit students into schools is unconstitutional.

Nevertheless, the percentage of accepted students who actually enrolled at the University has remained relatively steady from 1997 to 1999 among students all ethnicities, ranging around 29-33 percent.

Accounting for why so many accepted students fail to enroll at UMass, Marshall explained, "We're a 'safety net' school for ALANA students with a high academic record who have many options open to them."

Marshall also noted that some of the collected data presented in the OIR Factbook does not paint a completely accurate picture due to the fact that not all students report their ethnicity, and with the exception to the freshmen class in the Fall of 2000, that number of students has been rising over the past five years.

In the fall of 1996, 302 freshmen, or 7.6 percent of the class, did not identify their ethnicity. That number rose with the freshmen class in the fall of 1997 and continued to rise in 1998 where 10.1 percent of the class did not distinguish their ethnicity. That percentage remained at 10.1 in the fall of 1999 with 411 unidentified freshmen.

According to Marshall, one reason the 'not reporting' numbers had been rising prior to the fall of 2000 is due to the fact that the University only offered six categories for which a student could choose their ethnicity.

He noted, "People don't always fit neatly into those boxes, and so in that case, they don't fill in their ethnicity."

> "People want to deal with this situation like it doesn't exist, but if you walk around this campus, you can see the plain reality that there are just not many ALANA students here," Acosta said.

The question was then as to whether or not adding more options to the application would solve the problem. For example, on the Census 2000 Questionnaire, ~~American was given~~ fifteen different choices of ethnicity with which they could identify.

However, Junior Sandra Trautz, a Eurasian student here at UMass, does not believe that adding more choices to the application form would cause more students to report their ethnicity.

As a Chinese, Cuban, German, and Italian female whose facial features look as though she could check the "Non-Hispanic White" box, she commented, "Where would anyone intend to start if more boxes were to be added to the application? For you couldn't be accurate without taking up pages and pages."

Trautz believes that It is even more offensive to try and show how "accurately" someone could make an application, because they would definitely fall short of many types of people.

"What do you say when you're mixed? How would anyone adjust for that? By adding more titles? Some may prefer it [more ethnicity choices], but I'd prefer marking Other," she noted.

Students were originally asked to identify themselves as a Non-Latino Black, a Cape Verdean, a Latino, a North or South American Indian/Alaskan, a Non-Latino White, or an Asian/Pacific Islander student on freshmen admission applications.

However, recently students were given a seventh option of Multiracial and able to write in which group they identify themselves with most.

"The problem we've seen so far is that we get responses that don't fit into one of the other six categories (European and Indian for example). If they say other, we then make a judgment as to how to code them based on info in the rest of the application," Marshall said. "It's certainly not an exact science, but it does seem to be helping somewhat. The larger issue is still that some increasing numbers do not specify anything."

The Multiracial option may explain why more people opted to report their ethnicity in the freshmen class of fall 2000. A total of 276 freshmen, only 7.4 percent of the class, did not. It could also possibly account for the slight rise in numbers of ALANA students in this year's freshmen class.

However, Acosta disagreed, "While people of mixed race usually put Other, finding people from mixed backgrounds is not the norm. The sad part is that we're still a pretty segregated society, and interracial relationships are still pretty rare."

He believes most people of color are willing to identify their ethnicity, and those who conceal it are not always ALANA students. Acosta explained how people sometimes try to make excuses to hide away the racism in our society.

"People want to deal with this situation like it doesn't exist, but if you walk around this campus, you can see the plain reality that there are just not many ALANA students here," he added.

"We've come a long way, but we have a long way to go too," said Acosta. "In not having many ALANA students on campus, white students are hurt by not being able to learn about people from other cultures and backgrounds, and ALANA students miss out on great opportunities at this campus."

He then paused and looked out the window at the snow floating down from the sky during the start of Monday afternoon's snowstorm.

"I wonder how many people are seeing a snowstorm for the first time today," he said transfixed by the winter wonderland scene. "How many people from the South or other countries would never have seen it if they hadn't had the chance come to this University?"

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as a weekly publication and was known as the Index. It became known as the Collegian and the Fly Weekly Collegian in 1896. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilimitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majcrowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

TRUE CONFESSIONS

OFF campus ON line

Log on and listen in as Laura, Ruth and Deanna make their True Confessions every Thursday night at 7:00 p.m.

Live, uncensored, online! Watch for the occasional surprise on their doorstep. Watch and learn at: www.masslive.com/offcampus

3 students 1 Web cam 24/7!

www.masslive.com/offcampus

mass LIVE www.masslive.com

Get On It!

Live nude girls

By Tanya Mannes
Collegian Staff

Live Nude Girls, Unite!, a documentary about a group of strippers who organized the first union representing exotic dancers in the United States, will be shown in Mahar Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. tonight. Tomorrow at noon in room 174 of the Campus Center, there will be a round-table discussion of the film, featuring its producer/co-director, Julia Query. Both events are free and open to the public.

Kim Price, a graduate student in the Sociology department, is researching strip club dancers for her dissertation. She has been instrumental in planning this event with what she describes as "enormously positive" support and sponsorship from local unions and women's centers.

"I've followed unionization at the Lusty Lady since it began in 1996," she said.

Live Nude Girls, Unite! follows filmmaker Julia Query, who decided to leave graduate school when she was 27 and start stripping as a way to support herself while building a career as a comedian.

"Stripping is one of the few lucrative jobs available with little to no experience required, but it's highly skilled work. It has become a favorable alternative to the low wage jobs that proliferate," said Price.

Her venue for exotic dancing, San Francisco's Lusty Lady Theater, was notorious, but by no means unique, for its exploitative labor practices. Query became outraged at job conditions, including covert videotaping of dancers by customers, expectations that dancers would date the owners' friends, and stage fees that made dancers pay to work.

Using a home video camera, Query began to document the efforts of herself and her co-workers to form a union. Management at the Lusty Lady responded to their initial efforts by hiring a famous anti-union law firm. So began a battle that rocked the sex industry with street protests, kick-outs, and confrontations.

Shot in a variety of formats, Live Nude Girls, Unite! weaves footage of backstage and dancing, labor organizing and strikes with stand-up comedy and comic book-style animation.

Price said that the interwoven narratives "do a great job of talking about what peep show work is and why it should be unionized."

New students programing welcoming

By Melissa Shattuck
Collegian Staff

With the spring semester in full effect, students have the opportunity to look forward to the summer. Many found themselves bored at home over break, and counting the days until they could arrive on campus.

What is going to happen over the summer when students are at home for a long three-month break? Some students have solved their summer boredom problems by getting jobs on campus over the summer. While this may sound completely boring and totally insane to some, staying on campus has many positive benefits.

The New Students Program is one of the most vied for summer positions. It runs the summer orientation for incoming freshman, transfer, and Stockbridge students. Here students are counselors and introduce new students to life at the University.

"Our primary vision is to provide orientation for new students. Our main program is in the summer, but we also run programs at the beginning of spring semester for new students and on registration day for students who could not attend a summer orientation session," said Jean Horrigan, Interim Director.

So what exactly does this position entail? The main goal of counselors at the New Students Program is to get students acclimated to the University. The job requires counselors leading each 2 day orientation session for a course of eight weeks. The counselors live with students (similar to the position of Resident Advisor) run meetings, and facilitate tours with both parents and students. Counselors must answer questions, teach students about campus and how to get involved. On top of being provided room and board, counselors also receive a stipend and health insurance.

"It's hard work but very rewarding," said Horrigan, "no two days are the same."

Counselors must prepare the students academically as well as socially. Counselors show students how to register and how to use the registration system and prepare them for meetings with their advisors.

"In addition, the New Students Program helps new students find where things are and make informed decisions about where they want to live," Horrigan said.

The New Students Program also shows students how to get involved with activities and programs on campus.

"The benefits to introducing students to social activities helps the new students involved and helps them make a connection. Because of this students are more likely to stay on campus," Horrigan said.

A main event of the New Students program is tours of the campus. Students are taken to all of the residential areas and key areas on campus. In addition to giving tours during orientation, the New Students Program coordinates the daily tours offered on campus, the dual enrollment program, Advanced Placement testing and credit awards. On top of all that, the New Students Program also coordinates the Fall Open House.

Since the New Students Program summer orientation is supposed to serve as a positive experience for all incoming students there are certain requirements to becoming a counselor in this program. Counselors must be at least sophomores, graduating seniors are eligible. Also applicants must be in good academic standing with a minimum 2.5 grade point average.

"We're looking for students who have energy, enjoy working with people and have had a positive experience on campus," said Horrigan.

The New Students Program strives to maintain a diverse staff, with 13 male counselors and 15 female counselors.

"Since the population of the incoming student body is diverse, we want our staff to reflect that diversity," she said.

The New Students Program is looking for students from all colleges and majors so that they can educate students about specific requirements. Jim West has been involved with the New Students Program for the last two summers and will continue to take part in the New Students Program this summer.

"I highly recommend becoming involved in this program to other students," West said. "It's a positive experience for everyone."

Students interested in applying to become a counselor at the New Students Program can pick up an application on the concourse of the Campus Center through Friday, or in the New Students Program office in the Mather. Students can also check to see if there are applications in their cluster offices. The deadline to turn the application in is this Monday, Feb.12.

Funfest should be enjoyable

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Staff

A Northeast Area and Sylvan Area government collaboration, "The Fun Fest" takes place this Thursday from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. in the Totman Gym.

Northeast Area governor Mike McCarthy, a sophomore History major, describes the purpose of the event as a chance "for people to chill out and forget about classes for awhile, and its all free."

Activities include massage lessons, a basketball tournament, open swim, and open volleyball. The Sylvan Area Government conceived the idea.

"It was their idea, their project," explained McCarthy. "We're sponsoring the event with them, and helping them cover some of the cost. Hopefully, there will be a big turnout. People should go for the free massage."

Sylvan Area Governor Matt Ruggiero, a senior Plant and Soil Science major, expressed similar sentiments.

"They should go to have a good time, and meet new people," said Ruggiero. "Sylvan people walk through Northeast all the time, but they don't stop to meet new people. The event will get Sylvan and Northeast together to have a good time and relax."

Ruggiero, who is personally most excited about the volleyball, hopes

"The Fun Fest" becomes a tradition.

"I hope it becomes an annual event for Northeast and Sylvan people to get together and enjoy every year," he said.

Getting students from Northeast and Sylvan together may serve higher purposes than just simple fun; it also may help to resolve the degree of apparent antipathy between the two residential areas.

When students from Northeast were asked about getting together with Sylvan, they expressed an almost unanimously negative opinion of the residential area.

Phillip Persson, a sophomore Japanese major said of going to the area, "Do you have a death wish? It's creepy."

John Hrovat, a junior Japanese major, however, said that people's complaints about Sylvan are somewhat overblown.

"It's not that bad. To tell you the truth, I lived in Sylvan for two years. The design of the building sucks [though]," he said. "It makes people become isolated."

While junior Japanese major Alva Worden said of Sylvan residents, "They're a bunch of good kids" and senior Japanese major Zach Piper said, "I've got some friends from Sylvan. They're pretty cool people," there was also obvious hostility among the students of the two residential areas.

"Maybe if they all weren't such freaks we'd get along," said Dave Lambert, a second year BDIC major. "They only come out at night. They eat children. I'm not afraid of people from Sylvan getting revenge on me because I know they can't read this - illiterate, blubbering slobs."

Slightly less antagonistic, Oz Villalane, a sophomore BDIC major, continued this theme.

"Aren't they all suicidal?" Villalane asked. "They're very antisocial. It's the way the rooms are setted. It's so sad. It's evil. It's just set up for people to be antisocial and get depressed. Northeast is just academically superior."

In comparison, most students interviewed from Sylvan appear to be completely without an opinion about Northeast. When told about the negative comments of some Northeast students, Nick Venti, a freshman Geology major, said, "I find it strange. I don't have any feelings for Northeast. I was unaware of this."

Other Sylvan students expressed a similar apathy.

"I couldn't care less," Jeff Kristoff, a freshman Engineering student said. His friend Adiatya Prasetyo, a freshman Engineering major, shared thus opinion. "I haven't thought about it," he said.

Bill Kim, a senior Communications major and Army ROTC cadet, may speak from greater experience.

"When I used to live [in Northeast] it was a study atmosphere. There weren't wild parties," he said. "I'm okay with Northeast. I moved to Sylvan because I wanted a single. I don't mind Sylvan at all. I've heard rumors about it being 'the depressed dorm. There's some truth to that. Our floor does not interact, but I know people from other dorms, so it's not 'antisocial.' The rooms are more secluded. If you want to meet people, you have to go all the way into their suites. A lot of my friends are from Northeast. I don't think there's loyalty to a dorm. We're all here on campus together."

> To write for News, or not to write for News, that, is the question.

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
(02/8/01-02/14/01)

Rebel	6 pks.	4.99	+dep.	Vendange 750, White Zinf.	2.99
Rebel	Case 24	17.99	+dep.	Sutter Home 750 White Zinf.	3.99
Spaten Lager	6 pks.	8.99	+dep.	Sutter Home 750 Chardonnay	4.99
Honey Brown	12pks.	7.99	+dep.	Kendall Jackson 750 Chardonnay	9.99
Michael Shea	12pks.	7.99	+dep.	Conchay Toro 1.5 All Kinds	9.99
				Rubinoff Vodka	9.99
				Malibu Rum 750	12.99
				Jack Daniel 1 ltr.	19.99

Thursday between 5 & 8 beer tasting with Dinkal Acker
Register for prizes

THURSDAY
"Pub Night"
House DJ DK
Spinning Hip Hop, Rap and R&B 18+

FRIDAY
"House Night"
18+
Guest DJ

SATURDAY
DJ Skeptical
18+
Spinning Top 40, Hip Hop, Rap and R&B

Drink Specials
16 oz. Icehouse $1.99
20 oz. MillerLite $2.99

fun•food•spirits
THE PUB
uncheese
15 EAST PLEASANT STREET

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We have a lot to tell you about Raytheon and the exciting opportunities we have available. Plan on visiting our booth at your college career fair. If you are unable to attend the fair, please e-mail your resume to: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments), or mail to: Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information, including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, February 8, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Declining ALANA?
a concern for all

Are ALANA numbers declining across the University of Massachusetts campus?

The evidence currently at hand, as discovered by the campus organization SCARCE and reported in the Collegian in several recent stories, is convincing. Also, merely having eyes and glancing around campus provides the most telling evidence of all.

This is unacceptable.

The University of Massachusetts has always prided itself on being a diverse campus. This diversity, the range of opinion and background, is absolutely essential to a challenging and complete college experience, and, if ever found lacking, will seriously dilute both the appeal and effectiveness of UMass.

The allegations raised by SCARCE are serious. If the University is juggling figures to exaggerate the population of ALANA students, this is unforgivable. A deception of this sort would be utterly unacceptable. The University needs to come clean about how their figures are compiled.

If it turns out that there is a discrepancy between past methods of reporting and those currently used, the reasons why need to be explained and the consequences dealt with.

Regardless of this, however, it is obvious and proven that the real numbers, and the humanity which they represent, have declined seriously. One of the prime reasons often cited in the struggle over the decline is the altering of the admissions standards over the past several years.

The facts about these changes can be found in our feature story on page one. Are these changes for the better? If one of the results of these changes is the current decline, then the Collegian feels that any gains these alterations may have brought to the University are overshadowed and rendered irrelevant next to the damages wrought.

The University must, involving students each and every step of the way, publicly and with full disclosure to interested groups, take drastic and immediate actions to determine the reasons for this decline and take firm steps to rectify the situation. If it means acknowledging that past decisions were poorly made, then so be it. If it involves taking drastic action unprecedented in the collegiate world, then so be it.

The Collegian firmly and totally backs the recent protests and feels that the issues raised by these unpalatable facts must be dealt with.

We cannot do it alone, however. It will take the outrage and action of all students to make the necessary changes happen. If we do not act in our own self-interest, then no one else will act for us. The administration will not act unless forced. It is our job to force them.

All students must realize the value of what is being lost. The diversity of the campus population is irreplaceable and essential. Steps must be taken to stop the hemorrhaging of the campus before we are all bled white.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Whistling on winter break

DAN LAMOTHE

Okay, it's time for me to share. On my winter break, I decided to pick up some extra money by reliving my childhood and going back to refereeing youth league basketball in my hometown of Chicopee.

"A couple of games every weekend on Saturday," I reasoned. "What could be easier?" I played in high school and refereed all winter when I was a sophomore in high school. Cake, I thought. Easy money.

Hah! Four weeks into January and I've been through the wars, man. It takes years for a referee to go through the kinds of things that I've been through in the last month. It's just not right. The following are true stories (Sue me if I exaggerate a little).

Week one, January 4: I walk into the gym with Tom, my little brother. He's scorekeeping his first game and, naturally, is probably a little nervous. The first thing I learn is that we're officiating a game with the Chicopee Tigers. "No big deal," I think.

The other referee, a kid from my high school team, is worried about it though. "Dude! You don't understand! This coach is crazy! I threw him out of a 9-10 [age division] game last year!" This is a cause for concern. Parents that get thrown out of 9-10 games are nuts. I don't want to die.

Amazingly, things go smoothly. The game is harmless, and ends peacefully. The second game goes about the same, with no major problems. "Not a bad start," I think to myself. "This is as easy as I remember it being."

Week two, January 11: As I confidently walk in on a cold morning with Tom again, I'm expecting another easy week. Hah! Not a chance, my friends. Our first game of the morning pitted one group of Bad News Bears against another. The big difference between the two teams is that one team had a goofy five foot eight kid and the other team was all kids less than five feet tall. At halftime, the score was 16-1. Then the fireworks began.

Early in the second half, three or four kids tied the ball up near a sideline where the majority of the parents were sitting. The big goofy kid on the team leading fell to the floor with the ball, landing on top of a smaller player that had tied the ball up. As both the other referee and I blew the whistle for a jump ball, chaos broke loose. Obviously, when one player falls on another one, either one of them could get hurt. When one of the players happens to outweigh the other by oh, say, 150 pounds, bad things happen. As soon as they hit the floor, Armageddon.

From the top row of the bleachers, the mother of the small kid in the pile screamed at the top her lungs, and hurtled herself down onto the court. Pushing the big goofy kid back, she roared, "You hurt my baby! You big bully!"

She proceeded to scream at the other referee and I for losing control of the game, and pulled her son onto the sidelines, kissing and fondling his head where it had hit the floor. She also screamed at the larger player, now bewildered, for his attitude. "You meant to hurt him, and you didn't even say you're sorry!!! This is inexcusable!"

Losing my cool, I yelled to the woman to get off the floor. Casting me a look of death, she went back into the stands. The game resumed, and the blowout ended. Later on, I found that the woman was a lunch lady at my high school, Chicopee Comprehensive. Who would a thunk it? Meanwhile, Tom gets death-ray looks from the lady every day in the lunch line, since he was the scorekeeper for the game and walked out with me.

Week three, January 18: Proving that there is no justice in the world, I learn that the big goofy kid has been suspended for a week due to, well, being big and goofy. Apparently, enough parents on the losing team from the week before called the Superintendent of Parks and Recreation with complaints where he suspended the kid for a game without viewing a single tape.

To make matters worse, the goofy player's coach wanted an explanation as to why I had not stopped the suspension from happening.

"You said you would call him [the Superintendent], so how come he's still suspended!" he demanded. Sometimes it's difficult to explain how the opinion of one teenage college kid does not carry as much weight as twenty angry parents.

The games themselves were going pretty smoothly until the lights in the entire gym went out while the ball was in play. Once I blew the whistle, the ball went dead. Evidently, a father leaning against the wall managed to slip up and turn all the lights out with his shoulder. I wonder about that one. Play was suspended for about five minutes while the lights slowly came back up to full strength.

"Sometimes it's difficult to explain how the opinion of one teenage college kid does not carry as much weight as twenty angry parents."

Week four, January 25: I expected my last week of refereeing to go smoothly. The teams walking in encouraged my hopes for an easy afternoon.

It isn't every week when you referee fifth, sixth and seventh grade boys when both teams playing actually know the rules, don't hack the ever living tar out of the other team and can get the ball up and down the floor without it going out of bounds and stopping the clock every other play.

"This will be good," I thought.

I was right. The game itself went very smoothly. The sidelines were a whole other matter, though. Early in the second half, I looked to the sidelines after calling a foul. Out of the corner of my eye, I saw a group of people standing around a man who was obviously in pain. The man was having a heart attack. Everyone else in the gym seemed to notice it at the same time I did, and the place went deathly quiet. With the game stopped, referees, kids and parents alike sat in shock, wondering. The man pleaded out loud, begging.

"Please, help me...oxygen..."

After about a half hour wait, the paramedics and ambulance personnel finally wheeled the man away on a stretcher, hopefully without worry. The worst appeared to be over, anyway. I only hope the man did ok.

Dan Lamothe is a UMass student.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBJ
www.monkey-box.net
"SURE YOU CAN HAVE SOME FEED, MR. GOAT! OHHH, DON'T WORRY ABOUT THANKING ME NOW-- I'LL JUST EAT YOU LATER!" © 2001

THEY TOLD ME THIS THING MADE THE BUSINESS CYCLE OBSOLETE!
COMPLAINTS
--AND YOU BELIEVED THEM BECAUSE---?
THE NEW ECONOMY
GUARANTEED RECESSION PROOF!
BRIAN GARGANE

Write for Ed/Op!

Wanted: A "little" help

BRIAN LOHNES

I'm an idiot. Anyone who has read anything that I have written over the last couple years probably already knows this. For those of you who don't, now you do. My girlfriend realizes that I am an idiot and she has suggested a simple solution to my problem: I need a 24-hour "companion." Basically this "companion" will do all the things my medulla oblongata doesn't do and instruct me not to do stupid things.

So who or what would be the perfect companion? My first choice is not too original at all, but it seems to be the most logical. I choose Vern Troyer, otherwise known as Mini-Me in Austin Powers. Vern is small and would fit nicely in my backpack during classes, and he would be pretty cost effective because a dude as small as him can't eat all that much. Also, in the even of a water landing, he turns into a floatation device.

Now you must be asking yourself, "How much of an ass could this kid really be"?

Answer: A big one. I will begin my tale of woe a mere twenty years ago when I was just a slimy, squiggly, large-headed baby. That's when my parents dropped me. Ok, so enough of the past.

A couple of weeks back a special opportunity was afforded to me by my boss. The offer was that I had to take a half-day and get paid for the full day. That afternoon after work I excitedly told Kerri, my girlfriend, expecting her to at least show some sort of positive emotion that I was getting half of the day off. Instead I was greeted by the same shocked and horrified look I get when I tell her most of the things I tell her, followed by, "What the hell's the matter with you?" She then listed several reasons why I shouldn't be excited about doing this job. Strangely, all the reasons that made me excited to do the job were the reasons she used to tell me not to do it. Fear not, I did do the job. Shortly thereafter I placed the clothes I had on in a plastic bag and had them incinerated per order of my roommates because they said I smelled like the back end of a Bison.

This situation would have been drastically different with the addition of a "companion." First off, I could have lowered Vern into the tank and then smelled him to gage the strength of the stench. Secondly, I would have been told by Vern that it wasn't a very bright idea to go underground into tanks.

The next instance where a "companion" would have been handy was two weeks ago when my friend's truck broke down in the woods and we had to go out and fix it. Unfortunately, I omitted gloves, a hat, common sense, a winter jacket and boots. So there I was, lying in the snow under the truck, a cold and wet moron. We got the truck fixed all right, but I got frostbite on my back from lying in the snow. I'd also like to add that driving in the woods isn't all that bright an idea to begin with. This situation changes drastically with the addition of Vern. If Vern came along I could have stolen the hat and scarf he would have been wearing and then I could have sprawled on top of him under the truck to keep my back warm. Man my girlfriend is smart; this sounds like a great idea.

Moving on to just last week, I was hit by a car. Go ahead and read that last line again; pause slowly and proceed on. In the center of Amherst I got clipped by a car while crossing the street, in a crosswalk with the large white "WALK" sign on and a loud buzzer ringing. Luckily the elderly woman in the car was fine while I lay sprawled out on the curb. As I was walking in front of the car I heard the engine rev up and I lept (a liberal use of the word there) to the sidewalk but my foot glanced off the bumper and I spun around on the curb. Vern would have taken the hit for me in that situation.

Admittedly, this wasn't my own fault, but I guess I could have been paying more attention to the little details of the people waiting at the light, such as those wearing the huge cataract sun-glasses. You know the ones -- the Terminator-style wrap arounds.

Unfortunately it doesn't look as though I will be able to find myself a 24-hour companion anytime soon, unless an intrepid reader would like to provide me with protection from myself for the amazing salary of zero dollars. Surely I could remedy this situation myself by using the basic common sense that allows everyone else on this planet to lead relatively incident free lives. But then again, I wouldn't have as many good stories to tell if I did.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

ARTS AND LIVING

From the people who brought you "Teen Angst" and "The Pokemon Phenomenon"

Attack of the Schlock Monster

Stepdaughter vs. Crocodile

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

THE STEPDAUGHTER
Directed by Peter Laipis
With Andrea Roth, Gil Gerade and Jaimz Woolvett
Available on Trimark Home Video

In the tradition of The Hand that Rocks the Cradle, Basic Instinct and Who Framed Roger Rabbit comes one of the most brilliantly crafted pieces of "watch-out for the evil lady killing people," cinema ever created. A star-studded cast with some very credible backgrounds leads the film into battle for the title of Ultimate Straight-to-Video Film!

The Stepdaughter tells the story of Susan Heller (Andrea Roth), a beautiful, perfect woman with no flaws what so ever. Well, there's the whole thing about going into people's houses and killing them, but that's not that big of a deal.

Susan is haunted by the awful reality of her past, a sordid tale that includes jumping from foster home to foster home and killing people – like foster children often do. The twist to this murderous prodigy's life is that she has found a way for revenge. The tagline on the film's art cover is "She's home for a killer reunion." Yes, yes she is.

Much like Norman Bates and Eminem, the root of all of Susan's problems began with a mother that just didn't give her enough hugs when she was a child. To make up for this, Susan has sex with a random man and kills him. Oh, and she kills her mother too.

Susan somehow (we never actually find out how) finds her original mother in the middle of the boon docks out west, and kills her. Along the way, some guy named Paris, played by thespian Gary Hudson, says something really annoying along the lines of, "Hey, you said she likes to work on horses," when he's asked if he likes the idea of hiring Susan on the farm. Thank goodness Susan doesn't kill him.

Susan's half-sister, Linda (Lisa Dean Ryan, best known for playing Doogie Howser's girlfriend, Wanda) is the only person who suspects that something may be wrong. You see, Linda reads detective novels. That, by the constitution of the United States of America, makes her smarter than everyone else. Guess what the detective novels taught Linda. They taught her to never trust the scary stranger who lives in your house and kills people. That knowledge is what eventually saves her life.

Susan is not entire evil, though. Somehow, she befriends Buddy, her simple minded but teddy-bearish half brother. The irony here is that Susan kills Buddy's best friend Will at the beginning of the film. Will is the random guy Susan found at the bar to kill. See how it all connects?

Anyway, Buddy kills Susan at the end. So technically, Buddy is a murderer too. Look for Jaimz Woolvett, the actor who played Buddy, to be nominated for an Oscar. If Tom Hanks can get nominated for that mediocre film where he played a simpleton, then there's no way the Academy can pass up Woolvett. He shows us his "special place."

The rest of the film has Susan trying to kill people, and no one trying to kill Susan. She kills a nurse, a guy she meets a bar and lots of characters that you don't care about.

You could spend this upcoming weekend seeing crappy thrillers like Hannibal. But if you want real quality, with nothing but shear, surprising entertainment, rent The Stepdaughter. If you don't, Susan will kill you.

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

CROCODILE
Directed by Tobe Hooper
With Rhett Jordan and Chris Solari

Everyone must certainly remember Rhett Jordan as Party-Goer #3 in Macroscopic Boy, a brilliant look at a very small child. Uniting the multi-talented Jordan with formerly well-respected Tobe Hooper, who brought America one of the two most influential horror films of all time with The Texas Chainsaw Massacre (the other was George Romero's Night of the Living Dead), was brilliance on behalf of the always hard-working Trimark Home Video.

Having Jordan and Hooper unite on a film about a crocodile, cleverly titled Crocodile, in a movie market devoid of such films other than the four related crocodile films and the six related gator movies, is biblical: there's been a virtual desert of films about vicious repto-amphibians. Oh, well, there was Lake Placid. But other than that, there haven't really been any.

Trimark saw a void in the market and like the responsible producer of video entertainment that it is, they decided that they should be the ones to bring the croc-deprived people of this world a new film and thus, Crocodile.

Easily the best film ever made about crocodiles in 2000 (and not surprisingly, the only one made in 2000), the story focuses on the suffering of a female crocodile who's eggs are disturbed or stolen or something – it's been a while since I saw the film and we'd been drinking. Needless to say, the gatordile's given reason for much anger and frustration at the world, and therein lies the problem: who will be the recipient of that boiling internal rage?

Why, a boat full of teenagers on a senior trip, or perhaps just an aqua adventure. Before they even start, the Ides of March butt in, sending mean Mr. Man, the police, into the story to play the role of antagonist. He tries to keep the kids from drinking or screwing or some other rebellious behavior that the movie's characters never have done before, as they spend their whole trip engaging in these various forms of debauchery. The gatordile, well, she's having none of it, crashing the houseboat and eating a few of the kids before they escape into the hills. She follows.

They have one of her eggs after all, even though they don't know it. See one of the kids, known to horror movie fans as the nerdy one who can't get laid so he plays jokes instead and subsequently gets killed first, had taken one of the remaining eggs and hidden it in the main character's backpack. Silly dead nerdy kid.

Anyway, so there they run, towards the hills, and the crocogator gives chase because, hey, if someone stole your egg, you'd want it back, right? And of course she does, giving chase and eating kids all the way until the very end when the main boy, who the movie lets us like, then makes us hate, then lets us like again, gets eaten and then coughed up, alive, after the girl gives the egg back when she finally realizes she has it.

So to recap: gator eats a kid whole, then coughs up kid, whole, uninjured and still whole. See, this movie succeeds because it's based on reality, not like these other films today like Saving Private Ryan or The Insider. No, Tobe Hooper wouldn't allow anything blatantly stupid in his movies, like a giant crocodile that actually chews its victims.

Crocodile was really, really good, like throwing up after a night of drinking is, because you know the alcohol's out of you and you won't have to deal with it anymore. Crocodile's good like that, as opposed to say good like entertaining or fun or palatable.

Layout and design by Alan Basque

Breaking news: St. Francisville haunting caught on tape

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

THE ST. FRANCISVILLE EXPERIMENT
Trimark Home Video

ORCHARD HILL – A film titled The St. Francisville Experiment, courtesy of Trimark Home video, was screened in an Orchard Hill dorm Monday night for the purpose of review. Two witnesses were present. One witness, Collegian Boy Band Expert Kurt Polesky, was at his roommate's computer at the start of the film, not particularly torn between professional wrestling websites and the horror about to unfold. The other witness, Mitch, was initially excited about a cheesy new horror flick.

"I don't care if it's a cheap Blair Witch rip-off, I'm sure it will be funny," he remarked. Mitch's hope soon turned to sorrow, however, as the film's awful prologue prepared the room for the worst, and brought all attention to the delivery food ordered an hour ago. According to the intro of the film, four people will spend a night in an old house to verify or disprove rumors that the former residence is haunted. Thankfully, the catchphrase of "this ain't no walk in the woods" dispels all worries that the film might be a cash run following Blair Witch's success.

"When the hell is that calzone going to get here?" Mitch asked, eyes fixed on the screen, during a moment of immense terror. Loud whooping and cheers greeted the "not for sale or rental" disclaimer on the screen, while betting commenced on how long it would stay on the screen, as the pile of cash and jewelry on the rug grew taller. Since the disclaimer outlasted all of the room's bets, the money was returned and the witnesses proceeded to invent drinking games designed with the disclaimer's screen time in mind.

As voodoo priestess Ava Kay Jones gave story background for the St. Francisville house, it was wondered aloud how much cooler this film would be if Cleo the tarot card reader from TV were in it, as she would probably "keep it real." Upon entering the house, the four-person team (a leader, a psychic, a historian, and a filmmaker) was shocked by a cheap sparking and collapsing chandelier, a scene that drew comparisons to the special effects in The Matrix.

"It's really exciting watching four losers use silly instruments searching the house for cold spots," Mitch observed, with an unhealthy mix of sarcasm and contempt. Meanwhile, Kurt silently laments the fact that ProWrestlingTorch.com has not been updated recently, but remains unintrigued by the film. The most exciting scene in the film so far, a cat meowing as it jumps out of a closet, is dissected in slow motion to reveal that the cat's mouth was closed while he was meowing loudly.

As the film draws to a close, there is visible disappointment in the room that a story card introducing a section of the film titled "The Cleansing" doesn't lead to a shower scene with the cute historian. A room-wide poll finds Vince McMahon, Cita from BET, and Flavor Flav as the frontrunners in a survey of whom we would most like to see exploring this haunted house. Towards the end of The St. Francisville Experiment there are some moderately cool developments, like someone getting sucked into a floor and characters becoming mysteriously chained and prepped for butchering, but apparently not enough to dispel the talk of "longest 76 minutes of my life" that filled the air.

You'll never want to turn to Page 5 again!!

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

COURTESY TRAVELING MATT

Traveling Matt, UMass' own acoustic jazz-rockers, will be supporting the release of their new album Stories for a Day tomorrow, February 9 at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. Boston band Chasing Grey will open the show at 9:30 p.m.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS - "Christopher Wilmarth: living inside" presents a selection of sculptures, drawings, and prints by an artist best known for a sparely sensuous style that marries formal elements with mysterious reverie. "Brenda Shaman/ Figure Ground: Color Studies of Chuck Close, Evander Holyfield, and John Yau" features this artist's most recent paintings series which marks a further step in her ongoing investigation of color and light as they are translated into psychological content. "Christopherr Wilmath" will be on view from February 3 through March 16 and then April 1 through May 18. Figure Ground will be on view from February 3 through March 16.

UMASS - "Intertwined/Ever Collapsing." Paintings by Sarah Walker concerned with psychological space, personal states of reverie and synthetic spatial constructions as potential containers, all contributing to the landscape of recall. January 22 to February 15. Hampden Gallery, with a gallery talk on February 15, 4 p.m. and a closing reception on February 15, 5-7 p.m.

UMASS - "Dreaming: Prophecies, Speculations, and Good Guesses." A collection of works created to reflect a visionary gaze into the personal and social future of society. "Dreaming" will run from February 12 to March 9 in the Augusta Savage Gallery, with an opening reception on Monday, February 12 from 5 to 7 p.m.

AMHERST - "Armenia: Photographs of Monasteries, Portraits of People." Black and white prints by Edwin Nazarian. Burnett Gallery, Jones Library through February 15.

SMITH COLLEGE - "The Refugees." Two life sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck depicting refugees carrying a child and all their worldly possessions. Part of the Khan Institute's "Anatomy of Exile" project. Through May 28. For more information, call (413) 585-4292. Third floor, Neilson Library.

SMITH COLLEGE - "Biblical Women." Story quilts by artist Lee Porter, depicting several scenes women from the Bible. Through March 30. Reception and gallery talk 5 to 7 p.m., Friday, February 23. For more information, call (413) 585-2043. Alumnae House Gallery, 33 Elm St.

NORTHAMPTON - "Gardens Large and Small." A collection of eighteen impressionistic watercolor paintings reflecting the artist's love of landscape. February 1-28 at the Forbes Library.

NORTHAMPTON - "Exposed Surfaces: Architectural and Other Moments." Black and white photography by Michael Shally-Jensen centered around the surfaces and textures of architecture. February 3-March 1 at the Forbes Library, with an opening reception at 1:00 p.m. on Saturday, February 3.

WILLIAMSTOWN - "Photography EXPOSED." Includes 45 examples of portraiture as part of the Williams College Museum of Art's 75th anniversary celebration. The exhibit will continue until September 3, 2001. The Museum is open Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 a.m., and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS - "The Vagina Monologues." Based on interviews with a diverse group of hundreds of women, "The Vagina Monologues" explores questions often pondered but seldom asked about the relationship between women and their vaginas. 7 p.m., February 14. Tickets go on sale February 1 by phone: 545-2511.

SMITH COLLEGE - "The Next Stage." A concert by 2001 MFA candidates in dance, featuring work by Kerri Underwood, choreographic winner at the 2000 American College Dance Festival, among others. February 8 through 10, at 8 p.m. in Theatre 14 of the Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts. Tickets are $7 for the general public and $5 for students and seniors. For tickets or more information, call (413) 585-ARTS.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE - "Hampshire College Winter Dance Concert." Eight solo and kinetic group works will be presented in the annual Winter Dance concert February 16 to 18 at 8 p.m. in the Dance Studio Theatre at Hampshire College. Reservations are recommended and may be made by calling (413) 559-5889 after February 5. Tickets are $6 for general admission and $4 for students.

AMHERST COLLEGE - "The Doctor in Spite of Himself." The Amherst College Department of Theatre and Dance presents Moliere's raunchy, comedic romp February 13-18 at 8 p.m. in the Experimental Theatre, Amherst College. Admission is free, but reservations are suggested; call 542-2277 between 1 and 4 p.m. and until 8 p.m. on performance nights.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS - "Transformations." Six works that explore the history of piano transcription and demonstrate the vast range of colors that the piano has to offer will be featured on the third recital of the UMass "2000-2001 Piano Series." The concert, featuring University of Massachusetts Professor Estella Kersenbaum Olevsky, will take place in Bezanson Recital Hall on Sunday, February 11, at 3 p.m. Tickets are $8 for the general public and $4 for students, elders and children under the age of 18, and can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (545-2511) or at Bezanson Recital Hall on the afternoon of the performance.

UMASS - "Third Annual Graduate Composers Concert." The concert will feature exciting new compositions and arrangements by University of Massachusetts graduate jazz majors and undergraduate composers. Bezanson Recital Hall, February 13 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for general public, and $4 for students, elders, and children under 18, and can be purchased in advance at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (545-2511), or at Bezanson Recital Hall on the evening of the concert.

UMASS - "National Association of Teachers of Singing Benefit Concert." Several of the area's prominent voice teachers and performers will take part in a benefit concert for the Association's local educational offerings. February 18 at 4 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $10 for general public, and $5 for students, elders, and children under 18, and can be purchased in advance at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (545-2511), or at Bezanson Recital Hall on the evening of the concert.

SMITH COLLEGE - Area faculty will give a flute concert at Sweeny Concert Hall, Sage Hall on February 10, 8 p.m. The concert will feature the world premiere of Amherst College faculty member Lewis Spratlan's "Mafiles," set to poems by Richard Wilbur. Admission is free.

SMITH COLLEGE - "Music from the Ashes of the Holocaust." The concert will feature works by Jewish composers imprisoned in Theresienstadt before their deaths. Friday, February 9 at 4:30 p.m. in the Sweeny Concert Hall, Sage Hall. For more information, call (413) 585-ARTS.

SMITH COLLEGE - Smith College faculty fortepianist Monica Jakuc will present a concert of chamber music on Friday, February 16 at 8 p.m. in Sweeny Concert Hall, Sage Hall. This concert is free.

SMITH COLLEGE - "Boys Choir of Harlem." The world-renowned choir, featuring 62 conservatory-trained boys in grades 4 through 12, will present a public concert of classical, spiritual, jazz and pop works at 7 p.m. on February 8 in John M. Greene Hall.

NORTHAMPTON - "Ritmo y Candela/Rhythm & Fire." 15 Latino musicians will perform at the Academy of Music at 2 p.m. on Sunday, February 11. Tickets are $10 in advance (available at For the Record in Amherst) and $12 at the door.

COURTESY NORTHAMPTON ARTS COUNCIL

Ritmo Y Candela (Rhythm and Fire!), a night of salsa music from such legendary performers as Patato Valdes, Chocolate Armentero, Gracielo and Jimmy Sabater will take place Sunday, February 11 at 2 p.m. at the Academy of Music in Northampton.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS - "Conversation with Peter Tolan." Tolan, an Emmy award winning writer who has worked on such television programs as "Murphy Brown" and "Home Improvement," will talk and answer questios on February 9, 10:30 a.m. to noon in the Curtain Theatre at the Fine Arts Center. For more information, call Friends of the Fine Arts Center at 545-3671. This event is free and open to students and community members.

SMITH COLLEGE - The Smith College Theatre Department's New Play Reading Series presents "No Man," an evening of short works by MFA Playwriting graduate student Mark Van Wye. The reading will take place on Thursday, February 8 at 7:30 p.m. in Earle Recital Hall, Sage Hall. Admission is Free.

WIN FREE BOOKS!

$300 Book Credit University of Massachusetts UMASS UNIVERSITY STORE

To be eligible you must completely fill out a survey at the door of the UMass vs. Maine game on Friday, February 9th at 7:00 pm at the Mullins Center. The winner will be drawn after the 1st intermission. You must be in attendance to win.

UMass VS MAINE

FRIDAY NIGHT
WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER
February 9th
7:00 pm
STUDENT TICKETS FREE
FOR UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS WITH UMASS STUDENT ID
545-0810

The wedding was a huge success.

The marriage was a different story.

Come join us on February 15th at 7:00p.m. in Campus Center rm.101

Hope for a Lasting Marriage?

Sponsored by: Campus Crusade for Christ
yako@external.umass.edu

MANY MIDDLE SCHOOLERS IN LOW-INCOME AREAS ARE WRITING AT AN ELEMENTARY LEVEL.

CRYSTAL BRAKKE DETERMINED TO CHANGE THAT FOR HER EIGHTH GRADERS IN RURAL NORTH CAROLINA. ONE YEAR LATER, HER STUDENTS ARE WRITING AS WELL AS ANY OTHER EIGHTH GRADERS IN THE STATE.

WE NEED MORE CRYSTAL BRAKKES.

INFORMATION SESSION
Wednesday, February 14, 2001 • 4:00 p.m.
University of Massachusetts
Room 201 Machmer

TEACHFORAMERICA
1-800-TFA-1230 WWW.TEACHFORAMERICA.ORG
SECOND APPLICATION DEADLINE IS FEBRUARY 26, 2001

XFL looks rough but promising

Well, your waiting is over and the XFL has made its mark on the modern sports world. I don't know about you, but for over a year I have been anticipating the day that the game would be unveiled, ever since the day Vince McMahon announced his creation of a real football league. The promise of bringing people into the huddle and locker room with the players and into the mind of the coaches was made last year by WWF guru McMahon in a press conference. He had a vision of bringing football to its primordial roots of violence and expression, the stuff that made football great to watch and root for. A few weeks later, NBC became fifty/fifty partners in his vision with the agreement that they would broadcast the priority games in the largest markets, re-entering them into the world of football, which CBS bought from them.

Last Saturday NBC in conjunction with Titan Entertainment debuted the XFL. It is a new brand of football for serious football fans. The biggest changes between the NFL and XFL (besides attitude) are some of the basic rules of the game. For instance, when a team is punting there are no fair catches; however, the receiver has a five-yard halo zone between himself and a tackler. Once a ball has gone twenty-five yards on a punt it is a free ball. Receivers can have one foot out of bounds when they receive a catch in the end zone or on the sideline. My favorite rule is the legalization of the bump and run by defender to receiver as long as the quarterback still has the ball – finally a game that can be played like "NFL Blitz." There is no extra point kick in the XFL; instead, to receive the seven the team must complete a conversion play. The XFL has replaced the traditional coin toss with a twenty-five yard dash and fight for the football, a practice that has already left a player for the Orlando Rage out for the season, which means he will not get paid.

Players are allowed and encouraged to express themselves during the game, and with every player wired for sound and a cameraman sporting a steady-cam and football protection gear, they constantly do. Fans can spot their favorite player not only by his last name, but also by the nickname or phrase that the player has imprinted on his jersey. The most popular one has been "He Hate Me." worn by a wide receiver for the Las Vegas Outlaws. According to the XFL this outpouring of emotion by the players is the heart and soul of the league. They play because they love the game, not because of money. And if you think they are just saying that for sound bytes, take a look at how people get paid. Everyone gets five thousand dollars per game, but the winning team gets twenty-five hundred for every win. So if you don't play or if you get injured for the season you do not get any money.

But the question remains: how was it? Well, despite the harsh reviews by sports columnist in both local and national papers and sports networks, I rather liked it. The players aren't experienced, and yet that naivete makes for high-energy plays. They tackle like high-school freshmen, going after any limb they can get their hands on. It is this intensity that I enjoy. The mad scramble for the first down, for control of the ball, grabbing the fumble, and going for the win, is what I like the most – they want to play and they want to win. But I have a feeling that as the league grows and as the players relearn how to play the game of football after having an extended hiatus the plays will become smooth and the players will be able to handle the pressure that comes with playing the game.

I have already picked my favorite team in the XFL, who I believe will go all the way, the Las Vegas Outlaws. Not only is their logo of a steer's decomposed skull cool and terrifying, but Las Vegas has a history of winners. Bugsy Siegel for example. At one part he was a tough guy mobster, the muscle for lucky Luciano and Meyer Lansky, but he turned a barren desert in the middle of nowhere into what is now the entertainment capitol of the world. The Outlaws are the Bugsy Siegel's of the XFL: from their underdog victory will come forth many years of extreme football enjoyment.

I also am picking the Las Vegas Outlaws as my pick because of defensive back Rory Blackwell; he was a University of Massachusetts Minuteman. Blackwell, according to the stats on the Outlaw homepage, returned 11 kickoffs for a total 221 yards, was ranked sixth on Umass all-time pass defended list, and was a collegiate pass deflection leader. He is a former NY Giant, Oakland Raider, and Cleveland Brown. I have to root for the alum of UMass – I'm not really sure why but it just feels right.

As for the XFL cheerleaders, they are not that scandalous. Yes they have no combined rhythm but in the spirit of the rest of the league, it's all about energy and attitude.

For those skeptics out there who think it's a waste of time and has no redeeming quality, I present this argument. On the Sunday game between the San Francisco Demons and the LA Extreme there were fifteen seconds remaining with the Demons in field goal range down by two and no time-outs left. They had just botched a spike attempt so the clock was ticking and every offensive player was yelling toward the sideline, "Mayday." Confused and desperately wanting to win in front of their home crowd the kicking team ran out with ten seconds on the clock and ticking. The ball was hiked at eight seconds, placed at six seconds, kicked at five seconds and went through the goal posts when the regulation clock hit zero, ending the game with the Demons winning by one point. The energy and desire to win, led to in my opinion as the greatest play in football history. The XFL will not go away anytime soon, but I predict it will gain momentum as the teams get more experienced and more psyched to play. It may not be in competition with the NFL, but it has proven that it can compete.

Nick Pizzolato is a Collegian Columnist. Information from LasVegasOutlaws.com was used in this column.

S Club 7 invades U.S. (badly)

VARIOUS
A Tribute to the Scorpions
Hammer

The Scorpions were easily the best ever rock band to come out of the Eastern Bloc during the 80's and the fact that there hasn't been a tribute band to this ground-breaking group is absolutely shocking.

Wait, no it isn't.

If the Scorpions weren't busy attempting to "Rock You Like a Hurricane," they were busy blowing in the "Winds of Change," a song that was outrageously not even on this album, thus rendering this album worthless. Totally and completely worthless, as that song was one of two popular songs that the Scorpions ever had.

As such, the brilliant renditions of "Hurricane" by Energy (it's the song that led Kimberly Goss to heavy metal, as she explains in the liner notes) and Scott Ian's S.O.D. sound exactly the same, except for the second version, which clocks in at a healthy 19 seconds. We only get the most guttural of shouts before, too early really, the song is over. Metal expert Rob Schultz, our ed/op editor, claims that's S.O.D.'s thing, but I'm not entirely sure that makes Ian's band anything better than total garbage. He claims he doesn't enjoy it too much either.

Rob also expressed outrage that there's no cover of "The Zoo," but perhaps he, and other mega-Scorpion's fans out there, can relax while listening to Sonata Arctica's cover of "Still Loving You" which isn't actually half-bad, a definite surprise on an album of ... well, not much at all.

Other good covers might be on this album, but the pictures in the CD booklet were far too entertaining to avoid – more mullets and guys with really long hair who probably could only hope to tour with Winger were pictured, except for one brilliant group that looked, for all the world, like Mr. Roboto. Metallium's cover of "Another Piece of Meat" was decent, if the horrific singing or inability to make the song appealing is ignored; if it weren't for the fact that they look like Robin William's character from Bicentennial Man, they shouldn't even be on this album. Speaking of things from the liner notes, most of the bands wrote a small tribute to the Scorpions, but it was Prolopower who summed it up best when they wrote that "Die Scorpions waren die erste deutsche Rockband, die mit der Kraft einer Dampflock in die internationale Szene herin fuhren." So true Prolopower, so true.

Of course, nothing forgives the absence of a "Winds of Change" cover. All of the bands on this album probably don't want to admit that the mighty mean and powerful Scorpions would ever make a rock ballad, and a damn fine one at that. The fact that they all lacked the attachment to their feminine sides enough to suck it up and cover that fine song renders this album totally and completely worthless. (Sam Wilkinson)

S Club 7
Seven
Interscope Records

S-Club 7's latest album Seven is a musical triumph, an incredible balls to the wall musical creation. The ripples from this tidal wave of artistic brilliance will likely be felt in the industry for years to come. Oh yea, that last part, about this being a good album – I lied.

Even Eminem would probably thank god for Britney and N'sync after listening to this dribble. As far as teen pop music goes, this is about as bad as it gets. Combine the singing talent of Jennifer Lopez, the rapping ability of LFO, and the song writing skills of O-Town, and you've got S-Club 7.

Don't know who S-Club 7 is? Well there are significant others

seven of them.

4 girls and 3 guys. They are immensely popular in Europe, and Canada and even have their own show on "Fox Family." The "lucky seven" – Tina, Paul, Jon, Bradley, Jo, Hannah, and Rachel – were brought together by Spice Girls creator Simon Fuller.

What can really be said about an album like this? It is unrelentingly bubbly and upbeat pop music. The beats all sound like someone just hit the "Demo" button on the keyboard and called it a day in the studio. The songs have titles like "The Color of Blue," "Best Friend" and "Love Train" and sound strikingly similar, and non of them is good. Ok, so I sort of liked "I'll Keep Waiting," but that's about it. It's the type of music that Joseph Lieberman probably wants his kids listening to: nothing objectionable, with nauseating dosages of positivity.

S-Club 7 has already taken over Europe and parts of Canada, and has just begun their attack on the U.S. One would think the market is ripe for them with the exploding teen pop market being fueled by the TRL loving MTV generation. However, I give those screaming teenage girls who wanna "Have Carson's baby" more credit than that. S-Club 7 is missing all those things that are so much fun about teen pop: Britney's implants, boy band "thug appeal," sexually suggestive lyrics while denying their existence. Here in America we have our own "bad music," and ours is better; we don't need yours Europe. (Kurt Polesky)

THE TENDER IDOLS
Distressor
E-Magine

Good god, this band essentially exists to produce music that sounds suspiciously like a watered-down version of the first Beta album. Distressor isn't a good album per se. Nay, it isn't even a bad album.

Instead, it suffers from some sort of lingering blandness. Like a cancer spreading uncontrolled, as each song goes by on the aptly named Distressor, boredom is everywhere in this album. It is so mundane it hurts, so routine it pains.

There's nothing more on this album than songs that sound like as if made by somebody else and left on the cutting room floor. "Fighting" is an extremely basic ballad that has some wailing, bluesy guitars, the lead singer's simple voice, and a hint of crescendo for the worthless lyrical chorus. "Afraid to Move" is a castrated full-bore rock song, with a hard guitar riff and the constant whiff of Oasis, especially with the lead singer's delivery, and if not for the Oasis sound, The Tender Idols would definitely be considered Stone Roses rip-off artists.

The clever title of "(I Shot Down) Someone I Loved Tonight" is awful. Not only does the lead-singer Ian Webber (a suspiciously continuing problem of the band) sound absolutely poor while attempting to croon, the song's riffs are basic, the song's sound is simple. And while simple can be good, The Tender Idols have confused their adulation of bands and the subsequent copies of those better band's songs as enjoyably simple – it isn't.

Instead, it's simply intensely boring to listen to, perhaps even fathom, as there's nothing of any note on this back-bin album. (Sam Wilkinson)

we throw all kinds of [obstacles] at you.
tuition isn't one of them.

Sure, we'll have you climbing walls. But if you qualify for a 2- or 3-year scholarship, tuition's one obstacle you won't have to worry about. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. And get a leg up on your future.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Come and see what everyone is talking about!
UMASS ARMY ROTC @ (413) 545-2321

Get a HUGE tub of popcorn, watch some movies, and write for Arts!

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

UMass Yoga & Meditation Club
presents the 'Art of Living' Workshop
February 9th-14th
* 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, and increased awareness
* Yoga, breathing, and meditation techniques in a fun atmosphere
* Brings the mind to the present moment and allows you to give your 100% to everything you do
* Held in over 100 countries- recognized by the United Nations and World Health Organization

UMass to battle injuries, Rams

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

It's going to be interesting.

Fordham hosts the Massachusetts women's basketball team tonight, but the Minutewomen will be battling injury as much as it is battling the Rams.

A week ago, against Rhode Island, Ebony Pegues tore her anterior cruciate ligament and was lost for the remainder of the season. Pegues had been playing well of late and the loss of the talented off-guard forced head coach Joanie O'Brien to find someone else to step up and score points.

Enter sophomore Kristin Cannon. In the Minutewomen's next game, against St. Bonaventure, Cannon was placed in the starting lineup for the first time in her career and scored a career-high 17 points. But during Cannon's breakthrough game, she broke a finger and will be sidelined for the next ten days. Exit Cannon.

During that same game against the Bonnies, sophomore center Jen Butler went down with a leg injury. Butler has been the Maroon and White's most dominant player in the paint, leading the team consistently in points and rebounds. The loss of Butler is the most detrimental to the UMass lineup, and although the chances of seeing Butler on the court against Fordham are decent at 50/50, Butler will not be at 100 percent.

O'Brien will have to ask some of her role players to step up immediately if UMass is going to defeat the Rams for the second time this season.

"It's a scary game for us," O'Brien said. "We have kids out. Kristin's out, obviously Ebony's out and Jen is going to be a game time decision. Now we have to let some young players get out there and play and see what they can do."

DAN SAVITELLA/COLLEGIAN

Senior Kathy Coyner leads an injury-plagued Minutewomen squad into Fordham tonight in the Bronx.

In the Minutewomen's last match-up with Fordham, the Maroon and White beat up the Rams handily on both ends of the court. The 71-54 UMass win was highlighted by Kathy Coyner's second free throw with 1:44 left in the game, which was her 1,000th point of her career. Coyner finished with 10 points total.

Butler led the squad with 14 points and a ridiculous 22 rebounds. Pegues and Siiri Ellvandi each put up 11 and freshman Paige Harris put up ten more. Point distribution and strong team defense were key for UMass in the win.

Chelsea Keegan's 18 points led Fordham in the loss. Sophomore forward Mobolaji Akiode had 11 and senior guard Chinyere Vann added 10 for the Rams.

Fordham (4-17, 1-9 Atlantic 10) is all alone in the A-10 cellar. Senior guard Maureen Ryan and Aklode present the Rams' biggest scoring threats. Garvey averages 10.1 points per contest from the perimeter and Akiode is shooting 45 percent from the floor. Fordham is on an eight game losing streak and will be hungry for a win over the injury-plagued Minutewomen.

"Fordham is a talented team," O'Brien said. "We'll be a little bit undermanned. We just have to stick with the basics. We need Caroline and Siiri to play really well, Kathy to play under control and we need Paige to knock down some shots, which she is capable of. I'm a little bit nervous going into it."

UMass will hope its top gun, Coyner, can stick her shots from the outside and that one of its role players can step up and play big.

■ Coyner

continued from page 12

NCAA's. I had a great season."

That UMass squad was one of the best that ever passed through the program, finishing 19-11 overall and 11-5 in the Atlantic 10. Although they lost the A-10 title by a bucket, the team was invited to the NCAA tournament.

"We went out to Iowa," Coyner said. "The toughest place I ever played in my entire life. Hawkeye Arena. We probably had 20 people there; they had 1,200 people there. They got off to a 12-point lead, and we ended up losing by 12. Once we got the jitters out, we were all right."

The player-coach relationship

Relationships may be the most under-appreciated factor for a team's success. A player's relationship with her coach, teammates, and community are vital to the aura that surrounds a player and a program.

Head coach Joanie O'Brien personally recruited Coyner when she was an AAU and high school standout, and O'Brien even went down to little Belpre to see her future point guard's last game. O'Brien had a standout point guard at the time in Mitchell, but all college coaches know that once a player develops into the player you need them to be, they are on the brink of graduation. So O'Brien invested her future into Coyner.

Perhaps the most vital relationship for a point guard is her relationship with her coach. She is responsible for executing the X's and O's that the coach draws on the blackboard, and without a sense of trust from the coach to the player, uncertainty looms with each play on the hardwood.

"I think your relationship as a point guard with your coach is going to be a little bit different than anybody else," Coyner said. "She has to trust me, she has to know what I'm going to do. I have to know what she's saying without ever even saying it. She's an unbelievable X's and O's coach."

The relationship between the coach and guard has extended off the court. Coyner and O'Brien each express an admiration and respect for each other that is uncanny between most collegiate players and coaches.

"She's one of those people who have gotten the most out of what God has given her," O'Brien said. "As a basketball coach, the only thing you want for your players is to be the best they can be, and she fits that bill perfectly."

The past four years haven't been smooth sailing for either O'Brien or Coyner, and the challenges both have faced have strengthened that friendship.

"She's had to endure an awful lot here," O'Brien said. "It's been something different every year. Through it all, she's never lost her focus, which is to be the best she is capable of being. I think she has handled herself beautifully. Because of what we've both been through in the last four years, we developed one of those special relationships that I can see lasting forever."

The 2000-2001 season

This season hasn't been what most UMass women's hoops fans expected. The team was devastated when one of its best players, Smith, was injured, but the team bounced back. They have showed signs of being a team that is able to beat anyone on any given day. At other times, UMass has shown that is it able to lose to anyone on any given day. The Minutewomen are currently 10-11 and are fighting to move up from the middle of the pack in the A-10 standings.

Coyner is once again having a solid season. She is consistently putting up double-digit numbers, averaging 12.7 points per game. The senior co-captain has led the team in scoring seven times, with a career high 25 coming in a loss to James Madison. But she can't do it by herself, and inconsistent play has been a problem for this season's squad.

"We're just mediocre," Coyner said. "There are days when we'll play great, and there are days when we'll just play horrible. It's frustrating for me, because I know what it takes to win, and I've been there before I can't accept that. I don't want to accept that."

To make matters worse for the Minutewomen, sophomore Ebony Pegues was playing her best basketball when she injured her knee in a contest against Rhode Island, and she isn't expected to suit up again this season. The loss of Pegues forces the Maroon and White to find another consistent scorer off the bench.

"She provided big baskets for us in a lot of big games," Coyner said. "I think somebody else is going to have to step up to that role. There's only seven or eight games left, but someone needs to be able to do that. She really does love this game and it's going to be hard for her to sit back and watch. Hopefully, Nekole can help her through it."

UMass is battling back towards .500, but Coyner won't judge her whole career by the way her senior season ends. She has too many memories over the past four years that deserve as much recognition as this season does.

"No matter how this year ends, I had a great career here," Coyner said. "I've done more than I ever dreamed of doing as a basketball player."

Retirement is coming

The end of Coyner's 10-year career as a basketball player is getting closer by the day. She has realized, much like Smith and Pegues have unfortunately realized, that tomorrow's game isn't guaranteed. She is appreciating what she has today and what she has done over the past four years.

"I value the fact that I only have 9 or 10 games left in my entire basketball career that I started when I was in third grade when I couldn't even make it to the hoop," Coyner said. "I'm still having fun."

On January 28, 2001, Coyner entered the UMass record books as the 12th player ever to score 1,000 points in a Minutewomen uniform. For many players, it would be the highlight of her career. But not Coyner. She has realized the affect that she has played in the community and she knows that basketball, despite popular belief, isn't life. There are other things, much more important things than awards, that this biochemistry major from Ohio holds dear to her heart.

"The effect that I've had on the community and the kids here has meant the world to me," Coyner said. "Those are the kind of things that I cherish more than anything stat wise or basketball wise."

Added O'Brien: "A lot of people talk about the lack of female role models that are out there, but in this community, she's fit in perfectly. That's why you see so many little girls [at the Mullins Center] chasing her around, wanting to be like her. They relate to her because she relates to them. And that's something special."

The UMass women's basketball program won't be the only one who will miss Coyner. The University, the town, and the surrounding communities will miss her as well.

Kathy Coyner will soon be graduating, moving on to bigger and better things. But for once, Coyner will be forced to live life without basketball. And if she does that as well as she played hoops, other communities will appreciate Coyner as much as Amherst has.

Hamster rows its boat ashore; the Picassos of the garbage can

We're so sorry...this is by far our worst effort yet. We've failed miserably, and our pain is quite apparent. Go ahead, touch one of the words. Can you feel it? Can you feel the shaking and torment within?

Didn't think so. Here's like the twentieth installment of "dritte und vierzig acht über den Zustanden." or something. Read it. Love it. Please don't use it as toilet paper...and yes, Ryan's back.

Hamster Boat Racing

We always tell you the truth. Never forget that. Up to this point, everything we've printed has been documented as existent. Even Elephant Polo actually happens.

Yesterday, we came across something that we're not too sure of. We have to tell you about it, and of course we've questioned people about it. But please don't take it for all it's worth. Someone out there may be trying to fool "Third and 48." And we're on to it.

The so-called Hamster Boat Racing League is a part of the Hamster Racing Rodent Light Series. As of now Buddy Beaver is leading the HBRl standings with 208 points. Eddie Chewer is right behind him with 185.

Rat Mousetoya, a rookie on the circuit, won the Nutrlanapolis 500 in his boat sponsored by Rabbit Stereo and Budweasel Beer.

Here's what the press release said (I know, this is getting sketchy):

"Polesitter Greg Rat led early but crashed a third of the way into the race.

Al Hamster Jr. charged quickly toward the front but was eliminated by debris from Greg Rat's accident. Buddy Beaver seemed to be the only rodent that had anything for Mousetoya, challenging him late in the race and finishing second after having turned the race's fastest lap just two laps from the finish."

"First of all, I didn't know hamsters could drive boats," Dan Gonnolly, Stonehill College Radio Personality said. "But obviously it originated down in the gorgeous southern waters where Flipper used to laugh and play.

"When I was young," he continued, "my dad bought me a hamster. I remember one time my mom told me to get ready for my bath, so I took Yankee Doodle (my hamster) and some G.I. Joe's and threw them in the toilet, which I used to call my toy hot tub. See, this is what puzzles me. Yankee Doodle didn't know how to swim. And he wasn't smart enough to hang on to Shipwreck either. Poor little fellah."

New England Rubbish Deconstruction Society (NERDS)

Hey, you frontin' punk! You best not beef with the New England Rubbish Deconstruction Society, otherwise known as NERDS, because they'll kick your submarine designing, time lapsing, gearhead steam terminoloeal ass!

The three man wrecking crew consisting of members Crash, DP and Geo are the first American team to join Britain's immensely popular, Scrapheap Challenge. Basically this is when you go to the dump, take other people's crap, and design worthless stuff that will be cool for about ten minutes.

According to their website, The NERDS are extremely comprehensive people.

There's Crash, a ham radio operator and devotee of Milwaukee power tools who restored the land rover that he drove to work.

Geo is an MIT graduate who concentrated on Computer Science and Theoretical Biology. If he went to UMass, he probably would not have lived in Sylvan, Northeast, Central or Southwest.

DP the storyteller, rounds out the group. "I have always been mechanically curious, and compelled to construct things," he boasted. "My parents told me that I blew my first fuse before I was walking." As if blowing his first fuse was not enough to satiate his curiosity, DP said, "I was given a gift of a crescent wrench at the age of two and a half. They thought it would get me to leave my father's tools alone." DP also explained that he burned his eyebrows off with propane when he was nine years old. Oh, and he's not wicked like Dr. Evil anymore. "Instead of projectile weapons, I now build bicycles or musical instruments," he said.

Apparently, the Cambridge, based team is ready to tackle the competition with their self-confidence and cockiness that knows no bounds.

Eric Soderstrum and Ryan Benhurrs are Collegian columnists, not NERDS.

Drop us an e-mail at Thirdand48@yahoo.com

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration – 11am in the Jones Library Conference Room (43 Amity St – downtown Amherst)
MERCYhouse It's a church! www.knowmercy.org

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

www.springbreak.sopadre.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Train to be an EMT this semester. Tuesday and Thursday nights 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost $600 For more information or to register call 545-1885 Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Cheap heating oil: join the Pioneer Valley Oil Cooperative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Running Out of Space? Need a Bigger Place?
*Oeluxe 2 bedroom apartments available
*Free heat and hot water
*On the free PVTA busline
Minutes for UMASS!!!
Back to school spring semester specials 1/2 off security deposit
$100 off 1st mongh's rent
Call Sugarloaf Estates (413) 665-3856

1 Month Free! Sunny 2 bdrm apartment Shutesbury. $790 rent/heat/electricity 1/2 quiet tenants. 15 minutes to Umass 259-1245

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Saturn SL2, SDW, 1.9Ltr engine, 5spd, cd player. $3500 o/b/o. Must sell 665-3521

92 Honda Civic DX 4Door Sedan, red, 75kms, automatic, sunroof, cassettplayer, excellent condition. $6000 or b/o. Call 253-3092

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Nissan Pathfinder XE 85,000K highway miles, gray metallic, V-6, 5spd manual, sunroof, Kenwood CD $10,000 O/B/O Dave 413-273-8990

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, house-work 6-10 hours Tue & Thur. $10/hr 247-5800

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

Single Dad and business owner too busy to do everything. I need help! Shopping, light cleaning, errands, bills, etc. Compensation negotiable. Very part-time, flexible schedule. Need to have car. Phone # 413-253-4640 ask for James

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers
Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.50 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@ebtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Work Study Job: Join our staff as a Peer Housing Counselor. Must be available mornings. $7.00/hr. Call 545-0865 and ask for Barbara or come by Commuter Services, 428 Student Union

Earn extra money! Become a spare-time travel agent At www.spare-timetravelagent.com

Join our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life 5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, water-skiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com, or call 1(800) 544-5448

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Human Services Exciting Opportunities
The Consortium is an agency that supports people with disabilities through education advocacy and services.
Program Coordinator needed to direct and oversee services provided to up to six people with various learning challenges. Supervisory experience, flexibility, and optimistic attidtude, sense of humor, relible transportation and driver's license required. Excellent benefits.
Combination of day time and evening hours. $12/hr starting salary. Send resume to Janice Harris at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 AA/EOE.
Full-time/part-time -
Looking to have fun earning extra income with a flexible work schedule? Spend time with people in a supportive atmosphere. Call Lori-Ann Bruyett at (413) 536-2401 to set up a phone interview. AA/EOE.

RAFT GUIDES WANTED FOR SUMMER 2001: Zoar Outdoor is accepting applications for its whitewater raft guide training program. To request an application call 1-800-532-7483 or visit www.zoaroutdoor.com. Applications due by 2/15/01 EOE.

New Students Program Seeking extroverts for summer orientation positions: May 29th - July 18th. Salary, room meals, health coverage. Call 545-9681 for more info. or pick up an application at the Undergraduate Admission Center. Deadline Feb. 9

French & or German Speaking cadidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or email dcu@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

Public Reletions Positions Applications are now available at the Undergraduate Admissions Center for tour guides, student admissions Reps, and summer counselors. Call 545-9681 for more information. Deadline is Feb .9

More Than Just Summer Employment Independent Lake Camp
Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Volleyball, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theatre, Dance, Video, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Skateboarding, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Ropes Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and More.
Call 1-800-399-CAMP ask for Dan or Nigel.
www.independentlake.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

FOR SALE

Speakers: 12" woofers, 5" liquid cooled mid-range, horn tweeters, 125watt powerful, only has about 20 hours of play time. Call Rory 253-3434 $299/pr

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons Recreational & competitive boxing 256-0364

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female Wanted ASAP 1 room open in 4 room apartment in Hadley on bus route. $295 a month 582-9164

Roommate Needed ASAP Share 3 bedroom apt w/2 nice guys. Great location on Main Street. Call Tyler at 253-2687

1 Room Aveilable in three bedroom apt in Mill Valley. Looking for a nonsmoker who is clean and quiet. $340/month. Call 253-0066

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roommate to share room in 2bdrm apt in Mill Valley $287.50/mo include Heat & hot water. Female preferred 253-4798 Mari

Female Seeking roommate for Amherst apt. Cheap rent. Call 256-6244

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TICKETS FOR SALE

One Boreneket Ladies Floor Seat Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TRAVEL

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlessssummertours.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Last Minute Deals! Cancun, Bahamas, Florida, Jamaica & Mazatlan. Join MTV and Baywatch for Spring Break! Call for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sun-coastvacations.com

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

Your AD Could BE RIGHT HERE!! Call 545-3500 TODAY!!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS 3 Hartford
4	CBS 4 Boston
5	ABC 40 Springfield
6	PBS 57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	UPN 30 Hartford
9	HSCN New Movie Channel
10	NBC 30 New Haven
11	Fox 61 Hartford
12	PBS 24 Hartford
13	NBC 40 Springfield
14	International Channel
15	UMASS Academic Channel
16	WB 59 New Haven
17	ESPN2
18	UMASS Academic Channel
19	Weather Channel
20	Quest or Gavel
21	C Span
22	CNN
23	CNN Headline News
24	Lifetime
25	USA
27	TBS
28	TNT
29	E!
30	Sci Fi
31	Discovery
32	Nickelodeon
33	Comedy Network
34	Style at Site
35	TV Land
36	Comedy Central
37	ESPN
38	Showtime
39	Bloomberg Financial Network
40	College TV Network
41	MTV
42	VH1
43	VH1
44	The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 8, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		On the Waterways (In Stereo)		Mystery! "Touching Evil" (N)		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wall for Good	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		48 Hours: Never Forget		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		48 Hours: Never Forget		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina Witch	Friends	Nanny	Charmed "Heartbreak City"		Charmed "Bride and Groom"		News		Friends	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Sat. Night Live	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Thy Will Be Done" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Charmed "Heartbreak City"		Charmed "Bride and Groom"		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Friends (N)	Sat. Night Live	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Thy Will Be Done" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	Getting a Ticket in America		Stupid Behavior				Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Sat. Night Live	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Thy Will Be Done" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Doctors	Mystery! "Touching Evil" (N)		Grafters (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		Castle	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fraser	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"Overboard" (1987, Comedy) Goldie Hawn, Kurt Russell						"The Naked Gun 2 1/2: The Smell of Fear" (1991)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Renunciation	Biography: Mary K. Letourneau		Behind Closed Doors		Investigative Reports		Law & Order	Torture
CNN	20	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	53	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Clue" (1985, Comedy) Madeline Kahn, Eileen Brennan.				Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show	Turn Ban
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Mountain Lion		Wild Discovery: Wolverine		America's Haunted Houses		Would You Believe It		Beyond Bizarre		Justice Files	Prison Life
ESPN	43	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Pittsburgh at West Virginia. (Live)				College Basketball: Marquette at Louisville. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Hijacked: Flight 285" (1996, Drama) Casey Sander				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	42	Direct Effect	Diary "Best of"			Making-Video	Jackass	Kathy Griffin	Cribs Finest	Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Undressed	Making-Video
NICK	63	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	45	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	"Asteroid" (1997, Science Fiction) Annabella Sciorra.				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	70	Critical Condition: Hit & Run		UFOs and Alien Encounters		Secrets of Forensic Science		Dawn of Man: Out of Africa		Dawn of Man: Contact		Secrets of Forensic Science
TNT	46	"Into The Cold Night" (N)		ER "Into The Cold Night" (N)		Pretender "Ranger Jarod" (N)		NBA Basketball: San Antonio Spurs at New Jersey Nets. (In Stereo Live) (N)			NBA	"In "Jury Duty" (1995)
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Silver Bird" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Gun Play"		"The Cowboy Way" (1994, Comedy-Drama) Woody Harrelson				Martin	Martin
HBO	33	5:00) "Jinxed"	"Hanging Up" (2000, Comedy-Drama) Meg Ryan. 'PG-13'			"Three Kings" (1999, Comedy-Drama) George Clooney. 'R'		"Rento-Puppetmaster" (1999, Horror) 'PG-13'				L.Light it Up 'R'
MAX	35	"Go" (1999, Comedy-Drama) Desmond Askew. 'R'				"Three Kings" (1999, Comedy-Drama) George Clooney. 'R'		"Rento-Puppetmaster" (1999, Horror) 'PG-13'		Rude Awakening		"Clay Pigeons" (1998) 'R'
SHOW	34	5:45) "Nothing to"	"Nothing to" (1999, Romance) Julia Roberts. 'PG-13'			"The World is Not Enough" (1999) Pierce Brosnan. 'PG-13'				Rude Awakening

Dilbert By Scott Adams

HOW MUCH DID YOU MAKE IN TIPS TODAY?
THREE BREATH MINTS AND ONE DEATH THREAT SCRAWLED ON A NAPKIN.
I HOPE I DON'T FORGET WHICH BREATH MINT CAME FROM THE NAPKIN GUY.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

THOSE WHO END KNOW DUKE HAD THE SAME RESPONSE
THIS HERE'S THE PICTURE OF A DEAD MAN!
IF I EVER FIND THAT SCUMBAG, I'LL KILL HIM!
DUKE SHOWS UP. HE GETS WHACKED! END OF STORY!
ALTHOUGH THERE WERE FASCINATING CULTURAL DIFFERENCES.
I'LL CUT OUT HIS KIDNEYS AND FEED THEM TO MY DOG!

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

SO YOU NURSE ARE NEED A BUSHWHACKIN' DUDE?
I DO IF ONLY TO ATTRACT BABES
BUSHWHACKING PLEASE ATTRACT BABES?
YES, AND I COULD DEFINITELY USE A MAJOR BABE IN MY LIFE.
YOU KNOW WHAT WOULD BE EVEN COOLER THAN A MAJOR BABE?
I CAN'T IMAGINE.
A MAJOR BABE WITH A BUSINESS PLAN
YEAH, THAT'D DEFINITELY SAVE US TIME

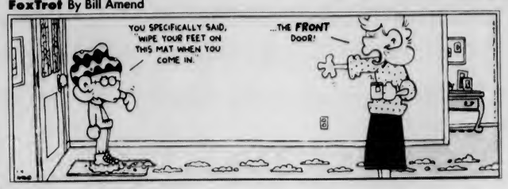
Foxtrot By Bill Amend

QUINCY REALLY LIKES YOUR NEW CHESS SET, DAD.
HE HAS GOOD TASTE.
THESE ARE AUTHENTIC HOUSE OF STAUNTON HAND-CARVED PIECES. SANTA REALLY CAME THROUGH.
FUNNY THAT YOU SHOULD USE THE WORD TASTE...
WHY ARE HALF THE PAWNS MISSING?

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Anxiety over your workload either at home or on the job will keep you from enjoying a hidden opportunity today – unless you lighten up!
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't get carried away with yourself today. A little subtlety, style and grace go a long way toward impressing others.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Physical and mental activities have much to offer you today, and you will want to combine the two for the best results.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone close to you is likely to be quite edgy and irritable today – and it will be up to you to see that he or she stays in control.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You must be willing to take a personal interest in someone else's affairs today if you are going to help at all. You mustn't remain impartial!
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You must remain on top of things as they develop today. If it's more authority you're after, you must be willing ot prove that you can handle it.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Don't misuse your own popularity today. Give others the time of day – and the benefit of the doubt. A friend comes to you with advice.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – It may be up to you today to do those things that you thought were someone else's responsibility. You can do it all much better!
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – This is a good day for solving financial problems as best you can. Remember, you can bend the rules – but you mustn't break them.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – What is asked of you today may not be fair, but if you can rise to the occasion and so what is required, then you'll be ahead of the game.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – What seems a mistake at first may prove to be highly beneficial to you in the long run. It may take time, but you'll eventually be rewarded.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – An old-fashioned approach to a new and unexpected dilemma is likely to pay off with surprising speed. This may, indeed, be the way to go!

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WHAT'S IN THE BAG, DUDE?
THE DOCTOR SAID I NEEDED TO USE IT
HOLY COW! IS IT THIS SERIOUS?! YOU COULD DIE USING THIS!
DON'T YOU THINK I KNOW THAT?!
ANIMAL TOOTHPASTE

Quote of the Day

"No amount of sex is worth that."
–Overheard
(Worth what, we wonder?)

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 38 LOW: 25	HIGH: 48 LOW: 38	HIGH: 49 LOW: 22

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Reuben Sandwich (B)

Caponata Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

Grilled Cheese on Multigrain (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Curry Coconut Chicken with Bok Choy (F, H, W)

DINNER

Cajun Lightning Chicken

Algerian Stew (vegan)

Broccoli & Cauliflower Casserole (vegetarian)

Solid Custom Tattoo
460 West St. Rte. 116 Amherst, MA 549-0003
tues-sat 1-9
sun apt. only
A Tattoo is for life Know your artist

ACROSS
1 Rove (about)
4 Mortgage
8 Up in the air
12 Actor Ferrer
13 Bronte governess
14 Farm buildings
15 Gray or Moran
17 Winter treat
19 Type of racket
21 Hotelgram's word
22 Argument
23 Bad day for Caesar
25 Phibun, e.g.
27 Type of aid
30 Tidal flow
35 The Monkees' "— Believer"
36 Not against the rules
38 Giant
39 Good-natured
41 Took out
43 Wine and —
44 Hoops great Baylor
46 Cut off
48 Actor Chaney
49 Teeter-totter
51 Topped off
53 Hurried
56 Therefore 58 Too
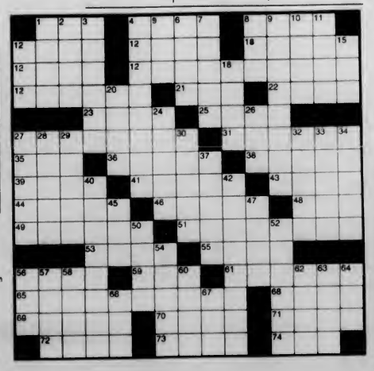
59 Vase type
61 Classify
65 Wreath part
66 — gin fizz
69 Desert bloomer
70 Large purse
71 Movie lioness
72 Tied
73 Newspaper columnists' page
74 Tall

DOWN
1 Slurl panel
2 "V — victory"
3 Comic-strip menace
4 Trialed off
5 Popeye's Olive
6 Territory
7 Whinny
8 Suffix meaning "sort of"
9 Type of kit
10 Acrobatic move
11 "Return of the Jedi" guru
12 Newark vehicle
15 Gel
18 Blunder
20 Matinee —
24 Tall tales
26 Perch
27 "— Peak or bust"
28 Author Zola
29 Home appliance
30 In a while
32 Hushed
33 Portage item
34 Erect
37 Quay
40 Melt
42 Helped with (expenses)
45 Velvety surface
47 Outfits
50 "Dragnet" star
52 Profits' opposite
54 Because of
56 Sleuth's cry
57 Theater section
58 Certain European
60 Let fall
62 Mexican pot
63 Blushing
64 Herbal drink
66 Urge
67 Country addr

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

N	A	O	M	I	M	I	K	E	E	V	E	R
A	C	M	E	S	E	D	E	N	R	I	L	E
G	N	A	R	L	E	N	A	I	N	K	S
S	E	R	G	E	P	A	N	C	A	K	E	S
		E	S	P		E	T	C
S	H	A	D		O	P	A	L		C	A	S	E	Y
L	U	G		C	L	A	P		F	E	M	A	L	E
A	M	E	R	I	C	A		C	H	R	I	S	T	M	A	S
T	U	N	E	U	P		I	O	N	S		O	N	E
E	S	T	E	S		A	D	E	N		F	A	D	S
		T	S	P			S	A	L
R	O	L	Y	P	O	L	Y		C	A	N	K	Y
F	A	T	E		A	L	O	E		G	U	I	L	E
I	R	I	S		S	L	O	W		A	N	G	E	L
E	A	S	T		M	O	M	S		E	T	H	E	L

12-19-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Shalini Mark
Copy Editor	Bryan McCallister
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	John Zawislak, James Gibson

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, February 8, 2001 12

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

What the record books don't tell us...

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

The road to athletic success for any athlete is based on the foundation of hard work and sacrifice. Four years ago, Kathy Coyner came to the Massachusetts women's basketball program to begin the last four seasons of her hoops career. That journey took many different twists and turns as it does for many college athletes, and Coyner is now counting down the days until she becomes a former college athlete.

Getting into Basketball

Coyner wasn't born to run the point, although it appears that her abilities are instinctive. Coyner grew up playing soccer, and initially, she wanted to pursue a career in that.

But she was better at something else.

The Belpre, Ohio native began running up and down the hardwood with the basketball when she was in third grade. She was never mistaken to be anything but a point guard, and thanks to Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) tournaments and Pee Wee hoops, she was able to prone her skills.

"When I was 11 I decided to give AAU a try," Coyner said. "At first, I didn't think I was good enough. But I went and saw a tournament and I was like, 'I can do this. I played and that summer I was an AAU All-American at Nationals. That proved that it was something I could pursue."

In her first season as an 11 year old, Coyner proved to be a success. But the road to an athletic scholarship further down the road required much more than AAU honors. The basic requirement of any athlete who wants to continue her career throughout high school and college is to accept sacrifices. And Coyner was forced to do just that.

"Every weekend I was away," Coyner said. "I don't regret any of it. I think I missed a lot in my hometown; people would be going to dances, and I would be like, 'well, I have to go to 'so and so' to go to a tournament.' Obviously, it made me a better basketball player, and I'm glad I did it. But sacrifices are what I've always given up."

Kathy Coyner isn't the only one who was forced to make sacrifices. Cleveland proved to be a popular stomping ground for Coyner as it offered the opportunity for her to play in the biggest state tournaments. Her folks would take time off from their family business to bring their little point guard four hours away from their house in the small town of Belpre to the big city of Cleveland for tourneys.

"My parents were always very supportive," Coyner said. "They gave me the opportunity to go and play even though sometimes they probably should have been at work. But they took the time off to give me every opportunity to pursue any dreams I ever had."

At age 11, Coyner was receiving letters from college programs that recognized her ability as a point guard. Coyner got letters from anyone and everyone, all of them congratulating her on her prestigious AAU awards.

Coyner's high school career was as remarkable as her AAU career. She led her team to conference titles in all four years and she only watched her team lose eight times over the course of her career. She had started all four of her years and ended with Belpre High School records in points scored (1,817), assists (614) and steals (400). She did everything a point guard is supposed to do, and she did it very well.

Fortunately, destiny seemed to make itself very obvious to Coyner – "you have a future in college basketball."

Yale vs. UMass

Coyner sifted through too many college letters to count, and she was forced to make difficult decisions about her future. She knew that she was smart enough to go to practically any school that she wanted to. She also knew that she was good enough to play college basketball for a scholarship.

Eventually, Coyner narrowed her list of possible educational programs between Yale and UMass. On one hand, Coyner could go to Yale, receive an Ivy school degree and probably start for her whole career. On the other hand, she could go to UMass, play in a nationally recognizable program, and still receive a prominent degree in biochemistry. What to do?

"Once crunch time came down, it was between here and Yale," Coyner said. "Yale doesn't give athletic scholarships, so that was an issue. I felt like I should repay my parents some way. They always gave me the opportunity. I actually did almost go there [Yale] and then UMass came back and offered me the scholarship and then I only had a week to decide. I was looking everywhere for answers. I was like 'Dad, where do you want me to go,' he's like, 'this is your decision.' I came here and committed on my official visit as I was leaving."

The ever-exciting freshman year

Coming to UMass, Coyner's expectations were nowhere close to the reality of what her future would be like. She entered the hoops program knowing that she would be playing behind a talented fifth year senior named Sabriya Mitchell. She thought that she wouldn't get much time off the bench, playing sparingly to save Mitchell's legs for crunch time. But Coyner was wrong.

Due to an injury to off-guard Kelly Van Huizen, Coyner was thrown into the fire. She ended up starting two games at the off-guard position and averaging 25 minutes per game for the Minutewomen, which was more than Coyner ever expected.

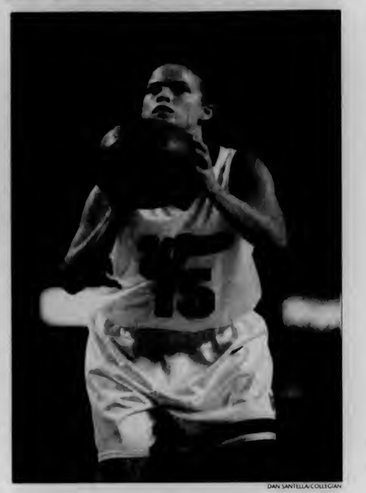
"I never knew if I was really going to play here at UMass," Coyner said. "I think I was brought in as a role player to play 10 minutes a game to give the point guard a break. Then [Kelly] went down, and all of a sudden, for the first time in my life, I was playing the two position, which I've never done before."

Throughout the course of the season, Coyner became Mitchell's understudy. Coyner knew that she was going to inherit Mitchell's job when she graduated, and the freshman utilized her first year as a learning experience.

And her first year in the program was unforgettable.

"We had a Cinderella season," Coyner said. "We hosted the Atlantic-10 tournament. We went to the

Turn to COYNER, page 9



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

On Jan. 28, senior Kathy Coyner scored her 1,000th point for the Massachusetts women's basketball team.

OFFcampus ONline

Woo the Web Cam girls, win their hearts prizes!

3 students
1 Web cam
24/7

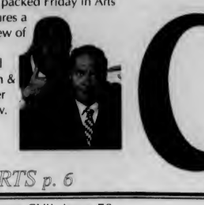
Log on to www.masslive.com/offcampus and shoot an e-mail off to the Web Cam girls. Ruth, Deanna and Laura will read them all and pick the winning entries. You could win cool gifts for you and your date.
This could be your lucky Valentine's Day!

www.masslive.com/offcampus

Get On It!

mass LIVE
www.masslive.com

This packed Friday in Arts features a review of the local Penn & Teller show.



The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The men's tennis team springs back into action this weekend.

ARTS p. 6 SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 78 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, February 9, 2001

$300 Hockey raffle tonight

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

"Is that a $300 University Store book credit in your pocket or are you just happy to see me?"

No matter the outcome of the Massachusetts-Maine hockey game tonight, at least one "Mass Maniac" will go home with a bulge in their pocket and a smile on their face.

As a plan to get more feedback from fans and more rear ends in the seats, the UMass hockey team, out of the goodness of their hearts, is giving away a $300 book credit to one lucky student.

The prerequisite for receiving this generous gift is the completion of a survey on the back of UMass hockey flyers placed around campus and attendance at tonight's game.

The man behind the bench for the Mass Attack, head coach Don "Toot" Cahoon believes "this is a good opportunity for us as a program to find out some information on the UMass students and why they choose or not choose to attend games."

The survey itself includes questions about fans interest in college hockey and the UMass squad. It also gives students a chance to voice their own opinions about the games and the fans and what they would like to see changed.

The coaching staff spent a lot of time pondering a number of different ways to lure fans to the Mullins Center.

"We thought about the different types of things that we could do...we came up with the concept of getting some information from the students, about what they like about college hockey and what we can further offer them, and we're providing a gift for them," said Cahoon.

Cahoon has been consistent in his efforts to bolster fan support for the team and he agrees that the raffle couldn't have come at a more opportune time.

"What a better way to do this than with a home weekend series," said Cahoon.

The team has struggled to build on the early season excitement built by a marquee win over New Hampshire. Since then wins have come few and far between so something else needed to be done a draw students to the games.

"I know that if you win, they will come, and we haven't won enough here yet. The people who came to the Merrimack, New Hampshire and even the Northeastern game, saw a few well-played, exciting games," said Cahoon.

Although the program has struggled to only seven wins this year, the team and its leader behind the bench are not hanging their heads.

Cahoon remains optimistic: "We're hoping to get the student body, the faculty and the town to embrace this program. There is a hockey culture in Massachusetts, and we're trying to integrate with that culture."

Cash drawer stolen yesterday UStore thief remains uncaught

By Jessica May
Collegian Staff

An undetermined amount of cash was stolen from a cash drawer at the University Store yesterday morning around 10:30 a.m.

According to the University of Massachusetts Police Department, a Follet Higher Education Group employee left a cash drawer unattended at the textbook buyback table in the Lincoln Campus Center and an individual approached the table and ran off with the drawer towards the parking garage.

One individual began to chase the perpetrator, and then another joined in the pursuit. At that time, a witness called the UMPD on a cellular phone.

The assailant was chased into the parking garage where he was not found. The cash drawer was recovered in a stairwell in the parking garage with around $200 remaining, said Sgt. Mark Jacques. It is not yet known how much money was initially in the drawer. Jacques' estimate is "around a couple thousand dollars".

The UMPD was not able to disclose the amount of cash that was in the drawer when it was stolen. The University Store has to go through its register tapes and receipts to determine the exact amount taken.

The UMPD told the Collegian that they would have an exact amount early this morning.

The perpetrator was seen as a black male, 6 foot or 6'1", with thin, short hair wearing a red jacket and black boots. The individual has yet to be apprehended.

University Store Director Phil Olson is going to press whatever charges are appropriate.

According to a UStore employee, the incident could have been avoided if the cash drawers were kept in metal boxes. "It was just a cash drawer sitting on a table." Apparently there was no lid or method of locking the money drawer.

One UStore clerk said that the incident could have been avoided if the Follet employee had been watching the drawer.

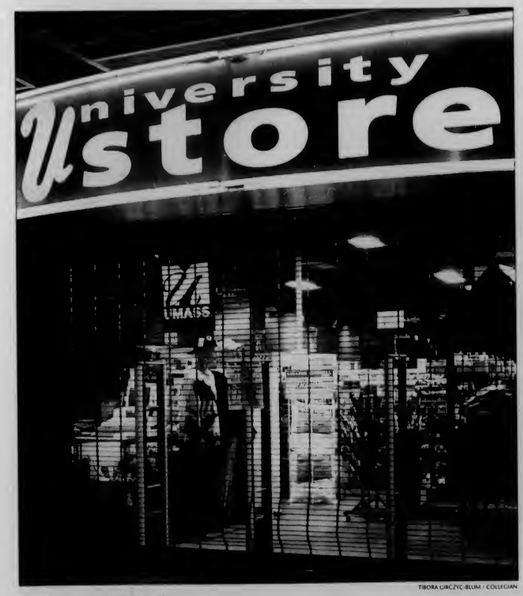
"Having textbook buyback in a separate room downstairs," said Mona, a UStore employee, when asked about how the incident could have been prevented. "It may not be convenient, but (it is) better than by the door."

Another UStore employee suggested, "UMass should get cameras. They would help and in the parking garage too."

The textbook buyback table has been located in a high-traffic area between the UStore and the information desk for several semesters and has not encountered any problems similar to this. No theft has taken place in that location, nor in the Campus Center basement, where the buyback moves at the end of the semester.

Follet.com just took over the textbook buyback business at UMass, as well as the Textbook Annex. This past September was the first semester that the University Store has been privatized.

There has been no comment from the University administration about increased security in the Campus Center.



TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM / COLLEGIAN

The UStore was robbed yesterday.

Tattoo shop opens in Amherst

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Another victim of tattoo fever.

By Jessica May
Collegian Staff

Since the revoking of Massachusetts state laws against tattooing, a new tattoo and piercing parlor catering to college students has opened in South Amherst.

The 38-year-old ban was lifted on October 23 by Superior Court Judge Barbara Rouse on the grounds that is was an infringement on freedom of expression.

Solid Custom Tattoos, located on 460 West St. Route 116, opened its doors Thursday, February 1, 2001 to the college community.

Proprietor John Hanley has been drawing tattoos for four years, including one year of experience in Connecticut and three years in Rhode Island. J. Rondeau, Custom Tattoo's piercer, has been piercing in the Amherst area for the past 2 years.

Since its grand opening, Solid Custom Tattoos has no complaints as business seems to be booming. "Business is pretty good. We've already given a bunch of tattoos. It seems good," said Hanley.

As far as artistic limitations, there are none. Hanley can draw any image his clients desire, and it seems appropriate since he started tattooing by practice.

"Tattoos in general cater to college students," commented Hanley.

"We've had a good amount of college students so far," said Rondeau.

Senior School of Management major Mike Tamborino has had his dragon tattoo for five years. "I always wanted a tattoo. One day my girlfriend went and got one. It was a spur of the moment decision."

Her tattoo, a heart with a fiery cross going through it with a flower on the other side of the heart, was a "Valentine's Day gift from my boyfriend at the time, now he's my ex," said Sophomore Lara Jayne Wood. "It has spiritual meaning. It stands for you heart being released from your soul."

"After (my) high school graduation I had a bunch of graduation money left over, so I got a tattoo," explains Senior Mike Cooke on his reasoning for a tattoo.

For as many reasons people may want tattoos, there are an equal amount of reasons for those who do not.

"I thought about it," comments English/German major Anira Dahlstrom, "but, there is nothing I like enough to want it to be there (on my body) forever."

Management Information Systems major Victor Navarro said the reason he never got a tattoo was because he did not have the money, but probably would never get one anyway.

Knowing and trusting the tattoo artist is essential when beginning to decorate one's body.

"I would like to get rid of the one I have and get something else," said Tamborino.

Prices start at around $40-50, and Hanley plans to offer student discounts on tattoos and piercings.

Bush's bipartisanship doubted

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

One can't tune into a television news program these days without seeing an amiable President George W. Bush chumming it up with Capital Hill Democrats – even ones named Kennedy. But while the President has created the veneer and image of bipartisanship in an attempt to fulfill his campaign pledge to be "a uniter not a divider," his actual agenda has failed to fulfill that promise.

Whether it be in his cabinet appointments, his plan to coordinate Federal social service activity with faith-based charity work, or in signing an executive order eliminating federal funding for groups that provide abortion counseling overseas, President Bush's actual policy goals have raised concerns with Democratic lawmakers.

Bush's unveiling of his $1.6 trillion dollar tax cut proposal this week, from which the top 1 percent of income earners stand to reap 30 percent of the benefit, further increased Democratic skepticism.

"I think, frankly that we have been in the land of happy rhetoric for so long they now have to turn some of this stuff into deeds," said Representative Ellen O. Tauscher, Democrat of California to the Associated Press.

Democratic doubts about President Bush's bipartisanship began with his nomination of John Ashcroft for Attorney General. Ashcroft's views on abortion and civil rights made many Democrats uneasy about his willingness to enforce existing civil rights and abortion rights statutes. Ashcroft's acceptance of an honorary degree from Bob Jones University, which has imposed a moratorium on interracial dating, and his campaign against Ronnie White, an African-American state judge nominated for the federal bench, left many Democrats wondering about Bush's spirit of cooperation.

"Senator Ashcroft's past statements and actions have given understandable suspicions to many citizens – particularly some of those whose rights, historically, have been most at risk – that he will not lead the department in a manner that will protect them," said Senator Joseph Lieberman (D-CT), during the debate over Ashcroft's nomination.

George W. Bush

Ashcroft critics assert that he has worked unceasingly to criminalize abortion, and has worked to limit the availability of abortion while Attorney General of Missouri. During the campaign President Bush suggested that, if elected, he would deprioritize abortion as an issue. Bush's executive order, signed on the anniversary of Roe v. Wade, restricting Federal funds for foreign family planning groups that offer abortion services, combined with Ashcroft's pro-life beliefs, have deeply disturbed abortion rights advocates.

Bush has also refused to compromise on campaign finance reform, rejecting most of the substance of the McCain-Feingold bipartisan campaign finance reform bill in a private meeting with Senator John McCain last week. Bush has also refused to address the proposed patient's bill of rights, co-sponsored by Edward Kennedy and McCain.

"Bush is preaching bipartisanship," said Democratic National Committee Chairman Terry McAuliffe to the Associated Press, "while McCain is actually practicing it."

Bush supporters claim that tax cuts and abortion aren't indicative of Bush's capacity for compromise, and are quick to point out that Bush has already shown himself to be open to cooperation on education reform, a claim that many Democrats concede to be true.

While Bush may not have proved to be a genuine supporter of bipartisan legislation, he has demonstrated a high political IQ. Bush's rhetoric never acknowledges the narrowness of his victory in the electoral college, nor does he make a point of the fact that he lost the popular vote. By moving forward decisively with his campaign agenda Bush is claiming a mandate to govern. Further, Bush's understanding of the public's desire for bipartisanship, which he learned to use to his advantage while Governor of Texas, has led to his administration's continued public overtures to the Democrats.

Just what is the end result of all these bipartisan rumblings? A 57 percent job-approval rating for President Bush, according to the latest Gallup poll. So while Bush continues down his campaign checklist paying little attention to Democratic policy concerns, don't expect the rhetoric to disappear in the near future.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this article.

TABURA GIRGZYC BLUM / COLLEGIAN

Playin' with style

Stephon Harris plays the vibraphone at the Bowker Auditorium, as an installment of "the Center Series."

Caribbean Society to host cultural celebration tommorow in the Student Union Ballroom

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The English Speaking Caribbean Society will be holding its cultural celebration Carnival Again tomorrow in the Student Union Ballroom.

According to Dionne Stennett, the vice-president of the organization, the event is a tradition that is intended to celebrate economic stability and to bring West Indian countries together.

"This is kind of similar to Mardi Gras, but it has Caribbean roots involved in it," Stennett said about the party-type atmosphere to the event.

The event will feature speakers from both the University and from the Office of ALANA Affairs, and will also include rhythms dancing and dancing by the African Student Association among others. Films will also be shown during the event. In addition, the group has also located costumes from Boston to be worn during the end of the dance portion of the event.

"I think that this event is going to be great," Stennett said. "We are expecting a really high turn-out."

Dinner will be served to all attendees with food coming from Talk of the Town Restaurant located in Springfield. Some of the traditional West Indian foods that will be served include both a rice and peas dish, and Jamaican Jerk Chicken. The meal will be served at 6:45 p.m. on a first come first serve basis.

The event is one of the first official ventures by the organization, a group that was originally formed in 1999.

"A lot of people have the impression that we are just a dance group," she said. "I think that this a good starting point for us as an RSO. I think that we have a lot to offer the black community."

The event will run from 6:00 p.m. to 2:00 a.m. with the show beginning at 8:00 and being directly followed by a party until 2:00 a.m.

The event is "dress to impress" and is open to the general public. Tickets can be purchased at the door and are eight dollars for UMass and Five College students and ten dollars for the general public.

The carnival is held in conjunction with the Programming Board, Arts Council, and with help from Copy Cat printing, Unity Sports and Cultural Center, eCaroh Caribbean Emporium, LAXTON Records and Big Y.

"This is a cultural, educational and social event," Stennett said. "It should be really festive."

An opportunity for ALANA students' "Power of Information" on Saturday

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Staff

On Saturday Feb. 10th, in Campus Center room 168 between 9:00a.m. and 5:00 p.m. "The Power of Information" program will be held.

Charles Gregg, a Junior Finance and Economics major at the University of Massachusetts, and designer of this program is currently taking an independent study course with the Office of Asian Latin American Native American Affairs and in honor of one of the requirements of the independent study, he has developed the program, "The Power of Information."

The goal of this program is to provide resume writing skills, interviewing, self-marketing skills, and dress-for-success skills to the ALANA students and to have invited ALANA alumni speak to ALANA students about their careers. The Office of ALANA Affairs, INROADS Boston, and the Rossman Campus Center Network support this program. "The Power of Information" will provide resourceful information to help each ALANA student.

"I chose to develop this program because I believe that career development and career planning is an essential skill that college students must develop in order to secure employment upon graduation," said Gregg.

Registration with continental breakfast for ALANA students will be available during 9:30 a.m. to 10:00 a.m. Also, free-boxed lunches will be provided for all participants. Representatives of the INROADS Boston organization will facilitate the resume writing skills workshop from 10:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m., the interviewing and self-marketing skills workshop from 11:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m., and the dress-for-success workshop from 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m. Following these workshops at 2:00 p.m, the second section of the program will begin and ALANA alumni will speak about their past college experiences and present career experiences.

They will also discuss issues such as the transition from college life to the workforce, the preparation they received from UMass, obstacles they may have had to overcome as well as making business relationships with students here at UMass. If there are any questions or any need for additional information about "The Power of Information," you can contact Charles Gregg at 546-2299 between the hours of 5:00 p.m. and 6:00 p.m.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1582 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuola Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

2001
Campus-Wide Career Fair

It's time for the Annual Campus-Wide Career Fair!

Wednesday, February 14, 2001
Campus Center Auditorium
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Full Time Opportunities for Undergraduates and Graduate Students

All Majors Welcome

Bring Your Resume on Diskette to Register Online at the Fair.

Presented by the Campus Career Network

for more information call 545-2224
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Drilling protested

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Staff

On Friday February 9th, from 2-4 p.m. in Amherst Center, UMass students and MassPIRG students from the Five College area with be protesting against BP-Amoco, ExxonMobil, Chevron, and Phillips plans to drill in the Artic National Wildlife Refuge.

The refuge consists of 19 million acres of pristine wilderness along the northern coastal plane of Alaska. The purpose is to educate the public on the oil companies' plans to drill in the Artic and the dangers of doing so. This is the kickoff event in western Massachusetts for the PIRG's National Campaign to protect Alaska's Wilderness.

Alaska supports dozens of endangered species, old-growth forests, unspoiled tundra and breathtaking mountains. While most of America has been subject to pollution, development and urban sprawl, Alaska's untouched wilderness is constantly threatened by logging, oil drilling, mining, road building and other destructive practices that destroy the wilderness' ecological value and natural beauty.

Of the many wilderness areas in Alaska, there are two that are under particularly fierce attack. The first is the Artic National Wildlife Refuge.

It is the only portion of Alaska's Northern Slope that is not open to oil drilling. Despite this, oil companies are pushing to open up the Refuge to drilling. The Refuge was created in 1980 and is the only conservation area in the nation that provides a complete range of Artic ecosystems balanced with wide variety of wildlife. It is remote and untouched; there are no roads, development, or trails and one must fly, boat or walk to get there.

The Refuge is home to a variety of wildlife such as large populations of caribou, three species of bear, wolves, snow geese and thousands of other migratory birds. Reintroduced musk oxen thrive in the Refuge, 100 years after nearly going extinct. It is also the only U.S. conservation area where polar bears regularly den.

The second area under attack is the Tongass National Forest located in southeastern Alaska. It is the largest ancient rainforest in the United States. The Tongass National Forest is home to some of the most magnificent old growth forest in the country. However, timber companies are logging the forest at a frightening rate. It is filled with mist-shrouded fjords, glaciers and cefields and meadows filled with wild-flowers. The Tongass supports dozens of endangered species like salmon, bear, eagles and a number of species of birds. The Tongass also contains some of the nation's oldest old growth forest, containing old growth spruce, hemlock and cedar. Its trees are hundreds of feet tall and dozens of feet around. Yet each year, over 150 million board feet of timber are logged from the Tongass, most of it from roadless stretches of old growth that provide the best wildlife habitat. Many parts of the national forest are now scarred with immense clearcuts.

The timber industry is pushing for increased logging and road building in this pristine wilderness. If they are allowed to expand their logging, it would mean the continued destruction of the country's greatest forest.

There are many ways a student can help save these areas. BP is currently the target of a campaign by Ecopledge.com, to convince them to cancel plans to drill in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Ecopledge.com is urging students and stockholders not to work for or invest in BP until they agree to protect the Refuge. For more information on this and other events contact www.studemprigs.org.

Film chronicles strippers' struggle for union

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Writer and filmmaker Julia Query presented the film Live Nude Girls Unite, a story about the struggle to unionize an exotic dance club, last night in Mahar Auditorium.

"I never dreamed that my first attempt at labor unionization would be as a stripper," Query explained in her film. "Even though I had always been strong and feisty... if I hadn't been part of a union I would have no say over my working conditions."

The production, the winner of best documentary at the San Francisco International film festival, chronicled the struggle of exotic dancers at the Lusty Lady strip club to finally become unionized. The group was the first union for exotic dancers in the country and fought against racial discrimination and unfair working conditions. The women protested the inability to have sick days, being expected to date friends of the management, being illegally taped and having safety issues that were not addressed by employers. The women fought a year-long battle with their union against their employer to finally win some rights for the exotic dancers at their establishment. Now nearly 95 percent of the women workers in the club are union represented.

"In the US there was no other place that managed to establish a union," Query explained. "But again it took awhile, it took the miners 100 years. It looks like you will never win, the management has all of the money and they have the power to scare you."

In addition to showing her film, Query also talked about both the feminist issues of stripping and of the sex industry as a whole. She explained that many people, including advocates of women's rights are conservative and even against rights and fair treatment for women in the sex industry.

"You can show pussy but you can't say pussy," she quoted from the film expressing the conservative attitude of management. "All of that getting turned on or getting outraged...whatever you want to attribute to your increased heart rate."

TABATHA GIRGZYC BLUM / COLLEGIAN FEATURES RELEASE

Vicky Funari and Julia Query, the co-directors of Live Nude Girls Unite!

She went on to explain that the sex industry was primarily male oriented, focusing on the needs of men without providing many services for women.

"I truly think that it is pretty great that men can be sexually satisfied in a clean and sterile environment," she said about the peep show aspect of the sex industry. "But why don't they have one for women?"

She went on to explain that perhaps the reason why these don't exist is that there is less of a market for them.

"I am a lesbian and I would never pay to see a woman naked," she said "I think that it is still sort of Star Trekkie to shave pussy at a window. I go home and I want someone to tell me how smart I am."

Also addressed following the showing of the film was the type of stigma that goes along with being a sex worker.

"Do you want your landlord to know what you do for a living and have keys to your house?" Query asked. "How do you go to the bank and say I really do make 45,000 dollars a year?"

Beyond the issues surrounding being an exotic dancer, there were also comments about how to unionize other exotic dancers, prostitutes and other workers in general. Query explained that she had made the film in order to inspire other workers of all kinds across the country to unionize as well. She is working to help workers to unionize through a manual that was created as a step-by-step union organization tool and through the showing of the film.

www.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

No leniency for pro athletes

Former Green Bay Packers tight end Mark Chmura was acquitted on charges of third-degree sexual assault and child enticement last Saturday, making him one of many pro-athletes in the past few months to pass under the eye of the United States judicial system.

Just how closely is that eye watching, though?

Judging from recent events, not as closely as it should be, and certainly not as intently as it is on the average citizen. Some athletes are punished – Rae Carruth being the most recent to be handed jail time – but more often manage to slip through the cracks as the case around them evolves into a media circus. Baltimore Ravens linebacker Ray Lewis recently put an end to a court battle of his own, cleared on charges that stemmed from an altercation after the 2000 Superbowl that left one man dead. These athletes and others, who span every professional sport, are marring not only their own reputations, but also the integrity of the teams they are employed by and publicly represent.

What makes the Chmura case interesting, however, is that a jury of seven men and five women needed only two-and-a-half hours to find Chmura not guilty of the charges. They let him go knowing that he had become intoxicated with a 17-year-old girl and joined her friends in a hot tub at his home, and had later found himself in a bathroom with the victim behind closed doors. Something definitely happened, jurors say, but they can't prove it.

Chmura will likely meet with NFL officials, pay some sort of fine and quickly get back to work, while the girl involved is left disillusioned, knowing that her assailant is once again enjoying the high life.

Is the legal system holding athletes in a special light, letting them go for crimes that the average citizen would be punished for? O.J. Simpson pushed the trend into the mainstream in 1995, when he escaped to freedom under an overwhelming amount of evidence pointing to his direct involvement and guilt in the murder of Nicole Simpson and Ronald Goldman. Nearly every piece of evidence presented in that trial pointed to a conviction, to a guilty man, and yet he walked.

If the courts are going to continue catering to the upper class athletic set, then the professional leagues – the NHL, NBA, NFL and MLB – must take the initiative to crack down heavily on the players they employ. All too often players return to a mere slap on the wrist and are fined small amounts of money that, when held against the yearly salary they earn, are completely arbitrary. Like any other responsible employer, major league sports teams and the boards that govern them should have a legitimate, universal policy that will clearly spell out the repercussions for committing a given act. If the crime is serious enough, then dump them. Fire them. Make sure they never work near the sport again.

The Daily Collegian feels that pro-athletes should be judged no differently than any other person that walks into a court of law – that is, fairly. No perks in jail, no special exemption from the press and certainly no leniency from a jury because of their star status. Yes, they perform under a national spotlight and are paid exorbitant amounts of money for the pressure that comes with that job. They live on a level far above what most of us can relate to. That paycheck, however, should not buy them immunity from the crimes they may commit. People make mistakes and should be punished accordingly. Pro athletes, no matter how wealthy or renowned, should be no exception.

The preceding editorial represents the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Notes from below Frat Row

"I am a sick man…I am a spiteful man. An unattractive man. I think that my liver hurts."
–Fyodor Dostoevsky, Notes from Underground

While most of my fellow UMass scholars were cavorting about the happy burghs of Olde Amherst and Northamptowne, I spent the weekend cloistered in my third-floor bedroom behind frat row (yes, I AM that naked guy in the window) with the Riverside Shakespeare, my rubber plant Stinky and a copy of Machiavelli's The Prince. With little to distract me from my studies aside from the lure of Internet porn, my coffee machine and a tank of nitrous oxide, I often found my mind wandering. What resulted was a series of semi-maniacal bouts of free association (the type often resulting from long periods spent in a sensory deprivation chamber or a Food Science lecture), which led to a collection of loosely related theories on the "world" of UMass, as well as some general observations on human nature. You'll find that these garbled pieces of mish-mash and gobbledy-gook are more than a little influenced by the aforementioned text…Here goes nothing…

…Late Saturday night, the beautiful and virtuous young women of the sororities in my neighborhood joined together in song. Apparently their communal sing-a-long had something to do with "drinking at The Pub" and "getting ass," at least as far as I could make out from the slurred lyrics. Along with the singing, there was also a display of lights and festive balloons in front of their house/bordello/barracks. It was at that time I realized that my past criticisms of "Greeks" might have been unjust. In the time-honored tradition of the cult of Bacchus, these young women were performing life-affirming rituals of excess; rituals of song, drink, communal beautification and, ostensibly, wild, uninhibited fornication. Perhaps it was the last item on the list that really got me excited, being the monastic scholar that I am, but for whatever reason, I was greatly inspired by this life-affirming display of ecstatic celebration. It was as if the sorority house had transformed into a giant pleasure center, a massive musical clitoris if you will. Perhaps not as intellectually stimulating as a STP EC coffee hour, but definitely stimulating in another sense.

…The Prince got me thinking (after I had stuffed rolls of toilet paper in my ears to silence the Sirens' song from across the street)…If I were to lead a bloody coup against the UMass administration, recruiting from the plethora of campus political wackos (Unite my Mlioist brothers and sisters!) and drug-addicted S.O.M flunksters desperate to keep Dad from finding out about their sub-2 G.P.As, how long would I be able to maintain power? According to Machiavelli, the secret to maintaining power over a newly conquered principality is to make sure your subjects return to a way of life equally or more beneficial to them as the one they lived before you conquered them. Machiavelli, skepical of human nature, believes that men are essentially selfish, and as long as their own means of living are not taken from them, their property left intact and their women untouched, they will happily embrace a new ruler. Therefore, my first act as Emperor of UMass would be to use the campus security vans to distribute free cases of cheap American beer, cheeseburgers, video-game consoles, boxes of novelty condoms and copies of Road Trip to all my subjects.

MANOLIS BOULUKOS

Furthermore, grades would henceforth be based upon gallons of "Jungle Juice" and number of "bingers" consumed per semester hour. (I bet the administration and his crew won't be sleeping so well after they read this!) So as not to appear too softhearted, (as Machiavelli says a ruler mustn't) my next act would be to establish a colony at Amherst College where disobedient and undesirable subjects could be exiled. My final triumph would be the sack of Hampshire College, after which there would be a ritual cleansing and shaving of my newest subjects as a means of expediting their assimilation into UMassanian culture. Then they would be forced to publicly denounce Jerry Garcia and Amber Waves or taste the cold steel of my death-engines. My reign would culminate in a massive festival of excess: roasted goats and swans, rides in dangerously over-inflated airships filled with nitrogen, rivers of whiskey and Mikes Hard Lemonade, a unicorn hunt, cock-fighting, games of chance, carnival rides, a freak-show, swimming in the campus pond, a live performance by the Village People, elephant races, gigantic phallic bonfires and a mass orgy led by the UMass athletic mascots. At the height of this festival, the skies over the library would part and I (along with a harem of lusty Smith College field-hockey players) would ascend directly into heaven as did Melchizedek, high priest of Salem.

…Well that's enough for today. Even a diseased mind needs rest and "Temptation Island" will be on soon. I never really got around to ole' Willie Shakespeare, but I guess I have to leave something for next time. Send gifts of tribute to the Collegian office in the form of scratch tickets, pre-war Bulgarian pornography, Gold-Bond, Slim Jims, Wild Turkey, Xtra-Strength Pepto-Bismol and what you feel represents your best personal work in the field of conceptual taxidermy. Just remember before you send me that mail bomb, that I, like our newly elected president have been "mis-understeimated my whole life." Go, Minutemen, Fight! (Materials used in article were overheard, divinely inspired, hallucinated, and told to me by the ghost of a 2500 year old Carthaginian whore by way of my neighbor's dog.)

Manolis Boulukos is a UMass student.

ROB SCHULZE

Snow day

A snow day highlights so many things about the UMass campus.

For one thing, it proves conclusively, once and for all, that no one likes classes. People would rather be covered in the most horrible substance in the universe and smothered in cold than attend classes and broaden their minds. This is fine with me.

Also, there are definite differences between the different living areas on campus, all stereotypes.

In Southwest, revelers created anatonnically correct snowmen engaging in extremely explicit acts of coitus, carved the word "penis" on the roof of a DC in such a way as to be visible from the moon, and even had the presence of mind to combine the two separate ideas into the pinnacle of creativity: massive snow penises.

In Central, the hippies went sledding on just about every material possible, from DC trays to cardboard to inflatable furniture, crafted rude ramps to show off their snowboarding skills, and just kind of hung out a lot.

In Orchard Hill, the students crafted massive professionally-engineered jumps and perfect sledding paths in seemingly no time at all. Many of them had actual, store-purchased sleds.

In Northeast, people did strange things, such as sledding on tricycles and hitting each other with paper products.

I neither saw nor heard of anything at all happening in Sylvian.

There were some constants, though, which serve to illustrate that UMass as a whole does have a sort of unity amongst all students, regardless of living area or group affiliation, that keeps us whole as the most devastating group of slobs in the Valley.

Everyone threw snowballs. Some did it to flirt, some did it with intent to kill, some did it in an organized fashion, some did it with the wild randomness of a war veteran in the midst of a flashback, but the bottom line is that there was no one who did not follow this most intimate and legendary pastime of the University. I have not heard of any incidents of snowballs being thrown at Amherst College students, but I know, deep in my heart of hearts, that any one reading this column would have done so had the opportunity arisen. This makes me proud.

Lots of people drank, everywhere on campus, and any substance that you can possible imagine.

Everyone stole trays. Some may bring them back, some may not (I have a deep emotional attachment to mine; I even named it), but, for a short period of time, UMass was a massive seething body of collective, cannibalistic larceny.

I also must give praise where praise is due – to the gentlepeople who plowed this campus into the ground.

By around two o'clock you could walk anywhere on campus with no difficulty whatsoever, which I would label as quite an achievement what with the massive snowfall of the night before. I mean, sure, we all got plowed into the Purple Lot and I doubt I'll ever be able to get my poor tiny Corolla out of there before June, but hey, everyone's gotta make sacrifices to the greater cause. I'm not sure which department of the University runs this, but kudos to them. They did a better job cleaning this craphole up than the DCs did in stopping the hemorrhaging of trays.

In general, the snow day was a massive success. Everyone relaxed, chilled, hung out, and did all those distinctly UMass things – and it was all with University approval. You can get a great education at any number of places, but examples of an institution where one can both get ahead in life and hang out on a Tuesday and sled are few and far between. I had more fun sledding and drinking hot coffee in my drawers to defrost than I ever would have had in History of China, no disrespect to the professor or the material intended.

Will you remember every day that you went to class in college when you are old and decrepit? No. Will you remember that day when they canceled school cuz of that storm and you got in that huge snowball fight then went sledding on a stolen DC tray? Of course you will. It's unusual, and I hope everyone enjoyed it while they had the opportunity, because it may not come again during your time at the University.

For everyone who stayed in and studied: Pfah. Loser.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

ROB SCHULZE

Got something to say?

Voice your opinion with us.

Write for Ed/Op.

Inaugurating one man's disillusion

The 20th of January was an interesting day, a day that for most Americans normally marks the peaceful transfer of power. It is a day that is supposed to signify a contrast to many other nations of the world that our government exists and changes without the need for violence. So while venture capitalists sat at home and wondered how long it would take George W. to wipe out capital gains, and the religious right bet on how long till their organizations gained federal funding, I stayed in my home and protested the whole debacle. I sat in my room and listened to Rage Against the Machine, suddenly acutely aware of this band's message, saddened by what I now saw in this country that I love so much. For two months I bitched and moaned about an election that I felt was so shameful and a disgrace. To have it culminate in people being beaten in the streets of Washington DC in a so-called peaceful transfer of power became a point of great sorrow and anguish for me.

I have come to love this country and its institutions a great deal in my brief 20-plus years. I have always held liberal ideas; it comes from my parents and how I have been raised. It comes from the traditions of a family that has had to struggle, though in my life I have not. My liberal politics and my sense of faith in the system often clashed but I was able to somehow find the silver lining. My faith survived Cellucci winning the gubernatorial election in 98, and survived the budget cuts at this University. It even survived the efforts of those more liberal than I, who have said that our system could never work for us. Now in my 21st year of existence, my faith in people and my country have been terribly stricken, and I will tell you why.

Eight years ago the nation elected William Jefferson Clinton as President of the United States. I would love to be able to tell you that I understood all that this meant back then when I was in the 7th grade, but I didn't. All I really knew was what my parents had been telling me, that Democrats were better than Republicans, or at least that was my simplification. So I had no idea what the hell was going on other than that Clinton was a Democrat and that was good. My life's education was just beginning, and at a good time, too, for the next eight years were going to be splendid indeed.

From the beginning we knew that Clinton was a playboy. Even though at the time I was naive enough to believe that when Clinton said he wasn't a playboy he was telling the truth, everyone else knew. Then comes Monica Lewinsky, an intern, and man the jokes and prods abound at Clinton's folly. Ok, so who really cares? The Presidency is the most stressful job in the nation, is it not? If he needs stress relief who are we to say otherwise. Well, apparently it was a big deal to certain members of the Republican caucus because we impeached the poor bastard. I can only feel bad for Willy, he really didn't deserve all that mess, and not to mention it distracted the country for God knows how long. So, jokes about the presidential member aside we move on to the last two years of our 8 years of relative bliss. The economy is doing great, and life is grand for the most part.

PATRICK J. COLVARIO

Enter the election of 2000. Clinton the Great has led us into the 21st Century and now its time for him to bid us goodbye. This is where my disenfranchisement begins. I realized that Al Gore was no Bill Clinton. I also realized that barring a surprise from John McCain, he was going to have to defeat George W. Bush, because otherwise the country was going to go to hell. I respect Willy for many reasons, and one of them is his charisma. You know that if it were Clinton vs. Bush, he would have had the whole situation licked. Instead we liberals, or more correctly, Democrats, had to contend with Al. No offense to his politics, which I agree with, he just doesn't have it in him, he doesn't have the same draw. Regardless, we persevered and we lost. And I ask, why can't we have Clinton back? He didn't do anything bad. As a matter of fact, that could be why the economy did so well; Clinton didn't stick his hands in to muck the whole thing up because they were busy elsewhere.

So Al Gore lost the election under dubious circumstances. People complained about the whole recount issue, many in the street screaming that they just wanted the whole thing to end. What was the matter, not enough murder coverage on the evening news? Were we missing the real issues while all this was going on? Well, decision reflects our own attitudes. And while I'm at it, where are all you Nader folks now? Took your non-victory and ran with it just like Ralph did. I almost had respect for the man.

look at what we concentrated on for eight years. Can anyone really complain about Clinton? Maybe you disagree with his politics, but if the only thing you can readily point at is who was under his desk, you are missing the point, and you elected Bush to the Presidency. People have complained that Clinton simply made the job look easy and as such we elected a cokehead moron as President. Well when you do the job well it looks easy.

This is where my heartfelt sorrow starts and my faith in the system ends. So what is the point? I am getting to it. Al. No offense to his politics, which I agree with, he just doesn't have it in him, he doesn't have the same draw. Regardless, we persevered and we lost. And I ask, why can't we have Clinton chance to cast a ballot. It is not and never was about dimpled chads that could be pregnant. It was and still is about this country's President and that peaceful transfer of power. We ignored this, when we as a nation, regardless of our race, creed, or politics did not demand the utmost assurances that the election was done properly. Instead as a nation we approached conflict by telling reporters in the street that we wanted the whole thing to end. The Supreme Court resolved the issue in the interests of the nation, "there isn't enough time…" to count all the ballots. Their

Your attitude was perhaps worst of all, not because you voted for whom you believed in, and I respect that greatly, but because when the results came out that Bush had won, that was the last we heard from you. We all have to deal with Bush now, and as for a lesser of two evils, I believe from a liberal standpoint we got the greatest evil of the two.

So maybe there are some simple solutions, maybe we need to make sure that George W. is distracted like Willy was. That would entail using Bush's weakness just like Clinton had his. Wait a minute; Bush's weakness was drugs and alcohol, which could be dangerous considering he has his hands on the button.

So there I sat on January 20th, watching the evening news as the DC police beat those that were protesting, and I was imagining who could be watching. Yeah, those who stand to benefit from a reduction in capital gains, and those who honestly believe that their church group should be federally funded. Then there are the poor and the underprivileged, the disenfranchised. Then there I am, sitting in my chair angry watching these people exercise their rights to protest and being beaten down in the street as if this were a dictatorship. It makes me wonder if my faith in the system has made me soft. Should I be more radical, revolutionary even? If I feel in my heart that what I believe is right, shouldn't I fight harder for it? Shouldn't I be out there in the street everyday making a difference? Well, instead I am here educating myself and maybe someday the collective knowledge that makes up who I am will make a big difference. For now I can only sit here and wait out the next four years hoping that the country doesn't go to hell in a hand basket, and remembering the words of Rage Against the Machine. "How long? Not long, 'cause what you reap is what you sow."

Patrick J. Colvario is a UMass student.

Israeli unity

Israelis have made their decision. Ariel (Arik) Sharon is the prime minister-elect. Practically, this outcome is not surprising, as the political pundits and analysts worldwide forecast the right-wing Likud candidate's victory over the current left-wing Labor (Avoda) PM Ehud Barak. True, no one quite anticipated the 25% victory margin. Nonetheless, Mr. Sharon's success appears to be quite astonishing.

After electing Labor's Yitzhak Rabin (Z"L) in 1992 and decisively ousting Binyamin Netanyahu (Likud) in 1998, how could the Israeli electorate choose a former major-general and controversial defense minister who has spent nearly his entire political career labeled as a far-right extremist? Analysts, journalists and politicians will pose various responses to this question. Already, early analysis has headed in the wrong direction. Although the Likud may have been wiser in appointing a less polarizing figure as the party's chief, the popular notion that due to Sharon's victory the peace process is bound for collapse has no merit. By assessing two aspects of Election 2001 and the Israeli political system, this point becomes apparent: 1.) the nature of the voting mentality and 2.) Sharon's political fate once he assumes power.

ERAN BENEDEK

First, CNN and BBC analysis throughout the coverage of the election already indicates a misunderstanding of the mentality amongst voters. In one comment, a TV journalist posed the idea that this election was a "gut reaction" by the Israelis who did not know who to vote for. Consequently, Arik Sharon won. How else could this be rationalized? Right? Wrong. Israelis knew exactly for which candidate they intended to vote weeks before Election Day, a national Israeli holiday in which the citizenry does not engage in daily routines and focuses exclusively on the democratic process. While the Right had a home with Sharon, the Left had the uncomfortable position of re-electing Barak, who in his 18 months as prime minister made several political mistakes that embittered allies and foes alike. This election had the unusual phenomenon of traditionally left-leaning voters choosing the right-wing candidate. Even my own family members, most of them committed Laborites, chose Barak with great reservation.

Also, the majority of Arab Israeli voters abstained, and the overall voter turnout was an uncharacteristically low 62%, thereby making the gap between the two candidates even wider. Indeed, the consensus both in the intellectual and lay spheres in Israel has been that the election ought to be interpreted as an "anti-Barak" referendum (yes-no vote) rather than as a "pro-Sharon" mandate. As such, Sharon is speaking openly of erecting a National Unity Government (a Labor-Likud coalition) in order to craft a peace plan.

Second, Israel's parliamentary system, which is based on a proportional representation electoral scheme, requires that the prime minister erect a coalition in order to govern. Coalition means compromise. Sharon's political fate once he assumes power will likely follow in suit: he will have to moderate. Whether or not Labor will agree to the terms of a national unity government is yet to be seen. Regardless, if Sharon has any long-term ambitions, he would be wise to design a broad-based coalition government, not one that represents a narrow, right-wing path.

Important to keep in mind is that these elections were only for the premiership. General elections for seats in the Knesset were not held. Thus, Mr. Sharon will need to include Shas (Ultra-Orthodox Sephardi party), the third largest faction, in his government to attain a majority coalition. Because Shas is more interested in raising funds for its constituents' school system than it is in the intricacies of the peace process, the party will cause as much trouble for Sharon as they did for Barak. Indeed, Shas' political games were one of the major contributions to his coalition's collapse this past summer.

The fact that Sharon's past with the Lebanon War will continue to haunt him is certain. It should. He made serious political and military mistakes that cost lives on all sides. Yet, much crude analysis is devoted to portraying Sharon as an individual determined to bring war and destruction to the Middle East. Taking into consideration that Sharon was a soldier who fought for Israel's existence on numerous occasions, the prospect that he will invite confrontation that could threaten Israel's survival is doubtful. Popular media often portrayed Netanyahu as an "uncompromising hard-liner" and the descriptive epitaphs will likely be worse for Sharon. Such media attention will exacerbate Israel's misrepresented image as a champion of excessive force.

Personally, I would prefer a more moderate, centrist government than a Sharon-led administration. Had I been eligible to vote, I could not conscience a vote for Sharon and the Likud. Still, there is a compelling proposition that in order to make peace, you need a right-wing party to fashion the agreement because the Left will always support it. Ever since Likud's Menachem Begin's peace accord with the Egyptians, this notion has gained validity.

Regardless of how Israel may be portrayed in the near future, the country will continue to maintain a stable government with sound democratic institutions. If both camps and the media stay focused on the issues at hand, the possibility of a political resolution could be a reality. If not, there could be an escalation of violence. That would be a horrible tragedy for Israelis and Palestinians. I happen to be an optimist and believe that a political resolution is feasible. Though many doubt this worldwide and even in Israel, the possibility exists. It may be a difficult pill to swallow, but Arik Sharon deserves a chance to lead. My hopes, however, still lie with a government of national unity.

Eran Benedek is a UMass student. He is currently studying at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

An open letter to President Bulger

Dear President Bulger:

I write to you because of your sympathies for classical education and the liberal arts curriculum, known to me from a number of discussions with Jim Collins, a long-time friend. And I write because of the plan for Distance Education. There are many number of grievances centering on the state of education here that could be vetted, but my primary concern is this proposal for transforming the teaching process, because it contradicts and undermines that process, no central to a classical education. Universities, we both are aware, are not artifacts but places of study that should be relatively detached from the rest of society, exposing students to great ideas, issues, authors. Imparting the feeling that there is much one does not know. They are venues where conversations go on, conversations about writers and thinkers that enable one to learn to enjoy the activity of the mind, the pleasure of forms, the beauty of language. Ideally, they contribute a kind of sensibility not provided elsewhere and give substance to John Dewy's observation: "the aim of education is to enable individuals to continue their education." In view of these defining functions, I urge you to reconsider the proposal, at least in very sweeping character, and question whether the standard of profitability is consistent with the building and sustaining of a great university. At a minimum, I would suggest brooding with the laity and not a plan imposed on them by fiat.

I am confident, in talking to Jim, that you share at least something of my idea about a university, its functioning and mission. And I believe you join me and my peers in lamenting some of the changes that are upon us, that make the printed word part of a vestigial order, that mark a shift towards a new world distinguished by its reliance on electronic communications which, as a consequence, increasingly impoverish language and leave fewer and fewer young people to wrestle with the great works of ideas or literature. A generation is emerging, we are both aware, so enmeshed in electronic information, so besotted by on-line data, that is barely acquainted with the printed word, and wholly unreceptive to the patient patterns of prose found, say, in Henry James or Virginia Woolf or St. Augustine.

Recalling those texts and teachers that have touched one deeply, you surely are aware that teaching and learning impose and intensely personal relationship between teacher and student. Students, moreover, not only talk about how they respond to texts, but also talk a good deal about their lives, and how their readings bear on their sense of the world; that is, education is not reducible to the passive and solitary activity of staring at a screen. Students want to pick up and argue the insights offered by the teacher and by classmates. Reliance upon technology undermines this process, the relationships at the heart of higher education. The online university treats classroom knowledge as an external body of information, the production of which appears to be independent of human beings. Knowledge becomes impersonal, and teaching in this pedagogical paradigm treats subject matter in an atomized fashion, divorced from self, from cultural traditions that give it meaning, from the intrapersonal interplay that gives it depth, density, and richness. An online "education" converts higher education into a new kind of trade school, something unworthy of a great university. And worse still perhaps, it is pedagogically meaningless, equating someone taking a class online with a student taking a course in the classroom. The experience is not even close. Distance learning makes reading a poem, or seeing a painting, indeed getting an education, passive and spectatorial. It becomes a mockery of the learning process. "The work of learning," Thorstein Veblen contended, "is a matter of personal contact and cooperation between student and teacher and not measurable in statistical units or amenable to mechanical tests." It is a matter for scholars and teachers, not accountants and technicians.

Veblen and Robert Maynard Hutchins, a generation apart, each wrote a book entitled "The Higher Learning in America." The common denominator of both texts was an indictment of the utilitarian corruption of the college curriculum and an impassioned defense of the pursuit of learning for its own sake. Admittedly the public university and the elite private college do have some distinctions, that that the former must be cognizant of the large community and its needs. It must train engineers and social workers, etc., and create an intellectual and moral atmosphere. John Cardinal Newman's image of the university as an "active cloister." But it is not simply a place for an industrial apprenticeship, a site for instrumentalist education. It also has an obligation to the great commonwealth of learning, an obligation to the past and to the future, an obligation to preserve the hallowed humanistic tradition. That electronic media are the wave of the future strengthens rather than weakens the argument about what makes a distinguished university. For this technology is voracious and will consume all in its path unless resisted by men and women of vision and commitment to the life of the mind.

This has been a long letter, driven by convictions shared with a number of colleagues. Our view of a university, of this university, is of a community of students and faculty who cooperate in a common enterprise. It means close personal contact between both in an undertaking that gives each a sense of kinship, in service to the wider society. One is reminded of a teacher in another superb public institution of higher learning, Morris Raphael Cohen of City College of New York. Cohen's classes were not like the patient dialogues Plato recorded. "The room was electrified" one student recalled: "We jumped to the defense of our fellow-students, but our teacher took us all on, in a razzle-dazzle of knowledge, on analytic power, of fighting intellect. But truth was the quarry and we were really fellow-participants in the hunt." Students flocked to his courses. They became a recognizable group on campus, distinguished by an intensity of ideas, persistency of logical analysis, and catholicity of interests. Cohen became one of the strongest intellectual forces at the college as well as a notable national figure. And you would affirm, I believe, that a measuring rod in assessing the quality of a university is the quality of its faculty, of professors like Cohen (as well as the quality of the library and of those who grace the board of trustees). Distance Learning degrades this proposition. It will produce no Morris Raphael Cohens. It will transform teaching into a kind of trade, similar to other trades, and our University into a Bureau of Instructional Services. It violates the spirit and intent of Newman's great work, which has been my guide and star – where he observes that a university education "teaches him [the students] to see things as they are, to disentangle a skein of thought, to detect what is sophisticated, and to discard what is irrelevant. It prepares him to fill any post with credit, and to master any subject with faculty. And I would ask whether on-line learning is compatible with such an ideal. Or whether it can ever be congruent with yet another function of higher learning, of which Newman writes: "There he [the student] forms friendships, there he spends his happiest days; an, whatever his career there …in after ears, when he looks back on the past, he finds himself bound by ties of gratitude and regret to the memories of his college life."

I apologize for the length of this letter, which distracts from what should be a very active life. I am grateful for any time that you spend on reading and considering it.

Sincerely,

Milton Cantor
History Faculty)
UMass

Since President Bulger did not acknowledge or reply to this letter, I do not consider it private correspondence and hence unethical to publish. It is published in the hope that it will stimulate debate on the subject among faculty and students.

Come on down and write a little somethin' for Ed/Op.

UMass basketball

GET YOUR TICKETS NOW!

UPCOMING GAMES

XAVIER • February 14th
7:30 pm

TEMPLE • February 17th
1:00 pm

RHODE ISLAND • Feb. 20th
9:30 pm

GET YOUR TICKETS AT CURRY HICKS CAGE • CAMPUS CENTER
545-0810

NOW AUDITIONING!

Get ready for the summer of your lifetime!
Six Flags, the world's largest theme park company, is casting now for 75+ talented people to deliver the high quality entertainment our guests have come to expect -- and enjoy -- at Six Flags!

Currently, we're scouting for:
Actors ■ Singers ■ Dancers ■ Characters
Stunt Performers ■ Ushers ■ Greeters ■ Musicians
Sound & Lighting Technicians ■ Stage Crew ■ and more!

2001 AUDITION SCHEDULE
(Please bring head shot and resume!)

Friday, Feb. 16th
Registration at 3:30 PM
East Street Dance Studios
47 East St. (off Rt. 9), Hadley, MA

Saturday, Feb. 17th
Registration at 11 am
Six Flags Human Resources
1756 Main Street, Agawam, MA

Sunday, Feb. 18th
Registration at 11 am
Lorenz Hall
University of Hartford
1265 Asylum Ave, West Hartford, CT

Musicians, Technicians, and Stunt Performers: Drop off or mail your resume for audition/interview at later date

FOR MORE INFORMATION, PLEASE CALL:
(413) 786-9300 ext. 3321
Six Flags New England
Shows & Entertainment
1623 Main Street
Agawam, MA 01001

Please be at least 16 years of age, energetic, enthusiastic, outgoing and above all, a team player!

■ All performers should dress comfortably and be prepared to learn a short movement combination.
■ Singers should prepare 16-32 bars of 1-2 songs (varied & up-tempo). You may bring sheet music or pre-recorded cassette. Limit 2 minutes.
■ Dancers may also be asked to sing.
■ Actors should prepare a 2 minute, comic monologue.

Six Flags NEW ENGLAND

EOE. Six Flags supports a drug-free workplace.

©2001 TM & ® Six Flags Theme Parks Inc. All rights reserved.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Arts Editor • David Troupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Penn & Teller brought their talented tongue and mirrors to UMass this week.

Penn & Teller trick UMass

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

PENN & TELLER
Fine Arts Center
February 6, 2001

[illegible] Penn & Teller magic/talk act [illegible] stand by calling them to a specific category. There are entertainers in every sense of the word. Shocking the audience that all magic tricks are just different tricks [illegible] Penn & Teller performed a 45-minute show that was full of laughs and some pretty startling magic. Would that stops be exciting, I mean I was a wicked shopper, bringing back the ghost of Harry Houdini or living to bullet out with some [illegible] escape artist. Penn & Teller are not that kind of magicians. They are [illegible] everything and offer plenty of it.

Before the show actually began there was a single player piano on a set being repeating [illegible] which included the Ingrids Bring Theme [illegible] James's Got a Gun, and the [illegible] theme song from the Smurfs. I and myself laughing [illegible] and continued to laugh at the selections as [illegible] were chosen for the duet. That continued on [illegible] to the Penn & Teller show itself. Penn Jillette [illegible] and Teller [illegible] and did most [illegible] card tricks.

Penn & Teller are known for taking the audience into [illegible] of magic. During the Rattlesnake [illegible] Penn [illegible] of how a magician or an assistant moves [illegible] a trap place to [illegible] show they bring the audience deeper into the world of illusion. [illegible] and as [illegible] 1990 shattered the [illegible] from a straight act to [illegible] and the restraint [illegible] shows of Houdini pioneered Teller's body and [illegible] escape and [illegible] act.

[illegible] & Teller brought their talents down to help [illegible] Conference at the Fine Arts Center. Many the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

COURTESY OF CAROL HODGE

The Young Fresh Fellows, pictured here in protective gear, are ready for the release of their battle CD against The Minus 5.

McCaughey stretches talent too thin

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

YOUNG FRESH FELLOWS
Because We Hate You
Mammoth Records
—vs—
THE MINUS 5
Let The War Against Music Begin
Mammoth Records

Ugh.

Not only is this concept a bad one – two separate bands led by the same lead singer, Scott McCaughey, battling it out for supremacy, but the two albums don't really sound that different. The Young Fresh Fellows against The Minus 5: It's a sixty-minute, steel cage battle for the bragging rights of best.

Except using terms like "best" or "supremacy" seems to be somewhat ridiculous – such words suggest actually being something more than mediocre and mundane, which neither of these bands are. Not by any stretch of the damned imagination.

Seattle's Young Fresh Fellows came from the same school as They Might Be Giants, a quirky rocky poppy group that was never as good as their New York City counterparts, but like TMBG, they've established for themselves a serious staying power. Their latest album is withdrawn and understated, muted almost in performance, so perhaps the songs that are supposed to really grab the listener's attention, including "I Wonder What She's Doing Tonight" sounds quiet in its aggressiveness. That was always a problem with groups like TMBG (at least early TMBG) and YFF: when they tried to sound aggressive, they didn't, so they had a collection of mellow songs coupled with songs that are unintentionally subdued. Not a good combination, not by any stretch.

"My Brum Sea," has a decidedly surf feel, but a vocal structure and presentation that's just horrible, as if the music wasn't allowed to be loud and to counteract that, neither was the decent instrumentation. Mix in a sitar, and the song's pure pain. Other lowlights include "Barky's Spiritual Store" that attempts to grab the listener with a poor hook, "Mamie Dunn, Employee of the Month" which is just awful.

And that's unfortunate because hidden on this album of forgettable tracks are a few downright gems, most notable the sublime "Worthless" a richly textured song that ends up being scores deeper than most of the aural fluff on this album. It's the kind of song that should be the first single, what with it's college radio ballad feel, a solid riff and a hint of something better for the band. Unfortunately, the rest of the album can't keep par, not by any stretch of the imagination, failing miserably in its attempt to do battle with Minus 5.

Or did it?

Somehow, McCaughey's second band is almost an all-star who's who of performers. There are times when Wilco has adopted the name, and R.E.M.'s Peter Buck and the Posies' Jon Auer and Ken Stringfellow were in the first ever incarnation of the group. Alternative crooner Mark Fitzel's joined for a while, as has Chris Ballew and Jason Finn from the Presidents… and perhaps the strangest appearance, Bill Rieflin from Ministry.

Buck remains in the group, whose first EP was released through a record club run by TMBG's John Linnell (uh huh, see the relationship) and has continued to release singles ever since – none of them all of that different from the YFF surprisingly enough. Honestly, on the off-chance that someone really wants to see how nasty this competition is going to get and purchases this album, the albums are more or less interchangeable, but perhaps they are less than more.

Why?

Because there are some actually decent songs on Let The War Against Music Begin, including "The Rifleman" by far the best song on the double-disc. "Did you see the Rifleman/ when he climbed up to the sky/ they had to interrupt the Price is Right/ just so everyone could see him fly" a haunting four-minute ballad.

But other than that? The album's ast-asi, with some decently crafted pop-songs that walk a dangerous line on towards the country-folk-rock that's gotten so popular recently. "You Didn't Mean It" and "A Thousand Years Away" have a decent texture, but are nothing more than slightly catchy.

That said, the battle between these two bands, a battle that has pitted Scott McCaughey against Scott McCaughey in a man against self feud has to go to Scott McCaughey's Minus 5, if for no other reason than the clever titles of his songs and their slightly more polished feel. Channeling Elliot Smith with a backup band, "The Amazing Dolphin Boy" is a slow song of an spectacular child's ability to explore this world of ours.

And while that title is clever, a band that gives up to Traffic on "John Barleycorn Must Live" certainly must be considered superior in talent – even though the song is somewhat abstract before a muddled country guitar sneaks it's way onto the track. There's just enough synth to make the song McCaughey, but just enough Lou Reed/Billy Bragg to make the song entertaining enough.

Which is truly the problem of both of these album's and the push Mammoth Records gave them – they are just barely entertaining and sometimes, as is the case on most of the YFF's Because We Hate You (perhaps very titled, depending on the listener's cynicism), not even that. It's a clever marketing strategy, but it should be saved for better albums, not albums that lack the necessary sheen to pleasantly battle one another.

Ski team in need of lift

By Benjamin Hall
Collegian Correspondent

Entering an unprecedented fortieth season with the Massachusetts ski program, coach Bill MacConnell has seen it all. The trophies and plaques that fill his office walls are a testament to his success both as a leader and as an instructor. Yet, with more than half of the regular season elapsed, all eyes will be watching to see whether MacConnell can push his squad past fourth and fifth place results.

So far, the highest team ranking has been provided by the women. They finished third in the slalom at the UMass Winter Carnival held on Jan. 20 in Charlemont. Erica Olson helped the Minutewomen with her 9th overall performance in the slalom and was supported by a 14th place finish by Molly Lyon. Unfortunately, this would be Lyon's last race for the season. She has since been absent from the lineup due to an injury sustained in winter training camp.

For every hardship, however, there is usually a surprise that follows. Rebecca Chan, a newcomer to the university and to the sport of team ski racing, has managed to secure a regular position in the women's lineup. She is currently racing in the eight position and has scored points for the team in three races. Paving the way for Chan's improvement have been veterans such as co-captain Lauren Brodey, Tina King and Carolyn Lewenberg.

Whether the men are chasing the women or vice-versa is yet to be determined. Fourth and fifth place seems to be a comfortable position for both teams. The beginning of the ski season brought somber news to the men as they learned that they would be without two of their best racers.

Peter Sanford, an Austrian native, informed coach MacConnell over the summer that he would be unable to return due to financial concerns. Ben Gibson also decided to take a year off so that he will be able to preserve his fourth and last year of skiing eligibility while completing the fifth year of his major.

Such concerns appear to have been quickly forgotten. Several seniors have taken advantage of this opportunity and continue to prove themselves with impressive results. Christian Guertin, Mike Hadden and co-captain Ken Thoman refuse to let the team slip past a fourth place standing in all of the races to date.

Boston College, Colby/Sawyer, and Plymouth State remain a formidable men's league trio holding up the first three places in every event.

The remainder of the season, which includes the Boston College Carnival this weekend and the Smith College Carnival on Feb. 16, should provide the UMass skiers with a special opportunity.

While several racers will inevitably race in the post-season events, many more will hang up their hopes and concentrate on next season. With the immense potential of newcomers and veterans alike, combined with the success of this season, there is no reason to doubt that a surprise might be in the near future for our skiers.

■ swimming

continued from page 12

Alomar won both events.

In his first trip to Storrs, a dual meet against UConn on Dec. 9, Alomar won the three-meter competition with a score of 289.95. The highlight of his season so far was his performance back on Dec. 1 against Syracuse. On that day, Alomar notched a score of 303.55 in the 11 dive three-meter competiton, a score good enough for second best all-time at UMass and good enough to put him in the NCAA Zone qualifier.

In order for the Minutemen to be successful this weekend, they will need victories from people other than just the seniors and Alomar. People like Tommy Keane, Peter Tawczynski and Ryan Fisher will need to step up and carry their share of the burden.

Keane has been the Maroon and White's top long distance swimmer this season. He currently holds the season-best time in the 500-, 1000- and 1650-yard freestyle. Back on Jan. 23, Keane was named A-10 Performer of the Week for the first time of his career. The sophomore from Melrose, Mass. took the award for his performance in a tri-meet against George Washington and Maryland-Baltimore County. In that meet, Keane won the 500-yard free and finished third in 1000-free.

With the A-10 tournament just around the corner, the Minutemen will look to use this weekend's Husky Invitational as a major tune up. A victory in Storrs will be a major step for the Maroon and White in realizing their dream of being A-10 Champions.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Mike Sabina and the men's swimming team will go to Storrs, Conn. before they head to the Atlantic 10 tourney next weekend.

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

One of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in every thing from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, world-class technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. You'll see your ATARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities, a supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

Plus, you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We have a lot to tell you about Raytheon and the exciting opportunities we have available. Stop on by and visit our booth at your college career fair. If you are unable to attend the fair, please e-mail your resume to: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments), or mail to: Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

The Collegian is hiring morning distribution staff.

Come to the Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement if interested.

UMass sets for spring opener

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

After a solid 6-1 record in their fall campaign, the Massachusetts men's tennis squad is hoping to make some noise in the Atlantic 10 this spring. Its ultimate goal is to be the first team in UMass men's tennis history to win the conference tournament. This weekend it begins with a warm-up which will aid them in their quest: The Cornell Invitational.

The other schools involved in this all-weekend event are Marist, Assumption, Cornell, Binghamton College, the University of Buffalo, St. Bonaventure and Ithaca. Led by No. 1 Steve Prisco in flight A along with freshman sensation Brent Davis at the No. 2 spot, the Maroon and White hope to gain some physical and mental preparation out of this pre-season match play.

The remaining flights include Aron Gortman and Todd Champeau in the B flight, Will Shaw and Bill Greener in C flight and Rory Theis and Phil Rodrigues in the D flight. The tandem of Prisco and Davis will battle in the A flight of doubles, as they hope to build upon the success they enjoyed last season.

Gortman and freshman Rory Theis make up the second doubles team in flight A, while flight B includes the pairings of Greener and Rodrigues and Champeau and Shaw.

"In this match play prior to the season, we're looking to gain mental toughness," said coach Judy Dixon. "Right now we're not match-tough and that leads to us making mental errors. We need to be mentally tough as well as physically tough this season."

With a big match against Colgate at home on Feb. 18, the Minutemen are hoping to leave Ithaca, NY this weekend with a better sense of how much more preparation they will need in order to defeat the Red Raiders, a bitter rival.

"Colgate is an East Regional ranked team. If we were to beat them, then we might get a ranking. It's definitely a crucial match for us since we have never beaten them before. Plus, we just don't like them and they hate us too," Greener said.

Other vital matches for the squad include Duquesne on Feb. 10, George Washington on Mar. 10 and Temple on Apr. 7.

"Duquesne and G.W. are both A-10 teams so we need to beat them for seeding in the tournament," Greener said. "We beat G.W. two years ago and then they beat us in a really tough match last year. If we could win that match, it would be great for our confidence. Temple is the favorite to win the A-10 tournament, so if we win that one then we know we have a good shot."

In order for the Maroon and White to have a shot, they need to step up this spring season, as they have historically played better in the fall. They also need to play more consistently as a team, as during the fall season each player seemed to peak and then fall at different times.

"I'm looking for better production out of the bottom of the lineup as the top of our lineup is really solid," Dixon said. "We have no easy matches this spring and we typically start strong in the fall and then fade in the spring because of the tough schedule."

"We need to play at the top of our game consistently and together," Greener said. "Everyone has been playing scattered. Two or three guys will play well and then it switches. And you need four points to win so that has to change. Every match is a battle and we are going to be in the underdog role a lot."

Unfortunately for the UMass squad, the battle will not be helped by injuries to key players. Both Prisco and Champeau are struggling with shoulder injuries and Gortman is still suffering from the back spasms that he struggled with last fall.

The most dangerous injury is to Prisco as he is the heart and soul of UMass men' tennis. With his fiery, competitive edge, he is the leader that could bring them an A-10 title and a NCAA bid.

"This is my senior year so I would love to end by winning the A-10 tournament and travel to some exotic place like Florida for the NCAA tournament," Greener added. "But without Steve our chances are zero. We need him to get healthy and to not to push himself this weekend if we want to go any further."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The men's tennis team springs back into action this weekend, opening up their campaign at the Cornell Invitational this weekend.

Minutewomen sailing as A-10 tourney nears

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Last weekend, in a commanding win over Fordham, one of the youngest teams in Massachusetts' swimming history became one of the most successful. The Minutewomen swam circles around the not so buoyant Fordham Rams, en route to a school record-tying tenth win of the season and first place in the Atlantic 10.

Never before has such a young and inexperienced team survived the desperate journey that is the A-10 regular season. However, with a talented core of juniors and an exciting, ambitious group of underclassmen, UMass was able emerge from the rough waters of the conference with first place in its grasp.

With the conference regular season behind them and the wind at their backs, the Minutewomen look ahead to the climax of their voyage in Buffalo, NY: The Atlantic 10 championships.

Before sailing north to the Empire State, some of the Minutewomen will take a detour to Storrs, CT for the UConn Husky Invitational.

UMass is 10-3 on the season, thanks in large part to the outstanding campaigns of junior triumvirate Anne Dettloff, Andrea Kazanjian and Becky Hunnewell.

Kazanjian, who holds the conference best time in the 50-yard and the 100-yard freestyle, has helped to solidify UMass' dominance in the A-10.

Dettloff and Hunnewell are also high on the conference leaderboards in the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard backstroke respectively.

The real surprise for the Maroon and White this year has been the extraordinary performance of Christen Dexter. Dexter, who is only a freshman, has exceeded all expectations in dominating the breaststroke and providing depth in any other event she swims.

The rookie has been largely unbeatable at the 200-yard breast and she is still getting better. Meet after meet, she keeps improving, a fact that is supported by the fact that she has shattered the school record three times this year.

Although Dettloff, Dexter and company garner much of the press they are but a microcosm of the entire squad. The core of this team's success is in its versatility. There are so many different swimmers who compete and are successful at a variety of events that other teams are struggling to keep up. No one in the A-10 can even compare when it comes to depth and that fact is never more evident than in the relays, an event where depth is put on center stage.

With the Atlantic 10 championships on the horizon, that depth will be put to the test as each swimmer is stacked up against the best the conference has to offer. So far this season there hasn't been one loose screw in the Maroon and White swimming machine, and for that ship to keep on cruising UMass will have to continue to do what has brought them this far: Dominate.

■ swimming

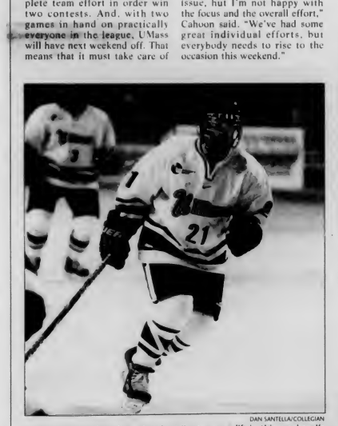
continued from page 12

of providing a definite answer.

However, it is evident that regardless of who is in the net or who suits up on both nights, the Minutemen will need a complete team effort in order win two contests. And, with two games in hand on practically everyone in the league, UMass will have next weekend off. That means that it must take care of business now in order to have complete peace of mind for the next two weeks.

"The kids in the program know that it's not a personal issue, but I'm not happy with the focus and the overall effort," Cahoon said. "We've had some great individual efforts, but everybody needs to rise to the occasion this weekend."



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Darcy King will look to give the Minutemen a lift in this weekend's pivotal two-game series.

Minutewomen return to action this weekend

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

When a team is coming off of a 31-8 overall season and a fifth place finish overall in the country, repeating past success, let alone improving, is quite a task to undertake.

This is the situation that the Massachusetts women's water polo team faces this year, and they begin their task this weekend as they play three matches this weekend in the Princeton Invitational. The Minutewomen face off against Michigan at 7:30 p.m. and Villanova at 7:20 on Saturday, with the weekend's final contest being held at 1 p.m. on Sunday against UC Santa Cruz.

The Minutewomen, who finished last year ranked fifth in the nation in the National Collegiate Poll, will take on their arduous task with a new captain at the helm of the ship, as last year's assistant coach Donna Heinel takes over the head coaching position this season. Heinel was previously the assistant swimming coach for the Maroon and White for the three seasons before she joined the water polo team.

"The intensity has been at a high level during practice," Heinel said. "Everyone has a shot for a starting role and a chance to develop as players."

The team returns 12 letter-winners from last year's team, which turned in its best performance in school history. UMass has a chance to capture its third Eastern Championship in the last four years.

The team lost four seniors from last year's team, including top two goal scorers Katie Grogan and Claudia Clement. Instead of dwelling on the departures, however, Heinel sees it as an opportunity for other players to step up.

"With the graduation of the four seniors, it opens up four starting positions, giving everyone a new sense of excitement and increasing the intensity. Everyone has a shot for a starting role and a chance to develop as players."

The Minutewoman defense is led by junior All-American netminder Dana Simkwich. Senior Sarah Newell should also be a prime contributor, both as a leader and as one of the top defenders in the East.

The offense should be led by last year's phenom, sophomore Kelly Chassy, who ended the year third on the team in goals and scoring, tallying 46 goals and 12 assists.

This year, the NCAA has added water polo as an official sport. What that means for UMass is that if they win the Eastern Conference, they are guaranteed a spot in the Final Four.

"I'm extremely excited to start the season so that we can determine what level of play we are at and what we need to improve," Heinel said. Coach Heinel and her troops have a long road in front of them: The road back to the top.

Track squads hope to break hearts in Boston

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Mired in virtual obscurity since the beginning of the season and overshadowed by the more high-profile hockey and basketball teams here at UMass, the Massachusetts men's and women's indoor track teams will continue their already successful seasons this Saturday at the Valentine Classic in Boston.

Both squads have received significant contributions from all areas: freshmen and upperclassmen, sprinters and distance runners, throwers and jumpers have all excelled.

The men's side is coming off an impressive third place finish last week at the URI Invitational in a field of nine teams. The Maroon and White were led at the event by freshman David Mullert in the one mile, who outran the rest of the pack, taking first place with a time of just over 4:21. Teammate Sal Nastasi finished just a tenth of a second behind his compatriot to take the proverbial silver medal.

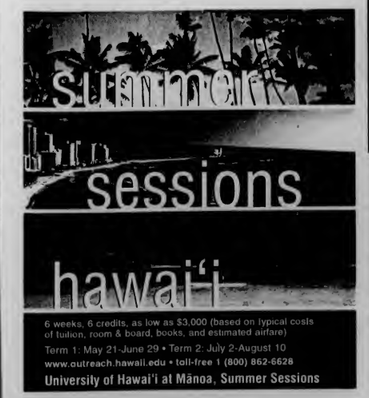
In other men's action, senior Mike Harris finished third in the 200-meter dash, clocking in with a time of just under 0:23. Freshman Jeff Jason continued his strong performances over the season in the shot put, ranking third with a throw of over 49 feet. The distance relays team also had strong showings as both the 4x400 and 4x800 teams took home second place.

Crossing genders over to the women's side, the Minutewomen competed as well in Kingston last weekend, and captured a respectable fourth place finish out of eight squads. Junior Rhianna DaCruz and freshman Brandy Green placed second and third, respectively, in the pole vault. In another field event, Carole LaPlante threw her way to a third place finish in the shot put, with a toss exceeding 40 feet.

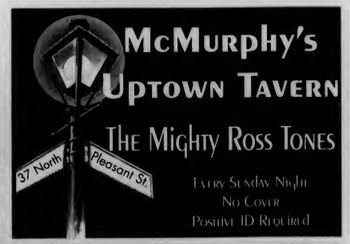
Don't be mistaken, though. The women have some talented runners as well. Megan McCormick sprinted her way to third place in the mile run, finishing in 4:58. And Chrystal Murphy finished off a great day for the Minutewomen, taking second in the 55-meter hurdles, clocking in at 8:40 seconds.

The Valentine Classic will again feature teams from all around New England, with teams such as URI, UNH and Boston College.

Both the Minutemen and Minutewomen will look to expand on their successful campaigns and maybe, just maybe, more people will realize that our track squads are equally as competitive as any other team UMass fields.



6 weeks, 6 credits, as low as $3,000 (based on typical costs of tuition, room & board, books, and estimated airfare)
Term 1: May 21-June 29 • Term 2: July 2-August 10
www.outreach.hawaii.edu • toll-free 1 (800) 862-6628
University of Hawai'i at Mānoa, Summer Sessions



UMass Student Legal Services Office

FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!

545-1995

CALL TODAY!

922 CAMPUS CENTER

Groovy baby.

psychedelic tank top...$26

ZANNA

downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVOTIES

Train to be an EMT this semester Tuesday and Thursday nights 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost $600 For more information or to register call 545-1885 Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Cheap heating oil: join the Pioneer Valley Oil Cooperative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Apartment at Cliffside In Sunderland for sublet thru May $600 reduced from $720 Call 549-6408

1 Month Free! Sunny 2 bdrm apartment Shutesbury. $790 rent/heat/electricity 1/2 quiet tenants 15 minutes to Umass 259-1245

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Honda Civic DX 4Door Sedan, red, 75km, automatic, sunroof, cassettplayer, excellent condition $6000 or b/o. Call 253-3092

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

1996 Nissan Pathfinder XE 85,000K highway miles, gray metallic. V-6, 5spd manual, sunroof, Kenwood CD. $10,000 O/B/O Dave 413-273-8990

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained. $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

CHILDCARE

8-10hrs per week for 5 & 9 yr old. Must have experience, references & car. Jamie 549-7788

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, housework 6-10 hours Tue & Thur. $10/hr 247-5800

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama. Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

Last Chance to Apply Applications are due today for Tour Guide, Summer Orientation Counselors, and Admissions Reps. Applications are available on the campus center concourse.

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

EMPLOYMENT

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

Single Dad and business owner too busy to do everything. I need help! Shopping, light cleaning, errands, bills, etc. Compensation negotiable. Very part-time, flexible schedule. Need to have car. Phone # 413-253-4642 ask for James

Work Study Job: Join our staff as a Peer Housing Counselor. Must be available mornings. $7.00/hr Call 545-0865 and ask for Barbara or come by Commuter Services, 428 Student Union

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life 5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizon-camps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Human Services Exciting Opportunities The Consortium is an agency that supports people with disabilities through education advocacy and services. Program Coordinator needed to direct and oversee services provided to up to six people with various learning challenges. Supervisory experience, flexibility, and optimistic attidtude, sense of humor, relible transportation and driver's license required. Excellent benefits. Combination of day time and evening hours. $12/hr starting salary. Send resume to Janice Harris at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 AA/EOE. Full-time/part-time - Looking to have fun earning extra income with a flexible work schedule? Spend time with people in a supportive atmosphere. Call Lori-Ann Bruyett at (413) 536-2401 to set up a phone interview. AA/EOE.

More Than Just Summer Employment Independent Lake Camp Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Volleyball, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theatre, Dance, Video, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Skateboarding, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Ropes Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and More. Call 1-800-399-CAMP ask for Dan or Nigel. www.independentlake.com

EMPLOYMENT

French & or German Speaking cadidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or email dcu@remi.com

New Students Program Seeking extroverts for summer orientation positions: May 29th - July 18th. Salary, room meals, health coverage. Call 545-9681 for more info. or pick up an application at the Undergraduate Admission Center. Deadline Feb. 9

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

FOR SALE

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161 Call 253-2378

Speakers: 12" woofers, 5" liquid cooled mid-range, horn tweeters, 125watt powerful, only has about 20 hours of play time. Call Rory 253-3434 $299/pr

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CANMIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

MISCELLANEOUS

Long distance relationships CAN WORK! Find out how at www.sblake.com

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Near UMass. Quiet setting. No smoking vegetarian kitchen. Car needed. $325+ 549-4853

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female Wanted ASAP 1 room open in 4 room apartment in Hadley on bus route. $295 a month 582-9164

Roommate Needed ASAP Share 3 bedroom apt w/2 nice guys. Great location on Main Street. Call Tyler at 253-2687

Female Seeking roommate for Amherst apt. Cheap rent. Call 256-6244

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TICKETS FOR SALE

One Barenaket Ladies Floor Seat Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Last Minute Deals! Cancun, Bahamas, Florida, Jamaica & Mazatlan. Join MTV and Baywatch for Spring Break! Call for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

The ONLY place to advertise!

Call NOW 545-3500

Your AD Could BE RIGHT HERE!!

Call 545-3500 TODAY!!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYIS. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

3- HSCN Bulletin Board
3- CBS/3 Springfield
4- CBS 4 Boston
5- ABC 40 Springfield
6- FOX 25 Springfield
7- HSCN Movie Channel
8- UPN 20 Hartford
9- HSCN New Movie Channel
10- NBC 30 New Britain
11- Fox 61 Hartford
12- PBS 24 Hartford
13- NBC 08 Springfield
14- International Channel
15- TMATV (Archive Channel)
16- WB 59 New Haven
17- ESPN
18- ESPN2
19- UVC TV (Archive Channel)
20- Weather Channel
21- Closed to Cavel
22- C-Span
23- CNN
24- CNN Headline News
25- Lifetime
26- USA
27- TBS
28- TNT
29- A&E
30- Sci-Fi
31- Discovery
32- Nesgap
33- Cartoon Network
34- Nickel Site
35- TV Land
36- Comedy Central
37- BET
38- Daytime
39- Bloomberg Financial Network
40- College TV Network
41- MTV2
42- MTV
43- VH1
44- Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 9, 2001

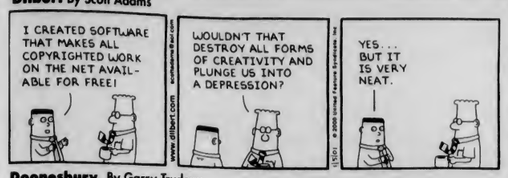
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	16 Clifford-Rec	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Duke Ellington's Washington		Nova "Nazi Prison Escape"
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder		Fugitive "Past Perfect"		Nash Bridges		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder		Fugitive "Past Perfect"		Nash Bridges		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl	Norm	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Sabrina-Witch	Popstars	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20		News	Nightline
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence		Dateline		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "Hope Dreams"		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Sabrina-Witch	Popstars	Ten People s 20 Teens		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Providence		Dateline		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Police Videos		Code Red		Dateline		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence		Dateline		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We re In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	Manor Born	Charlie Rose
WGGB	29	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Two Guys-Girl	Norm	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20		News	Nightline
WSBK		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Gary & Mike	Celebrity	When Chels Attack		Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	22		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince		Teen People s 20 Teens
A&E	45	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography "Debbie Reynolds"		Competition "Mule Day"		Porot		Law & Order "Helpless"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	20	Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show	Stein s Money	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents			Comedy	Michael Keaton, Geena Davis
DISC	21	Wild Discovery: Crocs		Wild Discovery: Snakes		Inside a Black Box		When Airplanes Crash		Casino Diaries	After Midnight	Justice Files
ESPN	43	Sportscenter		NFL Films	Shifting Ice	NHL Hockey: New York Rangers at Florida Panthers (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	47	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Kathie Lee		Unsolved Mysteries		"The Silence of the Lambs"					Division
MTV	53	Kathy Griffin	Other Side-Fr	Real World	Real World	Snowed In				Kathy Griffin	Other Side-Fr	Cribs	Diary
NICK	55	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Rugrats	Rugrats	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Facts of Life	Roc	Jeffersons	All in Family
SCIFI	52	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Paragon of Animals"		Black Scorpion		Farscape "The Hidden Memory"		Adventures of Jules Verne		Black Scorpion
TLC	26	Critical Cond		UFOs & Aliens: Search		Hollywood Cops		War in the Gulf – The Soldiers		Great Books: The Art of War		Hollywood Cops
TNT	48	ER "Chicago Heat"		Pretender "Jarolido"		★★ "My Giant" (1998, Comedy-Drama) Billy Crystal.				★★ "My Giant" (1998, Comedy-Drama) Billy Crystal.
USA	49	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG		Nash Bridges "Rampage"		★★★ "Blank Check" (1999, Drama) Michael Douglas, Andy Garcia
HBO	30	★★ "The Deep End of the Ocean" (1999) Michelle Pfeiffer.				★★½ "Timelock" (1994, Science Fiction) Ri		"The Enemy" (2000, Suspense) Luke Perry.
MAX	44	(5:15) "Crocodile Dundee II"		★★★ "Titus" (1999, Drama) Anthony Hopkins, Jessica Lange.
SHOW	35	★★½ "Funny Farm" (1988, Comedy) Chevy Chase. PG				"South Park: Bigger, Longer & Uncut" (1999) R		Green Mile		Stargate SG-1	Stargate SG-1 "Upgrades"	Beggars

Dilbert By Scott Adams



I CREATED SOFTWARE THAT MAKES ALL COPYRIGHTED WORK ON THE NET AVAILABLE FOR FREE!
WOULDN'T THAT DESTROY ALL FORMS OF CREATIVITY AND PLUNGE US INTO A DEPRESSION?
YES... BUT IT IS VERY NEAT.
www.dilbert.com

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

THE TRAIL GROWS WARMER
YEAH, HE WAS HERE. HE SAID HE WAS GOING OVER TO THE ROYALE SARCOMA TO MEET HIS BOOKIE!
LAST TWO HOURS AGO HE PICKED A FIGHT WITH MY BOUNCER AND BROKE HIS TOOTH. HE WAS THROWN OUT BODILY.
LAST TIME I SAW DUKE, HE WAS FACE DOWN IN A SHOWBUNK OUT BACK. THE DEW DROP INN.
I'M GETTING CLOSER - I KNOW IT!
SIR! SIR!

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

ZIPPER? HE HAVE TO TALK YOUNG DUDE.
WHAT'S WITH HIS PAUL?
WELL, IT SURE AIN'T YEAR GRADES YOU'RE ON ACADEMIC PROBATION AGAIN
I CAN EXPLAIN. I'VE BEEN WORKING ON MY BUSINESS PLAN.
BUSINESS PLAN?
RIGHT.
YOU KNOW, A PENNY STOCK OPTIONS MAKE THIS GO AWAY.
WELL, I GUESS HOPING THEY MESH!

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

I'VE RESOLVED TO NOT LET JASON ANNOY ME THIS YEAR.
I'VE RESOLVED TO ANNOY PAIGE MORE THAN EVER THIS YEAR.
THIS COULD BE QUITE A TEST OF WILLS.
OR PILLS. LET'S SEE... ASPIRIN OR TYLENOL?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SO DID YOU GUYS HAVE A GOOD TIME AT MY MOM'S?
YEAH!
YOUR RELATIVES ARE WACKOS
BUCKY, IF YOU SO DISDAIN PEOPLE, WHY ARE YOU ALWAYS HANGING AROUND?
I ASSURE YOU - MY INTEREST IN PEOPLE IS PURELY CULINARY. AFTER ALL, IT WAS THANKSGIVING EVERY ONE OF THOSE WACKOS HAD TURKEY.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

IT'S THAT TIME OF YEAR AGAIN...
TIME TO BEGIN OUR LONG AND ARDUOUS JOURNEY TO OUR WINTER NESTING SITE...
...ANOTHER MIGRATION IS UNDER WAY.
WHEW! I WASN'T SURE I'D HAVE THE FAT STORES TO MAKE IT!
YOU NEED TO WORRIED

Dilbert By Scott Adams

DILBERT, MY MAN, YOU'RE STAYIN' REAL AND KEEPIN' TO THE CORE.
IS THAT GOOD?
I DON'T EVEN KNOW WHAT IT MEANS.
WHY DO YOU SAY THINGS THAT HAVE NO MEANING?
DU-U-U-DE!
www.dilbert.com

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

IT'S THAT TIME OF YEAR AGAIN...
TIME TO BEGIN OUR LONG AND ARDUOUS JOURNEY TO OUR WINTER NESTING SITE...
...ANOTHER MIGRATION IS UNDER WAY.
WHEW! I WASN'T SURE I'D HAVE THE FAT STORES TO MAKE IT!
YOU NEED TO WORRIED
www.hedgeweb.com

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18) - Unexpected developments in the life of a friend, or within a group you are affiliated with could have you reeling from the shock You might feel the need to do whatever you can to put things back to normal, and thus you may expend a tremendous amount of effort towards this end. This is fine, as long as you don't overwork and get too stressed out. Everything should straighten out within the next day or so. Hang in there!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) - Some petty but emotional issues could rear their heads today, causing misunderstandings between you and a partner. You may be tempted to fly off the handle and avoid your friend for a while, but don't let your anger sit and stew. It's best to try to work things out through honest communication. The results could well be that you reach a new understanding of each other, and are thus brought closer together. Remember: What have you got to lose?

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - Interesting news concerning the arts, spiritual matters, or perhaps health and nutrition could come your way through magazines or relatives today. In addition, some unexpected developments in your community, perhaps involving your education or that of those around you, could necessitate your running a lot of errands. This could be a bit irritating, as the tasks involved might seem superfluous, but bear with it for now. You'll feel better when it's all taken care of.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - An unexpected career development, or other form of responsibility, could have you considering a possible relocation. It might be a matter of only a few miles, or it could be across the country. A journey by air is strongly indicated. This may be a bit of a shock, but bear in mind that you don't need to make a decision today. Allow a few days to go by. By then you should be more focused. Relax!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - Overwork could have you feeling a little under the weather. Upsets could occur on the job that cause a stress-related headache or other minor malaise, so if you can, you would do well to stay home. This stress might be the result of "too many cooks spoiling the stew," with regard to a task or project of some kind. If you can't take the day off, make sure you avoid getting involved where you really aren't needed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - Today, you might discover that you have a bit of talent regarding the use of modern equipment of some kind. This could be artistic, such as computer graphics or sound engineering, or it could involve the healing professions in some way. Expansion of your professional horizons is definitely in the wind, though at this point it's probably no more than a vague possibility. Follow up on your ideas and see if they're practicable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) - An emotional letter or phone call from someone far away could leave you in a state of shock. This news could be good or disconcerting, but either way, you're not likely to be thinking too clearly right now, so don't try to make any sense of the situation. Wait a day or two, and then try to discern the facts about the situation. You'll be in a much better state of mind to deal with it then.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) - Unforeseen circumstances may compel you to cancel a social engagement. Unattended goals that you have been trying to reach could well be weighing on your mind today, and therefore you might feel the urge to move forward with them immediately. This is a good idea, but take care to move slowly and methodically. You could be tempted to make some rash moves, and this is NOT a good idea at this time. Be patient!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - People around you are likely to notice that today you're looking different. There is something ethereal and otherworldly about your appearance, and you could attract an unusual amount of attention. You're probably feeling especially poetic as well, and more apt than usual to see the world through rose-colored glasses. This is wonderful, but you need to hang on to some measure of practicality. Make the most of today's advantage while still remaining grounded in reality.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Some upsetting dreams could cause you to wake up suddenly, perhaps losing a little sleep. Budget your time so as to allow for some rest during the day. Later on, a need to make some unexpected purchases could have you worrying about the current state of your finances. However, this does not appear to be anything you need to be too concerned about. A little careful budgeting could enable you to buy what you need without compromising your situation. Be creative!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Some people with whom you may have been involved in a business activity could visit you at home today, bringing some interesting and inspiring news, perhaps about the arts, or about spiritual or metaphysical matters. This information might change your way of thinking in a profound way, which might feel disconcerting. Nonetheless, you'll probably enjoy discussing it with your friends tonight. Write down your thoughts afterwards.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Though you always have a fertile imagination and a poetic turn of mind, today you might find your level of artistic inspiration far higher than usual. Some powerful and perhaps disconcerting emotions could bring thoughts and ideas to your mind that normally wouldn't be there. Therefore, this is a great day to write, draw, paint, or make music. You might make use of modern technology in order to make the creative process quicker and easier for you. Remember: It's not as hard as it seems!

Courtesy of Yahoo.com

YOUR AD could be here!

28,000 Readership
Call 545-3500 for details.

ACROSS
1 Trunk, in Britain
5 Actress Garr
9 Galileo's home
13 Taj Mahal city
14 Fibs
15 Goes bad
16 Close by
17 Cuban dance
18 Has debts
19 Town sacred to Apollo
21 Yes to Jacques
22 Doe's offspring
23 Vow
25 Calcutta attire
27 Comet and Blitzen
31 Biker's gear
35 — Christian Andersen
36 Novelist Bellow
38 Molars
39 Scramble it
40 Makes an effort
42 Greek letter
43 High up
46 Finger motion
47 Pitz through 48 Begin
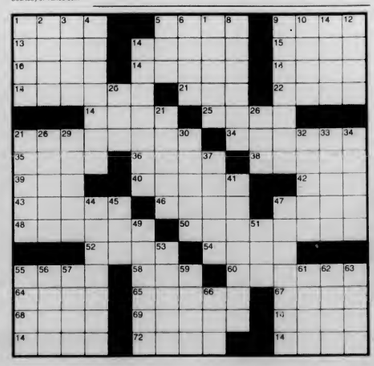
50 Type of card
52 They get the yoke
54 Not any
55 Debatable
58 Crooner Cole
60 Tell
64 Marshal Wyatt —
65 Oklahoma Indian
67 Roman road
68 Metz' home
69 Evaluated
70 Baseball's Musial
71 — lang syne
72 Loud noise
73 Kid

DOWN
1 Musical group
2 S-mooking
3 Thermometer type
4 Game fish
5 First letter
6 Pollster Roper
7 Picture puzzle
8 Biblical prophet
9 Beef biography
10 Des Moines locale
11 One-pot dinner
12 Org.
14 Least original
20 Owned
24 Lasters
26 Soak, as flax
27 Ostrichlike birds
28 Bekl —
29 Gold bar
30 Feeling regret
32 "Thanks, Herr!"
33 Fictional Frome
34 Beach sandal
37 Gain some knowledge
41 Harpooned
44 Thief who preys on pedestrians
45 Formal attire
47 Handsaw, e.g.
49 Singing voices
51 Before, to Keats
53 Sounding congested
55 Arizona sight
56 Honolulu locale
57 Moundsman Hershiser
59 "Cheers" wood
61 LLD holder
62 Salad-bowl wood
63 Ocean flier
66 Precious stone

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	A	D	L	O	A	N	E	F	Y
J	O	S	E	E	Y	R	E	S	I	L	O	S
E	R	I	N	S	L	E	I	G	H	I	D	E
T	E	N	N	I	S	A	G	O	S	P	A	T
			I	D	E	S		H	O	S	T
P	E	R	S	O	N	A	L	F	I	A	S	C	O
I	M	A	L	E	G	A	L	T	I	T	L	E
K	I	N	G	D	A	T	E	D	O	I	N	E
E	L	G	I	N	S	E	V	E	R	L	O	N
S	E	E	S	A	W		R	E	E	L	E	D
			S	P	E	D		E	R	G	O
A	L	S	O	B	U	D		A	S	S	O	R	T
H	O	L	L	Y	B	E	R	R	Y		S	L	O	E
A	G	A	V	E		T	O	T	O		E	L	S	A
E	V	E	N	O	P	E	D		S	A	W

12-20-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Quote of the Day

"It may not always be that way. You can't take nothing for granted. You've got to live life today."

–Matt's band Digimon

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 46 LOW: 38	HIGH: 47 LOW: 18	HIGH: 35 LOW: 13

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Sloppy Joe

Native American Stew (vegan) (B, H, W)

Vegetable Sloppy Joe (vegan)

DINNER

BBQ Cod Fillet (B, F, W)

Savory Stuffed Peppers (vegan)

Bow Tie Pasta & Vegetable Casserole (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Shrimp & Scallop Creole (H)

N.E.Lite Cod (F)

Dining Commons Abbreviations: B=Berkshire; F=Franklin, H=Hampshire; W=Worcester

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Rob Schulze
Photo Technician — Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor — Matt Despres
Production Supervisor — Roberto Delgado
Production Staff — Adi Huseinovic, Elana Premack

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Friday, February 9, 2001 | 12

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutewomen upset in The Bronx

Nehls steps up and fouls out in conference loss

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

THE BRONX, NY - With sophomores Jen Butler and Kristin Cannon out of last night's Massachusetts women's basketball contest against Fordham, head coach Joanie O'Brien knew than her role players would have to come off the bench and contribute. Junior forward Caroline Nehls single-handedly took over Butler's responsibilities in the paint while Cannon's points were distributed to sophomore small forward Amber Sneed. Unfortunately, UMass couldn't overcome injuries as the last place Rams dominated the last two minutes of the first half and the entire second half to pull off the upset, 60-52, over the Minutewomen.

Nehls was dominant throughout the first half, giving her best Butler-like performance of the season, racking up 14 points and five boards over the smaller Fordham post players. But fouls got the best of Nehls, and with 6:14 left in regulation, Nehls committed a soft foul and was sent to the bench. No UMass player could step up where Nehls left off, and the Minutewomen were forced to rely on perimeter shooting.

Throughout the first 18 minutes of the game, it appeared that the Minutewomen would sail through the game uncontested. UMass shot 50 percent in the first stanza, and Nehls dominated. UMass played solid team defense. The Maroon and White were playing with composure and controlling the flow of the game.

But all of that changed quickly.

With the minutes dwindling in the half, one of the many problems that have plagued the Minutewomen all season long haunted the Maroon and White once again - turnovers.

UMass was ahead, 30-19, with two minutes to go in the half, but Fordham stepped up and UMass stumbled. At the end of the first, the Rams gained momentum and began what would be a 14-2 run. UMass left the floor at the half with an eight-point lead, but it could have been much larger. Poor passing and bad judgment kept the door open for the Rams.

"We played hard but we didn't play very smart," O'Brien said. "We made so many silly mistakes in the first half. We probably should have been up 15 or 16 at halftime."

The Rams took the court in the second half with confidence, believing that they could play with the Amherst natives. Fordham kept their composure and executed as planned, and subsequently pulled away as UMass fell apart. The Rams shot 45 percent in the second and decisive half, while the Minutewomen shot a disappointing 21 percent from the field.

"In the second half, we didn't execute," O'Brien said. "We got some things that we wanted, but we just made too many mistakes. We missed seven or eight [free throws] in the second half alone."

Sophomore Mobolaji Akindj led the Rams with a season-high 24 points in the win with 16 of those coming in the second half.

"The kid had a great game," O'Brien said. "She's a very talented young lady, and she stepped up big time tonight. We didn't respect her jumper after she hit two. You think you can make that adjustment, but we just did not do a good job with it."

Maureen Garvey added 15 points of her own, shooting three for seven from behind the arc, while Chelsea Keegan rounded out the top scorers for Fordham with 12 points, 10 of which came in the second half.

Fordham executed the fundamentals of basketball better than UMass did, and that basically spelled success for the hosts. The Rams hit their free throws when it counted, shooting 18 of 22 from the charity stripe.

Fordham's team defense proved to be overwhelming for the Minutewomen, as the Maroon and White turned the ball over 24 times throughout the course of the game. Eleven of those miscues came during the second half.

While the loss of Nehls hurt the Minutewomen's play in the front-court, it was an inability to shoot the ball from the field that crushed UMass. The Maroon and White only attempts from the floor and shot 37 percent overall.

On the bright side, Sneed picked up where Cannon left off. With her sophomore counterpart sidelined with a broken finger, Sneed put up as many points in this game, 17, as Cannon did against St. Bonaventure in the Minutewomen's last game. Sneed also pulled down 11 boards in the loss.

With the loss, UMass falls to 5-6 in the Atlantic 10 and 10-12 overall as Fordham goes to 2-9 in the A-10 and 5-17 overall.

Added O'Brien: "You have to give them credit, they did a nice job."

The Minutewomen missed the inside prescence of Jen Butler as she was sidelined by injury. The Minutewomen lost 60-52.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Caroline Nehls

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Siiri Liivandi

UMass prepares for pair with Black Bears

Before A-10 tourney, men off to Storrs

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Two seasons ago, the No. 4 ranked Maine hockey team walked into the William D. Mullins Center and encountered a blue collar UMass squad that captured three out of a possible four points from the Black Bears.

This weekend, the reigning Hockey East tournament champions will invade Amherst once again for the first weekend pair in the Bay State since the meetings during the 1998-99 season. Game time is slated for 7 p.m. tonight and tomorrow night.

Naturally, the Minutemen are looking to produce similar results against coach Shawn Walsh's crew this weekend. UMass currently sits in eighth place in Hockey East standings, and could use a win or two in order to distance itself from last place Merrimack.

"Right now, we're in a battle with Merrimack to keep our heads above water," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "But I don't think that these guys are intimidated by anything. BC, BU, Michigan State or whoever, bring them in."

Added senior forward R.J. Gates: "We're getting down to the end of the season now, and every game is very important."

The Minutemen are currently in the midst of a four-game winless streak within the league [0-3-1]. Maine has only won twice since the start of the year [2-3-2], but is coming off an emotional 3-2 overtime win against border rival New Hampshire on Sunday afternoon.

The two teams have already met once this season. Back on Dec. 14, the host Black Bears squeezed out a 3-2 win at Alfond Arena. The Minutemen had a chance to tie the game in the waning seconds of regulation, but a shot from Brad Nizwantowski clanged off the crossbar.

"We did a few things in that game that I think that we can utilize in this game," Cahoon said. "But they understand how they play the game, and they've proved over and over again that they are well-schooled. They understand what it takes to succeed. It's a challenge, but hopefully we'll be up to it."

Like the Minutemen, the Black Bears [11-9-0, 6-6-4 in Hockey East] have struggled at times on the offensive end this season. However, Maine boasts one of the top defensive units in the league and a solid goaltender in Matt Yeats.

As a result, UMass [7-18-3, 6-11-1 HE] knows that it must play smart hockey and be opportunistic against a stingy Black Bears team. Penalty killing has been one of the weaker areas for the Minutemen this year and Cahoon admits that his team must stay out of the box this weekend. Maine scored a power play goal in the first game between the two teams.

"Clearly, we're not going to be able to take penalties," he said. "We need to move our feet, we can't just stand around out there. If we anticipate and move our feet, and we're not just reacting, then we should be fine."

Chris Heisten and Martin Kariya lead the Black Bears with 17 points apiece on the season. Senior forward Niko Dimitrakos, the MVP of the Hockey East tournament last year, has also sparked the Maine offense since returning from an early-season wrist injury.

Sophomore forward Tim Turner sits atop the UMass stat sheet in both goals [14] and points [22]. Senior captain Jeff Turner and junior winger Martin Miljko are right behind the younger Turner with 20 points each.

Cahoon has employed a platoon situation between the pipes in recent weeks, with goalies Markus Helanen and Mike Johnson splitting time. The UMass coach did mention that there is a likelihood that the platoon situation will repeat again this weekend, but stopped short

Turn to HOCKEY, page 9

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Toni Soderholm and the UMass defense will have its hands full this weekend as the Maine Black Bears come to town.

Softball squad kicks off 2001 campaign in Phoenix

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

While the UMass campus has been buried with snow from the Nor-easter that hit the New England area this week, the Massachusetts softball team hopes to bury their opponents this weekend at the Fiesta Bowl Classic Tournament in sunny, dry Phoenix, AZ.

The Minutewomen will play five games during the three-day event. Today they are scheduled to play against Big-12 giant Missouri first, and the Running Rebels of UNLV in the back end of the double-header.

The Maroon and White have no time to ease into this early season, as they will face two softball juggernauts ranked in the Top 25 this weekend. On Saturday, they will play another double-header - first playing No. 20 Oregon and then facing No. 8 LSU. The ladies will finish off the event on Sunday with a game against the Georgia Bulldogs.

Coming off a 2000 season that saw the Minutewomen go 35-25 with an Atlantic-10 championship and a No. 4 seeding in the NCAA tournament, UMass is ready for the challenge ahead. Entering her twentieth year as head coach of the softball squad, Elaine Sortino knows that a good showing in early February will pay dividends when it comes time for post-season play in late May.

Two sophomores - first baseman Brandi Cross and pitcher Kaila Holtz, lead this year's team. In her freshman year, Cross batted .383 with 13 doubles and nine home runs - a UMass single-season record. This season, Holtz hopes that her classic wind-mill style will help her repeat a spectacular 2000 campaign where she went 16-8 with 141 strikeouts and a team-best ERA of 2.13.

A two-time UMass/WHMP Athlete of the Week winner last season, Holtz will be the ace of the talented Massachusetts staff. The native of British Columbia, Canada, was also the second best hitter on the squad with a .355 average last season. She ranked in the top-five on the team of four out of the six major statistical categories last season as well.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Brandi Cross

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kaila Holtz

Cross, a true lefty first baseman from California, will bring an ample amount of power to the UMass line-up again this year. Last season she was named a Louisville Slugger NCAA Division I Third-Team All-American at first base. It was the first time in UMass softball history that a freshman received such a distinguished honor. She also garnered such Atlantic-10 awards as Rookie of the Year, All-Conference team and All-Tournament team.

Looking to take a leadership role in her junior year, infielder Cherra Wheeler will compliment Cross and Holtz nicely in the line-up most likely batting in the clean-up spot. After switching from first base to third base last season due to the extraordinary play of Cross, Wheeler does not have focus on learning a new position this season. Therefore, she can return to focusing on her hitting that made her UMass' second best hitter in 1999.

Behind Holtz in the rotation will be the immensely improved Carrie Jeffries. This year being her senior year, she would not want anything more than a trip to the College Softball World Series.

After personally playing a disappointing 2000 season where she went 7-8 with a 3.65 ERA, she hopes to rebound and get back to the form that she displayed in the 1999 season, when she went 12-3 with a 2.09 ERA and 66 strikeouts.

If the common sports writer's cliché that says "a team's play is a reflection of the coach" holds true, then the Massachusetts softball is in for some very good things this season. In September, assistant coach and arguably one of the greatest athletes in Maroon and White history, Danielle Henderson, played on the Unites States Softball team at the Olympics in Sydney.

Team USA went down under with a mission – that mission was completed as they brought home the gold medal. Hopefully, Henderson and the rest of her former UMass teammates can bring home another piece of hardware when spring comes around.

Turn to SWIMMING, page 8

You can pick Ray Liotta's brain about how good Hannibal is, or you can read our review and find out the truth. Arts: the perfect after-dinner read.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Freshman Cleo Foster has had to remain on point for the injury-plagued Minutewomen as of late. Get the score from No. 44 in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 79 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, February 12, 2001

Prevention is in the cards at the MRC

New campaign reaches out to perpetrators of violence

By Tanya Mannes
Collegian Staff

"Most likely to be punched by her boyfriend."
"Most likely to have teeth knocked out."
"Most likely to be date-raped."

The domestic violence awareness campaign running on New York's metropolitan trains features yearbook-style photos of women, with jarring superlatives beneath each one.

That is not what the Men's Resource Center (MRC) has in mind for its new outreach campaign to men who may be violent or abusive in their relationships.

Instead of focusing on the victim of domestic violence, the MRC's unique mission is to help the perpetrator change patterns of abuse through counseling, and by sharing experiences with men in similar situations.

The MRC has produced 10,000 postcard-sized cards that ask, "Is this you?" or "Is this someone you know?" The cards list descriptions of abuse-related behavior, such as extreme jealousy, calling one's partner names, and destroying one's possessions in anger.

Michael Dover, chair of the board of directors of the MRC, was instrumental in designing the cards, based on a similar set of questions that had appeared in Voice Male last year. He said that the MRC is looking for volunteers to distribute them to commercial establishments, such as bars and laundromats.

To date, two men have sought help at the MRC after seeing the cards, according to Dover.

"One was in court for domestic violence and he saw the card," he said. "The other one saw the information featured in the Springfield Republican."

Many similar programs get almost all of their clients as part of court orders through the justice system, but the MRC finds a significant amount through other channels.

"About half of our clients are ordered by a court to be in our programs, and the other half are self-referred, that is, here at the strong urging of a friend, clergy member, lawyer, or therapist," said Robert Okun, the associate director.

The MRC is one of the oldest certified battering-prevention programs in the state.

"When the Massachusetts Department of Public Health began certifying around the end of 1991, we were among the first four programs to have the official seal," said Okun.

A variety of innovative programs, coordinated by the MRC, serve the needs of men in the Pioneer Valley. Primarily based in Amherst, around 300 supporters subscribe to the organization's magazine, Voice Male. Through weekly groups and counseling, the MRC helps hundreds of men to defeat violent patterns of behavior in relationships.

The Center's Vision Statement says it "embraces both nonviolence and liberation."

"In this case, liberation signifies freeing oneself from conventional definitions of masculinity. We also support liberation of women from the conventional definitions of femininity," Oken said. "We're taking on the twin notions of supporting men and challenging violence. Men are hurting, and men are causing violence."

Amherst residents who drive past the MRC's subtle sign on North Pleasant St. might not be aware of the Center's mission.

"If you drove down a main street, and saw a Women's Resource Center, you'd immediately have some idea what it was. Men, also, need services; men are in the process of understanding what it means to be a man in the 21st century," said Okun.

Alex MacPhail began voluntarily attending free group meetings at the MRC in 1998. The first group he joined was called "Men Overcoming Violence."

"I was in an incredible amount of pain and confusion from my relationships, as well as old stuff from my childhood and adolescence," he said, describing the meetings as "very safe places." "I feel honored and nourished by other men's stories. I had never been able to talk with men in such an open, honest manner."

He soon became a facilitator, and began helping other men.

A typical meeting begins with a relaxation exercise, followed by a check-in, in which the men each have a few minutes to talk about their experiences in the past week. They are encouraged to talk about how they handled potentially explosive situations, such as by taking five minutes to cool down.

Next, there is a discussion of the most urgent situations. For instance, one man may be going through a divorce and need extra support at that time. This may be followed by a curriculum of teaching techniques for anger management. The meeting closes with a short checkout for each member, who can evaluate the meeting and state goals for the coming week.

"It's men learning from other men how best to care for themselves in a healthy way," said MacPhail.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

The Men's Resource Center, above, is looking for volunteers to help distribute informational cards in an effort to curb domestic violence.

COURTESY MEN'S RESEARCH CENTER

Cards such as the one at left help identify perpetrators of domestic violence through nine common criteria.

IS THIS SOMEONE YOU KNOW?

- ☐ Does he call his wife or girlfriend names?
- ☐ Does he put her down and make her feel bad about herself?
- ☐ Is he extremely jealous?
- ☐ Does he control what she does, and whom she sees and talks to?
- ☐ Has he ever made angry or threatening gestures toward her?
- ☐ Has he ever verbally threatened her?
- ☐ Has he ever punched a wall or destroyed possessions in anger?
- ☐ Has he ever hit or slapped her or the children?
- ☐ Does he tell her it's "her fault" that he behaves the way he does?

If you can answer "Yes" to any of these questions, your friend or family member may have a problem with abuse. Without help, it could get worse. At Men Overcoming Violence, he can learn to change. Encourage him to call us to schedule a confidential appointment with one of our trained staff. We can help...before it's too late.

MOVE
MEN OVERCOMING VIOLENCE
Serving Hampden, Hampshire & Franklin Counties
Amherst: (413) 253-9588
Springfield: (413) 734-5438
Greenfield: (413) 773-8181
Athol/Orange: (978) 575-9994

A PROGRAM OF THE MEN'S RESOURCE CENTER OF WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

Tuition freeze in effect: residents get some relief

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

For the sixth year in a row, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted to freeze tuition and fees at the current rates for the upcoming academic year. UMass student costs have either decreased or stayed the same in each of the past six years.

For in-state undergraduates at the four UMass campuses, Dartmouth, Lowell, Boston and Amherst, the average cost of tuition and fees will be $4,679.

"Higher education is the key to so much that we hold dear. It shapes a person's life and also helps shape our economy and our society," said UMass President William M. Bulger. "We want that key to be as accessible and affordable as it can be."

The average student charge will have decreased by $290, or nearly six percent between the academic years of 1995-1996 and 2001-2002, even as inflation for the same period has increased by 16 percent. In 1995, students paid an average of $4,969 and next year they will be paying $4,679.

While in-state students will be experiencing a relief in tuition, out-of-state undergraduates will not be. According to Robert P. Connolly of the President's Office, there will actually be a slight increase of tuition and fees for non-residents.

Most of the money for operations for the University comes from the State Appropriations Committee, totaling around $495 million. The tuition that the in-state students pay to UMass actually goes to into the state's general funds, sort of paying it back. Meanwhile, the fees portion of the student bill stays on campus for such things as computer support and mail services.

The lump sum from the State gets split up between the four UMass campuses. The Amherst campus gets about half of the total sum, for reasons such as the larger number in students, graduate students, and research.

Out-of-state students pay more because the State of Massachusetts passed a law stating that the University must charge the non-residents the actual cost of education. At the moment, out-of-state students pay approximately 80 percent of that cost. The University will gradually be phasing in the rise in tuition so that eventually the non-residents will be paying the full cost.

"It is not an optional decision on our part. It's state law," said Connolly. "Right now, the non-residents are only paying a certain amount of the cost of their education and the state is kicking the rest. Also, in-state families contribute beyond tuition through taxation."

The current non-resident pays $9,836 in tuition, and $13,465 with fees. Next year, tuition will be $9,937, and $13,765 with fees. Connolly also stressed the University's commitment to affordable education, echoing the President's earlier sentiment.

"It really is a desire to maintain affordability and accessibility. In '96, UMass was the most expensive public university in New England," said Connolly. "Now it's the second most affordable, second only to Maine."

"So many families across the Commonwealth are experiencing higher-education sticker-shock," President Bulger added. "The University of Massachusetts offers an affordable, high-quality choice."

In the late eighties there was a statewide recession leading to disproportionate cuts for UMass. Connolly said that when President Bulger took over in the mid-nineties, one of his major initiatives was to give the University the opportunity to settle down. Now it is in the mid-range.

"There are a lot of families who can't afford to send talented, hard working kids to expensive schools," said Connolly. "For those kids who work really hard, there should be something at the end of the rainbow, and there should be something good and affordable."

"This is a remarkable achievement and much of the credit goes to President Bulger and his management team," said Grace Fey of the UMass Board of Trustees. "Under his leadership, the University has been able to improve the quality while at the same time reduce the financial demand placed on students and their families. This is good news for the University and good news for

Turn to TUITION, page 2

Add / drop extended to Tuesday after heavy snow

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The deadline for class changes will be extended from Monday, February 12 to 8:45 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 13.

The decision was made because the recent heavy snowfall seriously affected the scheduling of classes, says Elizabeth Pyle, Registrar for the University of Massachusetts.

"We just feel that this is fair to students who had classes scheduled for Monday evening," Pyle said.

The storms, which dropped nearly two feet of snow on the Amherst campus, forced University officials to close the campus at 2:30 p.m. on Monday and all day Tuesday.

With the deadline set at Monday, students who had an evening class set for this past Monday would be forced to choose whether to keep or drop a class they have never attended, the Registrar explained.

"It's those classes scheduled later in the day or evening, or that only meet once a week that are affected," said Pyle.

The change in the add-drop date will primarily impact a large number of graduate students. A smaller number of advanced undergraduates are affected.

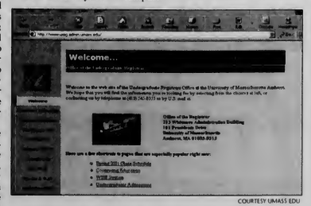
"A few very advanced undergrads will be affected," Pyle clarified. "Its more of a drop decision. Most students know what classes they want to add already."

The change in the schedule will require some work on the registration system, which is automatically scheduled to shut down on Monday evening.

"It doesn't really add too much work," Pyle said. "We have to change some settings in the system, but nothing large."

Pyle assured that the campus would be given plenty of notice of the change.

"We'll be sending out a email to the campus."



COURTESY UMASS.EDU

Information can be found on the Registrar's page of the UMass website as to the extension of the add / drop deadline to accomidate those with Monday night classes.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Stupid Human Tricks

This intense UMass student tzkes part in the Mullins Center's new human slingshot bowling competition

Flavor, sounds of Caribbean hit UMass

By Tanya Mannes
Collegian Staff

If the calypso and reggae didn't warm up the icy night, the spicy jerk chicken, oxtails, steamed cabbage and fried plantain did.

On Saturday night, the English Speaking Caribbean Association (ESCA) presented "Carnival Again," a night of performance, dance, and Caribbean food in the Student Union Ballroom at UMass.

The food was catered by Talk of the Town of Springfield.

"We knew they would be able to provide us with the ethnic food we wanted," said ESCA secretary Jenelle Butler, a senior Education Studies major.

"Carnival Again" dared to be a dress-to-impress event at a university where the "Jeans and T-shirt" usually reign supreme.

The two hundred and fifty attendees looked ready for a glamorous night, but all eyes were on the performers and a guest who had made his own costume out of newspapers.

Before the dancing, the performers emulated the Caribbean tradition of Jouvert, a preparation for Carnival that is also known as "jump up," according to Butler.

The performers, including students from ESCA and other organizations, wore eclectic costumes to represent the theme of "elements": earth, wind, fire and water.

Butler's costume, representing water, was a flowing blue, white and pink garment decorated with beads and glitter, and a feathered headpiece.

All of the dancing was choreographed by president Hugh Reid, a senior Political Science major.

Following the performance, all the attendees joined in dancing.

The thirty members of ESCA lent a hand with preparations and organization, including security and clean-up.

"I'm very proud of our members. They did a great job," said vice president Dionne Stennett, a senior Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration (HRTA) major.

In fact, the group has been invited to go to Wellesley College to open for Sean Paul, a famous Jamaican singer, on March 3.

"We want this event to be an annual tradition at UMass," said Stennett.

The event was sponsored by the Programming Board, the Arts Council, Schillachi's Fashions, Talk of the Town, Copy Cat, and other registered student organizations (RSO).

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Getting the Message Across

These Masspirg members braved the cold on Friday to help raise awareness about the destruction of Alaska's natural habitat at the hands of oil companies

Youth movement in D.C.

By Jennifer Skalka
Medill News Service (Northwestern U.)

(U-WIRE) Washington – While many of the Bush administration players are reliable Republican standbys or veterans from previous administrations, there are others for whom toiling in the White House trenches is a brand-new experience.

A gaggle of 20-somethings has descended on 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, and they're working seven days a week from dawn 'til way past dusk.' They're interacting regularly with the legends of Washington's political and media intelligentsia. Hobbies? They don't remember what they used to do when they had free time.

But many of them said they love every minute of their exhausting new gigs.

"I wake up in the morning and I am excited to come into work," said Mari Smith, 26, a special assistant in the White House Office of Public Liaison. "(I am) eager to take on new responsibilities and eager to serve this president and this country."

For the Bush administration's youngest henchmen and women – who are members of a generation weaned on what their new boss has called "the politics of personal destruction" – their jobs at the hub of national politics have made them unabashedly optimistic about the promise of government.

"I've always just found it really interesting, the whole interaction between the different branches of government," said 25-year-old Assistant Press Secretary Anne Womack, a Nashville, Tenn., native. "You see all the work and all the time that goes into making these very important decisions. And you see how incredibly intelligent and competent the staff is, as well as President Bush and Vice President Richard Cheney."

There are young staffers in almost every department in the White House. "I think we are very well-represented here," Womack said. And they were unified by their passion for politics, referring to high school history classes and members of Congress as inspiration for their current work.

Smith, a Muncie, Ind., native, worked on Gary Bauer's presidential bid until the Christian right leader withdrew from the race. Smith then moved to Austin, Texas, to work for the Bush campaign. In the White House, Smith mainly works with interest groups and constituents to "inform the American people about and generate support for the president's agenda." Like many of his White House counterparts, he said he still is awed by his new place of business and has a renewed sense of the "efficacy" of each individual, no matter his age, to make a difference in politics.

■ tuition

continued from page 1

the citizens of the Commonwealth."

Connolly also commented on the question of increased budget cuts for the University, stating that the President, working closely with the board of trustees, has tried to increase efficiency within the University, and has not supported widespread budget cuts.

"In the aggregate sense, the budget is actually not getting cut on Amherst," Connolly said. "First of all, it is the state that approves the budget. President Bulger only presents the budget, it has to get passed by the Board and then by Appropriations."

He also said that the state takes into account the fact that the University has independent revenue capabilities, such as media contracts, sponsors and research programs when approving the budget. But basically, since the Amherst Campus is half of the system, it usually gets half of the funds.

"The President has discretion, and all four chancellors submit their requests," said Connolly. "Then the Board of Trustees ratifies the decision and determines the slice of the pie that each campus gets."

The trustees approved the rates at the UMass-Boston campus. Next year, the undergraduate tuition-and-fee charges will be: $5,212 for Amherst; $4,222 for Boston; $4,129 for Dartmouth and $4,255 for Lowell.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1930. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager

Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Sinkiewski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

ALANA Job Fair

Tuesday
Feb. 13th 2001
Campus Center Auditorium
4pm to 7pm

Full-Time Opportunities for Undergraduate and Graduate Students
All Majors are Welcome • There's Something for Everyone

AmeriCorps • Andersen Consulting • Axcelis Technologies • The Boston Globe • Brockton Public Schools • Charles River Laboratories • City Year Boston • Connecticut Children's Medical Center • Connecticut Department of Children and Families • Connecticut Vocational Technical High Schools • Department of Environmental Management • Delaware Department of Transportation • Devereux/MA • DOT, Volpe Center • EF Education • Enterprise Rent-a-Car • Ernst & Young LLP • Federation of Hospital & University Employees District 1199 • Ferguson Enterprises, Inc. • Filene's/The May Co. • Frito-Lay, Inc. • General Dynamics Communication Systems • General Dynamics Defense Systems • Glaxo SmithKline • H&R Block Financial Advisors, Inc. • IBM • INROADS/Center New England • Intel Corporation • Liberty Mutual • Lucent Technologies • M/A-Com • Malcolm Pirnie • MNBA New England • Mellon Financial Corporation • Met Life/New England Financial • Millipore Corporation • MIT Lincoln Laboratory • National Park Service • Northwestern Mutual Financial Network • Officemax • Osco Drug/Sav-on Drugs/Albertsons • Phoenix Home Life • Picatinny Arsenal • Polaroid Corporation • Pricewaterhouse Coopers • Raytheon Company • Saint-Gobain Abrasives • The Sherwan- Williams Company • Shop'n Save Supermarkets (Hannaford Bros. Co.) • Smith College • State Street Corporation • Stop & Shop Companies, Inc. • Sun Life Financial • Teach for America • The Teachers' Institute at City on a Hill • Teksystems • Texas Instruments • Tri-County Youth Programs • Union-News • U.S. Air Force • U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service • U.S. Geological Survey • United States Navy • United Technologies Corporation • VERIZON •

www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Learn German This Summer At URI

June 25 - August 6, 2001

Contact: Dr. Norbert Hedderich
Dept. of Languages,
URI, Kingston, RI 02881
Phone: 401 874 4710
E-mail: hedderic@uri.edu
Hearing impaired: 401 277 5020

University of Rhode Island

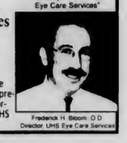
GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"



Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

Newsroom Staff:
There will be a LAYOUT workshop tonight @ 7 in the Newsroom (go figure). All editors and assistants should attend.

UMass Student Legal Services Office

FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

Valentines Day Special

...that spells someone...
...along with 23,000 others)
...know how you feel

Deadline: Wednesday, Feb 13, 12:00 pm

Sweet Specials
For Your Valentine
Cash& Carry Specials

Special 1: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar $9.95
Special 2: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar Valentine Mylar Balloon $13.95
Special 3: Long Red Rose Boxed Chocolate Bar Valentine Mylar Balloon Teddy Bear $21.95 plus many other Valentine Arrangements & Cut Flowers Available

Open & Delivering: Sunday, Feb 13th Monday, Feb 14th
Knowles Flower Shop
172 N. Pleasant St., Amherst
253-3805

summer is just .....
around the corner!!

FUN IN THE SUN, NINE FRIEND-FILLED FANTASTIC WEEKS IN THE GREAT OUTDOORS!
Overnight camp in beautiful Upstate New York seeks staff for the Summer of 2001.
THERE'S SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE!
Great salaries, amazing place to work!
CAMP IS FOR STAFF TOO!

Surprise Lake Camp
The Best in Jewish Camping!

For information and applications call, email or visit us:
(212) 924-3131
SLCamp@aol.com
www.surpriselake.org

Special bonuses for counselors who have been to Israel or done Jewish tutoring or teaching. Call for details!

UJA Federation of New York

BarenakedLadies

Live

MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst

fri. feb. 16
7:30 pm

Advance tickets available at the Mullins Center Box Office, all Ticketmaster locations (Filenes at the Ingleside Mall in Holyoke, Fairfield Mall in Springfield), by phone at (413) 733-2500 or online at ticketmaster.com.

For additional information call the Mullins Center at (413) 545-0505.

Presented by MassConcerts www.massconcerts.com

NEW ALBUM IN STORES NOW

To find out about the upcoming theatrical release of "Barenaked In America" a documentary on Barenaked Ladies go to: http://movies.yahoo.com/shop?d=hv

Learning Support Services

10th Floor W.E.B. DuBois Library

NOW HIRING

Tutors: Peer tutors wanted for many first and second year classes.

Supplemental Instruction Leaders: Leaders wanted for group review sessions for specific courses.

Apply in person at Learning Support Services or call us at:
545-5334

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Bush should ban racial profiling

As President George Bush courts the African-American community by holding third graders on his lap and talking about "reading accountability," he avoids the less cuddly issue of racial profiling.

Racial profiling is based on the untrue premise that minorities commit the most drug offenses. The American Civil Liberty Union's 1999 report "Driving While Black: Racial Profiling on our Nation's Highways" incontrovertibly shows that African-Americans and other minorities are much more likely to be stopped by law enforcement agents than white motorists. Racial profiling becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy, because as more minority drivers are stopped than whites, it follows that more will be found with drugs.

Al Gore, in his campaign for the Oval Office, pledged that upon his election, he would immediately issue an order banning racial profiling.

When asked if he would take the same step, Bush, on the other hand, mocked the issue with bureaucratic Dilbert-speak.

"I'll look at all opportunities, starting with the gathering of information where the federal government can help jurisdictions gather information, compile information, to get the facts on the table to make sure people are treated fairly in the justice system."

According to a White House official, meetings are planned with people "from all sides" in order to look at the problem.

It is not surprising that Bush is throwing red tape at the volatile issue of racial profiling. He has already displayed a tendency to procrastinate when confronted with an issue he wants to ignore.

When he met with the Congressional Black Caucus almost two weeks ago, they asked him to re-nominate Missouri Supreme Court Justice Ronnie White for a federal judgeship. They also asked him to support President Clinton's late-term nomination of an African-American judge from Virginia for a federal appeals court seat.

Bush's response, according to Cable News Network (CNN), was "noncommittal but [he] promised to study both requests."

At the same session, members of the Caucus said they urged him to stop racial profiling. Bush made no promises.

Our studious President should concentrate on looking at the data that organizations like the ACLU have already gathered, rather than wasting time on expensive, redundant government research.

Democrat Al Gore received 90 percent of the black vote in last November's election, compared to Bush's nine percent. Bush's administration has made outreach to the African-American community a top priority, and Bush has appeared at events honoring Martin Luther King.

However, Bush's wooing of these voters lacks sincerity. If he wants to gain the African-American community's respect, he needs to earn it by taking a stand against blatant discrimination.

Turning the page

LAURA SICILIANO

At the end of this semester, I will be officially done with my major. I will have enough credits to graduate next December, I will probably buy a suit in the next few months or so to have ready for job interviews. My college life is slowly dwindling away, and I am absolutely terrified.

I am only a junior. I still have another year of school left. I have two more spring breaks, one more summer, and lots and lots of tests and papers ahead of me. Yet, somehow, anytime I think about the fact that in a little over a year, I will be facing the 'real world,' I get the chills.

My mind races with a million terrifying questions. Have I made the right choices? Is this the best major for me? Will I be able to support myself? How am I going to be able to pay off my student loans? Where will I live? Where will I work? Will I have had the best college experience possible? Will my job provide dental care? (That thought is thanks to my mother). I guess my fears and questions are natural, but nevertheless, sometimes I realize that once college ends, I am supposed to be a grown-up, even though a lot of the time I feel like I am nowhere near ready for that.

One of my friends is getting married in a little over a year. She is planning a regular wedding, not some shotgun affair, and when I told my parents about it, they didn't say anything about her being too young or getting married too soon. I realized that is because she will be 22 and lots of people get married at that age. Twenty-two is a grown up age. Maybe that age is too early for some people to get married, but it is not unheard of or crazy; in fact, it is rather normal and that is what is so scary to me.

I was looking online one day at a sight about financial planning. It said that you should start saving for retirement as soon as you graduate from college. There was a statistic about a Roth IRA that says you should put $2,000 a year (.$38.46 a week) in an account starting at age 22, so that by the time retirement comes around, you will have $3.5 million. Now, $3.5 million sounds like a lot of money, but with inflation, by the time we retire in 50 years, it will probably not even be enough for a comfortable retirement. It is so scary that in the so-called beginning of your life, your early twenties, you already should be thinking about the end of your days. We need to think about our retirement before our parents even retire. It is absolutely frightening.

I feel bombarded with things I should do now and in the next few years in order to make sure that I have a secure future: save for retirement, go to grad school, buy life insurance, invest in the stock market and get a great job. Yet, at the same time, there are all sorts of other options out there, that people our age are supposed to explore, such as the Peace Corps, world travel, trying out different jobs, driving across the United States and volunteering to save the world. I know that there are some things that need to be done when you are young, because you probably will never get a chance to do them again, such as backpacking across Europe or working on a humanitarian effort in Africa. However, there are these other terrifying things that are thrown at us, such as if you don't start preparing for retirement right out of school, you will be way behind. Now the young cannot even enjoy their youth.

I guess we are in the midst of one of the most exciting and at the same time most terrifying periods of our lives. The opportunities are endless, it seems, and there are many paths that I can take. I just have to believe that what is meant to work out will and that destiny will guide me. Until I know what is going to happen, however, I guess these worries will continue to keep me awake at night.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

Protecting our rights

MIKE NUSS

Most people have never heard of Slashdot. Those who have consider it to be a "geek website," and to some extent they're right. Slashdot is a news site that predominantly features such "geek news" as stories about Legos, pro-Linux (a free operating system Microsoft would prefer you didn't know about) rantings, and "Jar-Jar Must Die" headlines. What most people don't realize is that Slashdot is also a place where we lament the impending doom that megacorporations and so-called "content providers" are planning to unleash upon us.

Right now, you're probably saying, "Okay Mike, what impending doom?" Well, okay, you probably aren't. But I'll fill you in anyway. Every week, dozens of stories flood Slashdot's "Your Rights Online" section. Stories about the Digital Millennium Copyright Act, a law that has already made free speech a crime, or the Secure Digital Music Initiative, a copy protection scheme that's being built into increasing numbers of portable digital stereos preventing you from playing copyrighted music. That's your MP3 player, folks. Did you really expect to be able to listen to music for free forever? You won't, if the record companies have anything to say about it.

Copy protection is coming to computer hard drives too, in the form of CPRM. In the near future, your computer won't even be physically capable of playing content it's not "licensed" to play. Did you want to rip MP3s from CD's that you own? Sorry. And don't even think of downloading copyrighted MP3s from Napster. They won't be of much use to you when Winamp refuses to play them, thanks to your new computer's "new and improved" hard drive that can detect what's copyrighted and what's not.

And then there's the VCR. Why stay home and watch TV when we can tape it and watch it later? It's called time shifting – watching something whenever we want to, instead of when someone says we have to. Once HDTVs, the new high-definition televisions that we'll all have to buy within the next decade or so, become standard, time shifting, as we know it will cease to exist. Oh, we'll all have brand new HDTV VCRs, but we shouldn't be surprised when they only let us record what AOL Time Warner says they can. Remember that little disclaimer about re-broadcasting Major League Baseball? MLB won't have to worry. You won't even be able to record it for yourself, let alone rebroadcast it.

Of course, this all sounds ridiculous. Not only could some of these things never happen, they don't seem all that important. You've never heard of CPRM, the DMCA or any of a million other evil acronyms I could throw at you. And they don't seem to apply to you. But every time Amazon.com patents the mouse click, every time the big guys win a small victory over the little guys and every time one of our basic rights is taken away, Slashdot readers think, this is the one. This is the story that will get their attention. This is the story that will make the public wake up and see the wool being pulled over their eyes, to use a "Matrix-ism." The media never picks up on it, though.

Had you even heard of the problems ALANA students were facing until this past week? If you had, I salute you, but I know I hadn't. And I'm glad that those issues have finally come to light, because maybe now they can finally be addressed. And just as those issues have been swept under the rug for too long, the clash between consumer and provider has been going on for years now, right under our very noses. Yet no one will take a stand.

Maybe this is the story that will get your attention. Someone is trying to ban libraries. Pat Schroeder, former Congresswoman and head of the Association of American Publishers (AAP), says that publishers "have a very serious problem with librarians." Schroeder sees herself as a sort of holy crusader for book publishers, trying to vanquish the evil libraries who let people read published materials for free.

"Technology people never gave their stuff away," says Schroeder. Apparently she doesn't realize that 90 percent of the Internet's DNS servers (dedicated machines that make domain names, like www.yahoo.com, correspond with websites) run BIND, a completely free program. Or that her own company's website depends upon Apache, a completely free webserver. All things that "technology people" have given away. But now that we're in an increasingly digital society, for some reason, fair use rights don't apply anymore. You can't photocopy a few pages from a medical journal to use as research for your thesis. You can't borrow a book from the library without paying for it each time you read it. If the "content providers" – that's the big guns, like the AAP, or the Motion Picture Association, or the Recording Industry Association – have their way, our entire world will be pay-per-view. And this is a very real example.

I'm not saying that each one of these issues should matter much to you. But as citizens and consumers we need to realize that these mega-companies are out to get us. I don't want to do business with someone who sees me as a potential thief first and a customer second. I don't want to live in a world where my rights are disregarded in favor of the real or imagined rights of some corporation. I urge you to pay attention to what's going on. Don't let them treat us this way and get away with it. If you'd like to read about any of the issues I've talked about more in depth (and you know you do!), visit Your Rights Online at http://slashdot.org/yro or the Electronic Frontier Foundation at http://www.eff.org.

Mike Nuss is a UMass Student.

Lecter returns in gory Hannibal

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Hannibal
Directed by Ridley Scott with Anthony Hopkins, Julianne Moore, Ray Liotta
Playing at Cinemark theaters

Rarely, if ever, do we get a sequel to a film that is almost unanimously heralded as a great film – even a great cinematic achievement. Rarely, if ever, do we get a sequel that pales in comparison to the original, but can still be considered a good movie. Hannibal is the exception, which breaks the above rules.

In 1992, Silence of the Lambs became the only movie ever to capture the two major acting awards, Best Director, Best Picture and a screenplay award at the Academy Awards. It was just that good. However, only one-fifth of that team returns for the sequel, as Anthony Hopkins reprises the role that he was born to play, Dr. Hannibal Lecter.

The almost complete overhaul of the major players hovers throughout the atmosphere of Hannibal. That is, the sequel feels almost entirely different than the original. One of the things which makes Silence of the Lambs a masterpiece, okay, one of the many things that makes it a masterpiece is the sense of restraint exhibited by director Jonathan Demme and screenwriter Ted Tally. Despite the gruesome nature of their subject matter, the tandem used anticipation and anxiety more so than outright gore to thrill the audience.

Perhaps, the climatic final scene of Silence serves as the best example of this restraint. While Clarice Starling (then Jodie Foster) stumbles around in a dark basement, Buffalo Bill assumes a pair of night-vision goggles and looms only inches away. There is no blood, no knives and, for a while, no violence, yet the scene is unnervingly suspenseful and undoubtedly bone chilling.

For Hannibal, new director Ridley Scott (Gladiator) completely throws any sense of restraint out the window. Indeed, I counted five different people who completely left the theater – one within the first five minutes of the film. To call the film gory and disturbing might, in fact, be quite an understatement.

Hannibal picks up 10 years after Silence left off. Clarice Starling (now Julianne Moore) is a somewhat controversial FBI agent, especially after a recent drug bust gone bad. Meanwhile, Lecter's fourth victim, the massively wealthy and severely disfigured Mason Verger is looking for revenge on the predator. Verger's $3 million reward for information about Lecter draws attention from abroad, where the kindly doctor has taken to hiding.

When Starling receives this new information, she is faced with a dilemma. She can play hardball with the Defense Department and track down former subject/confidante Lecter to clear her name. Or, she can watch as her career falls to shambles and her former subject/confidante is hunted down by Verger.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Julianne Moore, the new Clarice.

So cleverly, Hannibal stays faithful to the original's purpose setting up "the chase" as the film's main pillar of action and character development – only this time around it is Lecter who is being chased. Sure, the separation of Clarice and Lecter does not allow for the inherent tension of their relationship – pseudo-sexual, intellectual or otherwise – but it does allow for insight into their respective lives apart from each other. For example, Giancarlo Giannini does an absolutely stunning job as the Italian detective Rinalso Pazi (think Benicio Del Toro in Traffic). The development of such minor characters was not possible in the original because of the overwhelming magnitude of the central relationship.

Of course, neither film works without the Lecter/Clarice dynamic. Even with Julianne Moore assuming the role of Clarice, the pair still shares one of the more intriguing cinematic relationships – replete with mutual admiration and sexual undertones. Never have two isolated people seemed in such emotional correspondence, yet in such physical opposition. While the use of cassette tapes to recall conversations from the first film may be a heavy-handed tactic, it does remind people of that relationship – still fascinating after ten years.

That said Jodie Foster turned down the chance to reprise her Oscar-winning role because she thought the script was too gory and made Lecter too sympathetic a character. These criticisms are not entirely unfounded. Hannibal paints the sympathies between the FBI agent and the cold-veined killer quite thickly – to the point where Lecter is portrayed in an almost heroic light. And while Lecter may be the bad guy that everyone loves to root for, he is certainly not a hero. Hannibal errs here where the original managed to steer clear.

Some people have said that Hannibal is an art film hiding inside a mainstream release, but I don't think this conclusion can be justified. Excessive blood does not an art house film make. In fact, if anything, the excessive blood and gore only points to weakness in the script. The inherent suspense and superb crafting of Silence is not compensated for by the shock value of its sequel. It's hard not to enjoy Hannibal on some level – if for no other reason that to see the how the story lines of familiar characters play out. It's also hard not to compare it to the original – a comparison that simply does not hold up.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Anthony Hopkins reprises his role as Hannibal the Cannibal.

Eminem to appear onstage with Elton John: only evil can come

Ryan Benharris

If it feels a bit cold in here, that's because Hell has just frozen over. The world took a turn for the unconditional worst on Friday afternoon when the rumors began to fly that Eminem will perform his hit single "Stan" on stage with none other than Elton John at the Grammy awards on Feb. 21.

Irony takes a distant second place to the sheer disgust that the idea of these two completely opposite people coming together appallingly brings about. I don't even dare bother to ask whose decision this was, but the obvious truth is that it is a very bad thing.

At the mere surface of it there is an obvious obstacle. Eminem is a bigoted homophobe who hates everything about homosexual culture and everyone involved with it. And Elton John is gay. It would be much more likely that these two men would stand on a stage, facing each other with a pistol after walking 10 paces than perform side by side, or God-forbid arm in arm.

Now, the wonderful people at the Grammys would have you believe that this is a good idea. Don't let them fool you for one iota of a second! Of course it's a good idea if you're a member of the Grammy organization. They have been the target of shots and attacks from gay rights activists, non-stop since the day they nominated Eminem for five awards a few short months ago. Not once has the organization come out and publicly defended the nominations. Instead they have sat behind closed doors like the squatting cowards that they are, afraid to stand up for the fact that they truly appreciate Eminem's talent. We have heard about how Eminem has a rightful claim to all of these nominations from every critic in the western hemisphere, though. After all, he sold millions of records, and musically, the album is brilliant, so why shouldn't he be nominated for awards? However, not a word has been uttered from the people who started the controversy in the first place.

It seems like this is their first and possibly only response to the remonstrations. They figure that putting Eminem on stage with an openly gay man will probably cut the amount of protestors in half. If you're the Grammy people, you've got to love that.

Now, the wonderful Eminem would have you believe that this is a good idea. Don't let him fool you for one iota of a second! Of course it's a good idea if you're Slim Shady. Ever since he became the pill popping, foul-mouthed primary nuisance of the entertainment world, he has been searching for a way to make people understand that he shouldn't be taken seriously. "I don't mean what I say on my records," he so valiantly pronounces every time someone questions his morals. Well, here's the ultimate opportunity to prove that. If he actually stands by the things he says on his albums (not that I agree with any of them for one second) then he should leave it alone, and not take this opportunity to patch things up. Rapping with Elton John would be some sort of an admission to his haters that they are right. That is the point when he stops letting his music speak for itself.

We can hear the lyric on your next album already, Eminem. I'll tell you what, I'll even write it for you. You can steal it from me if you want. "How can you faggots say I hate gays when I've preformed on the stage with Elton John?" For Eminem, a better opportunity has never come along. There's nothing but positive press he can get from something like this, and he comes off like a hero – a hero who will no doubt use the situation to become even more of a jerk.

Of all the parties involved, I can't even fathom what Elton John gets out of this. First, he has always been an extremely big activist in the fight against homophobia. How spending four minutes on stage with a man who earned millions of dollars from an album with the lyrics, "My words are like a dagger with a jagged edge/ I'll stab you in the head whether you're a fag or a lez/ and a homosex, hermaph or transvest/ hate gays? The answer's yes," is going to benefit any cause that he has ever fought for is beyond my wildest imaginations. I'm going to go on a hunch and say that I really don't think that Eminem likes Elton John that much. The whole calling him a fag was what tipped me off, but the stabbing him in the head is what actually sealed the deal in my coming to that realization.

What is Elton John trying to prove? Does he see something in Eminem that every other homosexual person in the entire world does not notice? Hell, I'm a straight man, and I easily take everything that Eminem says about gays as obviously offensive. Even if Elton John does see something out of the ordinary, there's one more extremely unusual topic being abundantly ignored here.

Remember back in 1997, those heart wrenching videos of Elton John at Gianni Versace's funeral, weeping and clinging closely to Princess Diana for solitude? Allow me to quote the words of our good friend Marshall Mathers, "Hey, it's me, Versace/ whoops, somebody shot me/ and I was just checkin' the mail. Get it?/ checkin' the male." Elton, the man made a joke about of the death of one of your best friends. An explanation about why you've decided to chill in his crib is certainly in order.

If what I'm assuming is happening here is actually going on, then it's simply unacceptable. Everyone involved is part of the most massive publicity stunt of all time, and for them, the perfect way for we, as the con loading public to handle it is to ignore it and enjoy the beautiful irony of Eminem and Elton John collectively.

Well, if we do that, then we're not fulfilling our obvious duty to question the garbage we're so clearly being fed. I sincerely hope that the people who dedicated themselves to protesting what Eminem stands for do not stop because they think the problem has been solved. The problem that they were initially protesting has not been solved. It has simply been covered up with duct tape.

Something is very wrong with a collaboration of Eminem and Elton John. Each man is the evil epitome of what the other has overtly announced his hatred for. There are simply too many significantly important issues being overlooked, and to force people to ignore those issues is simply unfair. The Grammy people should be ashamed of themselves. Elton John should be ashamed of himself.

And Mr. Mathers, though I love your music, I still think you're a bad, bad man. Singing with Elton John for four minutes is certainly not going to change my opinion on that.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist

Are you a musician, artist, filmmaker, sculptor or writer?

The Collegian Arts Page is looking for artists to interview for a weekly profile series. If you do any kind of art and want to get your work known, please call the Collegian at 545-1361 and ask for Dave.

Wooing in Style: ideas for Valentine's Day

Circle, circle, dot, dot. Now I've got my cootie shot. Oh, the days of young love, when boys were the grossest things ever, but you still had crushes on them. And Valentine's Day was one of the best holidays around, because in the afternoon you would open up a napkin on your desk, and everyone would go around, depositing three potato chips, a gooey pink frosted cupcake and some mini-Hershey's bars on everyone else's desk. Then came the big moment... Would you get any little Voltron or Smurf Valentines? Of course you would, because the teacher made everyone give one to everyone else, but it was still a moment of stress to an eight-year-old mind. As we've grown older, we've become more sophisticated in our expressions of love. Most of us have grown out of the hit the other person in the arm stage or the holding hands at the Roller Palace scandals. But somewhere deep inside, we still have that Intense stress that we won't get any valentines.

Which is why Style File, being so in love with its readership (and itself) has decided to help you woo in style this Valentine's Day... or if wooing is out of the question, how to have a great Valentine's Day being single (which is my plan!).

Flowers are an institution for Valentine's Day. And roses of course are the most common pick, and are always a classic... but how about spicing it up a bit, and saving yourself mad cash? Tulips and sunflowers are always gorgeous, as are lilies, gerbera daisies, wild flowers and mixed bouquets. My oldest brother did a smooth move once and dipped a rose in chocolate, gave it to his date and told her she was "Beautiful as a rose, and sweet as chocolate." I can hear the gagging and eye rolling now – sure it sounds cheesy in print, but every girl out there knows she'd be all about it! Or why not try some non-traditional flowers, such as folded origami flowers or a blown glass one. Alone? Hit a florist shop with a friend, and buy each other (or yourself) a gorgeous bouquet. (Hey, I do it every other week! I can't help my flower junky ways!)

I don't know when the whole gift on Valentine's Day started – not that it isn't nice, but it seems to add some extra pressure to the day. But, since everybody's doing it... Framed pictures are an overdone, but never unappreciated gift that you can give to your significant other or to a good friend. A scrapbook of meaningful moments in your relationship is sure to get you in good with your date. Books of poetry, Shakespeare's sonnets, fairy tales and romantic biographies are intellectually romantic. Try a non-conventional gift, such as naming a star after your valentine at www.starregistry.com or adopt a whale or dolphin at www.adoptawhale.com.

But what to do on Valentine's Day? Go out to dinner, or set a romantic scene in your dorm room or apartment and eat in (although you might want to opt for something a little more romantic than Easy-Mac).

Have a love scavenger hunt, with hidden romantic things all over your house (this is difficult in a dorm room) or at locations special to you. Go see a movie... there are plenty of romantic ones out there (Chocolat, The Wedding Planner) or get all close and cuddly at Hannibal, The Gift or (dare I even say it?) Valentine (just remember, though it is in my column, I do not in any way endorse seeing this – it is totally your choice. I'm just putting the option out there!) Don't have a date this Valentine's Day? Go cheer on UMass at the Mullins Center as they take on Xavier at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday. Gather up your girls and take on Violence Against Women and check out The Vagina Monologues at Bowker Auditorium. And for the ultimate girl's night, Wednesday is a new Dawson's Creek (hey, almost reason enough to ditch your date and stay in!), so load up on the ice cream and have a Pacey-fest.

Whatever you do this Valentine's Day, just have fun, and remember to show the people you care about how much you love them. Don't forget to ship the parents off a card, and call your long distance friends on domestic exchange to brighten their day. And you're never too old to buy a box of N'Sync holographic mini-Valentines from CVS for $2.99 and hand them out to your nearest and dearest classmates. And don't get all stressed about the Valentine's thing... because I'll always love you! Happy V-Day!

Shauna Billings is a Collegian columnist.

MFA dance performance at Smith showcases excellent student work

By Rebecca Bromberg
Collegian Correspondent

THE NEXT STAGE
2001 M.F.A. Dance Concert
Smith College
February 8-10

The Smith College Museum of Fine Arts Dance Concert this past weekend was well worth the trip to Northampton. Titled "The Next Stage," the performance was a collection of four M.F.A. students' works of choreography for their thesis projects. Each choreographer effectively created personal statements in their respective works, each of which were interesting, enlightening and simply a pleasure to watch.

The performance opened with a work by Kerri Underwood. Aptly titled "Momentum of the Body," the piece was interesting and aestheticallyy pleasing. Dancers oozed onstage from the wings and even up from the orchestra pit platform, almost as if liquid, effectively conveying a sense of perpetual motion. There was a striking moment when all motion stopped, and two dancers proceeded to explore and demonstrate the most basic movement of walking, slowly elucidating the role each joint and muscle has in this action. This pair continued to dance in unison in a duet section, and it was clear that each understood the movement of the other quite well. After an intense transition of music and lighting, the full cast returned for a beautiful sequence. Here the choreographer showed an excellent use of space with varying angles of dancers in formation, creating fluid lines of movement; these complementary groups of dancers accented each other to create an appealing effect. The piece ended in lovely unity, all the more impressive with the large, well-rehearsed cast. Throughout the entire piece, the lighting was subtle and sophisticated. However, unlike the first two musical selections, the music of the third piece included words that interfered with the mood established by the prior two sections. It is understandable, though, that Kerri could not resist using a song with the words 'from New York to Los Angeles...' as her bio states that she's a native Californian, come to the east coast to 'fulfill her dreams.'

Leslie Miller's work 'Wake Up and Smell the Jazz!' followed, bringing vibrant energy to the stage in a fun showcase of dance for dance's sake. Five different sections were performed in a club setting complete with a bar and tables and flashy, colorful costumes. Opening the piece was a hot mamba number danced by the entire cast, and it was clear that each dancer enjoyed the fiery choreography. This was followed by a playful challenge between two groups – the jazz queens and the pointe-shoe-adorned ballerinas – that displayed the cast's ample, versatile technique. The impressive technique continued throughout the two duets, a very sweet 'Their Romance,' and a coy 'Guy Meets Gal.' A section titled 'Girls Night Out' featured a quartet of fun to watch, talented jazz dancers. The Broadway-esque finale, with its sharp, together cast and its great costumes, punched the point home that Leslie knows what she likes to see in a production, as well as how to bring that to the audience.

Sarah Seely's contemporary piece 'Butterflies and Other Lies' was performed to beautiful classical music with heavenly vocals. The angelic voices were expressed through soft, breathy movement of the dancers and the lovely lines created by the dance dresses. Sarah's solo section, with its tension-filled movement, portrayed the angst of the vocalist effectively. As the piece progressed, the music and choreography gained strength and definition, which was echoed well by the increasing deliberateness of the lighting. While there were some discrepancies in the unison movement, the grace and heart of the dancers was consistent throughout the piece.

Closing the performance was 'A Time of Darkness' by Sukarji Sriman, a native of East Java in Indonesia. The piece was based on a poem printed in the program which is difficult to summarize, but can be said to be an appeal to a God during a time of ruin. Sukarji incorporated much of his culture into this piece, with Eastern influenced motifs of movement, and he personally sang the poem onstage in Javanese. The piece progressed through several states – one of joy, then unrest, ending in peace – which were conveyed in the vocals of Sukarji and another male singer who sang parts of the poem in English; these states were also expressed through the changes in movement quality. The dancers moved at first in unison, in a seemingly ritualistic style, then broke

Turn to DANCE, page 6

Halfway home: S.U. gallery's Midway Show

Have you ever noticed that the Cape Cod Lounge draws a crowd that resembles the cast of "DeGrassi Junior High?" Occasionally, you'll see these scenesters without a scene wander down the hallway to the People's Market for their daily bagel. Lately, the talk in the lounge has gravitated toward, "What is up with that red thing in the hall?" followed by, "I think it's art or something, dude." Art or something? I think we'll have to go with something.

Siren's Way, by Monika Agnello, is a poorly constructed piece of red fabric with two ponytails, one on each end. The fabric has glittery puff paint swirled on it, and the hair of the ponytails is red and black. (Rumor has it that she scalped two innocent ravers for this project.) Most likely referencing the sirens of mythology, who by singing led sailors to their deaths, Ms. Agnello attempts to lure passersby into the gallery by rolling out a "red carpet" whose ends fall inside the gallery's doors. As opposed to leading sailors to their deaths, Ms. Agnello instead leads them into a room filled with the sub par work of graduate students.

The Midway Show, which exhibited last week in the Student Union Gallery, was a showcase of graduate students half way through the Master of Fine Arts program. Hopefully the second half will make up for this disappointing display. Take for example the work of Mikael Pettracia. It has no title, accompanied by no redeeming qualities. Pettracia, the Malevich of the department, adorned the wall with two geometric black shapes, one in charcoal and the other in paint, which met to form a thin white chasm. To quote Malevich, "The square = feeling, the white field = the void beyond this feeling." Ninety-eight years later the only feeling these shapes evoke is boredom. And the void beyond that? Who cares?

Conceptually, Mary Crawford's River Drawings could be interesting territory to explore. A series of five pieces (we had no choice but to use this hideous psuedo-intellectual term for lack of a better one), canvases that had been immersed in river water were wearing mesh bags of stones. This use of a natural system such as a river to "create" the pieces is an example of a type of process-oriented drawing/painting. The works are absorbed by their environment in the instant in which they are made. The introduction of an anthropomorphic angle makes this work potentially engaging. However, it is uncertain whether these paintings were deeply considered or whether she got fed up with making pointillist clown paintings and threw them in the river. We'd like to say that no fish were harmed in the process of this work, but three salmon were said to have been flopping around outside the Student Union at the time of the installation.

Amy Allen's In Memory, a circle of candles inserted into the wall, resembling a doily, was an intersection of memory, desire, and longing. Approximately three thousand candles, some lit, were arranged in a structured circle, symbolizing the continuum of time and aging. Subtle and poignant, this piece held a quiet dignity amongst the peanut gallery. At the opening, Brian Thomas held a performance piece, in which an attendant was stationed at each piece of work, and one at the food table, all equipped with a counting device, in order to log all of the people who looked at the artwork and all of the people who ate the food. The resulting statistics were meant to show how many people actually looked at the artwork, and how many just fed their faces. This is an interesting comment on the nature of art openings, and maybe the numbers would not have been so startling had there been more to this art opening than free hummus. We had high expectations for this show, considering that it was work produced by graduate students; however we left unfulfilled, despite the hoard of cupcakes that we ate. But not to worry, this show did little damage- only three fish were killed and two ravers scalped. (Or at least that's what we heard). The trash heap has spoken.

– Collegian Staff

COURTESY JONATHAN HESSION

Count on it
Guy Pierce and Jim Caviezel star in the upcoming The Count of Monte Cristo, a new adaptation of Alexandre Dumas' classic novel.

■ dance

continued from page 5

from the restraints of unison into a more expressive, interpretive section, and eventually returned to the synchronous movement. It is likely that Sukarji's style of choreography and the message he wished to convey were novel to the female dancers, so the intelligent interpretation of his work by these women was particularly impressive. With the red-toned lighting, ornamental costumes, and movement well suited to engaging music, Sukarji succeeded in creating a cohesive, enlightening work.

The Smith College M.F.A. concert this weekend provided valid proof that the five-college dance department is too often taken for granted. Three of the four pieces drew a handful of dancers from Amherst, Hampshire, and Mount Holyoke Colleges, as well as our very own UMass. The casts that these and the Smith College dancers comprised, with the help of the four talented choreographers, displayed a caliber of talent that could parallel many professional productions. Even if you have not been exposed much to dance, consider going to the next concert you hear about, and do not let the fact that it is off the UMass campus stop you. You will likely be pleased by what you get out of it.

we throw all kinds of [obstacles] at you.
tuition isn't one of them.

Sure, we'll have you climbing walls. But if you qualify for a 2- or 3-year scholarship, tuition's one obstacle you won't have to worry about. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. And get a leg up on your future.

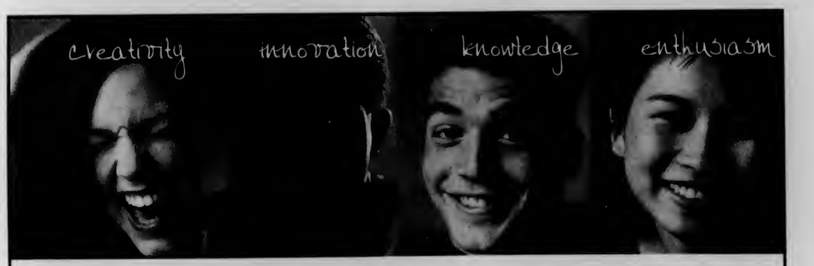
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Come and see what everyone is talking about!
UMASS ARMY ROTC @ (413) 545-2321

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
Amherst

Always in Bloom
Valentine's Day!
February 14th
Plants, Balloons, & Stuffed Animals
Dutch & Exotic Bouquets
Local Special
Hugs & Kisses
Kisses: Cuddly Soft Bear, Red Rose & Balloon $27.50
Hugs: Bud Vase Bear with Red Rose $19.50
Uncompromising Quality, Selection, Presentation & Service
220 N. Pleasant St., Amherst
253-5545
We Deliver Anywhere!



Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We have a lot to tell you about Raytheon and the exciting opportunities we have available. Plan on visiting our booth at your college career fair. If you are unable to attend the fair, please e-mail your resume to: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only; no attachments), or mail to: Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

FEW KIDS GROWING UP IN OUR LOWEST-INCOME AREAS HAVE EVER HEARD OF AN AP BIOLOGY CLASS.

RAY CHIN STARTED ONE IN INNER-CITY LOS ANGELES. IN ONE YEAR, HE COACHED 20 OF HIS 26 STUDENTS TO SCORE A 3 OR BETTER ON THE EXAM.

INFORMATION SESSION
Wednesday, February 14, 2001 • 4:00 p.m.
University of Massachusetts
Room 201 Machmer

TEACH AMERICA

[illegible] APPLICATION DEADLINE: FEBRUARY 21, 2001

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Wanna be on TV? UVC meeting Oct. 11 6:30pm. Student Union. Anyone interested in TV Production be there!

AUTO FOR SALE

87 Toyota Tercel Good engine 134,000m $700 Contact 546-2870

91 Honda Accord EX Auto, AC, CD, moonroof. 4 new tires. Great condition. 14k $4200. 546-2568 or 617-335-5366

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

1990 Acura Integra GS. 2dr, manual, 108k, sunroof/cd/power. $4895. Call 546-5854

86 Honda Accord LX, new tires, exhust. Great car 159k. $2300 o/b/o 256-1952

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

COMPUTERS

LAPTOPS for only $599, warranty included + delivery. Email:laptopworldwide@hotmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Unscented/nonsmoker needed for errands, etc. For 4hrs per week, at $10.12 per hour. Car required must be reachable by phone. 413-323-9133

We'll pay you to listen to the radio. Need someone to listen to local radio stations and report on what heard. EOE Call 413-586-7400 ask for Sean Davey

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Data Processors + Typests Needed High income potential. Flexible hrs. Basic computer skills required. Sales positions also open. 1-800-782-0817 or 941-351-5514 or www.thelawclub.com

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Dishwashers Great part-time evening positions. $8.50 to start. Must be 18 years old. Apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton

Drivers Wanted Flexible schedule. Must have own vehicle. No late hours or cleaning. $8-$12/hr. Delivery Express 549-0077

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Assistant/Housecleaner. Julia 413-367-0227

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

RECREATION POSITIONS
Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Your Ad Could Be Right HERE!!

ENTERTAINMENT

Anything for Dollar party at The Pub. Sat. Oct. 14 $2.00 20oz drafts and spinning the best in hip-hop + house DJ DK. 1st affair. 21 to drink with valid ID. Free until 10:30

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAPER! Season passes from $299. All East Passes $355 before 10/15 Call Michael 237-9847

Snowboard! Morrow 158cm, good condition, bindings not included, $100 Call Adam (413) 786-4291

Trek 930 Excellent condition. $325 bo. Call Todd 586-4589

Calloway Golf Clubs. Excellent condition. Complete set. $300 bo call Todd 586-4589

G.E. Dorm Refrigerator works fine $60 Tel. Northampton 584-3364

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

RAISE $1600-$7000 + GET FREE CAPS T-SHIRTS & PHONE CARDS! This one week fundraiser requires no investment and small amount of time from you or your club. Qualified callers receive a free gift just for calling. Call today at 1-800-808-7442 x 80

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

3 Guys looking for roommate in four bedroom Rolling Green Apt. $300 a month incl. utl. Call 253-4014 ask for Steve, Jim, Justin

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY... GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Need to Advertise?

Advertise with the BEST!!

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UMC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gavel to Gavel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	MTV
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	2DTV (Testing)
36	Bloomberg Business Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 12, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2 (12)	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Antiques Roadshow (N) ⓒ		American Experience: Marcus Garvey		Nantucket-Nock	Connecticut Journal
WFSB	3 (3)	News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear ⓒ	Raymond	Becker (N) ⓒ	48 Hours (In Stereo) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ	4 (4)	News ⓒ	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear ⓒ	Raymond	Becker (N) ⓒ	48 Hours (In Stereo) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB	5 (5)	News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	"These Old Broads" (2001, Comedy) Shirley MacLaine, ⓒ				Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)	News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ	7th Heaven "V-Day" (In Stereo)		Kiss the Bride: Ult. Valentine		News ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Crocodile Hunter: Snakes		Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ	News	Tonight Show
WTXX	(6)	7th Heaven (In Stereo) ⓒ		Street Smarts	Blind Date	7th Heaven "V-Day" (In Stereo)		Kiss the Bride: Ult. Valentine		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	(9)	News	NBC News	Extra (N) ⓒ	Hollywood	Crocodile Hunter: Snakes		Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8 (11)	Soapsxena ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Boston Public (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		Ally McBeal (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		News	Friends ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ
WWLP	9 (22)	News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Crocodile Hunter: Snakes		Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10 (6)	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Antiques Roadshow (N) ⓒ		American Experience: Marcus Garvey		Nantucket-Nock	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⓒ
WGGB	16 (40)	News ⓒ	ABC News	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	"These Old Broads" (2001, Comedy) Shirley MacLaine, ⓒ				Gideon's Crossing (N) (In Stereo)	News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Moesha (N) ⓒ	Parkers (N) ⓒ	Hughleys ⓒ	Girlfriends ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Med Abt. You	Spin City ⓒ	Spin City ⓒ
WTBS	17	Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★½ "Wyatt Earp" (1994, Western) Kevin Costner, Dennis Quaid,
A&E	42	Night Court	Newsradio ⓒ	Law & Order ⓒ		Biography: Michael Douglas		100 Centre Street "Hostage" ⓒ		Investigative Reports (N) ⓒ		Law & Order "Burned" ⓒ
CNN	23 (23)	Worldview ⓒ	Moneyline Newshour (N) ⓒ			Wolf Blitzer	The Point ⓒ	Larry King Live ⓒ		CNN Tonight	Spin Room ⓒ	Sports	Moneyline
COM	39 (38)	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show ⓒ	Saving Silver.	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Com.-Presents	Premium	Daily Show ⓒ	Stein's Money
DISC	47	Wild Discovery: Monsoon		Wild Discovery: Indonesia		Stings, Fangs and Spines		Cosmetic Surgery-Wrong		Face Makers		Justice Files	Scams
ESPN	43	Sportscenter ⓒ		Top 10 and Beyond		ESPY Awards Pregame (Live)		ESPY Awards (Live) ⓒ					ESPY Awards
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Weddings of a Lifetime		"A Mother's Fight for Justice" (2001, Drama) Meredith Baxter, ⓒ				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	51	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Ultra Sound: Video Music Awards		Uncensored (In Stereo)		Ultra Sound	Makeup Video	Grammy Uncensored		Undressed ⓒ	Daria ⓒ
NICK	53	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold! ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons ⓒ
SCIFI	46	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		First Wave "Gutag" (In Stereo)		Invisiblis Man "The Lesser Evil"		Lexx: The Series "Gittown" ⓒ		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	49 (26)	Critical Incident: Sky Troopers		48 Hours "Manhunt"		Junkyard Wars "Sub-Aqua" (N)		Hollywood Cops		Hollywood Cops "Street Life"		Junkyard Wars	"Sub-Aqua"
TNT	48	ER "Another Perfect Day" ⓒ		Pretender "Under the Reds" ⓒ		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo) ⓒ						Martin ⓒ	Martin ⓒ
USA	52	Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ		JAG (In Stereo) ⓒ		Weetminster Kennel Club Dog Show. "Opening Night" (Live)
HBO	60	★★★ "Starman" (1984, Science Fiction) Jeff Bridges. "PG" ⓒ				★½ "Blue Streak" (1999) Martin Lawrence. ⓒ		★½ "Love Stinks" (1999, Comedy) French Stewart. "R" ⓒ				Orgasm: Real
MAX	61	★★½ "Beverly Hills Cop II" (1987) Eddie Murphy. "R"		In God-Trust		"Two Shows of Blood" (1999, Drama) Rachel Hunter. "R" ⓒ				★½ "Crimp Zone" (1994) Wesley Snipes. "R" ⓒ		"Crimp"
SHOW	62	★★½ "My Blue Heaven" (1990, Comedy) Steve Martin. "PG-13" ⓒ				★★½ "The Geneva's Daughter" (1999, Mystery) John Travolta. "R"				Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		★★★ "The Hot Spot" (1990) "R" ⓒ

Buttercup Festival By Elliot Garbauskas

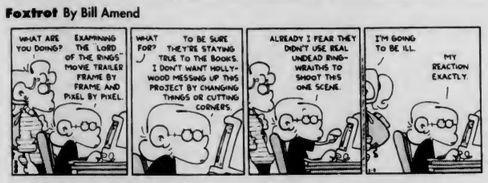
Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

AMEN. BLACK CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS EMERGED THEY PROMISED TO SPEAK EXCLUSIVELY TO THIS REPORTER...
THE MEETING WAS CORDIAL. HE SEEMS NICE ENOUGH.
IN FACT, HE REALLY ONLY HAVE ONE PROBLEM WITH GEORGE W. BUSH— HE'S NOT PRESIDENT. HE DOESN'T HAVE.
OTHER THAN THAT?
WELL, HE DOESN'T GIVE US NICKNAMES. EVERYONE ELSE GOT NICKNAMES

Dilbert By Scott Adams

MY PLAN IS TO GIVE AWAY OUR PRODUCT FOR FREE.
WE'LL ONLY BILL CUSTOMERS WHO ASK US TO DEINSTALL IT
FOR ONCE, THOSE REPORTS OF CONSUMER DECAPITATIONS WILL WORK IN OUR FAVOR.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



WHAT ARE YOU DOING? EXAMINING THE LORD OF THE RINGS' MOVIE TRAILER FRAME BY FRAME AND PIXEL BY PIXEL.
WHAT FOR? TO BE SURE THEY'RE STAYING TRUE TO THE BOOKS. I DON'T WANT HOLLYWOOD MESSING UP THIS PROJECT BY CHANGING THINGS OR CUTTING CORNERS.
ALREADY I FEAR THEY DIDN'T USE REAL UNDEAD RING-WRAITHS TO SHOOT THIS ONE SCENE.
I'M GOING TO BE ILL.
MY REACTION EXACTLY.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY, HOW MANY TIMES HAVE I TOLD YOU NOT TO WEAR MY CLOTHES UP?! I HAVE A MEETING THIS MORNING AND MY PANTS ARE COVERED IN CAT HAIR!
OH, SURE, BLAME THE CAT! THAT'S SUCH A CHIPMUNK MENTALITY
I'M JUST SAYING THAT UM... YOU NEED TO... TO UHH... WHAT DID YOU JUST SAY?
I SAID CHIPMUNK AND I MEANT CHIPMUNK!
I CAN'T BELIEVE YOU SAID THAT.

Horoscopes

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) –Nothing's happening that couldn't be worked out with a little careful explanation today. This is likely to become a very happy time for you and your family, forming new bonds of closeness and understanding.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) –A little overindulgence in food or drink could have you feeling just a bit under the weather today, and it might take some effort for you to get moving on your daily tasks. Once you're rolling: a friend or colleague could have some emotional concerns that they'll want your input on.

Aries (March 21-April 19) –Today could be challenging, but ultimately fruitful. Worries about money prove groundless when the facts about your situation are ascertained. Someone close to you could be going through emotional turmoil, and your intuition is acute enough today so that you're likely to pick up on it psychically.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) –Misunderstandings with those around you could have you feeling irritable and antisocial. You may choose to work off your feelings through writing down your thoughts, or perhaps taking a long walk.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) –This should be a busy but enjoyable day. Preparation for group activities or other social events could have you in a bit of a dither, trying to keep track of everything that needs to be done. Don't get too frazzled. You'll manage to take care of everything!

Cancer (June 21- July 22) –You might be feeling especially romantic right now, but circumstances might not permit you to do anything about it at this time. This afternoon: go shopping and buy yourself a present.

Leo (July 23- Aug. 22) –Today you might find that you have a little less money than you thought, which could cause a temporary upset. Still, you should be doing well financially, and this trend is likely to continue. You might hear of a large sum of money – perhaps a tax refund – that's coming your way, which should more than offset the shortfall!

Virgo (Aug. 23- Sept. 22) –The keyword for avoiding misunderstandings both on the job and at home is "communication." Everyone is likely to be a bit distracted right now, so it's important not to assume anything. Mix-ups could catapult you into a frustrated mood, but try to rise above it. All this will pass by tomorrow.

Libra (Sept. 23- Oct. 22) –Your imagination is likely to be flying high today, and lots of wonderful images may be running through your mind. However, you might be a bit too busy to do anything about it right now. Write your ideas down before you lose them so that you can make use of them later.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) –Misunderstandings between you and that special someone in your life could cause a minor emotional upset between you. However, this is probably nothing more than could be cleared up by a little straightforward communication. Business colleagues could appear a little distracted because of problems on their own; don't take it personally.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22- Dec. 21) –This day could prove to be a mixed bag. A warm and loving letter or phone call from someone far away could come your way, making you feel great. However, visits with people in your neighborhood could result in some confusing conversations. You'll need to clarify some of the information involved so as to avoid future misunderstandings.

Capricorn (Dec. 22- Jan. 19) –Joint ventures with friends could keep you hopping today, and not likely give you much time to stop and breathe. You'll probably enjoy what you do, but you might run into a few stumbling blocks here and there that could prove frustrating.

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED COMPANY
(555) (555)Y HB-BEDS(2337)
FINALLY! Amherst has a mattress & futon store conveniently located near downtown, next to The Spirit Haus on Rt. 9
GRAND OPENING & OPEN HOUSE
OVER FOOD(!!)
Queen bed $ 21 18-9
Twin bed $ 15.5
Queen bed $ 25
Queen beds room dividers-rugs
Queen beds and couches tables
STC

ACROSS
1 Young foxes
5 Sheiks' attire
9 You could hear — drop
13 Border on
14 Willowy
15 — Jessica Fisher
17 Himalayan enigma
18 South American country
19 Work very hard
20 Commuter's home
22 Spanks
24 Actor Schroder
25 Exit
26 Looks at the books
29 Very small
31 Looks pleased
32 Dreads
33 Kind of scene
36 Quite excited
37 Delicious
38 Glen
39 Stimpy's toon pal
40 Prices
41 More agreeable
42 Harbors
43 Frank
44 Grills
47 Depose
48 Holiday item
50 Squeased
54 Mr. Lucci
56 Nowhere near
57 Actor Cooper
58 Pack rat
59 Celebration
60 Fashion magazine
61 Minus
62 Corset stiffener
63 Fruit part

DOWN
1 Comedian Denny
2 Wild mountain goat
3 "Swan Lake" costume
4 Rousing
5 Tomato jellies
6 Deaclate
7 Ventilate
8 Self-righteously complacent
9 Posts
10 Mens
11 In a snit
12 Cathedral parts
15 His and —
21 Scraps
23 Suspicious
26 Pelt-deb medium
27 Be persuasive
28 Singer Celine
29 Quitzoes

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	O	O	T		T	E	R	I		P	I	S	A
A	G	R	A		T	A	L	E	S		R	O	T	S
N	E	A	R		R	U	M	B	A		O	W	E	S
D	E	L	P	A	I		O	N		P	A	W	N
			O	A	T	H		S	A	R	I
R	E	I	N	D	E	E	R		H	E	L	M	E	T
H	A	N	S		S	A	U	L		T	E	E	T	H
E	G	G		T	R	I	E	S		R	H	O
A	L	O	F	I	T		S	N	A	P		S	C	A	N
S	E	T	O	U	T		G	R	E	E	T	I	N	G
			O	X	E	N		N	A	R	Y
M	O	O	T		N	A	I	L		R	E	L	A	T	E
E	A	R	D		O	S	A	D	E		I	T	E	R
S	H	E	A		R	A	T	E	D		S	T	A	N
A	U	L	D		S	L	A	M		T	Y	K	E

12-21-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I GOT SOMETHING ROUND!
IT'S A "BALL"! CATCH MERRY CHRISTMAS!
WHAT DID YOU GET FROM SANTA, BUCK?
BUCKY?
I GOT AN UH... BALL!
I THINK HE'S OPENING THE ELECTRIC CAN OPENER
HE'S DROOLING

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

EVERY YEAR WE MIGRATE AND EVERY YEAR THIS PLACE IS DUMPIER THAN THE LAST!
WHAT WAS HAPPENED TO THE HOSPITALITY INDUSTRY THESE DAYS? HAVE THEY CUT BACK ON STAFF? DO THEY JUST NOT CARE? DID THEY FORGET...
...HOW TO READ
AND UH... ROOM PLUS

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

GUESS WHO'S GOT A DATE THIS WEEKEND?
NOPE!
WHO? BOB?
NO. FRANK?
NO. LEE?
NO. AMR?
NO. THE DELI GUY AT THE CAFE?
OH! ... PINBALL?
ME, YOU IDIOT!
OK JEEZ. YOU WERE A LAT NIGER BEFORE YOU BECAME MR. BIG-SHOT LADIES' MAN.

Quote of the Day

"It don't matter to Jesus!"

–Quintana in The Big Lebowski

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 27 LOW: 24	HIGH: 43 LOW: 26	HIGH: 40 LOW: 22

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Quesadilla

Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)(B,H,W)

Vegetarian Black Bean Quesadilla (vegetarian)

Vegan Black Bean Quesadilla (vegan) (F)

DINNER

Cajun Cod (B,H,W)

Jamaican 3-Beans (vegan) (B,H,W)

Baked Teriyaki Tofu (vegan) (B)

BBQ Fish (F)

Quinoa Stuffed Tomatoes (vegetarian) (F,H,W)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Dan Santella
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammell
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Margery Smelkinson, Allen Basque

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, February 12, 2001 | 10

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass wipes the floor with Duquesne

Minutewomen overcome shaky shooting to post their sixth A-10 conference victory

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Point guard Cleo Foster has played a much bigger role in the UMass backcourt since sophomore Ebony Pegues was lost for the season to injury.

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

It's not as storied as the old Boston Garden's parquet. And you certainly won't find people selling pieces of it on EBay for $100 a pop.

Even so, the original hardwood of the William D. Mullins Center saw its last seconds tick off the clock yesterday in the Massachusetts women's basketball team's 55-47 Atlantic-10 win over Duquesne.

"They've been talking about this (new) floor for a couple years," head coach Joanie O'Brien said. "As I told everybody, 'When I see it down there, then I'll believe it.'"

Senior Kathy Coyner probably didn't realize it, but her free throw with 20 seconds left was probably the last shot the rusty spot underneath the Mullins' northern hoop will ever see.

"It's strange to be [changing the floor] for the last game of the season, if they do put it down," junior Caroline Nehls (eight points) said. "It's kind of something you think would start off a new season."

For the Minutewomen, however, the floor change would be ultimately fitting.

Looking back to September, who would have predicted the way things have gone? Certainly not O'Brien.

A few weeks ago, it seemed as if this young team was finally learning how to control the ropes O'Brien had fastened upon them. Then sophomore Ebony Pegues went down for year. And the game plan changed.

Last Sunday against St. Bonaventure, sophomores Jen Butler and Kristin Cannon suffered injuries that forced them to sit out Thursday's loss to Fordham. Again, blueprints become altered.

On Feb. 25, when the Minutewomen take to the new Mullins floor for its last home game of the 2000-01 campaign, you won't see the same team that beat UNC-Charlotte 64-48 on Nov. 28 for its first win of the season. You'll see a team that's been through the ringer, many times.

Like the floor, so is the O'Brien proposal: new. Not good or bad. Just the latest version – a team, which after yesterday's Duquesne (13-10, 6-6) conquering, stands at 11-12, 6-6 in the A-10.

Yesterday, the Maroon and White found itself leading the Dukes 47-37 with just under four minutes remaining. And thanks to Coyner's consistency from the free-throw line, the Minutewomen fought off their 5-for-24 second-half shooting performance and pulled out the victory.

For the game, UMass shot just over 26 percent. Duquesne bettered that mark at 33.

The key statistic, however, was from the free-throw line. The Minutewomen, who entered the bonus with 9:40 left in the game, went to the line a total of 30 times, hitting 23 of those attempts. The Dukes walked to the stripe exactly half the amount of times UMass did, and converted on twelve.

Freshman Paige Harris drilled three three-pointers in the first half on her way to a team-high 11 points. Coyner added 10, all of those points coming from the charity stripe. The senior hit 10-of-12 free throws to mask her 0-for-10 performance from the field.

The Maroon and White jumped out to an early lead against the Dukes behind the three-point convergence of Harris and sophomore Amber Sneed. Both drilled treys from exactly the same spot on the left arc in the early going.

Defense was the bright spot for UMass, on the better end of 18 Duquesne turnovers. Coyner, Harris and freshman Cleo Foster were frustrating on the perimeter forcing the Dukes' starting backcourt (Khalinah Este-Shehu and Shiri Sharon) into nine giveaways while only allowing 14 total points.

With only eight players, people questioned whether or not the Maroon and White would have trouble with match-ups and conditioning. But the agility of Foster on the outside silenced that claim.

"Cleo Foster is kind of the X-factor," O'Brien said. "She'll defend just about anybody. She'll defend your point guard, she'll defend you're off-guard and she'll play your three-player.

"When she's in the game, our match-ups are usually pretty good," she continued. "And for the most part, everybody did what they needed to do. I thought Amber was solid tonight on defense. She didn't go for too many steals which sometimes gets her in trouble. Our rotation was good tonight. Kathy stayed very fresh and Cleo stayed pretty fresh out there."

In the first stanza, Duquesne was unable to create any success on the offensive end and waltzed into the locker room down 24-14 at the half.

Butler, who played for the first time in three halves, did not start but played 26 minutes. Her six points and five rebounds were far under her average.

Nehls adds finishing touch, Harris gets back on right Paige in win

MATTHEW BENCAL

If you looked at the stat sheet without seeing the game, you would have thought the Massachusetts women's basketball team had lost yesterday.

Whenever a team shoots 26.4 percent from the field, it seems improbable for a win to be the result. But looks can be deceiving, and the execution of basic fundamentals such as rebounding and team defense spelled success.

Senior point guard Kathy Coyner and sophomore center Jen Butler have been the most reliable offensive contributors this season. But Coyner shot 0-for-10 from the field and Butler, who played injured (bruised fibula), shot 2-for-9.

Obviously, head coach Joanie O'Brien needed her role players to step up if her team was going to win. And those role players stepped up, and the Minutewomen won the game.

Forward Caroline Nehls came into the Duquesne contest off of a strong 14-point performance at Fordham and continued her solid play at the William D. Mullins Center. Nehls put up eight points in the paint and her size was vital to a team that has lost a great deal of its post defense due to injury.

"Recently, I've been struggling with finishing my shots," Nehls said. "I haven't been making my lay ups. With Jen being out against Fordham, somebody had to step up in the post. I was given the opportunity and got the ball. All I had to do was finish my shots and they were falling."

Freshman Paige Harris has been in a shooting slump throughout the past month, a month in which UMass has struggled, but yesterday's contest was a step in the right direction for the frosh and her confidence.

Against the Dukes, Harris shot 3-for-5 in the first half for nine points. All of her shots came from behind the arch, and it appeared that she was in for a breakthrough game. But by putting up nine points in the first half, Harris garnered more attention by the Duquesne defense and subsequently took only one shot in the second half. Ironically, that was also a three-point attempt.

"As of right now, I'm feeling more comfortable," Harris said. "We've been working on our execution a lot more in practice, I think I'm starting to get the hang of things."

Small forward Amber Sneed was once again produced her usual offensive output. Sneed hit a trey from the corner half way through the first that put UMass up, 12-4, and Sneed finished with nine points overall.

"Amber's been chasing the basketball like I haven't seen her chase it in a while," O'Brien said. "That's good to see. I thought she was solid tonight on defense, she didn't go for too many steals which sometimes gets her into trouble."

Freshman guard Cleo Foster has proven to be an incredible defender, and she her energetic effort on defense has placed her into the starting five.

O'Brien has asked for and received something different from each of her players, and while each player's role may differ, when you add them altogether, you spell out the formula for victory.

"I think for the most part everybody did what they need to do," O'Brien said.

Matthew Bencal is a Collegian columnist.

Fade to black: Minutemen drop OT battle

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

He had been slumping all season – in fact he had been in a terrible goal scoring draught since a 23-goal explosion in his sophomore campaign with Maine. That season, he had been wearing black blades on his skates.

Last year he potted a mere 12 goals while sporting the conventional silver blades and had only found the back of the net five times through 26 games this season.

After an overtime victory last week against New Hampshire, a game in which he did not see any action, teammate Niko Dimitrakos had a revelation – buy a new pare of black blades in hopes that it would ignite his scoring touch.

It did.

Dan Kerluke netted two goals, including the game-winner with 50 seconds remaining in overtime to help the Black Bears escape the William D. Mullins Center with a 3-2 victory over Massachusetts.

The game-winner came on a vicious wrist shot from the left faceoff circle that beat Markus Helander on the blocker side. The goal was made possible when Maroon and White defenseman Toni Söderholm overcommitted on a long pass from Tom Reimann that gave Kerluke the scoring opportunity, an opportunity that he made the most of.

"We overplayed the puck," UMass head coach Don Cahoon said of the game-winner. "We didn't have our weak side people hold enough ice, and they sifted the puck to the trailer [Kerluke]. That's something that they do well, and it's something that you have to be very patient to defend."

"This is a huge come-from-behind win on the road," Maine head coach Shawn Walsh said. "Our guys never gave up; they stayed positive even after the second period when we played well but came away with nothing to show for it. I liked our will, and that's a credit to the guys on this team."

Trailing 2-0 heading into the third period, it seemed as though the Black Bears would not be able to solve the equation known as Helanen. Through two periods the senior goaltender had turned aside 23 shots (33 total), but Maine would get the ball rolling early in the third on a questionable tally.

UMass (7-19-3, 6-11-1 Hockey East) had just killed off a penalty to R.J. Gates that had carried over from the second to the third, but moments after the senior came out of the penalty box the Black Bears got on the board.

With a scramble in front of the Minuteman net, Robert Liscak slipped a shot through the pads of Helanen to cut the lead in half. There was a bit of controversy surrounding the goal as neither of the officials saw the puck cross the goal line; Helanen swept the puck out before the signal for the goal could be made.

"I didn't have a view and neither did the ref," Cahoon said. "I just wanted to know if he used the goal judge, but the ref ultimately makes the goal."

Maine (12-9-6, 7-6-4 HE) would score the equalizer at the 7:33 mark of the third when Kerluke was the beneficiary of a UMass defensive breakdown. A clearing attempt by the Minuteman was intercepted at the blue line by Reimann, which created a transition chance for Maine. Reimann then fed a quick pass to Don Richardson in the right faceoff circle. Reimann alertly slipped a pass to a wide-open Kerluke in front of the net for the goal.

The Minutemen got on the board first at the 2:08 mark of the first period, when Jimmy Callahan's slap shot from the left faceoff circle was deflected into the air by Black Bear goalie Matt Yeats. Darcy King then banged home the loose puck from midair.

Gates was single-handedly responsible for UMass' second goal, as an aggressive forecheck led to a bone-crushing on A.J. Begg along the left wing boards. The senior then collected the puck and found a streaking Martin Miljko in the slot. Miljko ended his seven-game scoreless skid with a beautiful wrist shot, a shot that left Yeats defenseless.

This was a pivotal game for both teams, but Maine seemed to be the squad that was playing more determined hockey.

"We're trying to get into the NCAA picture," Kerluke said. "We need to get every point, every win that we can get."

"We don't want to rely on winning the Hockey East Tournament like we did last year," Walsh said. "Every win for us now is big, big, big."

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Maine's Martin Kariya (23) assisted on the third of five goals that the Black Bears managed against the Minutemen on Saturday night at the Mullins Center.

Maine finds net five times to finish Mullins sweep

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Two years ago, Maine came into the William D. Mullins Center, a place where it had often struggled, ranked No.4 in the country. It left Amherst with a single point (a 1-1 tie) and the weekend series was monumental for the Massachusetts hockey team.

This weekend, the Black Bears had no intentions of letting history repeat itself, closing out a sweep of the Minutemen with a 5-1 drubbing Saturday night.

Michael Schutte notched a hat trick and Dan Kerluke added two goals for the second consecutive night to lead Maine (13-9-6, 8-6-4 Hockey East) into sole possession of fourth place in the conference.

"This is the best Maine has ever played in this rink," Kerluke said. "We've struggled on the big sheets, but we found a way to conquer that."

UMass (7-20-3, 6-13-1 HE) got a late goal from Darcy King, but it was not even close to enough for the Minutemen, who remain just one point ahead of Merrimack for the final playoff spot.

"There was clearly a real lack of energy," UMass head coach Don Cahoon said. "We need to become a much better skating team. You look at the big schools and we just can't keep pace with them."

The Minutemen came out strong in the first period, with hard skating and aggressive forechecking, but they could not get any high-quality shots on Maine netminder Matt Yeats.

"We're a team that really needs to deal with [the question of] when you fall behind by a couple of goals, how do you get back into sync," Cahoon said. "We're a sinking ship once we fall behind by a couple of goals."

As for the Black Bears, fast skating and crisp passes tore apart the Maroon and White defense, scorching it for three second-period goals.

"Our performance this weekend reminded me of Maine teams of the past which seem to get better as the season goes on," Maine head coach Shawn Walsh said.

Schutte scored the eventual game-winner 5:41 into the second period on the power play. After an attempted clear was kept in the zone, the puck found its way to the converted defenseman. After being denied by Markus Helanen on his first attempt, the rebound found its way through the senior goalkeeper.

Under two minutes later, Martin Kariya took a puck through the neutral zone which lead to an eventual 2-on-1. After drawing the defenseman to him, Kariya slid the puck to Schutte who was left alone in front of the net.

Schutte would add a third tally in the final session.

With nine minutes to go in the second frame, Kerluke sealed the victory for the Black Bears. After a break-up in the Maine defensive zone, Kerluke zipped by freshman defender Nick Kuiper to leave just Helanen between himself and paydirt. He was stopped on his first attempt, but put in the rebound for his fourth goal in the two-game series.

UMass got its lone tally at the 11:23 mark of the third period when King tipped in a Luke Duplessis slap shot from the point.

"We played a tremendous defensive game – that's why we won," Kerluke said. "Our defense created our offense."

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 80 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, February 13, 2001

The Latin bombshell Jennifer Lopez is on top of the entertainment world. Check out our review of J. Lo in Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The Softball team got off to an impressive start of the year in Phoenix. Read about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 12

MAUREEN MASSE

Inquiring Minds
Professor Bill Isreal spoke out about "Ritual Killing: American Journalism and the Treatment of Dissent" yesterday afternoon in Thompson.

Controversy revisited?

SGA elections to determine ALANA seats

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

As the Student Government Association's Senate re-elections draw closer by the day, so do concerns over what the elections will hold.

With three large referendum issues up for vote, and only 13 candidates of the 28 commuter seats up for election, concern has risen among the SGA members.

"I've heard a lot of flack on the University of Massachusetts decision on the electoral districts," Speaker Jim Eltringham said. "It's unfortunate and screwed up; the more I think about it the more messed up it really is."

Concerns over the electoral districts where also brought up by other former members of the Senate.

"In the past there have been a lot of complaints with the commuter district and for the first time this year, the district was full," Chair of Ways of Means Mike Taugher said. "The fact that most were Greek and that they were challenged has left this election with only 13 commuters running out of the 28 seats possible."

Beyond the electoral districts, concerns have arisen over the decision to put the Asian, Latino, African, and Native American [ALANA] Caucus-appointed seats up for elimination on the February election ballot. A motion passed last spring cut the ALANA seats from 13 percent of the Senate to five percent as of this year, and eliminated all their seats for 2002-2003 term. According to the SGA By-laws, the motion must be passed by student vote in a binding referendum before it would take effect.

However, the Office of ALANA Affairs expressed concern that the referendum according to their knowledge was not to be on the election ballot until this semester's SGA Presidential and Trustee elections.

"Our understanding was that the referendum was supposed to be on the Presidential and Trustee election ballot," Director of ALANA Affairs Nelson Acosta said. "I'm totally shocked. I don't think doing this is in good faith or effort to the needs of ALANA."

ALANA member Tony Inz-Baptist expressed similar concern over the fact that the ALANA referendum was placed on this up and coming election ballot. He explained that he had met with President Jeff Howe and Student Trustee Seth Avakian about the ALANA referendum and they had come to an agreement that the ALANA referendum would be apart of the Presidential and Trustee elections this spring.

Other members of ALANA were frustrated that students have not had the opportunity to be properly educated about the referendum and about the ALANA community.

"The sad part is that a lot of students are uneducated about the referendum and our community as well as how we embrace diversity within our community," Nelson said.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian said that he felt a moral mistake had been made in putting the ALANA question on this ballot.

"The election committee approved it, but morally it's wrong," Avakian explained. "I plan to fight to get it off the ballot and if it's not off the ballot, fight to campaign it down."

Avakian said that he felt it was a tactical error made by Eltringham.

"I'm disappointed that this is going to put this semester in an ugly light when the new Senate representatives get together," Avakian said.

However, Eltringham expressed different thoughts on the ALANA referendum, stating that the Senate passed the motion, and that ALANA was aware that the referendum would be up for vote.

"Everyone has known that it [the ALANA referendum] was going to have to go through this process for awhile," Eltringham said. "It was passed by the Senate and we put what the Senate passed into this referendum; it's not tricks wording."

Eltringham explained that technically the ALANA referendum should have been on the fall 2000 Senate election ballot.

"I don't know what Seth is trying to hide; it may have been a tactful error that I didn't put it on the first election ballot and I admit that," Eltringham said. "However it was passed by the Senate and we have the power to put it on this ballot. Seth does not have the power to take it off."

The ALANA referendum, which was finalized last week, is just one of four referendum questions which will be on the coming election ballot.

Another referendum question on the Senate election ballot questions whether or not food chains should be allowed on campus. As of now, all retail food outlets on campus are run by the UMass Food Services. This non-binding referendum question seeks student input on the current retail food outlets around UMass and whether or not fast food restaurants would be wanted on campus.

Another non-binding referendum questions up for vote is that of having a bar located on campus. The Bluewall, which served as a bar before being converted into a cafe and ice cream shop, is one primary example being used to argue for the referendum.

The final question on the election ballot is whether or not the Index yearbook should be available for purchase through students' tuition bills. This option would allow students to purchase yearbooks through a check-off process.

Senate elections with the referendum questions take place Feb. 21.

ESL program moves forward despite recent budget cuts

By Allison Gerlip
Collegian Staff

Although student needs for English as a Second Language (ESL) classes have increased since last year and are not expected to decline, the program's budget was recently cut.

According to Mary O'Connor, coordinator of ESL, the program received an eight to nine percent budget cut because of diminishing resources, and thus, it will not be able to serve the current needs of students.

In fact, an ESL class scheduled for the spring of 2002 will not be offered, due to the transfer of a faculty member to the writing program. Currently, there are a total of four current full-time lecturers, who teach six class sections. The ESL program usually serves the needs and demands of incoming freshman; last fall's enrollment was 109 students, with this semester's a rough 68.

"I think there will be an increased demand for ESL based on last year's need, and there is no money to provide [more] courses," O'Connor said.

In fact, two current full-time ESL faculty members, who have been with the ESL program for 18 years, were given pink slips last summer, according to O'Connor. However, in an effort to uphold its commitment to students' needs, the program has decided to extend the faculty members' stay for another year and will continue to look at ESL needs on a yearly basis.

While all University budgets have been cut, ESL is using creative ways to make up for its loss. One of the ways is through recent grants from the University for allocations from the Undergraduate Advising and Academic Support Center (UAASC), which oversees ESL, according to Pamela Marsh

Turn to ESL, page 3

Career Fair arrives

By Katy LaConte
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center Network at the University of Massachusetts will welcome over one hundred employers into the campus center auditorium for the Campus-Wide Career Fair on Feb. 14 from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Employers from a number of industries ranging from IBM and MIT to Pepsi Bottling Group and the Peace Corps will seek out UMass students, offering full time employment opportunities to all majors. Students will find ample opportunities in numerous career areas, including education, health care, business and finance, computers, the environment, social services, lab sciences, biotechnology, marketing and sales and engineering.

"We actively encourage employers who are open to recruiting as many types of majors as possible," said Associate Director and Career Fair Coordinator Tina Acker. "Every major will be covered."

Listed among the 110 converging industries, forty-four are looking for students from all majors. Industries such as ABT Associates are looking for students with majors ranging from Accounting to Sociology.

Equal opportunities will arise for all areas of studies.

"This year is one of the first years we can say we have a mix," said Kim Carpino of the Campus Career Network. Caprino explained that, since the engineering career fair has been pushed to the fall, the Campus-Wide Career Fair "is not heavily weighted in technical areas. I think everybody has a chance."

According to Acker, this career fair is useful to many types of scholars, including those who just wish to "browse" around, looking for the latest jobs, for graduates, and those who have it all planned out and know what they are looking for.

Acker's advice to the students:

"Focus on the industries." She stressed to the students that they should "go around and talk to as many people as possible" despite what the industries appear to be looking for.

Acker said that this fair will be a valuable experience for all UMass students. She also indicated that the employers who will come to this fair already have their minds set on the UMass students as a fresh source of talent.

"These employers are excited about UMass students and have jobs for our students," she said.

Trying to emerge from the shadows: Kendo Club offers time-tested tradition

By Karen Masden
Collegian Staff

Saturday afternoon from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. the University of Massachusetts Kendo club had its first practice of the semester in the Mt. Holyoke Music and Dance building.

According to club president and founder, Robert Stockwell, a senior Japanese major, the organization is three years old and has over 30 members.

"We practice the martial art of Kendo," said Stockwell, "and try keep it as close to how it's done in Japan as possible."

Both Stockwell, and member David Buck, a senior Computer Science major, have trained in Japan.

"I trained for two years," Stockwell explained. "Buck trained for one year, this past year. We also have a Japanese girl who goes to Mt. Holyoke. She studied in all throughout her schooling in Japan."

The marital art focuses on sword fighting in the style of the traditional Japanese samurai, with participants in armor, called bougu and made of cloth, leather and bamboo.

"We have eight bougu wearing people. For the men, aluminum or titanium is used for the face guard," Stockwell said. "The armor is modeled after the armor that the samurai wore in battle during the Warring States Era."

On the hip protector, called the tare, the name of the student's dojo and the student's last name appears. Stockwell explained that his tare bears the words "tsukuba university" which is the name of his dojo back in Japan. The chest guard, or dou, is made out of 60 slates of bamboo that have been sanded and lacquered to make them appear as a single plate.

"The sword that we use," explained Stockwell, "the shinai, is made out of four staves of bamboo with a leather grip and tip and a hand guard. It's treated like a katana, which is the sword that Americans would call the samurai sword. You respected the shinai like it was a weapon. It's a direct representation of that. In dojos people can't lean on it like it was a stick, or leave it lying around, or step over it. I really stress traditional etiquette, that's not common in America."

For use in choreographed forms, or kata, a different sword is used, called bokken, which literally means "wooden sword."

"This sword is used when you have armor on," said Stockwell. "You actually hit people with it. It makes a loud whack, but it doesn't hurt that much. Back before Kendo existed, they used real swords and practiced in the air. When you had a match, someone would die. During the Tokujawa period, Japan finally had a stable political state. There were no wars for 300 years, which left a whole class of people, the samurai. What do they do during peace but train? Things were invented for them to train safely, the swords and armor. Kendo was no longer just trying to kill the person in front of you, but the enemy inside: fear, doubt, cowardess."

COURTESY KENDO CLUB

"[We try to] keep it as close to how it's done in Japan as possible."
- Robert Stockwell, Kendo Club President

COURTESY KENDO CLUB

The University of Massachusetts Kendo Club had its first meeting of the semester this past weekend.

Vice president David Spina, a freshman Japanese major, has been involved in the Kendo club since September.

"I wanted to go to a school with a Kendo club. I wanted to study for a long time, but never had the opportunity or money," he said. "When I got here, I kept pestering Bob for when the first practice would be. I've been with it ever since. Over break I spent a month with the New York City Kendo club. There's no one thing I like about Kendo. I like the complete package. It's something I'm sticking with for the rest of my life."

Club secretary, James Thoma, a sophomore Japanese and history major, has been with the group for a year and a half.

"I've studied other martial arts, but none provided what I wanted," explained Thoma. "Kendo seems to capture the tradition of Japan well, more so than other martial arts. That's what I was looking for."

In spite of his long dedication to Kendo, Stockwell says he would never teach it professionally.

"You can't make a career out of a martial art and keep it a martial art," he clarified. "Once it becomes a business, the focus goes away from what it's about. What I've found in dojos in America, is that sensei despise having to dumb down their martial arts to keep up enrollment numbers. If I ever did consider myself worthy enough to teach out of my own dojo, I'd do it part time, as volunteer work. Something to give to the community."

Armor wearing club member, David Buck, a senior Computer Science major, explained that the Kendo club reaches out to a wide variety of people in the five College Area.

"We get pretty diverse majors. We have less women than men, which is different from Japan where it's half and half. In America there's a trend where more men than women do martial arts," he said. "We encourage everyone to do it, not just Japanese majors or men. In Japan, Kendo has appeal for everyone. We have grad students, two people from Hampshire and a student from Mt. Holyoke. No one from Amherst College or Smith, but we had someone from Smith last semester. We have a lot of new comers, so we keep it informal compared

Turn to KENDO, page 3

Court upholds ruling; Napster's hopes sink

By Ryan Benhorris
Collegian Staff

Napster, the online music trading organization was delivered some tough news on Monday, when it was announced that its appeal to the federal courts to stop an injunction placed upon them last July was rejected. The decision could inevitably result in the termination of the online community.

The decision made by the United States' Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals was apparently based on an assumption that Napster knowingly understands that music traded via its service is pirated and therefore distributed illegally.

A fight against Napster has been led, in part by several musicians who claim their music is unlawfully being traded and as artists, they are not being treated fairly. On Monday, Metallica, one of the most prominent music bands in the fight against Napster, released an official statement on their web page.

"We are delighted that the Court has upheld the rights of all artists to protect and control their creative efforts," Metallica said. "The Ninth Circuit Court has confirmed that musicians, songwriters, filmmakers, authors, visual artists and other members of the creative community are entitled to the same copyright protections online that they traditionally been afforded offline."

Metallica also stressed their reasons for fighting Napster are not personal but considerate of the best interests of all musicians.

"We have never objected to the technology the internet or the digital distribution of music," they said. "All we have ever asked is that artists be able to control how, when and in what form their creativity is distributed through these channels. This is something that Napster has continually refused to do. Now the court has made that decision for them."

Students of the University of Massachusetts have also voiced concerns about Napster and the events surrounding it.

Naomi Weitzman, a sophomore Classics major, said she frequently downloads material from Napster. "I think that free music should be for everyone," she explained. "I don't think that Napster should be shut down. I'm a really big fan of Napster, and I understand copyright rules, but the purpose I see in Napster is that you're interested in a particular artist, you hear some of their music and then you want to go out and buy their CD."

Weitzman also noted that she would be willing to pay a small fee to use Napster if required to.

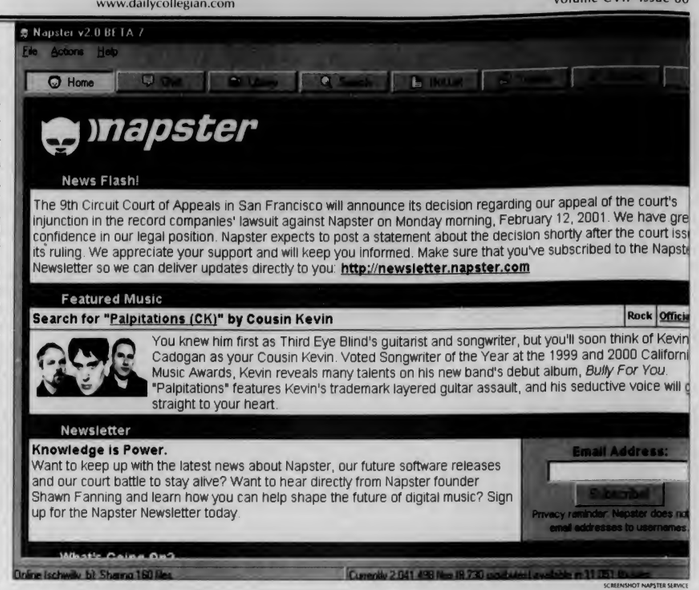
Napster recently merged with recording giant BMG to establish a payment plan for users to subscribe to the service, thereby giving some compensation to the artists' royalties.

Some students are not abundantly eager to fight the rejection of Napster's appeal. Satish Iyer, a senior Mathematics and Chemistry major said he doesn't believe in Napster because he thinks it violates copyright laws.

"You should consider that as artists, [selling music] is the only way that they make money, and that could be the only source of income that you have," he esaid.

Iyer said that he would support a Napster shut down, and feels that the University's campus-wide online network would benefit from a reduction in the use of the system. He said that Napster congests the network, and that removal of the system would significantly improve network performance.

Material from the Associated Press was used in this article.



Napster v2.0 BETA 7
File Actions Help
Home
napster
News Flash!
The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco will announce its decision regarding our appeal of the court's injunction in the record companies' lawsuit against Napster on Monday morning, February 12, 2001. We have gre confidence in our legal position. Napster expects to post a statement about the decision shortly after the court iss its ruling. We appreciate your support and will keep you informed. Make sure that you've subscribed to the Napst Newsletter so we can deliver updates directly to you: http://newsletter.napster.com
Featured Music
Search for "Palpitations (CK)" by Cousin Kevin Rock
You knew him first as Third Eye Blind's guitarist and songwriter, but you'll soon think of Kevin Cadogan as your Cousin Kevin. Voted Songwriter of the Year at the 1999 and 2000 Californi Music Awards, Kevin reveals many talents on his new band's debut album, Bully For You. "Palpitations" features Kevin's trademark layered guitar assault, and his seductive voice will straight to your heart.
Newsletter
Knowledge is Power.
Want to keep up with the latest news about Napster, our future software releases and our court battle to stay alive? Want to hear directly from Napster founder Shawn Fanning and learn how you can help shape the future of digital music? Sign up for the Napster Newsletter today.
Email Address:
Privacy reminder: Napster does not email addresses to usernames
SCREENSHOT NAPSTER SERVICE

The United States' Ninth Court of Appeals upheld a temporary injunction yesterday against popular online music swapping service Napster. The decision may eventually lead to the service being closed permanently.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Ciarganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Try
Your Campus Meal
Plan
and we guarantee you'll eat with us again.

Give us your opinion and we'll give you 5 free meals on campus.

Simply Purchase a meal plan from Your Campus Meal Plan (Commuter or Economy) by February 16th, use the meal plan and tell us what you think by February 23rd 2001. We'll give you 5 free meals to be used at any retail food outlet on campus, including snack bars. Guaranteed! To find out more about Your Campus Meal Plan please call the Meal Plan Office at 545-1362 or visit our website www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices. Sign up available at Campus Center's Cashiers office.

UMASS

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

Terms and Conditions: To qualify, you must purchase a Commuter or Economy meal plan by February 16th 2001. Feedback must be submitted no later than February 23rd 2001 by completing a customer satisfaction questionnaire available at cashier stations and at the Meal Plan Office. Return the questionnaire to the meal plan office in the Franklin Dining Hall by mail or in person and the five free meals will be posted to Your Campus Meal Plan account within 72 hours. All meals must be used before May 25th 2001. Any unused meals will be void after May 25th 2001. Your campus meal plan is only available to juniors (with 54 or more credits), seniors, grads and commuter students.

kendo

continued from page 1

to Japan, which usually caters to advanced level students who wear armor."

Everyone is encouraged to participate in the Keno practices, even if they are still unfamiliar with the martial art.

"The first part of practice is spent on basic work and etiquette, and includes suburi which are simple prearranged movements," said Buck. "A small part of practice is dedicated just to those wearing armor. The others still participate; they watch and learn, and see techniques in action."

Buck said that the Kendo club's practices follow traditional Japanese practices and very structured.

"The practice is very regimented," Buck explained. "Bob follows a framework, the same as every dojo in Japan. There is kihonuchi, which is basic cutting that you go over again and again. Iigeiko is one-on-one practice. It isn't a competition, but you are sparing. It's always arranged where someone who is more experienced is matched with someone who is less, so you have a student-teacher relationship. So, I'm not trying to beat this person. They are teaching me. Kagarigeiko is an endurance practice. It includes 20 to 30 seconds where you go against an opponent as fast and actively as possible. The opponent just blocks and signals. The person doing kagarigeiko becomes very tired; the point is to keep the form perfect even when you're exhausted. We begin and end each practice with mokuso, a brief period of meditation. It's a period to clear the mind, so you can concentrate only on Kendo, not other distractions like homework and friends."

Anyone interested in learning more about the club should visit the web sit www.umass.edu/rso/umkendo or send and email to mkendo@student.umass.edu. The club is open to anyone affiliated with the five colleges.

ESL

continued from page 1

Williams, associate dean of UAASC. Until this June, when ESL's budget will be assessed again, Williams will continue to look for resources for the program.

"Our commitment to students has not diminished," Williams said. ESL is a program for graduate and undergraduate students, but graduate students are less likely to have access because of its design for undergraduate and first year students. Placement in classes is assessed during the application process. Although the University of Massachusetts used to deny admission if there were not any room in ESL classes for the student, there is no longer conditional acceptance, according to O'Connor.

"Our goal is to test before enrollment," Williams said. "We test in the spring before admission and again in the fall."

The ESL class load results in many students taking a full 12-credit semester, while others take only three credits. According to Susan Machala, an undergraduate premajor academic advisor, classes are recommended depending on a student's proficiency.

"They will usually follow a prescribed sequence and the guidelines of their instructors," Machala said. "While students aren't required to take their recommended ESL classes, they are encouraged to do so."

Yummy in my tummy
Check out new silverware food and facilities at the DC's.

Coolidge Bridge Rehabilitation

New contract Awarded to Cianboro Corp.

By Mark Ramirez
Collegian Staff

Commuters hoping for a faster rush hour trip from Amherst to Northampton across the Coolidge Bridge will have to wait just a few more years.

The Massachusetts Highway Department announced Feb. 7 that the contract to rehabilitate the bridge has been awarded to Cianboro Corporation of Pittsfield, Maine. The project will begin this spring, and should be completed by summer of 2003.

The Coolidge Bridge will be widened to four lanes of traffic, have its deck replaced and get a new cantilevered sidewalk. Cianboro Corporation submitted a bid of $19.8 million.

According to officials, at least two lanes of traffic will be open at all times. The contract for an Intelligent Transportation System has already been awarded to T&C Flashing Barricades, Inc. of Avon, Massachusetts. In this particular case, the ITS involves the installation of two closed circuit cameras at approaches to the bridge in Northampton and Hadley, and one camera at the Sunderland Bridge.

The system allows State Police and the MassHighway regional office in Northampton to monitor traffic remotely. They can set the timing of traffic signals, and program electronic variable message signs to direct drivers to alternative routes if necessary. The system is also meant to aid emergency vehicles crossing the bridge.

T&C submitted the low bid of $1,711,569. Work on the ITS is scheduled to be completed by the time work on the bridge begins.

According to Doug Cope, MassHighway public affairs director, the Coolidge Bridge project has been discussed for years, prompted by the bridge's condition and the increase of traffic in the area. Weekend events at local colleges also cause heavy traffic on the bridge.

The project, he said, combined with the widening of a mile of Route 9 in Hadley, should produce a marked improvement in traffic. The Route 9 project will begin in 2002.

The MassHighway Board of Commissioners has the final say on contract bids. Matthew J. Amorello is the head of the board.

Reads Corp. of North Billerica, Massachusetts, submitted the original low bid of $19,645,845 for the bridge project, but was rejected upon review. It was discovered that the company was not qualified to bid more than $15 million.

Bidding for the Coolidge Bridge contract opened on Sep. 30, 2000 and the project has an estimated cost of $14.9 million.

According to MassHighway, the Coolidge Bridge project is part of an effort by the Celtics/TD Garden Administration to spend more than $700 million a year on road and bridge spending over the next five years. The amount does not include money spent on the Central Artery project - Boston's Big Dig.

TO PURCHASE YOUR OFFICIAL UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASS RING

jostens

A Jostens representative will be on campus
Wednesday, Thursday, Friday
February 14, 15, 16
10am - 2pm Outside the University Store.

$50 DEPOSIT REQUIRED
MAJOR CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED

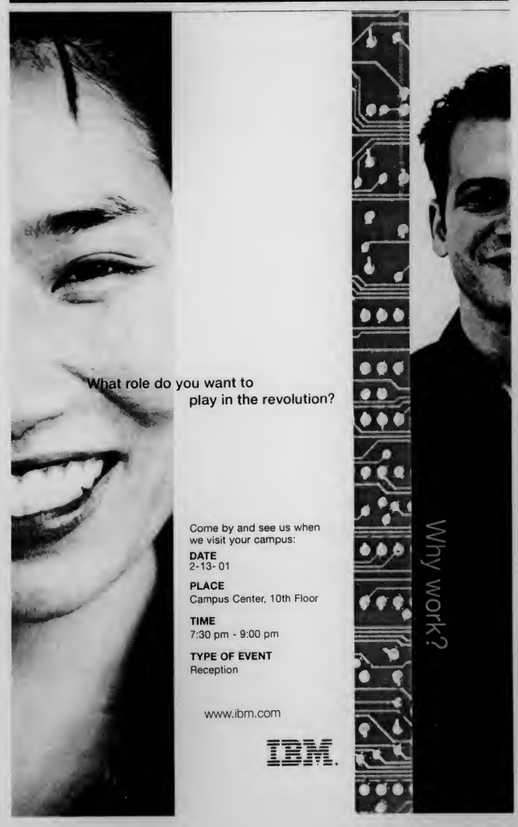
ALANA Job Fair

Today
Feb. 13th 2001
Campus Center
Auditorium
4pm to 7pm

Full-Time Opportunities for Undergraduate and Graduate Students
All Majors are Welcome • There's Something for Everyone

AmeriCorps • Andersen Consulting • Axcelis Technologies • The Boston Globe • Brockton Public Schools • Charles River Laboratories • City Year Boston • Connecticut Children's Medical Center • Connecticut Department of Children and Families • Connecticut Vocational Technical High Schools • Department of Environmental Management • Delaware Department of Transportation • Devereux/MA • DOT, Volpe Center • EF Education • Enterprise Rent-a-Car • Ernst & Young LLP • Federation of Hospital & University Employees District 1199 • Ferguson Enterprises, Inc. • Filene's/The May Co. • Frito-Lay, Inc. • General Dynamics Communication Systems • General Dynamics Defense Systems • Glaxo SmithKline • H&R Block Financial Advisors, Inc. • IBM • INROADS/Center New England • Intel Corporation • Liberty Mutual • Lucent Technologies • M/A-Com • Malcolm Pirnie • MNBA New England • Mellon Financial Corporation • Met Life/New England Financial • Millipore Corporation • MIT Lincoln Laboratory • National Park Service • Northwestern Mutual Financial Network • Officemax • Osco Drug/Sav-on Drugs/Albertsons • Phoenix Home Life • Picatinny Arsenal • Polaroid Corporation • Pricewaterhouse Coopers • Raytheon Company • Saint-Gobain Abrasives • The Sherwan- Williams Company • Shop'n Save Supermarkets (Hannaford Bros. Co.) • Smith College • State Street Corporation • Stop & Shop Companies, Inc. • Sun Life Financial • Teach for America • The Teachers' Institute at City on a Hill • Teksystems • Texas Instruments • Tri-County Youth Programs • Union-News • U.S. Air Force • U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service • U.S. Geological Survey • United States Navy • United Technologies Corporation • VERIZON •

www-ccn.acad.umass.edu



Come by and see us when we visit your campus:
DATE
2-13-01
PLACE
Campus Center, 10th Floor TIME
7:30 pm - 9:00 pm
TYPE OF EVENT Reception
www.ibm.com
IBM.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Ten Commandment
Thou Shall Not

Lawmakers in one of Alabama's two legislative houses have passed a motion that will be forwarded to Congress, suggesting that a new Constitutional Amendment be passed allowing for the Ten Commandments to be posted in all public places, including schools.

Not only is such a proposal horrifically inappropriate, but it is a direct violation of the very Constitution to which it would be attached. Clearly stating that there must be a separation of church and state, the First Amendment promises that there will never be an official endorsement of religion.

Why these lawmakers in Alahama believe that posting the Ten Commandments would be akin to anything but an official endorsement of religion is baffling. Those ten rules are specific to Christians and nobody else. They might be practical pieces of morality for life (of course we shouldn't kill or steal or cheat) but those are rules that came down to a very specific segment of the population and as such, they are not applicable, in their strictest, most literal sense, to everyone.

Posting the Ten Commandments is "just an option" according to the state legislator that has forwarded the idea, Ken Guin. With all due respect to this elected official, it absolutely isn't an option that people need. It is an option, in fact, which is specifically prohibited, and with good reason.

This nation was established on a number of freedoms, including the freedom to be oneself, to develop, to grow and to learn in such an environment.

That absolutely cannot happen when Hindi kids, when Islamic kids, when Buddhist kids, when atheist kids are trying to attend a school that specifically endorses the religion of some of the students, but not of any of the others.

That absolutely cannot happen when Hindi families, when Islamic families, when Buddhist families, when atheist families go to Post Offices, to tax offices, to FBI offices, to any offices that specifically endorse the religious beliefs of some Americans, but not of their own.

This country shouldn't be one of exclusivity; it should be one where people are welcome to be who they are and not have to deal with the possible circumstances that come along with that.

The nations schools are a powerful breeding ground for the ideas which will someday influence the views of the adult population of the United States. We do not by any means want to insinuate a religious preference to any one group among children so young, who can someday grow up to enforce such a preference in greater ways.

Hopefully George W. Bush, easily the most powerful man in the United States, perhaps the world, will put a stop to such legislation, gently persuading the state of Alabama to let such fights go by the wayside, for they can only work to divide a nation that needs unification.

The Daily Collegian is particularly afraid that Bush won't make any such speech and that at least some lawmakers (other than Alabama's) might actually endorse this proposal. For a nation with so many reasons for people to be divided against one another, we need not add another to the mix.

Kid A? A closer look at cloning

MATT DESPRES

In the new Time magazine, Randolfe Wicker, 63, spokesman of the Human Cloning Foundation and New York City lighting storeowner, offered these thoughts on the subject that has come to consume much of his adult life, and recently, the imagination of the entire world. "I can thumb my nose at Mr. Death and say, 'You might get me, but you're not going to get all of me. The special formula that is me will live on into another lifetime. It's a partial triumph over death. I would leave my imprint not in sand but in cement."

Wicker, who is gay, struggles with the fact that having children will not come as easily for him as it does for a heterosexual couple. For him, the question has a simple solution: human cloning has presented itself as a possible vehicle for his legacy, a way for him to live, in a sense, after death. The question and answer don't come as easily for the rest of us, though, who have yet to learn enough about cloning and the implications that come with it to feel truly comfortable about taking one side or the other.

The first instance of cloning that most of us were exposed to, outside the pages of science fiction, came in the form of Dolly the sheep. As scientifically significant as it was, it played out to most of us as a novelty act, a cute stunt with little or no impact on our own lives. From that incident stemmed the initial talk of human cloning which, admittedly, can be an inviting idea on the surface. It caters to the side of us that dwells in realizing the impossible, and the closer we get to that, the less objective the decisions we make. It's shaping up to be a sprint to see who can finish first, with potentially disastrous results for those who take part.

What's pushing Wicker and others like him is the potential for a second chance – that some form of him, while not entirely whole, has the chance to live on and enjoy the same things. He has immersed himself in the idea that the "second coming" of himself, if you will, has the potential to carry on with things that he is left unable to accomplish. In theory, it's an attractive concept, but in reality, it is a troubled idea that carries with it serious flaws and possible repercussions.

Most importantly, he will not be around, for any substantial time at least, for this clone that he desires. When it happens, if ever, the clone will proceed into a life that Wicker will never see, never experience or help discover. The idea alone of leaving a form of himself behind is satisfaction enough, and that is being selfish on the grandest of all scales. He'll be leaving the child cold turkey, as an oddity rather than a person deserving of natural love and attention. He'll leave it to be studied and explored, and not to be raised as a normal child should be. This is a society that thrives on grandstanding the odd, and this would take that obsession to an entirely new and obscene level. If he considers this act to be one bred out of love, then he is being blinded by his own selfishness and a case of "What if?" taken to the extreme.

If Wicker is so intent on having a child, he should explore other avenues of child-bearing that could satisfy his need. Anything from a surrogate mother to adoption are legitimate options that many people choose each year. It's himself that he wants more of, though, a selfish desire that he could theoretically fill by cloning himself.

Another factor is the unknown. For all of the scientific advances and discoveries that have been made, there are an equal number of variables that have yet to be determined. No human to date has been cloned. On that fact alone, no number of predictions or educated guesses could lead me to believe that human cloning is without problems. Wicker says that sharing his genes with a cloned version of himself will allow that person to share his particular loves and interests, which include Middle Eastern food and romantic Spanish music, that has long fallen out of the mainstream. The question for us, though, is will it actually? Will this person share every single interest and nuance of Mr. Wicker? Is cloning strictly a matter of nature, or does the nurture argument have any validity? To say this individual, independent of the person who, in a sense, gave birth to them, will operate solely on inherited traits and remain untouched by the environment around him is taking quite a leap. It drags up years of Nature vs. Nurture arguments and, when combined with the possibility of recreating a human, places a potential solution that much further away. Cases have been studied that suggest the human makeup will prevail over outside influences, in instances where identical twins were raised in drastically different locales, only to be reunited years later and find that they did, in fact, share many of the same interests and traits.

That, however, has never lead to a conclusive answer, and can certainly only be used as a stepping-stone when dealing with the concept of human cloning. Whether or not it is nature or nature that shapes us more is an argument well worth taking up, but not at the expense of a child who has been deemed a guinea pig. What happens to that child when they grow up and begin to comprehend the unique situation surrounding their existence? How is it fair to them? We spend time and energy debating whether or not it's beneficial to us without once ever considering the individual that will be impacted the most. That in itself is a crime and a clear sign that this process should be taken slowly.

Religious convictions also stand in the way of making a firm move to one side or the other. The Catholic Church, to which I belong by default and situation, and not necessarily by choice, has come out strongly against cloning, issuing statements that say only God has the rightful power to create and, of course, take away life. For once I agree. However, when it comes to cloning individual organs (an entirely different debate within itself), I tend not to hesitate as much. This science has the potential to save, to improve the quality of existing life tenfold, and the right to that opportunity should be, in my opinion, fully supported. It's not toying with new life, but prolonging what we have, what we're supposed to have, and is the area where the majority of our energy should be focused.

Human cloning presents us with what is perhaps the most interesting and challenging question of the new millennium, where we are combining our burgeoning technology with the most basic, biological building blocks. It's an exciting prospect, but a virtual breeding ground for disaster. In the Time article, University of Chicago bio-ethicist Leon Kass offers the following warning. "It's not just that parents will have particular hopes for these children. They will have expectations based on a life that has already been lived. What a thing to do – to carry on the life of a person who has died."

It's a burden no person should have to carry, and hopefully we realize that before a grave mistake is made. We are teetering on the brink of something we know little about, and could all too easily fall off.

Matthew J. Despres is a Collegian Columnist. Information from Time Magazine was used in this article.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PREJ
WWW.MONKEY-BOX.NET
EVENTUALLY TENNY WAS FORCED TO ACCEPT THE HARD TRUTH: THE NICKEL WAS GONE FOREVER...
© 2001

Write for Ed/Op!

I want my sports TV

DAN LAMOTHE

In only a couple of months on campus, it's been easy for me to see that the University of Massachusetts is home to some of the rowdiest, angriest and most opinionated sports fans in the country. Personally, I think this is great. I fit right in with all of that. As a home team sports fan, another thing that makes me what I think is likely to get an earful on why the Yankees still suck or on how badly Antoine Walker got screwed by missing out on the All-Star game.

Those, however, are different stories for another day.

I've got a different beef today. Why, tell me, don't we have any of the local sports TV channels on campus? On a campus full of rowdy sports fans that pull for the Sox, Celtics, Bruins and Minutemen, how did we not end up with a single moment of TV sports coverage on any of these teams? It just ain't right, man. We deserve better than this.

UMass was off playing Dayton last week in Ohio. Since we obviously can't just drive over to Dayton to catch the game midweek, I figured I'd catch the game on TV. Oh wait! I can't! The channel programming offered by UMass doesn't carry Fox Sports New England? So, last Tuesday, while anyone in the whole of Massachusetts, Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Rhode Island who wanted to watch the game could just flip it on anywhere there was cable off-campus, we were shafted. Our families could watch the game at home, but we couldn't watch it here. We couldn't, on our own campus, watch our own school play! Sports fans were up the creek without a paddle, and it's not fair.

Think about it. In the last few years, UMass has had a hard time filling the Mullins Center whenever the basketball team plays. Wouldn't it make sense for them to get TV coverage on the away games? People have short attention spans. If I'm all primed and ready to watch the Temple-UMass game in Philadelphia, and can't because it's not on TV, how am I supposed to get pumped for the home game? Over time, not having consistent live coverage of the Minutemen makes it tough for people to keep an interest in them. Don't get me wrong – the Collegian is outstanding for providing background stories and in-depth reporting into what happened behind the scenes at the game. Given the choice, though, I'd prefer to watch the game as it unfolds rather than just read about it in the Daily Collegian.

It's not just the Minutemen either. There have to be enough Celtics fans on campus, I hope (Yeah that's right, I like 'em. Sue me.), even if they are closet fans. The Celts are the hometown team, right? Up here in Amherst, on campus at UMass, not a single game is going to get coverage this semester, next semester or any semester in the future, just because the Housing Services Cable Network is cool. Fox Sports covers every single game that they play. Like all of the UMass road games that we've been missing this year, watching the Celtics isn't even an option. Ever!

> "On a campus full of rowdy sports fans that pull for the Sox, Celtics, Bruins and Minutemen, how did we not end up with a single moment of TV sports coverage on any of these teams?"

All right, how about the Red Sox fans? Am I right? UMass is home to probably 15,000 of the rowdiest, loudest, most passionate baseball fans that exist. Yeah, I know some of those fans get behind the Yankees. This is MASSACHUSETTS though – chowder eating, Beantown loving Massachusetts – campus offers, and that is a good thing. However, sports are multi-national, watched by both sexes, and of great interest to many of the students on campus. With the exception of ESPN, they have totally been left out of the programming that we have been offered. Perhaps an additional cable-plan could be offered sometime soon to please the rest of us trying to catch "the game" on TV. I really hope so, because this school seems way too big and too good to not fix such an easy problem for so many people.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Latin diva stews in mediocrity

Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

JENNIFER LOPEZ
J.Lo
Epic

Jennifer Lopez is the latest in a long string of celebrities who has double-dipped into both acting and singing careers, convinced that she can excel at both showbiz genres of film and music. And, as most celebrities who try to swim in both waters, the Latin siren meets with middling success.

The follow-up to Lopez's 1999 debut, On the 6, which sold eight million copies worldwide, J.Lo continues the success of the aforementioned largely on looks, sex appeal and over all fly girl status.

But the formula seems to be working. Affirming her double threat, recently the Latin crooner became the first entertainer to make simultaneous No. 1 debuts on both the box office (The Wedding Planner) and album (J.Lo) charts.

Although the lyrics on J.Lo aren't pearls of wisdom, Lopez's latest fuses Latin pop, R&B, hip-hop, urban funk and electronic dance into a successful, satisfying mix. Lopez co-wrote seven of the 15 tracks on J.Lo and served as co-executive producer with Cory Rooney, an On the 6 alumni. In addition, ex-main-squeeze Puff Daddy contributed four songs.

Pop-funky tunes on the album are plentiful such as in "I'm Real" and "Dance With Me," characterized with body groove and a positive, inviting vibe. The album is essentially one that will get clubs hopping with mindless sex-driven lyrics.

"Play" is Lopez's answer to Madonna's "Music," with an all-out plea to a nightclub DJ to play her favorite song. The result is less successful than the hydrogen bomb driven paean of the Material Girl, but nonetheless succeeds in inspiring a shake and a shimmy on the dance floor. Further copping successful divas, "Come Over" and "Secretly," in their secret whispering and cooing, can be mistaken as Janet Jackson ditties.

"Walking on Sunshine" (not a cover of Katrina and the Waves' hit of the same name) is a Puff Daddy composition that has Lopez crooning about a love that will last forever. (Apparently the court-repressed rapper is undaunted by, as continuous reports claim, an on-again, off-again relationship with Ms. Lopez.)

"Ain't It Funny" stands as the best track on the album, as Lopez vents her frustration with a perfect romance that is flawed by less-than-perfect circumstances. The swift chorus, the ironic subject matter and the excellent use of her voice makes the song a standout. Similarly, "I'm Gonna Be Alright" uses the same fast tempo to create an ambient feel that is a cut above the rest. The Rodney Jerkins-produced "That's the Way" is also a different bass offering than the majority of the other bland tracks found on J.Lo.

The most successful aspect of the album lies in the intrinsic use of Lopez's thin and sullen voice with the material she is well suited to handle. Her limited voice, undoubtedly mechanically altered, however, is only weakened by the drowning horns and salsa-drenched tracks such as in the two Spanish tracks "Dame (Touch Me)," a duet with Puerto Rican heartthrob Chayanne, and "Si Ya Se Acabo."

Although considered to be a personal album, J.Lo never delves into heart-pressing matters other than Lopez's romantic life – all of which leaves no impact on the listener. But the album is one step above her last effort, and considering this is a music career that is now only on its second record, perhaps a slow progression to soul-stirring songs beholds a more soulful album in the future.

COURTESY MICHAEL THOMPSON

The incomparable Jennifer Lopez

Iron Horse enchanted by Harmer's charms

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

SARAH HARMER
Iron Horse
February 9, 2001

Sarah Harmer sings about understanding. Not about understanding the great cosmic truths or society's problems, but about understanding ourselves. And the more we understand about ourselves and how we interact with others, however masked or clumsily, the closer we come to understanding human nature, inch by tiny inch.

Friday night at Iron Horse, Harmer's set consisted mainly of material from her superb solo record You Were Here. However modest she seemed during the between-song chats, the singer/guitarist was very much the center of the stage, wearing a bright red shirt to complement red-tinted hair. It seemed as if Harmer was a teacher that night, teaching us about ourselves, with her lyrics coming alive on the blackboard of the music, the combination of her guitar, a bassist, and a drummer.

The lessons were numerous. "Basement Apt." taught us that when we think we're above looking down, it's often the other way around. "Around the Corner" brings the realization that you never know someone else as well as you think you do. "You Were Here" is amongst the most heartfelt cases against loneliness since "Eleanor Rigby."

The crowd was receptive and gracious throughout the show and greeted many of Harmer's song introductions with whoops and hollers, to the singer's amusement. She remarked that she especially liked the gun in the back with the primal grunts or "animal sounds" of appreciation for each of her songs. The crowd was of great diversity, mixing older folkies with the younger five college crowd and the recent Is enlightened that were introduced to Harmer's beautiful talent (read: me). The acoustics of the Iron Horse were perfect, and the personal environment of the venue was the ideal showcase of her performance.

The set of album favorites was supplemented with two covers that lit in nicely, one from Sandi Griffith and the other from locally born artist Oh Susannah. Harmer closed the show with "Todestar," a dreamy song that is perfectly suited for a closer with its casual start that builds into a full and rousing finish. She reappeared for two newly penned songs with tentative titles, the last being the up-tempo "I'm A Mountain," inspired by a tarot card reading Harmer received from a friend in her native Canada. Harmer seemed a little skeptical at her friend's advice, but for true understanding Harmer need look no further than her own songs.

Local talent Deb Talan opened the show with some heartfelt folk songs. Armed with only her acoustic guitar, her lovelorn tales were highlighted by her endearing, although sometimes over reaching, voice.

O-Town proves themselves a joke among jokes with their debut LP

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Staff

O-Town
O-Town
J Records

Considering all of the insults hurled by critics at the current pop music scene – about it being formulaic and unauthentic – one would think artists would be eager to prove their critics wrong. Apparently O-Town could care less. They could very well be the most manufactured of all the current pop acts.

The group was formed in "Real World"-like fashion on ABC's "Making the Band," on which each week the world witnessed 1,800 minutes be whittled down to five guys whose sole purpose in life was to form "the perfect boy band." They fought. They whined, and they cried like little schoolgirls. All of this was the vision of the oh-so brilliant Lou Perlman, the "mastermind" behind both N'Sync and the Backstreet Boys. Perlman figured it would be a good time to try his hand at forming another boy band. After all, N'Sync and Backstreet had just kicked him to the curb after they discovered just how much of "their hard earned money" Perlman kept for himself. With a wave of his magic boy band wand Perlman formed O-Town, and the adulation of teenage girls quickly began. Sure, the five members of O-Town – Ashley, Dan, Jacob, Erik and Trevor – look like they just stepped out of an Abercrombie and Fitch catalog. But would they be able to meet the stringent criteria of being in a boy band? Well, three basic questions had to be answered. Can they sing? Sort of. Can they dance? Better than most sober people. Can they write their own songs? Of course not! Sounds like boy band material to me.

After all the bells, whistles and prepackaged hype there's the actual music. In some ways it's typical teen pop fare, complete with the usual boybandisms: overuse of the word "girl," use of urban street slang that's popularity wavered long ago, high pitched Timberlake-esque nasally induced singing and dashes of sexual innuendo. Combine that with some fairly awkward, almost comical lyrics, and you've got the sound of O-Town. Case in point: the albums first single, "Liquid Dreams," a tribute to nocturnal emissions. With aspirations to be the next Nsync, O-Town sounds a lot more like 2gether with lyrics like "I want a girl who's a mix of Destiny's Child, with a little touch of Madonna's wild side and Janet Jackson's smile, throw in a body like Jennifer and you've got the start of my liquid dreams." In ODB like fashion O-Town gives a shout out to all the ugly girls too: "Looks ain't everything, she's got the sweetest personality."

In fact the somewhat humorous lyrics are about the only thing that separates O-Town from the rest of the pop pack. "Like Haagen-Dazs, she hits the spot," and "She's a beauty queen in her Calvin Jeans" from "Sexiest Woman Alive," and "Victoria's Secret, I've been keeping" from "Every Six Seconds" sounds comical from one standpoint and incredibly cheesy from another. Either way, it's probably an advertiser's liquid dream.

Throw out the product placement lyrics and you're left with a very bland R&B pop album. Tracks like "Girl" and "Sexiest Woman Alive" are fairly decent pop songs with R&B roots. However, that is offset by numbers like "Love Should be a Crime," which sounds like O-Town meets new school Jon Bon Jovi, and that's not a good thing. The beats are uninventive and the hooks are often annoying. The overall blandness of O-Town's sound combined with their immature lyrics won't do much to attract any semblance of an older audience like N'Sync and Backstreet are able to. But it might be good enough for 14 year-old girls. And that's really all that matters, isn't it?

It's safe to say that O-Town has had two big breaks in their careers – people who can write songs for them, and hair gel. However, those two things may not be enough for the guys to overcome the notion that the way they formed was a joke, and in turn that they are a joke. The stigma surrounding their formation gave them a label of being even more commercialized than their counterparts in the already ultra-commercialized pop world. Likely, this album won't do much to change that stigma. O-Town's debut album is too superficial, too uninventive, and just too lame for them ever to be taken seriously.

COURTESY J RECORDS

The boys of O-Town are seen here promoting their latest effort via the radio waves

Soulive Logic Jazzes up Skybox

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

SOULIVE/PROJECT LOGIC
Skybox
Feb. 9

On Friday night, Soulive and Project Logic co-billed a long awaited show at the Skybox on the top floor of the Campus Center. Project Logic opened the show while the capacity crowd continued to shuffle in. The renowned DJ Logic, who is known for his groundbreaking fusion of old-school record spinning with a live jamband, leads Project Logic. Some of Logic's most interesting work came this past summer at the Berkshire Mountain Music Festival when DJ Logic jammed with Bela Fleck and the Flecktones only mere minutes after having been introduced to the band. That performance demonstrated DJ Logic's skill of working his spinning in with some very different and diverse types of music. Although Logic's performance on Friday did not cross any particular genre boundaries, his skills were very evident.

The highlights of this set were two cover songs that were recognized from their very first notes by the mostly college aged crowd. The first of these songs came about halfway through their 90 minute set was "Bubble House," a song by the popular jazz trio Medeski, Martin and Wood. Although this song quickly reached its end, it transformed the crowd into a feverish mass of grooving bodies. This peak of high energy was not reached again until towards the end of the set when they broke out into "Cars, Trucks and Buses" by the greatest jamband of them all, Phish. Not knowing what exactly to expect from the entire Logic Project, I was pleasantly surprised by the skill and explosiveness of this five-piece band. I was especially impressed by saxophonist Casey Benjamin, who came out as a guest for a few songs with Soulive.

As Soulive was preparing to come onstage, the huge Skybox crowd piled in with anticipation of yet another great performance in the Pioneer Valley by this explosive jazz trio. With Eric Krasno on guitar, Neil Evans on Hammond B-3 and his brother Alan Evans on drums, this band has been selling out shows all around the country. They plan on taking their groove worldwide as they embark on a tour of Japan later this month. The band made their way onstage and started things off right with a very spirited "Steppin'," with a nice extended jam. Alan Evans then got up and introduced the next song in his usual explosive manner. The song, "Bridge to 'Bama" is off of their new album Doin' Something which is set to hit stores on March 13. Next, Soulive invited Project Logic's sax player Casey Benjamin on stage for a voluminous rendition of "It's Your Thing". Benjamin remained onstage for a cover of James Brown's classic "Sex Machine," which was taken to a whole new level with his screeching and soaring saxophone. Next up was the so-called short version of "Jesus Children" off of their album released last year, Turn it Out. To bring this great evening of music to a close, the band broke out an extended "Soulive".

As far as I am aware this was the biggest production that the Skybox has ever put on. I certainly hope that it is a sign of things to come, as the show was trouble-free. It goes to show that it simply takes a band of this caliber to bring hoards of people to this gem of a nightclub.

A call to proper perspective on humankind's great pasttime

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

HOWARD ZINN
Stories Hollywood Never Tells Alternative Tentacles

Watching the trailer for the upcoming film Pearl Harbor, I had an urge to question what I was watching. Do I really have to fall hook, line and sinker for this megapatriotic pro-war propaganda and be afraid to speak critically of this millionth tribute to the brave soldiers that died in World War II? Is it required that I hus in to the macho posturing ("we won't let Europe fight our wars!") and the orchestral soundtrack and beautiful framing that seems to present explosions and death as something to admire and be proud of? How much longer do I have to watch this military recruiting reel for a war that we haven't even declared yet, but if (when) we do, anyone who has seen this piece of film will no doubt feel that the single greatest act they can commit for their country is killing someone else.

Certainly, I have over-simplified many aspects of war, a subject on which there is never-ending debate and towards which my feelings waver constantly. One aspect of war, however, (keeping in mind that I have never fought in one) that my feelings never waver upon, is that no matter how justified, the killing of other people, no matter how evil, should not be seen in a positive light. Even in a "good war," as Howard Zinn calls World War II, it's hard to swallow previews like Pearl Harbor that seem to present war in only one dimension, even if it is only a preview. And films with the characteristic of a one-sided take on war are the kind of stories that Hollywood does tell, in abundance.

Knowing that Hollywood favors these kinds of stories and that those with opposing viewpoints only rarely slip through the cracks, Howard Zinn took the opportunity to speak to the Taos Talking Film Festival audience about the films he would like to see made. Not more films to add to the popular view of history, the ones that make you stand up and cheer, but films that would look at history from a different perspective, films that will more likely have you sitting down and thinking.

"It took me a while to realize that Hollywood isn't going to make movies that have the effect of making people more class conscious or more anti-war or more conscious for the need for racial and sexual equality," Zinn noted, and one can only wonder the reaction of filmmakers in the audience and what went through their heads. Stories Hollywood Never Tells calls for a film about those brave enough to stand up to the government and protect World War I or about pos-

turn to ZINN page 6

COURTESY MISS TEEN ALL AMERICAN

Miss Teen All American

Cali Tucker, last year's pageant winner, invites you to participate in the objectification of women by entering the Miss Teen All American Pageant. Those interested in perpetuating institutional misogyny should send an inquisitive email to teenallam@aol.com.

UMass RUGBY
THE sport, THE game
THE people, THE best
Become part of a tradition
Play UMass Rugby
Info Meeting
Thursday, Feb 15
Men's Rm. 162 Campus Center @ 7PM
Women's Rm. 51 Goessman @6PM
For more info, call Matt @ 549-6468 or Ellen @ 549-9403

SPRING BREAK
Sun - Surf - Party
up to 7 night room package
From $79 Per Person
BIGGEST POOL DECK PARTIES
FREE INTERNET CAFE 24 Hours
Tropical Beaches of Florida
FREE Brochures & Reservations
Toll Free 1-877-257-5431
www.springbreak2.com

Have you been wondering...
"What educational and career benefits are there to doing a co-op?"
"How do I apply for an internship?"

Find out the answers to these questions (and more!) at the 18th Annual Co-op and Summer Job Fair

Thursday, February 15, 2001
Campus Center Lower Level
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Open to all students and majors.

Have YOU thought about doing an internship or co-op?

The following is a partial list of organizations that are attending the COOPERATIVE EDUCATION JOB FAIR. Employers will have table displays throughout the day and several will offer formal presentations in the afternoon.

AH & M Marketing
Ames Department Stores
Boston Globe
Camp Starfish
Cigna
Compaq Computer
EMC Corporation
Enterprise Rent-A-Car
Federal Reserve Bank
Hartford Financial Services
IBM Corporation
Intel Corporation
Investors Bank
Kollmorgan Corporation
The May Institute
State Street Corporation
Telaxis
TJX Companies
Union News
US Fish & Wildlife
Yankee Candle

A co-op position offers you an opportunity to gain valuable experience and helps you become a more competative canididate when you graduate. Through cooperative education you can explore your chosen field while earning a salary.
For more information, call the Campus Career Network Field Experience Office at 545-6265 - www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Forecasts for upcoming year in the 'biz

Last year Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas and Mission: Impossible 2 had you strapped in your seats at the movie theater. N'Sync's No Strings Attached and Eminem's The Marshall Mathers LP were records you couldn't get out of your CD player. What'll it be this year?

Welcome to Mission: Prognostication 2001. Peruse through this two-part article on various high profile projects of the upcoming year and you'll get a glimpse of the huge movies and music projects coming your way.

Part I: Movies

New Line studio's $270 million trilogy Lord of the Rings promises to be a huge box office draw for the next three years, planning to open in three consecutive Christmas seasons. Fellowship of the Ring (Dec. 19) will be the first of the three movies based on J.R.R. Tolkien's Middle-earth fantasies starring Ian McKellen, Cate Blanchett, Liv Tyler and Elijah Wood. Speaking of big-budget films, the $130 million Pearl Harbor (May 25) hopes to open the summer blockbuster season with a bang. The recreation of Dec. 7, 1941 lasted more than 40 days and reunited director Michael Bay (Armageddon) with Ben Affleck.

An all-star cast has also been lined up for the remake of Ocean's Eleven by Steven Soderbergh (Erin Brokovich, Traffic), which stars George Clooney, Matt Damon, Brad Pitt and Julia Roberts. Pitt and Roberts also costar in the romantic comedy The Mexican (March 2). Hollywood's most bankable leading lady will also star alongside Catherine Zeta-Jones, John Cusack and Billy Crystal in American Sweethearts, a Hollywood satire about press junkets and star couplings.

Bruce Willis and Billy Bob Thornton will star in the Barry Levinson directed Bandits (July), a heist comedy-thriller. Johnny Depp and Heather Graham are partners in crime in the street crime caper, From Hell. Tom Cruise and Penelope Cruz will star in Vanilla Sky, a remake of the 1999 Spanish thriller Open Your Eyes. Further upping the star quotient, Robert DeNiro, Marlon Brando and Edward Norton will star in heist flick The Score.

Will Smith will do his best to portray Mohammed Ali in his dream project, Ali, directed by Michael Mann (The Insider). Leonardo DiCaprio will try to re-ignite his post-Titanic career with Gangs of New York, a late-19th century mobster drama. Heath Ledger will play a knight in the medieval jousting adventure A Knight's Tale (June 1). Angelina Jolie will bring videogame cyber-chic Lara Croft to the big screen in Tomb Raider (June 15).

NIKOLAS MARKANTONATOS

John Travolta will play a super spy in Swordfish (Summer) alongside Hugh Jackman. Brad Pitt and Robert Redford will continue the Spy Game (Fall), where Pitt plays a wrongfully imprisoned CIA agent whose superior has 24 hours to get him out of jail. Matt Damon will star in The Bourne Identity (Fall), an adaptation of the Robert Ludlum (yep, you guessed it!) spy thriller.

Nicolas Cage and Penelope Cruz will star in Captain Corelli's Mandolin (April), an adaptation of Louis de Bernieres' 1994 novel. John Madden (Shakespeare In Love) set the story on a Greek island during World War II, where Cruz will be torn between her fiancé (Christian Bale) and an Italian officer (Cage). Hugh Grant and Renée Zellweger will star in another book-to-film adaptation in Bridget Jones' Diary (April 13). A screen adaptation of the wildly popular children's series Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone (Nov. 16) promises to continue the excitement created by the J.K. Rowling novels. Steven Spielberg will direct sci-fi project A.I. (June 29) based on Brian W. Aldiss' 1969 short story "Super-Toys Last All Summer Long," with Haley Joel Osment.

Brendan Fraser will reprise his role in The Mummy Returns (May 11), which promises to have bigger special effects than the first installment and a special guest role from WWF's The Rock. Jackie Chan and Chris Tucker team up again in Hong Kong in the buddy-cop comedy Rush Hour 2 (Aug. 3). Jurassic Park III (July 18) hopes for another dino-size success. Steven Spielberg, however, will serve as executive producer this time around, passing the directorial torch to Joe Jonston (Jumanji).

A remake of Planet of the Apes (July 27) will star Mark Wahlberg as the human astronaut alongside Helena Bonham Carter, Tim Roth, and Michael Clarke Duncan in monkey suits. Nicolas Cage and Christian Slater will play Marines in another WWII epic titled Windtalkers (Nov. 16) directed by John Woo (MI: 2).

Part II: Music

Janet Jackson will return (still untitled, April) with longtime producers Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis on an album that she promises to be brighter and less masochistic than 1997's The Velvet Rope. Also on board, hip-hop knob twirler Rockwilder and production duo the Neptunes, creating 80s-sounding dance numbers. The pair, who helmed such hits as Mystickal's "Shake Ya Ass" and Jay-Z's "I Just Wanna Love U (Give It 2 Me)", will also drop a debut hip-hop heavy album In Search of. . . (May), hoping to craft themselves, as they have for others, into pop stars.

Michael Jackson, who has been working on a new album (still untitled, Summer) for over two years now, hopes this record will place him once again in the pop-culture stratosphere. Tracks have been laid down by R&B hitmaker Rodney Jerkins and the record is reportedly raw and energetic, with an innovative sound. Jackson is also currently working on a Jackson 5 reunion disc.

Guns N' Roses also plan for a comeback with Chinese Democracy (June), almost a decade after their last studio effort. Lauryn Hill's anticipated follow-up album (still untitled, no scheduled release) to the critically hailed The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill, may also see the light of day and serve as the soundtrack to Soul Dance.

Sisqo will try to enjoy success without the thong in Return of the Dragon (April), his follow up to 1999's smash Unleash the Dragon. The rapper is hoping to show people that there is more to him than his platinum dome and his flamboyant clothes.

Mariah Carey also has a soundtrack in the works to coincide with her new movie All That Glitters. The album (March) will be co-produced with Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis and the sound, in order to coincide with the time period of the film, has an 80's flavor.

Diva-in-training Brandy is currently completing work with veteran producer Warryn Campbell on her first full-length album (still untitled, no scheduled release) since 1998's Never Say Never.

Eminem, whose multi-platinum The Marshall Mathers LP was dubbed by many critics as the best album of 2000, returns to incite even more hate with five Detroit homeys who he grew up with. The album titled D12 (March) unites the quintet with Slim Shady. The Dirty Dozen (a.k.a. the Detroit 12) also landed a record deal with the help of Em, and are producing Devil's Night (that won't feature the shock rapper), and promise to include more politically incorrect lyrics than Mr. Mathers himself.

Jessica Simpson hopes to avoid the sophomore slump with a new album (still untitled, April or May), hoping for Britney-size success after the mediocre sales of 1999's Sweet Kisses. Sony Music honcho Tommy Mottola is apparently handpicking every song for the album. Teen pop sensations 'N Sync also plan to release an album similar to 2000's best selling No Strings Attached. The boy band is searching for ways to revisit the high energy and heavy beats of the 10x platinum record, but without overpacking the punch (still untitled, Spring).

Radiohead are set to release Amnesiac (June) with a return to traditional songwriting. The rock band are planning to shower the new release with singles, videos, and a potpourri of other publicity stunts after avoiding much press in last year's critical darling Kid A. Beck and Timbaland collaborate on I'm Music (Spring), a pairing that promises to converge ironic rapping and inventive production. Maxwell is creating a reflective album on how he's feeling Now (April 3), mostly centered on his heartbreak phase after ending a rocky romance. Rufus Wainwright returns with Poses (April 17), hoping for a bigger success than his 1998 baroque-pop debut Into the Sun.

Boston rockers Aerosmith are currently laying tracks for a new album (still untitled, Spring) that will update their classic hard-rock sound with contemporary touches. Perry and Steven Tyler are co-producing this time, along with Marti Frederickson and Mark Hudson.

Veteran musician Santana will also head back to the studio in the spring after taking a sabbatical, much needed after Grammy award winning Supernatural sold an astounding 13 million copies. Santana reportedly already has a batch of new songs for the LP, although he has yet to step into the studio (still untitled, Fall).

Nikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian staff member

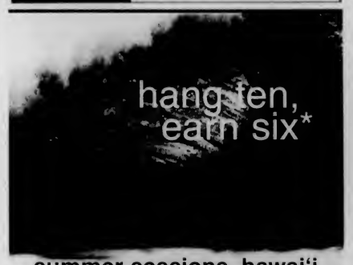
Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888



summer sessions, hawai'i
* 6 weeks, 6 credits, as low as $3,000 (based on typical costs of tuition, room & board, books, and estimated airfare)
Term 1: May 21-June 29 • Term 2: July 2-August 10
www.summer.hawaii.edu • toll-free 1 (800) 862-6628
University of Hawai'i at Mānoa, Summer Sessions

A Passion for Jewish Studies
AT BOSTON'S
HEBREW COLLEGE
JEWISH STUDIES IN
Text STUDY is the heart of our curriculum — and the hallmark of our graduates. If you share our passion, find out how you can advance professionally or start a new career by calling 800-866-4814 or 617-278-4948.
HEBREW COLLEGE
המכללה העברית
43 HAWES STREET • BROOKLINE, MA 0224

■ Zinn

continued from page 5

ple getting together and organizing along class lines, rather than one stereotypical hero rising above the ranks. Films with an understanding that the American Revolution wasn't celebrated by black slaves or Native Americans whose lands were being taken over and destroyed. Films that show Helen Keller not simply as an ambitious disabled woman but a "radical...anti-war agitator."

This disc is essential for film buffs and historians alike, and like all of his work, comes complete with his subtle but expert humor, such as when he declares towards the end of the lecture that "I've got to finish soon...just out of mercy." The need for films that challenge the accepted views and sacred cows like the "capitalist ethic" is real, and such pictures would do what Zinn feels all art should do, namely "educate...and change the world."

Nothing affects me quite like Collegian Arts

Why work for one .com, when you can work for hundreds?

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

You haven't gotten this far by limiting your possibilities. And if you want to go even farther, consider the possibilities at Ernst & Young. You'll have access to some of the most sophisticated tools in the technology industry and work with some of the companies that help define it. Log on.

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

©2001 Ernst & Young LLP

Hey, Mr. Career Suicide

SAM WILKINSON

Jason Biggs has never been confused for a great actor by that matter, a decent actor. He's the bottom-line proverbial hatrel, a performer who makes [illegible] characters look subtle and understated. [illegible] has found his creative nadir in Point Break, [illegible] ever since, making such clunkers as [illegible] Speed and Johnny Mnemonic.

[illegible] movies have been offensively bad, at least [illegible] as individual, both in his movies [illegible] project: Dogma.

[illegible] the argument a dangerous thing, about the Reeves [illegible] proposed [illegible] one in [illegible] he not only ruined the majority of the cinema [illegible] a part of, but also the careers of other [illegible] notably that of Morgan Freeman's. Yes, Morgan Freeman was destroyed professionally by [illegible]

[illegible] deny that would call such a theory ridiculous [illegible] theorem.

Freeman started off the following classic films: Robin Hood: Men in Tights, Driving Miss Daisy, Glory and The Shawshank Redemption. Six out the twelve movies Freeman was a part of from 1989's Driving to 1995's Seven are tried and true classics, award winning films that will go down as some of the very best films of the early 90s.

Then, however, Freeman's apparently had bills to pay and [illegible] in one of the worst films of all time: the cinematic forgettable Chain Reaction starring none [illegible] than the career killer Keanu Reeves. Reaction [illegible] was a film about cold fusion ever made, not only [illegible] the screen to believe that Reeves is some sort of [illegible] scientist (which in it of itself is tough to stomach). I'm that he tried figured out the solutions to all of the world's energy problems. Good lord, quoth most [illegible] the film was good for recovering drunks who needed [illegible] reload, nobody could foresee what would happen to Freeman as a result of starring in Reaction.

The career has gone nowhere, spiraling into the depths of which are usually only mined by the Fred Sanford and Randall Tex Cobb's of this life.

Don't believe the theory?

Name a good film Freeman's been in since Reaction.

Tall order indeed, for nobody would consider the Christian Slater comeback attempt Hard Rain "good" nor do most suggest that Kiss the Girls was anything more than a desperate attempt by Freeman to recapture the disturbed psycho-killer magic of Seven. Deep Impact was the bastard child of Armageddon, both bad movies. Amistad was considered the worst of Spielberg's serious films, a critical bomb as compared to some of the Dreamwork owner's other films. Nurse Betty wasn't necessarily bad, but it certainly wasn't great. Add a sour mix of narration and television appearances and it becomes painfully apparent that Freeman has done nothing with himself after coming down with a Reevesian flu of career suffocating proportions.

It's said really, as Freeman was a wonderfully talented actor who needn't have suffered such a painful professional death.

While he finally might recover in Along Came a Spider, due later this year, have others been affected by Reeves almost haunting lack of talent? While the arguments are easy to make, only Dennis Hopper, star of brilliant cinema like Easy Rider, Hang 'em High, True Romance, Blue Velvet and Apocalypse Now, is the most affected by the Reevesian Flu. After Speed, Hopper has gone nowhere, save the not-necessarily-critically-lauded Basquiat.

Are the cases of Freeman and Hopper enough to declare an emergency of Freeman's Outbreak's proportions? Maybe, but with films like The Matrix and his upcoming Sweet November, the possibility of the flu's spread grows. Should Charlize Theron's promising career be viciously struck down after November, should Laurence Fishburne's career falter after Morpheus, Reeves must be contained.

His deadly spread serves only to rob the film community of considerable talent – it will be easier on everyone for viewers to never have to watch the shockingly awful Reeves again than go for years at a time without decent work by Freeman and, to some extent, Hopper. Such a loss is surely too much for the common man, while living in a world without Reeves is like entering some sort of Mormon seventh heaven.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

Smells like a bad idea: Nirvana tribute butchers grunge classics

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Get Blank's Tribute to Nirvana
Reprise Records

Imagine an incredibly terrible odor combined with something much worse than that. This album gives the term bad music a new definition.

I don't call Nirvana was not punk, [illegible] does why Nirvana may have helped promote such punk contemporaries as Green Day and, later, Blink 182, but they were certainly not punk themselves. Nirvana was [illegible] had alternative and grunge rock. They could never have embraced the skater trends or other things that went along with the punk scene. Nirvana (specifically Kurt Cobain) was depressed, miserable and morbid. Punk music is not supposed to be any of those things.

The very first track on the album, "Come as You Are," performed by Vibrators, makes listeners want to press "stop" very quickly. At least they are able to get most of the lyrics right. "And, I swear that don't have a gun...no I don't have a gun..." Lord, I wish I did.

A band called Blanks 77 contributes their butchering of "Smells Like Teen Spirit." It should be against the law to annihilate such a great and celebrated song. Blanks 77 take what was basically a revolutionary concept in alternative rock and turned it into a Suicide Machines special. The sad truth is that this band couldn't hold a candle to the absolute worst of today's popular punk bands. Blink 182 they are not.

Perhaps the most disturbing track on the album is Vice Squad's earbleeding evocation of nails on a chalkboard, otherwise known as "Lithium." The ambiguity of the lead singer's sex lends an eerie misunderstanding of the original song's clearly patent masculinity, ruining the flavor of Kurt Cobain's music. You can't do that! Sadly, "Lithium" is the only song on the album that is a sincere attempt at sticking to a similar sound of the Nirvana version.

As if Smells Like Bleach could not get any worse, a band called DOA takes "All Apologies," and somehow turns it into a Twisted Sister, "We're Not Gonna Take It" ballad. It seems like something that would otherwise be impossible, but it's right there in a massive wave of unacceptability.

Smells Like Bleach is every Nirvana's fans worst nightmare. If examined as anything more than a joke, it disappoints on thousands of different levels. Artistically it's boring, and the concept of turning all of the band's songs into punk atrocities was a pitiful and stupid idea.

If you like Nirvana, you certainly will not enjoy this album. If you like punk music, you'll like it even less. If you like quality music, you will laugh at this album. If you like bashing your head against a tree, go ahead and do it, because you'll get more enjoyment out of doing that than you will from listening to this massacre of what was once considered the most tremendous music of our generation.

Redefine...

success boundaries friendship
strength differences courage

Thursday February 15th 7pm
Campus Center Room 903
Stop by our information table in the Campus Center all week
Feb 5-9 from 10 am - 2 pm

Redefine your world in the Peace Corps.
www.peacecorps.gov 1 800 424-8580.

Always in Bloom

Valentine's Day!
February 14th
Plants, Balloons, & Stuffed Animals
Dutch & Exotic Bouquets

Local Special
Hugs & Kisses
Kisses: Cuddly Soft Bear, Red Rose & Balloon $25.00
Hugs: Bud Vase Bear with Red Rose $17.50

Uncompromising Quality, Selection, Presentation & Service
220 N. Pleasant St., Amherst
253-5545
We Deliver Anywhere!

VALENTINES DAY SPECIAL!

Let that special someone... (along with 25,000 others) know how you feel about them! Put your special message in the collegian Valentine issue.

THE DEADLINE IS FEB 13 AT 12:00 PM. COME DOWN TO THE COLLEGIAN, ROOM 113 CAMPUS CENTER TO BOOK YOUR MESSAGE OR FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-3500.

UMass out to right rankings

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

What you want, baby, they've got it.

Now all they're asking is for a little respect.

The members of this year's Massachusetts women's water polo team don't understand why they don't have it yet. The squad made serious waves by finishing fifth in the nation last season, only to find itself ranked at No. 18 in the United States Water Polo preseason Top 20.

That injustice should be rectified after this past weekend, when UMass took 2-of-3 at the Princeton Invitational to officially open its season. The Minutewomen bounced back from a tourney-opening 8-3 loss to Michigan by beating Villanova 14-7 on Saturday and California-Santa Cruz 8-4 on Sunday.

The team's performance has sophomore Kelly Chassy looking forward to the next USWP rankings, when she feels the Maroon and White may finally get a little R-E-S-P-E-C-T.

"It doesn't make sense; we're ranked below teams – like Villanova, Brown and Harvard – that we beat last year for sure," said the Golden State native, who paced the team with nine goals on the weekend. "We still have the same core as last year's team. I think once we start coming together, we're really going to surprise people."

That core of talent was a bit depleted somewhat, as the Minutewomen had to hit the water without five team members who were out training for the Atlantic 10 swimming championships. That group of absentees included tri-captains Anne Detloff and Sarah Newell, the latter of who provides critical senior leadership on a young team that graduated its four top veterans after last season.

Luckily, another senior is back from a trip abroad to give the Maroon and White a serious shot of water polo experience. Erin Hillier, who spent last season treading water for the Corrib Water Polo Club while studying in Ireland, jumped back into the UMass lineup without missing a beat and tallied a goal against Michigan and an assist against UC-SC.

"It felt great to be back in the water," said the New York native. "We did a good job of pulling together with a short bench and playing as a team this weekend."

The Minutewomen's tough defeat at the hands of Michigan saw the much larger Wolverine squad using kick-outs to exploit the fatigued UMass defense late. Hillier and company trailed by only a single goal (5-2) heading into the fourth quarter, but were outgunned 5-1 in the final frame by a UM team that capitalized on 6-of-13 man-up advantages.

UMass refocused quickly and displayed renewed energy against Villanova in game two on Saturday. The Maroon and White rang up much of its offensive onslaught on breakaways, thanks to sharp field defense and a stonewall job in goal by freshman Emily Knight (eight saves).

"Emily really stepped up to the challenge against Villanova," Hillier said. "The rest of the team also did a nice job, particularly on the counter attack; we definitely got down the pool well and really attacked the cage."

The fireworks continued against UC-Santa Cruz, one of many West Coast counterparts with which the Minutewomen will lock horns this season. Chassy found the net four times in the Sunday showdown, and credits her team for overcoming UC-SC's rough-and-tumble physical tactics in securing the victory.

"We just didn't take as much of the crap – the pulling of the suits, the kick-offs, the pushing – the underwater contact that people don't see," Chassy said. "They were aggressive, like Michigan in the first game, but this time we didn't take it."

Junior All-American keeper Dana Sinkwich racked up five saves in the tourney-closing win, giving her nine total stops on the weekend. Seven different Minutewomen ended up on the stat sheet with points in Princeton, giving a great indication as to things to come from this seemingly underestimated group.

"Last year, we blew people out of the water," Chassy said. "The East Coast keeps getting better and better, but so do we. Once we start clicking, look out."

Let the naysayers be seated

MATTHEW F. SACCO

I know that it is an old and overused saying but, "that's why they play the game."

I know the Western Conference has more good forwards than the Eastern Conference has good players but, "that's why they play the game."

I know that the West has won over sixty percent of its games against the East but, "that's why they play the game."

I know that every sportswriter, sportscaster, sports junkie and sports guru from here to Timbuktu said that the West would hand the East a beating rivaled only by the lashing they would receive in the finals but, "that's why they play the game."

Any logical person would have looked at this year's National Basketball Association All-Star game and thought that the East would have no chance to win.

First of all, the Eastern Conference has exactly zero centers to back up Dikembe Mutombo, while the West could roll out an entire starting five of seven footers.

Second, due to the depleted talent in the East, big buddies such as Anthony Mason and Antonio Davis were almost forced into action. In the West however, there wasn't enough room on the roster for 23 point a game man Dirk Nowitzki and top five scorer Antawn Iamison.

Finally, the West's most distinct advantage came in one very important category: talent.

Despite all the obstacles and doubters placed in front of the Eastern squad, the Atlantic Coast boys banded together like no All-Star team ever has.

The famed East Coast point guards – i.e. Allen Iverson and Stephon Marbury – led the way, while Mutombo was a mountain on the glass.

Down 19 points entering the final quarter of play, it seemed that the West would run right all along. But Vince Carter and company did not give up.

Iverson led a rousing comeback, scoring 13 of his 25 points in the last frame en route to the Most Valuable Player award.

The most exciting moments of the game were undoubtedly the last as Kobe Bryant traded baskets with Marbury before the Net netted a trey to give the East a one point lead with under ten seconds to play.

Bryant had a chance for the win, but he dished the ball to seven-footer Tim Duncan who was swatted by the hightlying Carter. Chris Webber's follow rolled out, as the Eastern bench emptied and the entire squad joined in celebrating the most intense All-Star contest of the last ten years.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

DAN SANTELLA COLLEGIAN

Huddle Up

The men's hoop team will try to get back on the winning track when they host A-10 power Xavier tomorrow night at the Mullins Center.

Minutewomen gymnasts fall at UNH

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

A high score for the season wasn't enough for the Massachusetts women's gymnastics team to top UNH on Saturday. The Minutewomen scored a season high of 192.325, shy by less than two points of the Huskies in the defeat.

UMass traveled to Durham on Saturday with giving its all in mind, and it did just that. The Maroon and White recorded its best finishes in three of the four events. A score of 48.625 on the uneven bars, 48.325 on the balance beam and 48.400 on the floor exercise were good enough to put down in the record books for the 2001 campaign.

Sophomore Katie Teft posted strong points for UMass for another great all-around performance. Teft tallied a first place finish on the uneven bars at 9.875, a second place finish on the balance beam with a score of 9.800 and a third-best on the vault with a 9.575. Still being watered down after an ankle sprain last month, Teft is expected soon to be a strong competitor for the all-around.

Teft's second place finish on the balance beam was just short of fellow Minutewoman Mary Moore's 9.825. Moore, a senior veteran for UMass, has been a consistent athlete this season and for the last three that she has spent in Boyden Gymnasium.

"She's steady as a rock. We can always count on Mary," Assistant Coach May May Leung said.

Jen Gendron also had a terrific day with a second place performance on the floor exercise and a third place finish in the all around. Gendron's final score for Saturday was 38.050.

Freshman Mellory Giberson and sophomore Kelly Hanson had a tie for fifth place on the uneven bars scoring 9.725. Giberson has shown strength in the three events that she now competes in and is expected to be an all-around gymnast for the latter half of the season.

"We're absolutely thrilled with how the girls performed. We still can get stronger, though," Leung said.

The Minutewomen are looking to get stronger over the next few weeks as they face top competitors from all over the United States. This Saturday UMass will play host to M.I.T., Yale and Alaska-Anchorage. Yale, one of its fiercest competitors, will also challenge the Maroon and White gymnasts in the early part of the spring.

The weeks ahead will be a tough road to hoe, as next week the Maroon and White travel to State College to face off against some of the best gymnasts in the country at Penn State.

The quad meet against M.I.T., Yale and Alaska-Anchorage will take place on Saturday at 4 p.m. inside Boyden Gymnasium.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kelly Hanson and the women's gymnastics team put forth a strong effort, but fell to UNH this weekend.

THERE WILL BE A MANDATORY SPORTS MEETING THURSDAY NIGHT IN THE NEWSROOM AT 7:30

Track readying for A-10s

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

With the Atlantic 10 Championships looming around the corner, the Massachusetts men's indoor track team made yet another trek down I-90 to Beantown last weekend for its final preparation before the conference championships.

The Maroon and White's third trip to Boston on the campaign allowed them to participate in the Valentine Classic at Boston University against well-known foes such as Rhode Island, Brown, Holy Cross and the host Terriers. While the Minutemen did not capture first place in any events on the afternoon, familiar faces on the team were abound as several athletes continued to shine.

Freshman Jeff Jason continued to perform well in the shotput, finishing strongly yet again as he took third place with a toss of over 52 feet. Teammate Eric Uliano nabbed a sixth place finish with a throw of just over 50 feet. Head coach Ken O'Brien has been pleasantly surprised with Jason's steady performance throughout the year.

"Jeff certainly seems to be performing beyond our expectations, because as a freshman you don't know how long he'll take to make the adjustment [to college]," O'Brien said.

In other action, senior Brendan Sullivan took fourth in the 5000 meter run, clocking in with an impressive time of 4:57. The only other top ten finish the Minutemen grabbed was Hugh Reid's sixth place in the 500 meter dash with a time of just over 1:05.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jeff Jason

With the Atlantic 10 Conference meet coming up this Saturday in Kingston, R.I. on the campus of URI, O'Brien hopes to come away with another solid performance by his squad after last year's second-place finish.

"We've usually been fighting for third or fourth place, and we've been lucky to maintain that kind of level on a yearly basis," he commented.

So far, the team has had its ups and downs since the season began in December. O'Brien described the winter's campaign as a "roller-coaster ride" because of all the injuries the team has suffered and the many young and inexperienced athletes the Minutemen had.

"The [beginning of] the season really faced me with concern, because I felt we didn't have a lot of room for error," he said.

But O'Brien cited several athletes, especially upperclassmen Reid and Marc Sylvander as two of the steadiest performers. He believes that the mix of both veteran and young athletes will help the Maroon and White toward a successful afternoon on Saturday.

"We've got some promise and a good bunch of veterans and underclassmen to really go somewhere this weekend," O'Brien said.

The Minutemen should expect to do just that if they continue to build on their quality outings so far.

UMass wins hearts in Boston

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

With Valentine's Day approaching, there is an undeniable feeling of love and bliss in the air. However, the Massachusetts women's indoor track team exchanged no such pleasantries with the participants in the St. Valentine Classic held over the weekend at Boston University.

The Minutewomen had a solid all-around performance, as three UMass runners had top ten finishes.

Pennsylvania native Megan McCormick placed fourth in the 1000 meter run. The senior finished the race in a time of 3:00.36.

Junior Rhianna DaCruz notched a fifth place finish in the pole vault competition. DaCruz, who hails from Rhode Island, had a top height of 10'6.25".

Chrystal Murphy, a senior from Trenton, N.J., finished the 55 meter high hurdles in a time of 8.59 seconds, good enough for a sixth place finish. The Minutewomen also managed a fifth place finish in the distance medley.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Megan McCormick

The UMass women's indoor track team will be in action again when they compete in the Atlantic 10 championships next weekend.

The championship meet will be held in Kingston, R.I. and hosted by the URI. The Minutewomen will begin competition at 3:00 p.m. on Feb. 17.

The last time the Maroon and White was in Kingston, it was for the URI Invitational, a competition in which they finished fourth of eight teams.

Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, one of the three teams ahead of UMass was Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island.

The Rams will represent some of the stiffer competition that the Maroon and White will face at the championships. If UMass hopes to be successful, then its performance will have to be better than that of its finish at the URI Invitational.

TOMORROW

2001 Campus-Wide Career Fair

It's time for the Annual Campus-Wide Career Fair!

Wednesday, February 14, 2001
Campus Center Auditorium
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Full Time Opportunities for Undergraduates and Graduate Students

All Majors Welcome

Bring Your Resume on Diskette to Register Online at the Fair.

Presented by the Campus Career Network

for more information call 545-2224
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Apartment at Cliffside. In Sunderland for sublet thru May. $600 reduced from $720 Call 549-6408

1 Month Free! Sunny 2 bdrm apartment Shutesbury. $790 rent/heat/electricity 1/2 quiet tenants. 15 minutes to Umass 259-1245

AUTO FOR SALE

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained. $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition. $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

90 Geo Prizm automatic, new radiatcr, new axels, great condition. Well maintained. 132,000miles asking $2790 582-0239

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

CHILDCARE

Babysitter with references and own car. Needed for evenings. 256-3756

8-10hrs per week for 5 & 9 yr old. Must have experience, references & car. Jamie 549-7788

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

PCA for Male Quad. Mon-Fri. morning $10-$12 perhr. 546-0666

WATNED: Native Speakers of American English for listening experiments $8/hr ph545-6837

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

Single Dad and business owner too busy to do everything. I need help! Shopping, light cleaning, errands, bills, etc. Compensation negotiable. Very part-time, flexible schedule. Need to have car. Phone # 413-253-4642 ask for James

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life

5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

Human Services Exciting Opportunities

The Consortium is an agency that supports people with disabilities through education advocacy and services. Program Coordinator needed to direct and oversee services provided to up to six people with various learning challenges. Supervisory experience, flexibility, and optimistic attidtude, sense of humor, relible transportation and driver's license required. Excellent benefits. Combination of day time and evening hours. $12/hr starting salary. Send resume to Janice Harris at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 AA/EOE.

Full-time/part-time - Looking to have fun earning extra income with a flexible work schedule? Spend time with people in a supportive atmosphere. Call Lori-Ann Bruyett at (413) 536-2401 to set up a phone interview. AA/EOE

EMPLOYMENT

More Than Just Summer Employment Independent Lake Camp

Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Volleyball, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theatre, Dance, Video, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Skateboarding, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Ropes Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and More.

Call 1-800-399-CAMP ask for Dan or Nigel. www.independentlake.com

French & or German Speaking cadidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or email dcu@remi.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161 Call 253-2378

Speakers: 12" woofers, 5" liquid cooled midrange, horn tweeters, 125watt powerful, only has about 20 hours of play time. Call Rory 253-3434 $299/pr

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CANMIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Long distance relationsips CAN WORK! Find out how at www.sblake.com

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Near UMass. Quiet setting. No smoking vegetarian kitchen. Car needed. $325+ 549-4853

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female Wanted ASAP 1 room open in 4 room apartment in Hadley on bus route. $295 a month 582-9164

Female Seeking roommate for Amherst apt. Cheap rent. Call 256-6244

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TICKETS FOR SALE

One Barenaket Ladies Floor Seat Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TRAVEL

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@gofliptrips.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break! Last Minute Deals! Cancun, Bahamas, Florida, Jamaica & Mazatlan. Join MTV and Baywatch for Spring Break! Call for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

What are you waiting for??

The RIGHT time is NOW!!

Call 545-3500

Advertise Today!

Your AD Could Be RIGHT Here!!!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 • HSCN Bulletin Board
3 • CBS 3 Hartford
4 • CBS 4 Boston
5 • ABC40 Springfield
6 • PBS 57 Springfield
7 • HSCN Movie Channel
8 • UPN 20 Hartford
9 • HSCN New Movie Channel
10 • NBC 30 New Britain
11 • Fox 61 Hartford
12 • PBS 24 Hartford
13 • NBC 22 Springfield
14 • International Channel
15 • UMASS Academic Channel
16 • Ch 16 New Haven
17 • ESPN
18 • ESPN2
19 • UPC TV (Weather Channel)
20 • Weather Channel (Digital)
21 • Cable in Class
22 • C-Span
23 • CNN
24 • CNN Headline News
25 • Lifetime
26 • USA
27 • TBS
28 • TNT
29 • A&E
30 • Sci-Fi
31 • Discovery
32 • Nggeo
33 • Cartoon Network
34 • Nick at Nite
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BET
38 • Univision
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • College TV Network
41 • MTV
42 • MTV2
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING C - Campus FEBRUARY 13, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Secrets of the Pharaohs		Nova "Lost King of the Maya"		Frontline "Hackers" (In Stereo)		Enemies of War (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Killer Instinct" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Killer Instinct" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Mole (N) (In Stereo)		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	NYPD Blue "Writing Wrongs"		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Bully the Vampire Slayer		Angel "The Thin Dead Line"		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Jim Calhoun	College Basketball	Boston College at Connecticut. (Live)		Post Game		News	Arrest & Trial	College Basketball
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Titus (N)	Dark Angel "Rising" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Secrets of the Pharaohs		Nova "Lost King of the Maya"		Frontline "Hackers" (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Mole (N) (In Stereo)		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	NYPD Blue "Writing Wrongs"		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	College Basketball	Boston College at Connecticut. (Live)		Frasier		"Now Stella Got Her Groove Back" (1998)		Angela Bassett.
WTBS	46	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: Sacramento Kings at Utah Jazz. (Live)				Inside NBA		"Mourning Overdrive" (1996)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Candice Bergen		City Confidential		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Cradle to Grave"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Bretljuice" (1988, Comedy) Michael Keaton, Geena Davis.				Battlebots	Battlebots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	20	Wild Discovery: Snakes		Wild Discovery: Snakes		Prosecutors-Justice		New Detectives "To Kill Again"		FBI Files "Terror in Disguise"		Justice Files "Young Killers"
ESPN	50	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Florida at Louisiana State. (Live)				College Basketball: Wisconsin at Illinois. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Star" (1993, Drama) Jennie Garth, Tori Wass.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Grammy Uncensored		Making Show	NSYNC Tour.	NSYNC	Real World	Real World	Real World	Making-Video	Undressed	Say What Kne
NICK	52	Pinky & Brain	Cestog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	60	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Learning Curve"		"Babylon 5: Thirdspace" (1998, Science Fiction) Bruce Boxleitner.				Outer Limits "Virtual Future"		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	28	Critical Incident: Hot Calls		48 Hours "Road Rage"		Trauma: Life in the ER		Science of Sex: Why is		Mysteries of Melting (N)		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	45	ER "9 1/2 Hours" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Keys" (In Stereo)		Figure Skating: Japan Open -- Short Program. (In Stereo)				"Forever Young" (1992, Fantasy) Mel Gibson.
USA	62	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Bimbisim" (In Stereo)		Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show: "Closing Night" (Live)						Martin	Martin
HBO	33	"My Blue Heaven" (1990, Comedy) Steve Martin. PG-13				Do You Believe in Miracles?		"What Planet Are You From?" (2000) Garry Shandling. R				Oz "Orpheus Descending"
MAX	35	"Star Trek: Generations" (1994) Patrick Stewart. PG				"Decoy" (1995, Drama) Peter Weller. (In Stereo)				"State of Grace" (1990, Drama) Sean Penn, Ed Harris.
SHOW	34	"For Keeps" (1988, Drama) Molly Ringwald. PG-13				"Stigmata" (1999, Horror) Patricia Arquette. (In Stereo)				Beggars and Choosers		Queer as Folk

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I ASKED FOR MORE E-MAIL STORAGE SPACE AND YOU DELETED ALL OF MY FILES!
YOU COMPLAIN WHEN I IGNORE YOUR REQUESTS AND YOU COMPLAIN WHEN I DELETE YOUR FILES.
THOSE AREN'T YOUR ONLY CHOICES!!
I CAN'T PLEASE EVERYONE.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

HEY... ISN'T THAT YOUR HUSBAND?
YUP. ON HIS WAY INTO THE WHITE HOUSE
GET OUT!
BUSH INVITED THE ENTIRE CONGRESSIONAL BLACK MEMBER SHIP...!
IT'S PART OF HIS ONGOING EFFORT TO HELP THEM GET OVER THE STOLEN ELECTION.
AND I LIKE MAKING BATTERS! SHE'S A GOOD MAN!
THANKS MR. PRESIDENT.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I THINK HE TRIED TO MEDITATE.
THAT'S THE PROBLEM.
YOU SHOULDN'T MIX MEDITATION WITH MANAGEMENT. THE MIND GETS TOO EMPTY.
WHAT CAN WE DO?
I PLAN TO RIFLE THROUGH HIS POCKETS.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

JASON, I ASKED YOU TO CLEAN YOUR ROOM!
I WILL, MOM. I PROMISE.
JUST LET ME BLOW UP THE ALIEN SPACE CUBE FIRST.
NICE TRY, DONKEYBAT-4M DOESN'T HAVE ALIEN SPACE CUBES.
I TOLD YOU I SAW HER FLIPPING THROUGH YOUR MANUALS LAST WEEK.
I NEED TO START HIDING THOSE THINGS BETTER.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WELL, BUCK, FIRE UP YOUR NEW CAN OPENER AND LET'S POP SOME CANS!
YOU CAN'T JUST USE THE CAN OPENER. YOU HAVE TO GIVE PRAISE TO THE CAN OPENER
YOU MAKE IT SOUND LIKE THAT ELECTRIC CAN OPENER IS YOUR "RELIGION," BUCKY.
IT'S MORE OF A "CULT," REALLY.
THANK YOU, O CAN OPENER, FOR THIS CAN WHICH YOU ARE ABOUT TO OPEN. YOU ARE TRULY A BEAUTIFUL CAN OPENER, AND THOUGH I AM NOT WORTHY OF YOU, I LOVE YOU.

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take the initiative today. Seek to work with those who have more in common with you. A promotion of sorts is in the future.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may be fascinated by the behavior of someone who is so different from you that a new frontier may well open up to you today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You will be expected to answer for any ill-gotten gains, make no mistake about it. Today, attempts at deception will surely backfire.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – A surprise is in store before this day is out, and by the time the next day dawns, you will have learned an important lesson as a result.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Personal power is on the rise, but you must take care that you don't begin abusing it simply because you can see big gains in your future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Someone you meet may challenge your point of view in a way which demands that you reconsider your position. You may actually agree in the end!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – The ordinary is likely to take on extraordinary significance before the day is out – and after dark you'll be feeling the influence of others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – This is a good day to make even those suggestions that others might find risky or threatening. It is safe to go out on a limb today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – What others are thinking, saying and doing today is far less important than anything you may have to offer at this time. Personal power is high.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – What you see may well be what you get today, despite any expectations to the contrary. What you've heard may not always hold true today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – As the day wears on, you will discover more and more about yourself in certain difficult situations. Tomorrow you can apply some important lessons.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jean. 19) – Someone who is trying to intimidate you will find that you are not to be trifled with today! Remember, it is easier than you think to stand firm!

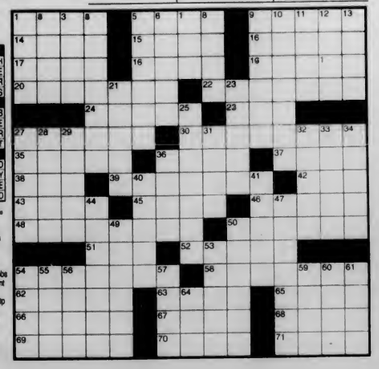
ACROSS
1 "The Georgia Peach"
5 Prince of India
9 Zigzag through traffic
14 Manchurian border river
15 Physical, e.g.
16 Take a break
17 Recital piece
18 Thin coin
19 Ms. Cara
20 Philip Morris product
22 Spots
24 Broadway offering
26 Honey maker
27 Ended an argument
30 Cutting tool
35 Scare
36 North Carolina county
37 Tense
38 XX minus VI
39 Hardest to eat, as fish
42 Knight's title
43 Wading bird
45 Off-course
46 Sports palace
48 Halfway
50 Excessively prim
51 Conquistador's gold
52 Photo session
54 Parsley, e.g.
58 Sea inlet
62 Campaigner's concern
63 Eye amorously
65 On a cruise
66 Prop for Judge Judy
67 Cast a sidelong glance
68 Claim on property
69 Outbuildings
70 Liars
71 Polio vaccine inventor

DOWN
1 Acting group
2 Melville work
3 Daffodil starter
4 More liberal
5 Baggage carrier
6 Principle
7 Traffic problem
8 Sermon end
9 Jots down
10 Spookiest
11 Actor Baldwin
12 Wind-direction indicator
13 Former mates
21 Cookie piece
23 Theater awards
25 Helps out

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

K	I	T	S		A	B	A	S		A	P	I	N
A	B	U	T		S	L	I	M		S	A	R	A	H
Y	E	T	I		P	E	R	U		S	L	A	V	E
E	X	U	R	B	I	A		G	L	I	T	T	E	R
		R	I	C	K		E	G	R	E	S	S
A	U	D	I	T	S		T	E	E	N	Y
G	R	I	N	S		F	E	A	R	S		M	O	B
A	G	O	O		T	A	S	T	Y		M	A	L	E
R	E	N		C	O	S	T	S		N	I	C	E	R
		P	O	R	T	S		H	O	N	E	S	T
B	R	O	I	L	S		O	U	S	T
Y	U	L	E		L	O	G		C	R	E	A	K	E	D
E	R		C	A		A	F	A	R		G	A	R	Y
S	A	V	E	R		G	A	L	A		E	L	L	E
	L	E	S	S		S	T	A	Y		S	E	E	D

12-20-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

SCIENTISTS NEVER MEANT FOR ANYONE TO TEST A REAL CAT--OR SQUIRREL--IN A BOX TO PROVE THAT QUANTUM STATES ARE UNPREDICTABLE UNTIL OBSERVED!
SAMMY COULD BE ALIVE
HE COULD BE DEAD.
THE ONLY THING WE KNOW FOR SURE IS...
OOOOKLA-HOMA...
WHERE THE HECK DOES AUSTIN PASS MY KNEES...
HE'S IN THE BOX.
TOO MUCH KNOWLEDGE CAN BE A DANGEROUS THING.
SOMETIMES YOU MAKE SO MUCH SENSE, IT'S SCARY.
WHERE THE HONEY DOES BARN, NO YELLOW SNOW...

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

HEY EVERYONE! I JUST WANTED TO TELL YOU THAT I'M DOING MY THESIS SENESTER SO...
HE'LL BE SLACKING OFF WITH THE COMIC!
WHAT THE--?!
LIKE I SAID, I'M DOING MY THESIS SO YOU MAY SEE LESS OF SPUNK! I'M GOING TO TRY MY BEST!
I TALK ABOUT YOUR COMPLEX!

Quote of the Day

"Give me something. I'll take nothing"

–Badly Drawn Boy

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 39 LOW: 19	HIGH: 42 LOW: 34	HIGH: 46 LOW: 29

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Shepherd's Pie (B, F, W)

Falafel Burger (vegan)

Tofu Pot Pie (vegan) (B, H, W)

Duchess Meat Pie (H)

DINNER

Steak/ Au Jus

Broccoli Stuffed Chicken

Stuffed Zucchini (vegetarian)

Grilled Portabella Steak Mushrooms (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Adam Mortignetti
Photo Technician: Maureen Maske
Copy Editor: David Troupes
Production Supervisor: Jess Grant
Production Staff: Chris Navarro, John Dicker, Alan Basque

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, February 13, 2001 | 12

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Raising Arizona: UMass takes three of five

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

Fiesta!

Traveling out west in early February has been problematic for the Massachusetts softball squad in the six years since making the Fiesta Bowl Tournament in Phoenix, AZ, the annual opening to their season. The slump continued last year as the Maroon and White were swept through the tournament; losing all five games to some very tough competition is a tough way to start a season.

Not this time.

Behind solid pitching from senior ace Carrie Jeffries (2-0) and sophomore Kaila Holtz, and clutch hitting, the Minutewomen won three out of five games in the three-day tournament, the best they have ever finished in the tourney.

"[Jeffries] had been working really hard on her drop and it was great for her this weekend. She was awesome all weekend," freshman catcher Jamie Cahalan said.

Missouri 5, UMass 1

The first game against Missouri would set the tone for UMass. When junior Jen Hadley was on the mound, the Minutewomen would have trouble crossing the plate.

The Maroon and White punched out nine hits, but were unable to string them together enough to produce more than a single run, which was knocked in by junior Cherra Wheeler. Holtz added a 2-for-4 performance, but UMass fell to the Lady Tigers 5-1. Hadley was charged with the loss after giving up nine hits in going the distance.

"Unfortunately, we just couldn't produce any runs for Jen all weekend," Cahalan said.

UMass 6, Nevada-Las Vegas 0

UMass rebounded nicely in the second game of the tournament, beating up on UNLV 6-0. The Running Rebels proved no match for Jeffries. The hurler went the full seven innings, scattering six hits and striking out six. The Minutewoman offense finally came to life as it put up four runs in the third inning, finally giving their pitcher some room to breathe.

Sophomore Emily Robustelli paced the offense with a 3-for-5 performance, including a two-bagger and a run scored. Junior Ashley Bakken and sophomore Brandi Cross bolstered the Minutewoman offense, contributing two RBI's each.

UMass 1, Oregon 0

Two top twenty teams were set to challenge the Minutewomen on Saturday. The Maroon and White began the day by taking the diamond against No. 20 Oregon and sent Holtz to the mound knowing she would need a solid performance against a very tough Lady Duck team. They could not have realized exactly how clutch Holtz would be.

The hurler pitched seven full innings, fanning six and scattering eight hits. With no room for any mistakes, the sophomore held off the Oregon squad for five innings until freshman Cahalan came up in the bottom of the fifth and single handedly gave UMass the victory with her first hit at the collegiate level - a home run.

"I had popped up all weekend and I thought I had simply popped up to second," Cahalan said. "Then I heard everyone cheering and realized that it cleared the fence."

Cahalan's game winner was one of only two hits the Minutewomen managed against some very good Lady Duck pitching.

Finally receiving some run support, Holtz managed to complete the game and the shutout, truly earning her first victory of the season and giving UMass its first big win of the 2001 campaign.

"That was a big win for us, especially against a PAC-10 team," Cahalan said.

LSU 9, UMass 0

After winning an emotional game to start the day, UMass had trouble maintaining the momentum through the next game against annual power LSU. The No. 8 Lady Tigers took it to the Maroon and White and handed it a very tough 9-0 loss.

"I think we came out kind of flat all day Saturday. LSU was the better team that day, but they were definitely nowhere near nine runs better than us," Cahalan said.

Junior Terri Rooney smacked a one-out double in the top of the first, but was left stranded on second. The Minutewoman offense stalled from there, as they only managed two more hits against a tough duo of LSU hurlers.

Hadley struck out seven, but suffered from another unsupportive performance by the UMass offense, and was charged with her second defeat in as many days.

UMass 7, Georgia 3

At an even 2-2 on the weekend, the Maroon and White desperately wanted a victory in its final game on Sunday Morning against Georgia. UMass' sputtering offense finally shifted into full gear on Sunday as the Minutewomen got a base hit from each of their starters in the 7-3 victory over the Lady Bulldogs.

Robustelli led the UMass offense, hitting her first home run of the year, a two run shot in the bottom of the fourth, to give the Minutewomen a 3-0 lead. The bottom of the fifth inning saw the Maroon and White tally three more runs as it sent nine batters to the plate with five punching out singles.

Senior Debbie Tomoguchi helped the offense with a 2-for-3 performance. She was the only Massachusetts player to record more than one hit.

Jeffries, continuing her dominance from the last time out, picked up her second victory in three days by owning the mound for six and two-thirds innings. The hurler struck out seven and scattered nine hits. Holtz came on in relief and struck out the final two batters in the seventh to close out the game and earn her first save of the season.

"Georgia was a good win for us. We were able to put some runs up on the board to help [Jeffries] and pick up some more confidence in our offense," Cahalan said.

The Minutewomen could not help but look at the opening weekend as a huge success. They improved as the weekend went on and defeated a Top 20 team on the way to posting their best record ever in the Fiesta Bowl Tournament, all good signs of a team on their way to a positive 2001 campaign.

"Our goal was to come out with a winning record, so we are pretty happy," Cahalan added.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Debbie Tomoguchi had two hits for the Minutewomen in their 7-3 win over the Lady Bulldogs on Sunday.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Cherra Wheeler pitched in to the UMass effort, knocking in a run via a single in UMass' 7-3 win over Georgia.

Tennis teams struggle in separate events

Minutewomen trounced by Bulldogs at New Haven

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

After finishing the fall season with a stellar 6-1 record in dual match play, the Massachusetts women's tennis team was eager to get back onto the hardcourts on the way toward its goal of an Atlantic 10 crown. With an opening match against non-conference foe Yale, the Maroon and White hoped to get back on the right track.

Unfortunately, the Lady Bulldogs proved to be too big of a roadblock as the Minutewomen were outgunned and overmatched on their way to a 7-0 loss. In fact, freshman sensation Francesca Mancini was the only player even to take her opponent to three sets.

"We were really outplayed today, and you can't play a solid tennis team like Yale without doing all of the necessary things to win," head coach Judy Dixon said.

Dixon said that the Minutewomen had several chances to pick up a point on the afternoon, especially the doubles point, but couldn't capitalize on opportunities, including a match point at the No. 1 doubles position.

"We just didn't have a good outing; we've never been successful against them, but I thought we'd be ready to go today," she said.

A sound defeat such as the one the Minutewomen endured could be justified in a variety of ways, but Dixon cited several reasons for her team's performance.

"Our success during the fall came from keeping our mind- focused, but today a lot of things disturbed us. We let line calls bother us, we let the umpire bother us," Dixon said.

While Yale is certainly a formidable team, the loss is especially surprising considering the strong fashion in which the Maroon and White finished up the fall campaign. Mancini dominated her competition last semester, finishing with a 12-1 record in singles. Teammates Jafra Depontes and Helena Horak also played extremely well during the fall campaign, both finishing with 6-1 records in singles play.

The Minutewomen hope to rebound from this loss and make all of the hard work they put in during the off-season worth its while. The team hit the weight room hard after finishing up in November, and during winter break the players took to the courts to get back into playing shape.

With several key matches coming up against non-conference opponents before starting the key Atlantic 10 schedule, Dixon thinks that right now is gut-check time. She doesn't want the younger players to think that just because they have talent, they won't have to invest time and hard work to win.

"With the talent we have, we're looking to take the program to the next level and sustain a sectional ranking," said Dixon. She also feels that the team has the potential to get into the tournament as the No. 2 or No. 3 seed and possibly overtake Atlantic 10 favorite Temple.

"I really feel them the riot act after the match today. The team has to regroup. This upcoming weekend [at the Cornell Invitational] will show us if we will live up to expectations, or if we just have talent and won't live up to them."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts women's tennis team had a rough time on their trip to New Haven yesterday, falling 7-0 to Yale.

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's tennis squad made their mark in Ithaca, NY this weekend with a strong showing at the Cornell Invitational. This pre-season tournament provided a much-needed warm-up for the Minutemen, who will face some serious competition in the Atlantic 10 this spring.

Though freshman Brent Davis was the lone member of the team to advance to third round action (6-3, 4-6, 7-5 in flight A, the majority of the players had a very strong showing in this tournament, which included conference rival St. Bonaventure.

Senior Bill Greener, playing in flight C, persevered after losing a match to advance to the second round. Junior Todd Champeau and freshman Phil Rodrigues enjoyed similar success as they breezed past their competition into round two.

Doubles play included the victorious tandem of Steve Prisco and Davis, which advanced to Saturday action in flight A. Champeau and Will Shaw as well as Rodrigues and Greener also moved on to the next day of play.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, No. 1 player Steve Prisco, who has been struggling with a bad shoulder, was defeated early in the first round on Friday. Another concern for the team is the unknown status of No. 3 Aron Gortman, who unexpectedly did not play in the invitational due to back spasms.

"Steve has been going through physical therapy and he didn't serve at all last week," assistant coach Scott Wilkins said. "Since he's a serve and volley player, that affected him in the tournament. As for Aron, we won't know his status until tomorrow. We're being very cautious with both players right now."

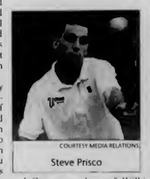
After a strong win against St. Bonvaenture's, No. 1 Villi Nurmi, Davis lost in the Saturday quarterfinals to Cornell's top player Greg Artet 6-0, 6-2. Champeau, Greener and Rodrigues failed to advance to the quarterfinals after moving on to the second round in their respective flights.

"Overall it was a good showing. The main reason we played was to get ready for conference play. The best win that we had was definitely from Brent," Wilkins said.

The next battle for the Maroon and White takes place Feb. 18 at 12:30 p.m. as they host Colgate at Hampshire College. The Red Raiders play a solid brand of tennis that could give the UMass squad trouble if they are not one hundred percent healthy come game time.

"The most important thing is our health. If we don't have Aron, that's going to hinder us," Wilkins said. "Colgate is very similar to us. Even though we are a deep team, we need everyone to be one hundred percent. If that happens, then we have a good shot."

"In practice you're more relaxed, and then you tighten up in matches. We need to simulate that before the matches start," said Champeau. "We definitely have the talent. They don't have any huge stars, but their number one is as good as their number six. Everyone's going to have a tough match."



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Steve Prisco

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Music and acting centering on the darker side of love: It's time for a trip to the opera with Collegian Arts.

ARTS p. 8

Last night, Temple became the latest team to fall to A-10 upstart St. Joe's. That makes tonight's game between UMass and Xavier VITAL for the Minutemen.

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 81 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, February 14, 2001

ALANA debate shakes up SGA

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Yells and curses filled the hallway surrounding the office of the Student Government Association (SGA) last night after a controversial motion passed to move a referendum question involving the future of ALANA (African American, Latino, Asian American, and Native American) seats in the SGA Senate.

The decision was apparently made based on the ALANA caucus' proclamation that it was not properly notified about the question being on the ballot, thereby inhibiting the amount of time it would have to prepare for campaigning.

The meeting barely made the quorum requirement of six voting members, and when the actual voting took place, there were three affirmative votes to move the question and three abstentions. This forced Chancellor of Elections Sam Blasiak to cast the deciding vote, which he cast in favor of the motion.

"I knew that we needed more time, and it came down to the fact that it's not going to hurt anything," said ALANA representative Steven Clunin. "Plus it was against the agreement that we made out before."

The agreement that Clunin mentioned was an apparent verbal agreement made last year between the ALANA caucus and the SGA senate that the question about ALANA seats would be on the Spring 2001 election for President and Trustee.

Some people involved with the issue strongly questioned when that agreement was actually put into place.

"I think that agreement was made very recently," said former SGA Senator Jeffrey Bazydlo. "This smells of crookedness throughout."

Bazydlo declared an utter aggravation with much of the SGA last night as well. "Tonight was very frustrating," he said.

Bazydlo's annoyance came to a head when he left the meeting before its termination, later claiming that he "needed some fresh air." He returned to the meeting and accused favoritism of being the motive behind the decision.

"I want the commission to know that I'm disappointed," he said. "This commission voted to give the Greeks just one day to know about the allotted seats, but when it comes to this referendum you have no problem pushing this off one day, week or a month. I hope that you're proud of yourselves and your decision tonight."

Bazydlo said that he had been dropping several hints at the meeting all night that the ALANA caucus was being manipulative and subtlety threatening. He also claimed that last night's decision was quite hypocritical.

"This commission that just decided to give [ALANA] an extra month to prepare is in direct conflict to what they did to the Greeks," he said. "And it's upsetting because certain organizations can get people to say 'how high' when they ask them to jump, and other organizations are clearly ignored."

Ed Cutting, a former SGA Senator and a University graduate student, walked into the hallway and screamed into the SGA office. "Remember what the Dred Scott decision did, and don't forget it." He then returned to the Republican Club's office, slamming the door.

The Dred Scott decision he referred to was from 1857, when Scott, a slave from the south fled to St. Louis. His southern slave owner tracked him down, and courts forced Scott to return to slavery in the South.

The remark prompted Steven Clunin to respond loudly with, "When are you guys going to grow up for once and act like real men instead of hiding behind your [expletive] door."

Cutting later explained that he was "disgusted" and thought that SGA Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez was, "admittedly making stuff up as he goes." Cutting also referred to Tavarez as a "dictator" and claimed he was "mad with power and doing whatever he wants." He also said that Taverez and Student Trustee Seth Avakian have been, "harassing [Speaker of the Senate Jim Eltringham] since September," as well as "threatening to throw him out of school." Cutting suggested that both men should be brought up for violating the code of student conduct.

Cutting also accused the ALANA community of "breeding racism."

"They are not representing the students of color, and not representing the students of any kind," he said. "I consider myself an ALANA person, and I want nothing to do with those folks."

He accused them of "Destroying the cohesiveness that Martin Luther King Jr. died for."

"The more I think about this whole situation, the more screwed up it is," Eltringham said. "Some campus leaders aren't being campus leaders. It's probably a better thing for the elections commission that [the question] was kicked off the ballot."

Eltringham said he differentiates between the ALANA community as a whole and the more vocal members of ALANA. He said that he was really disappointed that the ALANA leaders found out about the question being on the ballot through a previously printed Collegian article.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

ALANA representative Jeff Belizaire patiently awaits a decision at last night's SGA meeting. The ruling resulted in a furry of outrage and verbal altercations by some SGA members and UMass students.

Clunin admitted that he brought the issue about the questions to the SGA today because of an article in Tuesday's paper about a meeting held on Monday night.

Bazydlo also commented on this, claiming that he was sure a memo was sent out weeks ago, and wondered if people were paying attention to important matters.

Jeff Belizaire, an ALANA representative, said that he felt that the ruling was very appropriate. "I think it was in the best interest of the general UMass community."

Kristen Shrewsbury contributed to this article

Cellucci picked as int'l liason

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

President George W. Bush nominated Massachusetts Governor Paul Cellucci for the position Ambassador to Canada yesterday.

"Paul Cellucci is a friend and confidant and I'm confident that he will do a good job as ambassador [to Canada]," Bush said in a statement yesterday.

Cellucci backed Bush early on in his presidential campaign, and although Democratic candidate Al Gore scored an overwhelming victory in Massachusetts, Cellucci was instrumental in raising campaign funds and rallying support for Bush among other governors.

Cellucci first encountered with George W. Bush while working for his father on his 1992 Presidential campaign. Their relationship was further cultivated during several national governors conferences in the past three years.

Cellucci brings considerable experience in dealing with the Canadian government to the post, as he has worked extensively with the Canadian consulate in Boston as Governor.

"The Canadians are happy about it because they wanted someone who knows something about Canada and has the ear of the President," according to George Sulzner, Professor of Political Science at the University of Massachusetts.

Bush cited Cellucci's experience in dealing with Canadian government leaders, negotiating issues such as energy, fishing and trade, which amounts to over $1 billion a year between the U.S. and Canada.

Cellucci now faces confirmation hearings in the U.S. Senate, which must approve his nomination before he can assume the post of ambassador. Cellucci expressed confidence in his ability to answer difficult questions that may be posed by Senators during confirmation hearings while in Washington yesterday.

"Having run for Governor in 1998 everyone in front of me made sure I was subject to intense scrutiny. I'm used to answering tough questions," Cellucci told reporters.

Cellucci's nomination elevates Lieutenant Governor Jane Swift to the position of acting governor until next year's governor's race.

"I've got great confidence in Lieutenant Governor Jane Swift, I wouldn't have chosen her to be lieutenant governor if I didn't have confidence in her, and nothing that she has done in the past two years has undermined that confidence," Cellucci said.

Many political pundits have suggested that Cellucci was politically vulnerable and opted for an ambassadorship to avoid defeat next year. Cellucci insisted after over 20 years in Massachusetts' politics he felt it was time to move on.

"[Cellucci] was a little vulnerable after a bad year last year due to the big dig and other scandals but I think he did okay this year with his promotion of the income tax cut referendum that passed," Sulzner said. "I believe he was probably tired of it, it's difficult to be a Republican governor of Massachusetts."

Cellucci is the second consecutive governor of Massachusetts to leave his position after an ambassadorial nomination. Cellucci assumed the office after Governor William Weld's nomination to be ambassador to Mexico by President Clinton in 1997. Weld's nomination was held up by Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Jesse Helms R-N.C. The Senate is expected to approve Cellucci's nomination.

The Bush administration delayed the announcement of Cellucci's nomination by one day in deference to yesterday's announcement by Massachusetts Representative J. Joseph Moakley that he has leukemia.

Cellucci traveled to Washington yesterday where he accepted the libertarian Cato Institute's highest grade on tax cutting and curbing public spending of the nation's 50 governors. Cellucci scored a 76 on the Institute's grading scale; George W. Bush finished third with a score of 73 for his actions while serving as governor of Texas.

Award-winning play set to open minds

By Tonya Mannes
Collegian Staff

As part of the V-Day 2001 College Initiative, "The Vagina Monologues," a ground-breaking, Obie Award-winning play, will be performed at 7 p.m. tonight in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts.

In the United States, a woman is battered every 15 seconds and women aged 16 to 24 run a greater risk of being raped than any other population group. More specifically, a woman is most likely to be assaulted during her first two months of college.

Violent acts against women that cause physical harm are more likely to be perpetrated by someone they know than a stranger.

Of women with disabilities, 83 percent will be sexually assaulted in their lifetimes.

Because of statistics like these, V-Day was created. V-Day is a campaign to end sexual violence against women and to proclaim Valentine's Day as the day to celebrate women and demand the end of abuse. Inspired by the world premiere of "The Vagina Monologues" at HERE, an off-Broadway theatre in New York City, the first V-Day was held in 1998 with a performance of the play by A-list stars, including Glenn Close, Whoopi Goldberg, Susan Sarandon, Winona Ryder, Lily Tomlin and Calista Flockhart.

Beginning in 1999, the V-Day College Initiatives brought the performance to college campuses as a way to raise awareness of and money for the cause. UMass-Amherst, Cornell, Brown and Freidrich Schiller (German) universities and Middlebury, Bennington and Mount Holyoke colleges were among the schools that participated in last year's V-Day College Initiative.

The V-Day 2001 College Initiative is targeting more schools than last year, both in the United States and abroad. Among the venues scheduled are Princeton, Carnegie Mellon and Odense (Denmark) universities and Mills and Agnes Scott colleges.

Eve Ensler's "The Vagina Monologues" is based on interviews with a diverse group of hundreds of women – from a Long Island antiques dealer to a Bosnian refugee. "The Vagina Monologues," which was first performed off-Broadway by Ms. Ensler, dives into the mystery, humor, pain, power, wisdom, outrage and excitement buried in women's experiences.

The performance brazenly explores questions such as: Do women like their vaginas? What do women call their vaginas? What can you tell about a woman by the way she moans when she is aroused?

Each segment has a special theme, with titles such as "The Little Coochie Snorcher That Could," "Because He Liked to Look at It," and "My Angry Vagina."

The Jewish Student Union, Everywoman's Center and the Stonewall Center sponsored the event.

Tickets are five dollars for orchestra seats, one dollar for balcony seats, and may be purchased (or reserved) by phoning 545-2511. Round-the-clock and up-to-the-minute information about V-Day 2001 and violence against women can be found at the event's global website at http://www.vday.org.

The performance will be interpreted for the deaf and is wheelchair accessible.

All proceeds go to local non-profit organizations that help women in trouble in our community.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

How 'bout them apples?

The ALANA career fair was ripe with opportunities for prospective UMass graduates.

Long arm of the law busy over weekend

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Arrests topped the police log the past two weeks, with the University of Massachusetts police department seeing an increase in a wide variety of activities.

The first incident occurred on Saturday Feb. 3, when police arrested John T. Shea Jr., 47 who would only list his address as The Streets in Amherst, for an outstanding warrant.

"A student stopped a couple of security people in the Campus Center to report that a man had followed her off of the PVTA bus," police spokesman Jim Lyons said. "He was reported as saying that he wanted to burn people."

A vandalism incident occurred at roughly 1:00 a.m. on Sunday the 4th in lot 22, when an officer on foot patrol noticed three men disappear behind a fence. The officer observed one man kick apart a vehicle damaging the rear taillight and then saw him begin to kick another vehicle. The officer radioed for assistance as 20-year-old Edward Arasimowicz of Pittsfield got into his car, and then the officer tapped on the window of the vehicle.

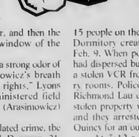
"The officer detected a strong odor of alcohol on Mr. Arasimowicz's breath and advised him of his rights," Lyons said. "The officer administered field sobriety tests, which he (Arasimowicz) failed."

In another alcohol related crime, the police arrested Michael J. Donovan, 21, from Canton on the Feb. 4 at 1:30 a.m. Police picked Donovan up when he was traveling at 45 miles per hour in a 25 mile an hour zone. Upon pulling him over, he was issued a field sobriety test and upon failing was arrested for operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol. The current legal limit in the state of Massachusetts is 0.8.

The same evening at 1:46 a.m., three students were spotted throwing ice and snowballs into on-coming traffic on Eastman Lane. Eighteen-year-old John Francis Trocki of Stoughton was arrested for disorderly conduct, possession of liquor by someone under 21 years of age, and possession and use of a false or stolen RMV document. Police arrested Felicity Rollins, 19 of Northboro for possession of liquor under 21 years of age, and Daniel Franey, 18 of Abington was arrested for disorderly conduct.

On the Feb. 7, Elan Moise a 22-year-old from Cambridge, was arrested in a follow-up investigation regarding a computer that was stolen from the minority engineering office in late December. The computer was founding his possession and he was charged with receiving stolen property worth over 250 dollars.

In German residence hall, Scott Bimbo, 20 of Etna, New Hampshire was arrested for possession of a class D substance and possession with the intent to distribute and the possession of a class C substance and possession with the intent to distribute. The police were called to the dormitory for a noise complaint and because the scent of marijuana could be detected from a room.



"The officer knocked on the door and simultaneously it was opened," Lyons said. "In plain view in the room was a glass pipe of the type that is commonly used to smoke marijuana; it was sitting on a desk."

Police received a report that there were 15 people on the 4th floor of Patterson Dormitory creating a disturbance on Feb. 9. When police arrived the crowd had dispersed but there was a report of a stolen VCR from one of the dormitory rooms. Police arrested 20 year-old Richmond Lau of Quincy for receiving stolen property worth over 250 dollars and they arrested Anna Trehn, 17 of Quincy for an outstanding warrant.

At 3:42 a.m. on Feb. 9, police observed a male that was smashing windows in a pickup truck, with blood and cuts on his hand. He gave the police a false name but later turned out to be Ryan Michael Guyette, 19 of Southampton who was arrested for breaking and entering, larceny over 250 dollars, malicious destruction of property worth over 250 dollars, possession of a burglarious instrument (screwdrivers), and furnishing a false name. In addition, he also had three outstanding warrants for disturbing the peace; assault and battery and operating a motor vehicle after his license had been suspended. Jeffrey Dawson, 17 of Northampton was also arrested for breaking and entering, destruction of property valued over 250 dollars, and larceny of property valued at over 250 dollars.

Cultural Events Calendar

CONTESTS

DEFERRED – "Bright Spots." Create and submit 30 or 60 second video shorts promoting nonviolence and peacemaking. $2,000 in prizes will be awarded to groups and individuals in several categories. For more information and entry forms, see www.crocker.com/~traprock or call the Traprock Peace Center at (413) 773-7427.

SOCIAL EVENTS

UMASS – "Just a Nosh," presented by FORUM. Eat lunch with other Jewish UMass students and have an informal discussion about Jewish love. This event takes place every Wednesday in the Blueswall from 12:15 p.m. to 1 p.m. For more information, contact Hillel House at (413) 549-1710.

UMASS – "Mock Wedding Event." Have you ever wondered what a Jewish wedding is like? Come learn and help plan a mock wedding in 416 Student Union (Jewish Student Union office) on Thursday, February 15. All are welcome. Contact Hillel House at (413) 549-1710.

AMHERST – "Ashii's Party," a Jewish Women's Collective Event, will be held at 7 p.m. in Hillel House on Wednesday February 21. Celebrate Rosh Chodesh and learn about powerful women. Contact Hillel House at (413) 549-1710.

FILM/VIDEO SCREENINGS

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Paying the Price: Killing the Children of Iraq." This documentary by award-winning journalist John Pilger will be followed by a discussion. The film will be shown at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Thursday, February 15 at 7:00 p.m. Admission is free.

RELIGIOUS

AMHERST – Shabbat services are held on Fridays at 6 p.m. followed by Shabbat dinner at 7:15 p.m. in Hillel House.

COMMUNITY

LECTURE/READING/DISCUSSION

AMHERST – "Mystery Desserts." For mystery buffs and aspiring writers, the Friends of the Jones Library has planned an evening of crime and sweet things, featuring a panel of writers from the New England Chapter of Sisters in Crime as well as a dessert buffet. All four women are published authors who share the Sisters in Crime's goal of assisting aspiring and current feminine mystery authors. Seating is limited for this event, which will be held at Jones Library at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, February 15. To pre-register, call (413) 256-4090. Admission is free.

AMHERST – "Asian American Studies Speaker Series: Rethinking Immigration." Marcelo Suarez-Orozco will speak on Thursday, February 15 at 6 p.m. in Herter Hall 301. This event is co-sponsored by the Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies and the Spanish, Portuguese and Anthropology departments.

AMHERST – "Working with Young Dads: Experiences from the Field." A panel of young fathers has been invited to participate in this discussion facilitated by Mark Jimerson, the director of the Holyoke Area Healthy Families Program at the MSPCC. The event will take place at Jones Library from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. on Thursday, February 15. To register and for more information, call (413) 253-9867, extension 20.

SMITH – "The Second Intifada: Causes and Consequences" will be presented by Hanan Ashrawi, an internationally recognized spokesperson for the Palestinian cause and a key player in launching the Middle East process. Ashrawi's extensive activism in the area of human rights and women's rights has made her a major voice for these issues. She will speak at 7:30 p.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium on Sunday, February 18. Admission is free. Accessible.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Gender in Post-Soviet HIV Prevention Mobilization: Challenges of the Living for Tomorrow Project." Jill Lewis of Hampshire College (Literature and Gender Studies) will speak at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Monday, February 19 at 4:30 p.m. For more information, call (413) 538-2275. Admission is free.

UMASS – "W.E.B. Du Bois and the Problem of the Twenty-first Century." David Levering Lewis, Pulitzer Prize-winning biographer of educator and civil rights pioneer Du Bois, will speak at on Friday, February 23 at 4 p.m. in Special Collections and Archives, on the 25th floor of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. A 153rd birthday celebration for Du Bois will follow. For more information, contact Linda Seidman at (413) 545-2780.

UMASS – "Caridad de la Luz," a reading by an acclaimed Bronx-born performance artist, will take place at 7 p.m. in the Augusta Savage Gallery on Thursday, April 5. For more information, call (413) 545-5177.

UMASS – "Reading by Ben Marcus," a reading by an award-winning author and professor at Columbia University. He is the author of The Age of Wire and String and has been published in Grand Street, BOMB, Conjunctions, McSweeney's, Fence, Time, Tin House and The Quarterly. The talk will be held on Thursday, March 1 at 7 p.m. at the New Africa House in Augusta Savage Gallery. Admission is free.

CONFERENCE

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "A Life of Opposition: Prudence Crandall, Women's Minds, and Religious Choice in the 19th Century." This colloquium will examine the repercussions of white abolitionist Prudence Crandall's bold step of opening a high school for black women in Connecticut in 1833, as well as how her Quaker education and background, and later conversion to the Baptist faith, influenced her perspective. The event will take place at the Five College Women's Resource Center at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, February 20. Admission is free.

THEATER/DANCE

UMASS – "The Vagina Monologues." Based on interviews with a diverse group of hundreds of women, "The Vagina Monologues" explores questions often pondered but seldom asked about the relationship between women and their vaginas. The performance will take place in Bowker Auditorium at 7 p.m. on February 14. Tickets go on sale February 1 by phone, and are available through the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

UMASS – "The Garth Fagan Dance Company" will perform "USAfrica" in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, February 15. For tickets, call the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

UMASS – "Mapapa African Acrobats," presented by Something Every Friday, will perform at 8 p.m. on Friday, February 16 in Bowker Auditorium. For more information, call (413) 545-1278. Admission is free.

UMASS – "Slanguage" is a production of the New World Theater. Universes, an exciting ensemble of five multidisciplinary performers, fuses poetry, theater, jazz, hip-hop, politics, down home blues, and Spanish bolero to break the bounds of traditional theater. The performance will take place in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. on Thursday, February 22. For more information, call (413) 545-1972. For tickets, call the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

UMASS – "Cliff Matias." This event, which features the demonstration of traditional Native American dances by a Taino/Cherokee performer and educator, will take place at 7 p.m. in the Augusta Savage Gallery on Tuesday, March 6. For more information, call (413) 545-5177.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – "Musical Illuminations from the Middle East." Hear cutting edge world music from Anatolia, a Massachusetts ensemble combining Turkish and Arab traditions to showcase the arts of the Middle East. The event will take place in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. on Sunday, March 10. Tickets range from $7 to $20, and are available through the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Andrew Russo laureate." Hear music selections from Chopin, Copeland, Crumb and Borodin performed by one of America's rising musical stars. The event will be held at 3 p.m. in Pratt Hall. Tickets are $10 in advance, $12 at the door, and $5 for students. For more information call 734-7052 or 532-1546.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

SMITH COLLEGE – "Biblical Women." A reception and gallery talk will be held for this exhibit of story quilts by artist Lee Porter in the Alumnae House Gallery, from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Friday, February 23. Through March 3. For more information, call (413) 585-2043.

This calendar, which previews local events of interest to under-represented groups on campus and in the community, runs on Wednesdays. Submit notices of events to Tanya Mannes, Diversity Editor. Standard entry forms are available in the Collegian office.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. Became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Massachusetts Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilimitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marry Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

UMass basketball

X™ XAVIER TONIGHT 7:30 pm

TEMPLE SATURDAY 1:00 pm

abc SPORTS with DICK VITALE & BRENT MUSBURGER

GET YOUR TICKETS @
CURRY HICKS CAGE
CAMPUS CENTER
MULLINS CENTER
ON GAME DAY

Campus Perspectives

How do you feel about Valentine's Day?

Suzzette Nazario – Senior – Communication Disorders
"I don't mind it. Everyone else is happy, so I'm happy for them."

Tejbir Singh – Junior – Electrical Engineering
"If I had a girlfriend I would do something creative and romantic."

Salandra Johnson – Senior – Communication Disorders
"I like the quote, 'Love yourself first and most.'"

Daniel Murray – Junior – Communication
"I'm indifferent about it because my girlfriend is in Spain. If she were here it would be flowers and candy all the way."

Jeff Swartz – Junior – BDIC
"It's a stupid holiday made up by card companies."

The Daily Collegian touches me in a non-sexual way.

Sales & Marketing INTERNSHIPS 2001

The nation's largest publisher of college and university campus telephone directories is offering paid full-time summer sales and marketing internships. Tremendous practical business experience and resume booster. Position begins in May with a week-long, expense paid program in Chapel Hill, NC. Interns market the official University of Massachusetts campus telephone directory, selling advertising space to area businesses in Amherst. Earnings average $3200.00 for the 10-week program. All majors welcome!

There will be an information session Thursday, February 15 from 6pm to 7pm in the Robsham Visitors Center (opposite Whitmore).

Call 1-800-743-5556 x337 or visit our website at www.universitydirectories.com for more information and to apply

Campus Directories.com
88 VitCom Circle
Chapel Hill, NC 27514
(800) 743-5556
Fax: (919) 968-8512
www.universitydirectories.com
University Directories

you know that little voice inside that says "I can't"? this summer, [crush it].

Bring your "can-do" attitude to Camp Challenge. Where you'll get paid to learn how to become a leader and acquire skills that'll help you meet the challenges you'll face in your career. Apply today at the Army ROTC department, with no obligation. Before that voice tells you to take a vacation.

LEADERS EXCEL!

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Scholarship, Credits, No-Military Obligations
UMASS ARMY ROTC @ (413) 545-2321

DON'T CALL ME, I'LL CALL YOU

BE MINE NOT!

YOUR VALENTINE'S CANDY

Slightly different music, because you're slightly different.

MEDIA PLAY®
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
Sale ends Feb. 24, 2001.
Cassettes available on select titles.

Join Replay.® The club that rewards your love of entertainment.™ Ask associate for details.

MediaPlay.com℠ Selection, pricing and special offers may vary by store and online.

We Buy & Sell Used CDs! Check out our great selection.

Learning Support Services
10th Floor W.E.B. DuBois Library

NOW HIRING

Tutors: Peer tutors wanted for many first and second year classes.

Supplemental Instruction Leaders: Leaders wanted for group review sessions for specific courses.

Apply in person at Learning Support Services or call us at:
545-5334

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Death penalty?
Don't televise it

Timothy McVeigh first appeared on our nation's television sets in 1995, shortly after he was taken into custody for the horrific Oklahoma City bombing that left 168 people dead and 500 more injured.

Six years later, just three months before he is set to die, McVeigh is looking to schedule a return engagement.

McVeigh, now 32, has asked that his execution, to be performed by lethal injection, be publicly televised. His most recent plea came this past Sunday, in a letter to The Sunday Oklahoman, in which McVeigh questioned the fairness of limiting the number of witnesses to his execution.

"Because the closed-circuit telecast of my execution raises these fundamental equal access concerns, and because I am otherwise not opposed to such a telecast, a reasonable solution seems obvious: hold a true public execution – allow a public broadcast."

The Federal Bureau of Prisons is currently considering a closed circuit broadcast for the many survivors and relatives of victims.

Bureau spokesman Dan Dumbe has said the public execution will not happen, nor has it been seriously considered. Regardless, McVeigh's plea raises an interesting question that has been skirted around before but never seriously addressed in the mainstream media: Should Federal (or state) executions be televised nationwide?

The case has been made that, since we are a nation that has largely accepted the death penalty as a suitable form of punishment, a public viewing of our choice will help the country gain a better appreciation and understanding of exactly what happens.

"He [McVeigh] is in favor of public scrutiny of government action," said McVeigh's lawyer, Robert Nigh Jr. "If it is our collective judgment that capital punishment is a reasonable response to crime, we need to come to grips with what it actually is."

Coming to grips is one thing, but televising the execution of McVeigh, or any other federal prisoner, is not the way to gain ground. It's not fair public scrutiny, but rather an elevated version of the violence that currently saturates our lives. The goal is to curb the violence, not to glamorize it. To educate, and not convert it into prime-time programming. It's a punishment, not a network meal ticket. More responsible methods exist that can educate this country if that's what we want. Education and healthy discussion are approaches worth considering, not shock broadcasting that will ignite controversy and further split an already divided country.

Take into consideration the factors that are motivating McVeigh to make a last-minute push for his request. This will complete whatever situation he set out to accomplish, in effect placing his signature at the end of the story. We'll play into his hands, and experience tells us that's a dangerous place to be.

Information from Salon.com was used in it is column.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Ryan's Valentine's Day column

RYAN BENHARRIS

It had to happen. The good people in charge of delivering fate from the happy place in the sky had to rip through the world and interrupt the constant misery and certain failure that is my life, and hand me the awful task of writing an editorial on Valentine's Day.

I suppose it was inevitable though. In the past three-and-a-half years, I've done almost everything else at this newspaper. I've analyzed the social impact of selling Ginsu knives on television to children. I've called Eminem a "bad, bad man," and questioned whether Katie Holmes is actually a "national treasure." I've written about stalking as a person who has been stalked. I've confronted psychopaths who called me at three in the morning. Fortunately I've never had to tackle the day I dread most every year. Until now.

How the hell do I even begin this? Do I write something funny and mock its tradition and customary practices? Do I shell out something incredibly painful to write and equally as agonizing for you read so it forces you to cling to a mere five seconds of sympathy for me? Perhaps I could tell you a story. A tale of how I had "the worst Valentine's Day ever." I could exploit all of my past relationships, whine about the lack of any present ones, and beg for something substantial in the future. Maybe I could take the flip-side, and tell you about the "best Valentine's Day ever." I might use words like "snuggled," "bliss" and "infatuation." I suppose it doesn't matter how I do it. Which ever way I choose will no doubt tell you everything you need to know about my place in the world on Feb. 14 in 200 lines or less.

I guess one thing I really hate about Valentine's Day is when someone accuses it of being a gimmick of Hallmark to sell cards. No one accuses Halloween of being a trick to sell candy, or Thanksgiving as a publicity stunt to get rid of turkeys. So why blame Valentine's Day on Hallmark? This annoys me about all of the major card-giving holidays. People say the same thing about Mother's Day and Father's Day. There is a very simple way to avoid buying into this theory. Don't purchase cards, especially from Hallmark.

Now, I don't believe in that for one second, because I happen to like giving and receiving Hallmark cards, but if you don't, then don't do it. Make cards, sing a song, whatever, but don't belittle something into an excuse like that. It's just not fair.

Valentine's Day is so much more than an arbitrary date. Whether or not you have someone to share it with can affect your mood for a significant amount of time before and after it. It's the defining decision on whether I spend the first few weeks of February listening to the enthusiasm of Pearl Jam or the desolation of the Goo Goo Dolls. It's the crucial factor that settles on High Fidelity or Happy Gilmore as the movie that I'll watch over and over again for the last two weeks of the month.

It will mess with you emotionally, physically and psychologically. Today is the first day in a long time that I may actually cry, and believe me, I've been borderline for a while. (And, I'm not including the time I got drunk at the Hangar and apparently cried. Though that did have some sort of emotional substance, I don't remember doing it, so it doesn't count. Rule number one in dealing with people: don't ever include alcohol. Not only does it inhibit your emotions, but it destroys other people's perceptions of you as well. Take note of that, freshmen!) Go ahead and laugh, but it's true. What's even worse is that I'm shedding tears because, for one day, I'm simply not doing anything out of the ordinary. And that's considered out of the ordinary. On the other hand, Valentine's Day can be an endowment of a day that I can sit back and truly evaluate how much I care about one person. It can be a time to realize something you never notice about someone else, or bestow upon them knowledge about you that will change how you interact forever.

Obviously no one will ever judge you by whether or not you have plans on Valentine's Day, but what's much worse than that is that you have to judge yourself. This doesn't only go for the lonely ones who have the distressing assignment of trying to decipher what is wrong with them because they are friendless, but even for those of you who have someone, there's a lot of concern. Valentine's Day is supposed to be the crowning moment of romanticism. What if you fail at that? There could quite possibly be no recovery for your relationship. Then what? Do you revert back to being miserable and malcontent with no possible prospects in sight? That's a very depressing possibility.

If you have something to prepare for, perfection is a bare minimum. There becomes an indescribable new goal much higher than excellence that absolutely must be met.

For the days leading up to it, the holiday is a deadline. You make mad dashes to scramble around and find something to do and more importantly someone to spend it with. That's of course unless you already have someone to spend it with. Then you'd think it would be a bit easier.

Having someone special to spend Valentine's Day with is so much better than not having someone. You avoid all of the awkwardness of finding someone, so that clearly makes it less demanding in that department. You are blessed with the opportunity to surprise that person with something wonderful. Money should certainly be no concern. Maybe I don't speak for all men here, but I know that in my heart I would love to spend lots of money on a beautiful woman. Every dollar depleted would transfer into a brilliantly precious smile with admiring eyes giving a look that articulates, "I don't want to be around anyone other than you." There's no amount of cash that's not worth that. I have a distinct picture in my head of what perfection looks like. I've seen it. It is much, much better than I am.

Though I do dread it, and fear its effects, I actually like Valentine's Day. In theory, it's wonderful. It's supposed to be an entire twenty-four hours to dedicate your thought, feeling and love to someone else. The whole idea of gift giving is nothing like a birthday where you give someone a present to uphold tradition. The only rule to Valentine's Day gift giving is that it has to be utterly from the bottom of your heart. That's so fantastic.

I certainly don't blame Valentine's Day for any negative way that it may make me feel. What I do dislike is that we actually have a specific day that ignores the obvious. It can make as many people depressed, as it makes happy.

The only thing I can say about that though is: if you're depressed, it's probably because of your own free will. Trust me, this is coming from experience. Bad choices probably put you in a lousy position for Valentine's Day, not bad luck. Pay attention to people. If you have something to say to someone, say it! Take any chance you get and never think that you're being led around by some higher force of fate.

Dear God, if I had only written this editorial sooner, well...

"I can't remember all the times I tried to tell myself to hold onto these moments as they passed."
– Counting Crows

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the Editor

To the editor:

Registration. Getting through this formality as a student on the path of education is no simple task. It is a frustrating, confusing and stressful endeavor; a complicated obstacle course that everyone has to wriggle through before learning can begin. As if going to school, trying to stay open to new ideas and keeping a positive attitude while learning about the world weren't already challenging enough, getting into classes has become an incredible problem due to lack of teachers!

Every year, the University downsized significant numbers of faculty in many departments. Every year, the administration instructs these departments to prepare for budget cuts. Classes grow more scarce and more dense, and the students are suffering. If education is something that we value in this state and in this country, why are we allowing it to deteriorate, and why so those in power impair out educational institutions with inadequate funding? Furthermore, if this is a time of economic strength in America, why are educational resources being steadily chipped away when they should be invested in?

In my attendance at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, I constantly witness and experience the campus' congestion and the students' anxiety over class-availability. Scheduling a semester is like running a rat race, so how can the University enrich our minds when it has us in a frenzy over resources like fish in a shrinking pond? Education is seriously underfunded, no matter what any politician says. It is obvious that teachers are desperately needed! People don't spend money to be disregarded and alienated by a system that pretends to accommodate an education. The University should not tolerate or ignore the fact that registration – a simple preliminary in the process of education – has become a nightmare for both students and faculty.

Helena Farrell
Sophomore

To the editor:

Sam Wilkinson's Wednesday column, "the political Dukes of Amherst," hit the nail on the head. College students are on the Town's st list. And the Select Board election is the key to change.

Could a revolution be stirring? One head has rolled already. As the column pointed out, Mr. Bond was turned out last year by student votes.

Nervousness is in the air. All the political wisdom I've been hearing is that one long term Select Board incumbent (and UMass administrator) is "retiring" this year for fear of an embarrassing defeat.

So go get registered to vote here in town. Either venture down to the Town Clerk's office in the Castle, or the SGA or CRC offices should be able to do the job. And don't forget to vote when the day comes. I trust the Collegian will continue to provide coverage – and will keep reminding people that that day is April 3.

Of course all this is based on the presupposition that students will be permitted to vote. Hopefully, the Collegian, and others, by raising a big enough stink, will pressure the Powers-That-Be into backing down. As things stand now, however, the University may be forced to buy new voting machines. You just know that money would be taken from the Student Activity Fund, singling out students for a pretty stiff "poll tax." An alternative is that, as the Southwest voting booths were an "experiment" anyway, the Town may just look, and see how successful it was, and declare it a failure.

Terry Franklin
Amherst

Open letter to Parking Services

SAM WILKINSON

Dear Michael Brennan thead of Parking Servicest,

This is the dated story of my sweet little automobile and what I plan to do about the pain visited upon my car by your ticket-giving cronies. I've been thinking for a long time about how exactly I want to deal with what happened to it, and after keeping the hamsters on the wheels that turn my mind for a considerable amount of time, this is what I've come with.

Ah, ah, ah, but first, the story.

Right before the start of the fall semester, I came to work to put out the Collegian that each of you lovingly read and appreciate (right?). The first issue takes slightly longer than most to put together because it is a considerably longer issue, so here I was, in Amherst, before the lot of you showed up. As an interesting side note, there's nobody in this place when you aren't here – truth be told, Amherst probably wouldn't be as prosperous as they claim to be without us, but that was a column ago, so I'll let it slide in this one.

Anyway, as there's nobody in Amherst per se, during the two weeks before school starts, and with a sticker on my car mind you, I parked in the Bat Cave parking garage in the appropriate spots, first in an office specific parking space, which we pay for, and then in one of the excess parking spots. There was a sea of concrete both days – miles and miles of open concrete, empty spots, anti-cars if you will. Yet for two consecutive days, Parking Services stuffed my car. I ended up with two tickets from Parking Services. Of course these weren't run of the mills, simpleton, five-dollar tickets, nay, these were forty-dollar apiece, two expensive slaps in the face of my wounded wallet.

After getting the second one and a serious case of the furiousness, I marched on over the Parking Services and asked about my chances on appeal – I had a sticker and was twice in an appropriate spot. The arrogant toad over there, the one that you pay Mister Brennan, said I had no chance on appeal so I might as well just pay.

Well, I haven't.

In fact, I've aggressively not paid, despite the fact that another $10 in late charges has been added to my outstanding bill. Well I say, "Charge away, Parking Services," as I will continue to refuse to pay those leeches for no other reason than that they were wrong and won't admit it.

Of course, neither will I. Apparently, they have a policy where a sticker can't transfer from car to car and mine had. This is why the toadboy said I'd lose on appeal, because my sticker had been transferred. Now, that policy is damned wrong. I don't care that I violated an existing policy, the fact remains that the rule is wrong. There's no good reason why a sticker can't transfer from person to person, from car to car, regardless of their stupid little regulation.

So I didn't appeal and now I drive around, cautiously, afraid that at any moment Parking Services will find me and ticket me, just to prove that they always get their man. But they aren't going to get me, I hope.

I hope this because I'm a reasonable man and I'm willing to make a deal, an arrangement if you will, with the Satanic forces that control Parking Services.

Here it is.

"I, Sam Wilkinson, being of decently sound mind and an occasionally sound body, do hereby agree to donate the $90 I owe in parking tickets to a charity of my choice (in this case: AIDS Project Hartford) instead of paying Parking Services. After donating the money, Parking Services will clear my record and I will be free to graduate in the Spring of 2002 without two parking tickets hanging over my head."

You'll notice that there's a picture of the check in this article, just to show that I mean business.

Charity being what it is, someone could always say, "hey, Mr. Wilkinson, the money from parking tickets goes to the scholarship fund." Ouch, a tough argument, but I think money will better serve its purpose at my charity rather than at the UMass, which doesn't even seem to have enough money to attract ALANA students.

By my agreement, I still give my money away, except this time it goes to an appropriate source that can always use the money instead of UMass Parking Services. A charity profits, I feel satisfied and Parking Services can claim to be helping a deserving group in the local area.

Of course, if Parking Services doesn't accept my proposal, I don't pay my tickets, a charity doesn't get the money and Parking Services continues to have the stone-face of cruelty for which students loathe them.

Oh sure, it seems like a fairly innocuous proposal, the proposal of a bitter man who hates Parking Services with a fiery passion, especially their arrogance and refusal to ever admit that they might be wrong. All of those things are true. I won't deny it. What I will add, however, is that at least I have 90 bucks that I'm ready to spend to clear my good name... but I can only clear it if Parking Services agrees to my proposal, a far superior one all things considered.

So Michael Brennan, this is for you, but before it's for him, let me add that the one time I've ever heard him, he seemed decent enough. And while he employs a fairly scaly staff of unfriendly students who are probably in the marching band in their spare time (oooooh, rimshot), he certainly doesn't seem like the type of fellow who'd want to take money out of the hands of charity workers who could always use the extra dollars.

Right, Mister Brennan? Right?

All I'm asking for is simple acceptance of my counter-proposal, a request that you are more than capable of granting. I'm certainly looking forward to your response.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

SAMUEL E. WILKINSON
AMHERST, MA 01002
145
Date 2-14-00
Pay to the Order of AIDS Project Hartford ninety and 00/100 $ 90.00 Dollars
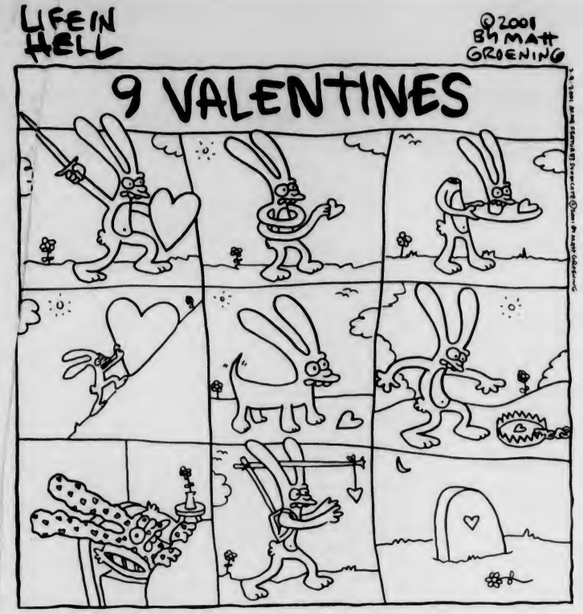
FLORENCE SAVINGS BANK
For



Reversal of luck!

ERIN VACANTI

As my Valentine's Day column, I am going to explain a common misconception that people have about me, why they have it, and why it happens to be wrong. Many people think that I despise Valentine's Day. They have good reason for it. For the past 22 years, I have not had a date, and it is not simply because a desirable young man does not ask me out. It is actually because of my taste in men and how they have acted around this time of the year every year.

If you know me, you know that I was not allowed to date in high school. My parents did not believe in letting me date until I was sixteen. After that they always found an excuse to not let me date through 9th end of high school. I hung out with guys, but dating was never made an option. When I got to college, everything changed. Dating became an option, but it did not seem to happen until the winter break. That six-week mistake was with someone that I'd actually known through high school, go figure. I dumped him at the end of the winter session, and did not really date again until the end of February. That year, I did get asked out for Valentine's Day by a few guys, but I chose to go out with a group of my single girlfriends that night. That girls' night out did not happen either. Yet I was not bitter. I just accepted it and met someone really special at the end of February.

My sophomore year made my freshman year look like a walk in the park. Before anyone can even consider challenging this, you have to hear this story. A week before the winter break I met what seemed like a cool guy, literally a week after I dumped another guy. This "cool guy" and I started dating and we realized that our two-month anniversary would be Valentine's Day. So about a week before the big day I asked him what he wanted to do. He avoided the subject, showing his not-so-cool side. Then, on Feb. 10, I confronted him about it. I told him that it was getting pretty close to the big day and we should talk about it at least a little. I wanted to be surprised, but he was specific date. He said he would. What can I say? My instinct kicked in and for some reason I knew that he lied to me about the weekend, and when I realized this, I decided that he, for once, would be out a date this year. Unfortunately, he probably does not realize the extent to which he has pissed me off. He will probably realize this when reading my column. Too bad for him.

My luck has suddenly changed. This past weekend I was supposed to go out with one of my best friends (the one that I hung out with for V-Day last year). He misheard me about the time that we were supposed to hang out and ended up standing me up. So I had a mini-tantrum, but decided to walk it off. That was a good idea. I ended up bumping into this guy that I have kind of known for a while. He invited me to hang out with him and his friends, and to make another long story short, I basically hit it off with one of his friends. That friend of his, he will remain anonymous, asked me to spend Valentine's Day with him. Now I had planned to spend it with my friend that stood me up, but I just could not bear to see another V-Day just slip through my fingers. So I said yes. Finally!

Him and I have made the plans, and hopefully he will keep his end of the bargain. If not, then I hope that this whole column makes him feel incredibly guilty.

What I have learned over the past three years (about Valentine's Day) is that I can only depend on my friends to be there for me. Many of you know the saying "Bro's before Ho's." Well the same is true for women: "Chicks before (explicit term)." Unfortunately, there is no saying that includes both sexes for friendship. My point is that I have stayed friends with Martin for three and a half years now. He got me through last Valentine's Day, and he was prepared to work his magic for the second time this year. But hopefully my luck has changed. We will see tonight. But I have ever confidence in my date for this year. I am a bit nervous, but everything should go well.

For all those out there who are single this year, and who have always been single, it WILL happen. As my mother says, it will happen when you least expect it. I know. It is finally happening for me.

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian Columnist.

Skiing sucks
Let's get drunk

DANA OPPEDISANO

As I sat down to write this, my first column of the new semester, I imagined that I was doing the very same thing that a lot of you out there were doing. It was two weekends ago (our first since returning for the spring semester) and I sat with a frosty brew in my hand, only somewhat paying attention to the Minutemen-Fordham blowout on the big screen in front of me. Probably unlike most of you out there, there was just one little problem: I was completely miserable. Because I've been taught that the passive voice is narrative suicide, let's do the flashback thing...

You see, I'm not writing this in Amherst, and I can't believe I'm about to say this, but I actually wish I was. Right now, the pungent smell of overstuffed lockers and hot cocoa is whirling all around me. It's not the smell of damp, unwashed snowsuits or the sweat-covered knee-highs that's bothering me, though. If I hear one more 'N Sync song over the PA, I'm going to ring my own neck.

I'm sitting in a ski lodge, somewhere, on top of some mountain, in some part of Maine. The name of the mountain is irrelevant, and I fell asleep about 10 minutes after we crossed the state line. Which, by the way, means that I didn't miss a thing. As beautiful as it may be, I imagine Maine is one of the few states in the Union that seems to look the same no matter where you are. Throw three feet of snow on top of it, and it's like I've been staring at a painting that's bolted on the outside of my car window for the past five hours.

Why am I sitting here, then? Without further adieu, I suppose I shall finally make my elusive point: I hate skiing. Now, before I offend any of you die-hard skiers or snowboarders out there, I should stress that I'm really not about to badmouth or disrespect the sport that you lunatics seem to be so in love with. Just in case you are a bit touchy though, do me a small favor – check out the title of this page. Note the "opinion" portion of the "Editorial/Opinion" phrase. Now look at my name beside the column. For those of you Math majors out there that have already managed to put two and two together – this is my opinion. If you don't like it or disagree, then feel free to turn the page. My life, as will yours, will somehow go on.

Having said that, I will explain that I am sitting in this ski lodge as a favor to someone else. I was trying to think of a clever, humorous line like "I would rather... (something really bad and loaded with sarcasm)...than sitting here right now," but I don't even have the energy. Now, I realize that there are a few of you out there saying, "this kid's a dick. Obviously the reason he doesn't like skiing is because he's either not good, or flat-out can't do it at all." If you have already said this, then quick! Head down to Whitmore and fill out a change of major form. Fill in "Criminal Justice," because it would be an atrocity to deprive the world of your natural detective skills any longer. In other words, "no s#*t, Sherlock!"

Here's the thing. I am not operating under the assumption that a sport like skiing, which is essentially placing a human being in a completely unnatural element, could be easy. Our feet aren't five feet long and designed for doing 30 down a snow-covered slope, nor are they made of titanium, and obviously it's going to be a challenge to suddenly make them that way.

Also, I have this natural handicap. I have absolutely no patience whatsoever, and I may be the most stubborn son of a bitch on Earth. If I think the sky is brown, you will not convince me otherwise. Nor do I have the time or the patience to explain the basis of my belief to a person who is so ignorant as to actually try to tell me that it's blue.

You see, I actually have been skiing once, and let's just say that my limbs were bent and flailed in directions that would make Stretch Armstrong squirm. I mastered two areas of skiing last time-actually putting the skis on, and the proper way to get up after a fall. You see, I lost my skis every time I fell, and then I had to put them back on. As they say, "practice makes perfect."

I actually failed to get off the lift at one point, only to learn that by the time I finally did get up, the ground was now 15 feet below me. I then threw my poles 20 yards into the woods, and I proceeded to spew a string of expletives that had every mother on that mountain covering their child's ears. I couldn't move my arms, my legs, or my ass the next day, and I wasted 60 bucks in the process (which exchanges into Broke College Kid Currency as exactly 1 gold nugget).

I made a key observation that day – either skiing is the dumbest and most difficult sport in the world, or it's just not for me. I may be stubborn, but even I'm not that stubborn.

I realize that it takes a long time and a lot of practice to master something like this. Most people have the luxury of learning at a young age, while I hadn't even set foot on a mountain until I was 21 years old. I was born and raised in the city, and my idea of fun during the winter was packing a set of really steep steps with snow and sliding down on the lid of a garbage can. Nowadays, there are three year-olds winning gold medals and throwing spread eagles in my face (By the way, this is the only time that the term "spread eagle" has ever taken on a negative connotation for me. Not with three year-olds, you sickos!)

In short, I don't like skiing, and I honestly don't think I even want to learn how at this point. It just doesn't interest me. If I want to have a good time doing something physical, I'd rather just work out, or play some ball. Hell, I would rather – I guess now I have the energy – watch paint dry than go skiing. Luckily, I managed to find a perfectly acceptable way for someone to pass the time while at a ski lodge: find the nearest bar and get completely sloshed. The entire wait staff at this particular pub already knows my name, favorite color, major and my waitress has already tried to shut me off twice. The nerve of some people.

On the plus side, there are only a few months left in the season, after which the sun will come out, and a perfectly acceptable day outside consists of lathering up and catching some rays. I'm sorry, but that's more like my kind of fun.

Dana Oppedisano is a Collegian Columnist.

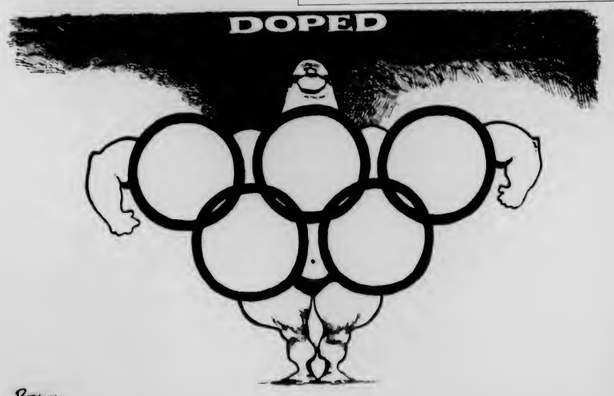
There will be a meeting for all current Collegian Columnists Thursday at 7:00 p.m. in the office. Pictures will be taken and confusions (hopefully) will be cleared up. Tax forms will be available.



Happy Valentine's Day!

HAPPY VALENTINES DAY!
ELISABETH
-DAN

Chad,
I see you everyday, but you don't know who I am. I want to tell you how I feel. Meet me at the pond at 12 tomorrow for your special gift. Love, ???

To my Sweetheart...Jessica As soon as I work things out I will be yours forever. In the meantime...at least we have Temptation Island!!! I love you. David L.

Meg, Happy V-Day!
Love,
Dump Truck

Lindsay-From the moment I saw you I knew it was love. I yearn to lose myself in your curls. Be mine, my love. See you in heaven, where you belong. -Anonymous

Mr. Smiff - You have no idea how it makes me feel when I see you in your fatigues. I go awol for you. Drive my tank, you big stud. -Your Secret Admirer

Cara, Meet me at our favorite bar. I'll mix you up a love potion. Be mine! Love The Super Deluxe

Sara, On the baseball field of love you are my home-run. Meet me ath the AC diamond. Love, The baseball player

Ross - Those hands like magic your eyes like the sea it would be oh so tragic if you won't make love to me Be mine Ross. -Your Diamond

Eric,
Happy Valentines Day!
I Love You!!
Martha

Sweety,
Your eyes are like Diamonds. Your simle like the horizon, the way you look at me at nite excites me the way we cuddle and snuggle is so fun. Will you be mine tonight and everynight. I love you. Tim

Adam M.,
Your dedication to me is truly inspiring. Screw Chris Klein! Will you be mine?
Love,
Katie H.

Dani & Meg
You two are always in my dreams.
Happy Valentines Day -
Berthrer

The historic
Salem Cross Inn 1705
Route 9 West Brookfield, Ma 01585
(508) 867-8337
Reserve for Valentine's Day and Enjoy a Sleigh ride
Fine Food & Drink

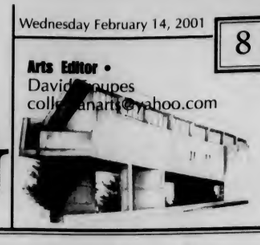
salemxinn@aol.com wwwsalemcrossinn.com

Hungry?

Subway of Amherst offers fresh 6" and footlong subs, delicious salads and, for smaller appetites, 4" round sandwiches.
4 Main Street, Amherst • 256-1919
SUBWAY®
Sunday - Thursday 10 am - Midnight
Friday & Saturday 10 am - 2 am

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING

Arts Editor • David Goupes
colle...anarts@yahoo.com



Love Story of Passion and Pain

COURTESY OF COLUMBIA ARTISTS MANAGEMENT, INC.

Carmen and Don Jose in one of many passionate struggles.

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

None of us really wants to relate to the lovers Don Jose and Carmen, but we all do. We want to believe that love is noble and kind and honorable, and that romantic love is above impetuous jealousy and petty spite. But we all know that even love, the most pure, the most tender of feelings, can succumb to pettiness and scorn. Georges Bizet's masterpiece Carmen illustrates this with a fierce look into the darker side of love.

The London City Opera presented Bizet's opera to a packed Concert Hall on Feb. 11. The touring company, established just seven years ago, travels extensively in both Europe and North America, and will bring this production to over 65 cities in the United States.

The Spanish-set opera centers on the title character, a gypsy woman who seems to bewitch most any man she meets. Don Jose, a soldier whose duty has him stationed away from his beloved mother and his lovely and simple fiancé, seems immune to the gypsy's charm, at first.

However, she is placed under Jose's guard after being arrested for assaulting one of her co-workers, and enchants him so that he is moved to release her, even if it means being imprisoned himself.

Carmen rejoins her band of gypsies, who in Act II, meet up with Escamillo, a famed bullfighter. Escamillo, who's just as charming as Carmen, also falls into a trance-like love for her. But, she is waiting for Jose, who finds her upon being released from prison and, under her guidance, spurns the army and his duties. Jose joins the gypsies in their illegal operations, all to be with his lover. But, he is called away when Micaela, his former fiance, finds him in the gypsy hideaway and informs him that his mother is dying. In his absence, the fickle Carmen falls in love with the bullfighter, and accompanies him to one of his bullfights. Jose, broken and dejected, meets up with her there, and swears his love for her, pleading with her to come back to him. But, Carmen is defiant, and swears that her love for Jose is dead. And Jose, in a fit of passionate rage, kills her.

Bizet's music is filled with the passion of Spanish dance music, a strong and seductive music that suits Carmen perfectly. And it celebrates the joy and importance of a bullfight. But, even in its most celebratory moments, the music is infused with a sort of sadness. Every instance of love is doomed. Love is seen as fatal, and Bizet never lets his audience forget that.

Theresa Goble's portrayal as Carmen is alternatingly seductive and headstrong. She charms with her voice, which too is both sweet and strong. She is fierce and she is confident in her powers, but she is also tender. Goble makes is easy to see why men will do anything for the love of Carmen, even kill. Nicholas Ransley's transformation as Don Jose from a contented and simple soldier to a tortured and despondent lover, was extraordinary. Martin Higgins was appropriately course and dashing as Escamillo the toreador. Pamela Wilcock as Micaela rounded out the cast with the soprano sweetness of her voice calling Jose back to his civilized, former life.

One expects a certain spectacle when seeing an opera. That is, opera calls to mind extravagant sets and lavish costumes. However, there are always sacrifices that a travelling theatre company must make. The London City Opera employs a static set and, for the most part, simple costumes. But, the nature of Carmen makes it work. The little embellishment that changes the stationary set from scene to scene is enough for the unglamorous settings in which the opera takes place. The cast, made up of gypsies, peasants, and soldiers, doesn't require fanciful costumes. The cast, not the spectacle, steals the focus of the audience with their passion and their voices filling the stage.

The only thing lacking in this production was the dance numbers. Bizet's score is clearly influenced by dance music. The company's choreographed numbers were few, and for the most part, bland. Gypsy women are famous for their dancing, but Goble didn't have much to work with. If Carmen is supposed to seduce men with her movement, then she should have better choreography.

The overwhelmingly positive house response was testament to the immense talent of the company's producers, directors and cast. One can only hope that The London City Opera will visit again, and soon.

Copeland's blues rock Iron Horse

By Kate Billman-Golemme
Collegian Correspondent

Casting off tranquilizing melodies and fiery blues, Shemekia Copeland shook and soothed a sold-out crowd at The Iron Horse Thursday night.

Copeland delivered a soul-filled, two-hour set, swaying hearts while displaying her eclectic vocals.

Although barely old enough to drink a beer, at 21, Copeland is highly acclaimed and no stranger to the blues world. She has toured extensively since her late teens and put out a pair of albums. She generously sampled her second, recently Grammy-nominated, "Wicked," throughout the performance.

Like a bad romance, the multi-generation audience was taken for a roller coaster ride of emotions. From the urgent, "It's 2 a.m." in which Shemekia feverishly demands, "It's 2 a.m. do you know where your baby is?" to the empowering, "Wild, Wild, Woman," she unloaded thrills and frustrations that felt like one's own.

As many critics have noted, it's not simply Copeland's voice that has earned her adoration around the globe. Onstage she was vibrant and earnest, her mood both intense and nonchalant. The glitter in her hair wasn't the only thing shining between songs. She was playful and affectionate, treating the faithful fan-based audience like old friends.

When she mentioned a track from her first record, "Turn The Heat Up," she added playfully, "But y'all probably have that album." She reflected on her many trips to Northampton as a teenager while performing with her father, the late Texas blues guitar legend, Johnny Clyde Copeland. Decorated with cheers, I-love-yous, and requests, she played the steamy set not only for the crowd, but also to the crowd.

Copeland proved she could also turn down the heat when she chilled bones with, "Love Scene." One could have choked on the passion expelled during this ballad as Shemekia lulled the crowd with, "Ready for my love scene/give you all the love I can/Ready for my love scene; I'm looking for a leading man."

Onstage four co-leading men comprised the Shemekia Copeland Blues Band. Solid yet loose, they were almost as enjoyable to watch as their leading woman. Late Night With Conan O'Brien guitarist Jimmy Vivino leads the quad, and was introduced by Copeland to the audience numerous times. Copeland highlighted her veteran status while introducing drummer Barry Harrison; she commented that they had played music together for over 10 years.

Wrestling the blues with a glistening forehead Copeland clarified to those in doubt that she was not simply the next Aretha Franklin, Etta James or Tina Turner, as many have presumed, but that she was the next Shemekia Copeland.

The most powerful piece Copeland delivered was not a heart-binding love song, but the sorrowful, self-penned, "Ghetto Child." An intense narrative about an impoverished boy running barefoot throughout a broken city, it is a portrait of the life Copeland witnessed growing up in Harlem. The most spell-binding moment of the night came here, before the encore or gracious good-byes. Copeland removed herself from the microphone, stepped off stage and glided throughout the audience grasping hands and exchangling smiles. The soul flowed from Copeland's full lips as she slowly and painfully chorused, "I'm just a ghetto child, in this so-called, free land." She ascended the stairs and weaving between tables she made her way to the balcony.

Voice bellowing and aura aglow she leaned causally and contented against the railing. She beamed throughout the club like a young star, knowing her light penetrated more than the darkness.

OM! explores both culture, storytelling

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

The Black Student Union presented the Oversoul Theatre Collective with its production of "OM! A Street Corner Griot's Play," last Friday night, on Feb. 9, from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium.

OM! is a play, based on the tradition of black humor, where comic storytelling and drama are part of the transformation ritual. This particular play was written and directed by Mwalim, the Artistic and Executive Director of the Oversoul Theatre Collectives, Inc. This non-profit organization promotes professional black and Native American arts and education, and strives to preserve the performing and visual arts traditions within these ethnic groups. The Board of Directors, as well as Mwalim, provides professional training, opportunities, and experiences in Mashpee, Falmouth, Barnstable and New Bedford, Mass. as well as some programming in New York City.

In this specific production, the cast consisted of Hariman Deetz, who played Marcus; Geno Monteiro, who played Doug; Joshua Sanchez, who played Wilson, and Mwalim, who played Oliver. The cast utilized the artistic skill of improvisation and engaged the audience in different messages coinciding with the theme of OM! Mwalim said the significance of OM! stems from its sound, which is the primal sound of the universe, and the original vibration of man and women. According to Mwalim, man associate this sound with the big bang.

"Some say it was an explosion," said Mwalim. "But, it was a vibration of the original people of the Earth."

Another important concept that Mwalim hoped to put forth through this production is the significance of story telling, and the impact that it has on history and reality.

"You learn things from stories, and conversations," said Mwalim. "That's how things are passed. Stories are coded language."

Throughout the play, the cast referred to different fables and stories from African and Native American tradition. They remarked upon how many of these stories are portrayed in the ideas of the present through sitcoms, movies and cartoons.

Mwalim also reminded the audience that choices and principles in life are essential to the everyday struggle of surviving. He said that much of the time citizens, especially people of color, don't realize that, systematically, people are told what they can and can't say.

"Almost everything we do is criminalized," said Mwalim. "When you are arrested you are told that you have the right to remain silent. They don't recite the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution when you are arrested. This limits your choices, when in reality a lot of life is about making choices."

At the same time, Mwalim took advantage of the impact of music, giving the audience a sense of history, pinpointing different times of emotional struggle and joy for people of color. Within the interludes, some jazz was played, as well as artists such as Talib Kweli, Mos Def, and The Roots.

Preceding the play, the audience engaged in a discussion concerning the different symbols, and how these different themes impacted those who watched it. Because the cast included much of their own life experiences within the production, many of the purposes and points were personal, and portrayed realities true for people of color in the cities, as well as rural environments.

The play ended up taking the audience through many cultural ideas, and explored many different possibilities for different realities. Mwalim felt that these aspects within jazz theater are very important and should be subject for consistent open dialogue.

"Jazz theater allows for much reality," said Mwalim. "All of the improv is a slightly different take, with the writing out, but the story is what is important. It allows for more reality, leaving the audience with a lot of critical consciousness."

Expected winners and the Oscar snubs

The seventy-third annual Oscar nominations were announced yesterday morning and the Roman Empire epic Gladiator led the way with 12 nominations. Gladiator nabbed nods in all the major categories including Best Picture, Best Director for Ridley Scott and Best Actor for its lead Russell Crowe.

BEST PICTURE

Gladiator, Traffic, Erin Brockovich, Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon, Chocolat.

My take: The obvious surprise here is Chocolat, which just goes to show what kind of marketing machine they have over there at Miramax. The low-budget comedy came out of nowhere to nab a nod here. Other than that, this year's crop just goes to show how Hollywood embraces big box office rather than quality film-making.

Gladiator made $186 million and Erin Brockovich easily cleared the $100 million barrier; however, neither film was anything more than enjoyable fluff. This is perhaps the worst crop of Best Picture nominations in 10 years. I cannot express my disappointment and seething frustration enough.

Snubs: I can think of at least ten films last year that were BETTER THAN both Gladiator and Erin Brockovich.

Only two of those are nominated here – those are Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon and Traffic. The fact that Almost Famous was not nominated here is simply a crime against humanity. One of the most enjoyable, heart-warming, genuine and best films of this year – and probably the last five – was simply disregarded. I am truly devastated and will honestly consider boycotting this year's ceremonies. If you are looking for more snubs, take your pick. These were all better than Gladiator and Erin Brockovich by a long shot: Quills, You Can Count on Me, Wonder Boys, Thirteen Days, The Virgin Suicides, Finding Forrester, Snatch.

The winner: Before I saw the nominations, I figured Gladiator would be nominated because of its bigness, but that Crouching Tiger, the critical darling, would triumph. After seeing the staggering number of nods for Gladiator though, I have to think it has the inside track here. Again, simply ridiculous.

BEST DIRECTOR

Stephen Daldry, Billy Elliot - Ang Lee, Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon - Steven Soderbergh, Traffic - Steven Soderbergh, Erin Brockovich - Ridley Scott, Gladiator

My take: This was the makeup category for Billy Elliot, which was apparently knocked out of the Best Picture category by its American counterpart, Chocolat. While Soderbergh's two nods are impressive, they are completely undeserved. Nominating him for Brockovich is like nominating Nora Ephron for You've Got Mail.

Snubs: You can take any of the director's from the above list and easily insert them here - Cameron Crowe (Famous) for some amazingly poignant scenes and some classic "movie" moments; Sophia Coppola (Suicides) for some amazingly genuine insights into adolescence and purity; or Kenneth Lonergan (Count on Me) for an amazingly realistic dissection of the adult brother/sister dynamic.

ADAM MARTIGNETTI

The winner: I would literally be shocked if Ang Lee does not win this category for his majestic Crouching Tiger, but then again, if Gladiator starts steamrolling every category, look for Scott to take home the award.

Best Actor

Javier Bardem, Before Night Falls - Russell Crowe, Gladiator - Tom Hanks, Cast Away - Ed Harris, Pollock - Geoffrey Rush, Quills.

My take: This may be Hanks' best chance to pick up his third Best Actor trophy yet, despie great turns in both Apollo 13 and Saving Private Ryan.

Russell Crowe's nomination is arguably a makeup for his not getting into last year's tough field despite a magnificent turn in The Insider. He does not deserve to be here though.

Snubs: Michael Douglas not getting a nod for Wonder Boys is a shame. The man goes and takes his best part in a very long time, does an absolutely wonderful, charming job with it and gets no reward. In my opinion, this was far and away the best acting job of the year.

The winner: I'd like to think that Geoffrey Rush would win, just so that a tragically overlooked film, Quills, gets some recognition. That said, I'd look for Ed Harris to pull an upset here. Neither of the big stars (Hanks nor Crowe) did a good enough job to merit serious consideration.

BEST ACTRESS

Joan Allen, The Contender - Juliette Binoche, Chocolat - Ellen Burstyn, Requiem for a Dream - Laura Linney, You Can Count On Me - Julia Roberts, Erin Brockovich.

My take: This is a much harder category for me as I did not see three of the films (Requiem for a Dream, Chocolat or The Contender). The sad thing is that Julia Roberts had this award wrapped up way back in March. Big star does sappy, engaging role, makes big money. Take that to the bank. It's nice to see Laura Linney nominated.

Snubs: There are no obvious snubs in an already weak field, which is why Allen probably ended up with a nomination for a film that was neither critically lauded nor wildly popular. I would like to say that despite the genre, namely thriller, Cate Blanchett was divine in The Gift.

The winner: If Julia Roberts doesn't win, then this will go down as the greatest Oscar upset in history.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Jeff Bridges, The Contender - Willem Dafoe, Shadow of the Vampire - Benicio Del Toro, Traffic - Albert Finney, Erin Brockovich - Joaquin Phoenix, Gladiator

My take: If Phoenix was going to be nominated at all, it should have been for Quills. His immature turn in Gladiator was an absolute joke. Albert Finney seems like this year's Michael Caine – almost a nomination for his entire body of work rather than this particular film.

Snubs: Tobey Maguire gets shafted again, this time around for his supporting role in Wonder Boys.

Maguire, one of Hollywood's best up-and-comers, has an understatement, restraint and sense of timing that simply make him a pleasure to watch onscreen. He belongs here. Mark Ruffalo not being nominated for You Can Count on Me is also quite sobering. His performance as the troubled brother turned adopted father is quite simply stunning. The movie is worth seeing for him alone. He's that good.

The winner: The desperately under appreciated Del Toro walks away with this category for his stunning job as a disillusioned Mexican police officer. If you're looking for an upset, then Dafoe's your man. Shadow doesn't work without him. Any other year and he probably takes the Oscar home.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Judi Dench, Chocolat - Marcia Gay Harden Pollock - Kate Hudson, Almost Famous - Frances McDormand, Almost Famous - Julie Walters, Billy Elliot

My take: Finally some respect. Almost Famous gets two nods here, and deservedly so. Both Hudson and McDormand are wonderful in their respective roles. I'd also say that one of the two is probably going to win, since both performances were impressive enough to receive nods.

Snubs: Frances McDormand. Personally, I think the always wonderful McDormand deserved a nod for Wonder Boys as well. Why not? I mean they put the overrated Soderbergh in the same category twice, why not the underrated McDormand?

The winner: Kate Hudson. If they released just her scenes from Almost Famous on DVD, I would buy it and watch it endlessly. I can only think of a few, rare instances where I've been drawn in by an actor or actress as much as Hudson in Famous. She was angelic, charming, mysterious, vulnerable and absolutely perfect. The word goddess comes to mind.

BEST ORIGINAL SCREENPLAY

Cameron Crowe, Almost Famous - Lee Hall, Billy Elliot - Susannah Grant, Erin Brockovich - David Franzoni and John Logan and William Nicholson, Gladiator - Kenneth Lonergan, You Can Count On Me.

My take: Give me a minute while I laugh at the fact that Erin Brockovich was nominated in this category. The entire movie was all jokes about breasts and blow jobs. The fact that it took three people to write Gladiator should eliminate that on principle alone. Three people?!

Snubs: No glaringly obvious ones. Small Time Crooks? Sunshine?

The winner: I absolutely adored You Can Count on Me and in almost any other year that would be my pick. I think Crowe wins this though as compensation for his monumental achievement, which should have garnered a lot more attention – critically and publicly – than it did.

Turn to OSCARS, page 9

Think you don't have time for community service...Think again!!!
Come Check out S.H.A.R.E.
Students Helping Area Reach Out Efforts
A laid-back community service R.S.O.
First meeting with food at 504 Goodell on Thursday Feb. 15th at 8 pm
Questions? Come to Office #423A

BUFFALO

low rise frayed jean.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

VALENTINE'S DINNER SPECIALS
2001
FILET MIGNON
Chambord red wine demi glaze
$17.95
NEW YORK SIRLOIN
Three pepper cognac sauce
$14.95
SWORDFISH
Ancho chili pepper sauce
$13.95
SHRIMP SCAMPI
Garlic lemon butter
$13.95
CHICKEN PICATTA
Lemon Butter and capers
$11.95
ANGEL HAIR POMODORA
Garlic, basil, tomatoes
$9.95
BAKED STUFFED SHRIMP
Crabmeat Stuffing
$14.95
BAKED SCALLOPS
Butter and white wine
$12.95
Phone: 549-1200
Serving Dinner 5:00-9:30

THE RESORT AT GLACIER
ST MARY LODGE
Summer
Glacier National Park, Montana
The Resort at Glacier St. Mary Lodge
Be a part of the team!
1-800-368-3689 Apply Online @ glacierparkjobs.

jostens
TO PURCHASE YOUR OFFICIAL UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASS RING
A Jostens representative will be on campus
Wednesday, Thursday, Friday
February 14, 15, 16
10am - 2pm Outside the University Store.
$50 DEPOSIT REQUIRED
MAJOR CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED

■ Oscars

continued from page 8

BEST ADAPTED SCREENPLAY

Robert Nelson Jacobs, Chocolat - Wang Hui Ling and James Schamus and Tsai Kuo Jung, Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon - Ethan Coen & Joel Coen, O Brother, Where Art Thou? - Stephen Gaghan, Traffic - Steve Kloves, Wonder Boys.

My take: Well they managed to get Wonder Boys one nomination – how generous. Since, the big boys (Gladiator, Brockovich) are not here I'd say the way is paved for Tiger.

Snubs: Since Quills was depressingly overlooked in other categories, I figured that Philip Kauffman would at least be recognized for an ingenious, calculating screenplay. No such luck.

The winner: I'd love to see Kloves take it for his charming, funny and honest depiction of writers. However, the Crouching Tiger team put together one of the most well written, beautiful hours of film that I have ever witnessed. The way the storylines entwine at the end of the film is super-impressive and deserving of the Oscar.

Adam Martignetti is Collegian columnist.

Disney Internships.
Opening Doors Now.
WALT DISNEY WORLD® College Program
Open the door to your future with an internship at the Walt Disney World Resort. Network with Disney Management. Make amazing friendships. And earn crucial real-world experience. The key to your future is now.
Visit us at wdwcollegeprogram.com for more info. Then go to the presentation and interview for the internship of your dreams!
2/28/01 7:00pm
School of Management, 120
Walt Disney World COLLEGE PROGRAM
wdwcollegeprogram.com

The Umass Oxford Summer Seminar offers talented students an exceptional opportunity to study British literature, history, politics and law in a six-week residential program at Trinity College, Oxford. Interested students are invited to attend an information meeting and discussion about the 2001 seminar.
Date: Thursday, February 15
Time: 4:30-6:30 pm
Place: Campus Center 803
Alums from last summer's Seminar will describe their experiences and program administrators will describe next summer's seminar. For brochure or answers to questions, contact the Seminar via e-mail at:
oxford@english.umass.edu

HAIR CUTS NOW WITH KATE
$20
(Wrds. & Sat.)
ERIC SCOT
79 south pleasant street
Amherst
413 256 3440
Experience the art of hair for less.

Housing Services: Residence Life is now accepting applications for the Assistant Residence Director Position
for the 2001 - 2002 academic year
Assistant Residence Directors (ARDs) are live-in graduate student staff members working in the Department of Housing Services: Residence Life. The ARD serves as an active and visible residence hall staff member and participates in student development, community development, leadership development, activity development, administration, policy enforcement, crisis management, and staff development. All ARDs are expected to participate in comprehensive pre-service orientation programs, as well as in ongoing in-service training. The ARD position is a 30-hour per week assistantship for the 38-week academic year (8/12/01 - 12/22/01, 1/16/02 - 5/28/02) Compensation for the position includes a stipend (approximately $12,500), tuition waiver, and a furnished apartment (valued at $4200.00).
For More Information:
Attend the ARD Information Session
Wednesday, February 21
7:00pm
Campus Center 803
or Contact
Dawn Briggs
Residence Life Business Manager
413-545-6923
To Apply:
Submit a Resume, Cover Letter, and Three Letters of Reference to:
Assistant Residence Director Search Committee
207 Berkshire House
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
Priority Deadline is March 26, 2001

Collegian Arts: Can I kick it?

Unplanned Pregnancy?
CALL ALTERNATIVES
• Information
• Options Counseling
• Support

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

SMOOTHE LEWIS LIVE AT THE PUB!
10-1
Jammin' to techno funk originals including your favorite Rolling Stones, Greatful Dead and Phish covers and much more!
18 + welcome
THE PUB
21 + to drink

UMass RUGBY
THE sport, THE game
THE people, THE best
Become part of a tradition
Play UMass Rugby
Info Meeting
Thursday, Feb 15
Men's Rm. 162 Campus Center @ 7PM
Women's Rm. 51 Goessman @6PM
For more info, call Matt @ 549-6468 or Ellen @ 549-9403

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Utilities Free Minutes from UMass. Available April 1 $700 a month 665-3521

1 Bedroom Apartment at Cliffside. In Sunderland for sublet thru May. $600 reduced from $720 Call 549-6408

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 Nissan Maximaloaded 160,000 miles. $2500 413-323-5390

1991 Honda Civic SI low mileage. Great condition. Call Erica 253-6504

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained. $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition. $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

90 Geo Prizm automatic, new radiator, new axels, great condition. Well maintained, 132,000miles asking $2790 582-0239

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

CHILDCARE

Babysitter with references and own car. Needed for evenings. 256-3756

8-10hrs per week for 5 & 9 yr old. Must have experience, references & car. Jamie 549-7788

COMPUTERS

Mac G4, 450 MHZ 20 GBHD, 128 MB Ram, DVD/56k modem, zip drive, 17" studio display monitor, Epson Stylus 740 printer, games, DVD movies. (mint condition) Market price $2600, asking $2100. Mike 665-3572

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for : Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama, Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.camp-waynegirls.com

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Care Attendant for disabled man $10. 413-253-0415

PCA for Male Quad. Mon-Fri. morning $10-$12 perhr. 546-0666

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

Single Dad and business owner too busy to do everything. I need help! Shopping, light cleaning, errands, bills, etc. Compensation negotiable. Very part-time, flexible schedule. Need to have car. Phone # 413-253-4642 ask for James

EMPLOYMENT

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life

5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

More Than Just Summer Employment Independent Lake Camp

Camp Counselors needed for a private residential camp in the beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Volleyball, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theatre, Dance, Video, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Skateboarding, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Ropes Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving and More. Call 1-800-399-CAMP ask for Dan or Nigel. www.independent-lake.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161 Call 253-2378

Speakers: 12" woofers, 5" liquid cooled mid-range, horn tweeters, 125watt powerful, only has about 20 hours of play time. Call Rory 253-3434 $299/pr

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Near UMass. Quiet setting. No smoking vegetarian kitchen. Car needed. $325+ 549-4853

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female Seeking roommate for Amherst apt. Cheap rent. Call 256-6244

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TICKETS FOR SALE

One Barenaket Ladies Floor Seat Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TRAVEL

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplash-tours.com 1-800-426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break! Last Minute Deals! Cancun, Bahamas, Florida, Jamaica & Mazatlan. Join MTV and Baywatch for Spring Break! Call for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.spring-breakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

9 - HSCN Bulletin Board
8 - CBS 8 Boston
8 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - FOX 25 Springfield
7 - NBC 5 Burlington
5 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - PBS 24 Hartford
13 - PBS/WB Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - CNBC/TV Landmark Channel
16 - WB 56 New Haven
17 - Islanders
18 - PBS NE
19 - UPN/TV 40 (Updated Channels)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Classic Sports
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifestyles
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - A&E
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - ESPN
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - BET
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 14, 2001

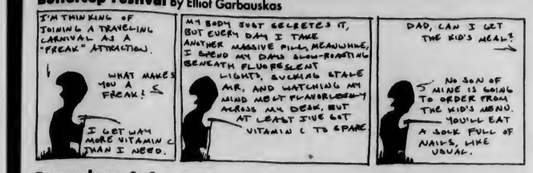
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	G. Auriemma	Women's College Basketball: Rutgers at Connecticut. (Live)				World of National Geographic		Bob Marley, Rebel Music: American
WFSB	3	CBS News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Bette (N)	Welcome-N.Y.	"Haven" (2001, Drama) Natasha Richardson, Anne Bancroft.			News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Bette (N)	Welcome-N.Y.	"Haven" (2001, Drama) Natasha Richardson, Anne Bancroft.			News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	Once and Again (In Stereo)	News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek "Four Stories"		Jack & Jill "Pressure Points"		News	Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Ed "Valentine's Day" (In Stereo)		West Wing "The War at Home"		Law & Order "Phobia" (N)	News	Tonight Show
WTXX	4	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Dawson's Creek "Four Stories"		Jack & Jill "Pressure Points"		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Ed "Valentine's Day" (In Stereo)		West Wing "The War at Home"		Law & Order "Phobia" (N)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Barbra Streisand – Timeless (N) (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Ed "Valentine's Day" (In Stereo)		West Wing "The War at Home"		Law & Order "Phobia" (N)	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		World of National Geographic		Mark Russell	Bob Marley, Rebel Music: American		Charlie Rose	(In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	Once and Again (In Stereo)	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	7 Days "The First Freshman"		Star Trek: Voyager "The Void"		Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Friends	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	11	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Blood Is Thicker"		Biography: Jamie Lee Curtis		American Justice: Killing Field		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Stolen Years"
CNN	22	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	20	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★ "Love Potion No. 9" (1992, Comedy) Tela Donovan.				South Park	TV Funhouse	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	69	Wild Discovery "Bear Attack"		Wild Discovery: Polar Bear		World's Largest Hotel		Ancient Inventions		Deadline Discovery (N)		Justice Files
ESPN	21	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Duke at Virginia. (Live)				College Basketball: Notre Dame at Rutgers. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	69	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Faith Hill"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Blue Rodeo" (1996, Drama) Ann-Margret, Kris Kristofferson.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Making-Video	Ultra Sound	Cribs			Tom Green "Cancer Special"		Andy Dick's		Ultra Sound	Undressed
NICK	32	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	31	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Strange Relations"		"Babylon 5: River of Souls" (1998) Tracy Scoggins. (In Stereo)				UFOs: Best Evidence-on Tape		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	23	Critical Incident: Shock		Extreme Machines				Ultimate Ten, the Machines (N)				Ultimate Ten, the Machines
TNT	65	ER "ER Confidential" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Unhappy Landings"		NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at Philadelphia 76ers. (In Stereo Live)				NBA		★★★ "The Dead Zone" (1983)
USA	63	Walker, Texas Ranger "Rodeo"		JAG "The King of the Fleas"		Nash Bridges "Out of Chicago"		★★ "Sudden Death" (1995, Drama) Jean-Claude Van Damme.				Merlin	Merlin
HBO	51	(5:00) ★ "Wild Wild West" (1999)		★½ "Oscar" (1991, Comedy) Sylvester Stallone. PG-13				Sex and City	Arliss			On the Record (N)
MAX	45	(5:45) ★★ "Never Been Kissed" (1999) PG-13		★★★ "The Bridges of Madison County" (1995, Drama) Clint Eastwood. PG-13						★½ "Three to Tango" (1999) Matthew Perry.		Passion Cove
SHOW	55	"A Storm in Summer" (2000, Drama) Peter Falk. (In Stereo)				Filmmaker	Filmmaker	Filmmaker	Filmmaker	Soul Food (N)	Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)	"Just Ticket"

Buttercup Festival By Elliot Garbauskas

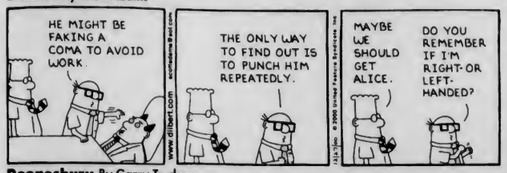


I'M THE KING OF INVENTING A TRAGICALLY CARNIVAL AS A "FREAK" ATTRACTION.
WHAT MAKES YOU A FREAK?
I GET WAY MORE VITAMIN C THAN I NEED.
MY BODY SORT SECRETES IT, BUT EVERY DAY I TAKE ANOTHER MASSIVE PILL, MEANWHILE, I SPEND MY DAYS ALONE-ROAMING BENEATH FLUORESCENT LIGHTS, SUCKING STALE AIR, AND WATCHING MY MUSCLE MASS PLUMMET AWAY ACROSS MY DESK, BUT AT LEAST I'VE GOT VITAMIN C TO SPARE.
DAD, CAN I GET THE KID'S MEAL?
NO SON OF MINE IS GOING TO ORDER FROM THE KID'S MENU. YOU'LL EAT A SOCK FULL OF NAILS, LIKE USUAL.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

NOT ALL BLACK LAWMAKERS WERE UNIMPRESSED. I SPOKE WITH CONGRESSMAN CLYDE MENTANA AS HE LEFT THE WHITE HOUSE.
HE WAS GREAT! I CAN SEE WHY A MINORITY OF AFRICAN-AMERICANS SUPPORT HIM! HIS CRITICS ARE A STORM...
...AND HE PROVE IT BY TREATING PEDRO LIKE AN HONORABLE ADVERSARY!
SO YOU DIDN'T MIND BEING ASKED FOR A DRINK?
NOT AT ALL. THE LIGHTING WAS BAD.
ITS SO BRAVE OF HIM!
WOW! HE'S REALLY ON BOARD! ISN'T HE?
HE!

Dilbert By Scott Adams



HE MIGHT BE FAKING A COMA TO AVOID WORK.
THE ONLY WAY TO FIND OUT IS TO PUNCH HIM REPEATEDLY.
MAYBE WE SHOULD GET ALICE.
DO YOU REMEMBER IF I'M RIGHT-OR LEFT-HANDED?
www.dilbert.com

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

AS A RECORD SNOWFALL BLANKETS COON RAPIDS...
SIR? I KNOW YOU'RE OUT HERE SOMEWHERE!
I'M SORRY I RAN OUT ON YOU, SIR! THE CAMPAIGN WAS TOO MUCH FOR ME! I THOUGHT WE'D REACHED THE END OF THE ROAD!
BUT I'VE COME TO SEE I WAS WRONG. SIR... THAT WE ALWAYS BELONGED TOGETHER!
MUST...STAY...PERFECTLY... STILL SIR?

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

HOLY COW! CAN THIS BE?!
TODAY'S LUNCH ACTUALLY RESEMBLES REAL FOOD!
SLICED TURKEY... PEAS AND CARROTS... CHOCOLATE PUDDING...
A FIRST! CONGRATULATIONS!
THANKS. ENJOY YOUR SPAGHETTI.

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Keep a safe distance from anything or anyone that appears even remotely threatening today. You may be uncertain and vulnerable.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Today will be fast-paces day, marked by a series of surprise events that have you reeling at first, and then enjoying unexpected rewards.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You can complete a job ahead of schedule today and get a head on start on something that is bound to be more difficult and time-consuming.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Now is no time to add fuel to an already threatening emotional fire. Today, you'll want to be more understanding and sympathetic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Put yourself in another's shoes today and you'll benefit from a different – though temporary – perspective. Consider being more tolerant.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Someone is bound to find you attractive, intriguing and even mysterious today. You may get more attention than you know what to do with!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – What you do in private will be more valuable to you in the long run today than anything you share with others. Certain things must remain secret!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Working overtime today is not advised, for there are more things for you to address than you can accomplish simply by staying on the job.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may be in no mood to socialize today, but your work will demand that you mix and mingle with those who share your professional aspirations.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may feel threatened today by someone who does not mean you any harm. It could be that you are feeling vulnerable in other areas.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – A member of the opposite sex is likely to play a pivotal and highly unexpected role in your affair. Don't react inappropriately. Interesting.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Changes that you want may not be desirable to a close friend or loved one. Talk may be cheap – but it's the only way to solve the problem!

Kampus Kid By Adam Souliere

Why do you have a giant scarecrow in your dorm room?
I set it up to stare back at kids who walk by your room and stare in.
Give 'em something to gawk at...

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HI, ROB. HAVE I MENTIONED HOW SHINY YOUR HAIR LOOKS TODAY? AND HOW YOU SMELL LIKE FOOD?
GOOD FOOD. THAT IS. LIKE "HAM."
WHAT ARE YOU AFTER, BUCKY?
ROB! I'M NOT "AFTER" ANYTHING! I'M JUST YOU KNOW. UM. HANGIN'.
OF COURSE. IF YOU HAPPEN TO HAVE A FEW EXTRA BUCKS ON YOU, I-GO AWAY, MAN.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

GUYS. WE HAVE TO TALK.
WHAT'S WRONG? WHAT HAPPENED?
I DIDN'T DO IT.
"AN-I-MAL TOOTH-PASTE" WOW! JUST LIKE PEOPLE!
OF COURSE YOU KNOW THIS MEANS WAR.

Quote of the Day

"Love may not make the world go around, but I must admit that it makes the ride worthwhile."

–Sean Connery

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Corned Beef & Cabbage (B, F, W)

Eggplant Parmesan (vegan) (B, H, W)

Garden Chili (vegan)

Reuben Sandwich (H)

DINNER

Beef Tacos

Chicken Tacos

Greek Style Tofu (vegan) (B, H, W)

Vegan Tacos (vegan)

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 30	HIGH: 47 LOW: 20	HIGH: 37 LOW: 25

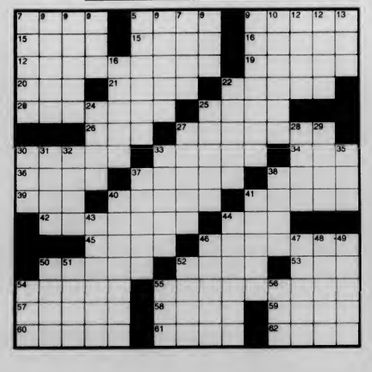
AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Wed. Francisco Hernandez Latin Guitar 6-9pm
Thurs. Kazooke $3 Cover
Sat. Ben Swift Blues $3 Cover
Sun. Chris Kozak Quartet Jazz no Cover
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst 413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS
1 Hurried
5 Locale
9 Dis
14 Woodwind
15 Jai —
16 Chose
17 Winter crystal
19 Gushes (out)
20 Electric —
21 Heitz rival
22 Cyclotron targets
23 Bushed
25 Prickly seeds
26 TV accessory
27 Nursing concern
30 Fine mist
33 Stair post
34 Rower's need
36 Eager
37 Grinding tooth
38 Tijuana coin
39 Vote for
40 In good time
41 Thought about
42 Stipulation
44 Forbid
45 Stripe
46 Spock and Seuss
50 Skate
52 Alpha follower
53 Mauna —
54 Unsuspecting
55 Decorative papers
57 Singing Chipmunk
58 Mock butter
59 Gorillas
60 Meadow sound
61 Semester
62 Sly

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

C	O	B	B		R	A	J	A		W	E	A	V	E
A	M	U	R		C	R	A	M		R	E	L	A	X
S	O	L	O		D	I	M	E		P	E	N	E	E
T	O	B	A	C	C	O		N	O	T	I	C	E	S
				D	R	A	W	A	B	L	E
M	A	D	E	U	P		S	C	I	S	S	O	R	S
A	L	A	R	M		A	S	H	E		T	A	U	T
X	I	V		B	O	N		E	S	T		S	I	R
I	B	I	S		L	O	S	T		A	R	E	N	A
M	I	D	P	O	I	N	T		P	R	I	S	S	Y
			G	A	R	B	O		S	H	O	O	T
G	A	R	N	I	S	H		E	S	T	U	A	R	Y
I	M	A	G	E		S	O	U	L		A	S	E	A
G	A	V	E	L		L	E	E	R		T	I	E	N
S	H	E	D	S		D	E	N	S		S	A	L	K

DOWN
1 Gave medicine
2 Dogpatch name
3 Do-re-mi
4 Church seat
5 Tray
6 Kit material
7 Shade trees
8 Dead heat
9 Air passage
10 Lock horns with
11 Piece of news
12 Basses or horns
13 Begley and Harris
18 Imagine
22 Ice-fishing tool
24 Dreaded czar
25 Path
27 "Hi!"
28 Projections
29 Let up
30 Moon's place
31 Chirp
32 Blast
33 Vikings
35 Singer Stewart
37 Lobster supplier
38 Football option
40 Obvious
41 Parrot
43 Singer Newton-John
44 Underside
46 Put off
47 Giraffe's cousin
48 Drive away
49 Smart-mouthed
50 Nerve
51 Not taped
52 Liver's output
54 Snare
56 Fetched
58 Uncooked



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Augusto Landauro, Kara Stokes

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, February 14, 2001 | 12

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

THE X-FACTOR

UMass and Xavier: Atlantic 10's elite?

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Ask any member of the Massachusetts men's basketball team who will be standing when the smoke clears from the Atlantic 10 regular season, and the answer comes without hesitation:

The Minutemen.

A quick check of the conference standings has UMass in third place, with frontrunner St. Joseph's the only team in the top five still unbeaten by the Maroon and White. So that would leave the Hawks as the clear-cut last hurdle for UMass, right?

Wrong.

"I don't care what anybody says," head coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "I still think Xavier is the best team in the league."

Which means that tonight's showdown with the Musketeers at the William D. Mullins Center could be, for all practical purposes, a championship preview. A UMass win would give the Minutemen (10-11, 8-2 A-10) a regular-season sweep of XU, a share of first place in the league and a solid shot at wrapping up the conference crown on Feb. 27 at St. Joe's.

But on the other side of the coin, it's far from do-or-die for Flint's force with six games remaining on the regular-season slate. The A-10 is essentially a logjam at the top, and Flint appeared set to spend as much time eyeballing the conference scoreboard last night as he did scrutinizing game film.

"It's not make or break for the regular season yet," Flint said yesterday. "The first four teams are still all bunched up. Temple plays St. Joe's tonight, so we have no idea what's going to happen there."

REMAINING SCHEDULE

TONIGHT	7:30PM
XAVIER
FEB 17	1 PM
TEMPLE
FEB 20	9:30PM
RHODE ISLAND
FEB 24	2 PM
@GEORGE WASHINGTON
FEB 27	9:30 PM
@ ST. JOSEPHS
MAR 3	NOON
ST. BONAVENTURE

All other A-10 adversaries aside, UMass faces a formidable foe in the Musketeers (18-4, 9-2 A-10). Skip Prosser's posse has rung up some impressive wins this season, including a 69-67 stunner over then-No. 18 Cincinnati on Dec. 14 and an 86-73 humbling of St. Joe's (the Hawks' only A-10 loss) on Jan. 20.

One game, however, probably sticks in the Musketeers' minds more than the rest: a 75-64 defeat on Jan. 9 in their own Cintas Center, their first and only home loss of the season and a setback that snapped a six-game winning streak for XU.

The top scorer in that game? XU's sophomore forward David West, with a career-high 28 points. The top rebounder? West again, with 11 caroms. Most free throws made? West. Steals? West.

The winner? UMass.

"Tonight they came in and played with a lot more pride than we did," West said afterward. "Tonight we lost, so [the number] mean nothing to me."

Needless to say, payback will undoubtedly be the single biggest part of Xavier's game plan tonight. West and company have made their money this season as a run-and-gun squad, but seemed to grow cement shoes against the bigger front line of the Minutemen.

UMass racked up a 41-25 rebounding edge over the course of the win, and held every Musketeer but West to single-digit scoring (the team is undefeated in games when it gets three double-digit scorers). By keeping Xavier in a half-court offense, the Minutemen were able to capitalize on their size and control the game's tempo.

"We can rebound on them, and we can get inside on them," Flint said. "But we won't run with them, and I think that was the biggest thing."

Another massive component to besting a transition team is limiting turnovers; something the Minutemen did over much of the early goings at the Cintas but struggled with down the stretch (they finished with 19 giveaways). Prosser employed a scheme of pressing and trapping to try and force UMass into miscues, and Flint foresees his sixth-year counterpart using the same basic game plan tonight.

"I expect them to do the same thing defensively," Flint said. "They haven't been pressing as much this season, but I expect them to try and pressure the ball against us. We have to take great care of the ball; they're good at converting those [turnovers] and they want to get you into a fast-paced game."

But instead of running, UMass will look to stand its ground on the brand new hardwood floor of the Mullins and go toe-to-toe with Xavier. And should the Minutemen manage a knockout of the mighty Musketeers, there will be one less team standing between the Maroon and White and a regular-season conference crown.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Which Micah Brand will show up for the Minutemen's game tonight against Xavier: the giant who dropped 23 points on Dayton last Tuesday or the non-factor who managed only six points in the first UMass - XU showdown on Jan. 9?

Hoop superheroes could spell victory

ADAM WHITE

They're not mutants. They have no special powers, no cool costumes and no bald mastermind calling the shots from a wheelchair.

In other words, these aren't the X-Men you might be used to.

This band of heroes fights the villains of Atlantic 10 men's basketball, struggling to win back ultimate glory for the University of Massachusetts. Like their comic book counterparts, UMass' X-Men each contribute a special gift, a unique ability that makes the team nearly unbeatable in conference play.

"We don't have one guy who is the x-factor," said sophomore Micah Brand. "We have a whole group of guys, who fill in the blanks and do all the little things we need to win."

The 6-foot-11 Brand is one guy counted on by coach James "Bruiser" Flint to do the BIG things, especially in the paint against the typically smaller front lines of the A-10. Together with Monty Mack, Kitwana Rhymer and Shannon Crooks, Brand helps form the team's offensive nucleus that is integral in most games. But what about when an especially dangerous foe enters the scene, as is the case tonight when Xavier invades the William D. Mullins Center?

That's when the call goes out for the X-Men.

"We have the guys to go to offensively in myself, Monty, Kit and Shannon," Brand said. "But we also have the other guys, who come in and do the extras, providing the right chemistry for us to do what we've got to do. Guys like Jackie, Jonathan and Winston."

The heroes Brand speaks of are Jackie Rogers, Jonathan DePina and Winston Smith. All three have areas of the game at which they excel, facets at which they can dominate to help their more heralded brethren achieve victory. While no one member of this group will single-handedly sway the outcome of a game, together they have spelled the difference in a number of the team's best outings this season.

ATLANTIC 10 CONFERENCE STANDINGS

ST. JOSEPHS	9-1
XAVIER	8-3
UMASS	8-3
TEMPLE	6-3
DAYTON	6-3
ST. BONAVENTURE	5-4
LA SALLE	4-5
GEORGE WASHINGTON	4-6
FORDHAM	3-7
DUQUESNE	1-10
RHODE ISLAND	1-10

"Jumping Jack" – Junior forward Rogers has shown an amazing ability to come off the bench and dominate down low with his athleticism and quickness. He has notched four double-digit scoring showcases on the season, three of which came in UMass victories (16 points versus both Dayton and Fordham, 13 against Rhode Island).

No. 2 has also been number one on the team in rebounding on three occasions, and his 29 offensive boards are one short of second on the team.

"The Blur" – When it comes to quickness and ballhandling, senior pointman DePina may be without peer in the A-10. The Minutemen rely on the 5-foot-9 floor general to orchestrate their offense not only when Crooks is on the bench, but also as the chief distributor in their three-guard set.

Those skills will be critical tonight against the fast-break friendly Musketeers, who rely heavily on the guard tandem of Romain Sato and Maurice McAfee (a combined 21.2 points per game).

"We really need to contain and control their guards," DePina said of stopping Xavier. "We need to stay in control, and not get into a rat race with them."

That very tactic worked wonders in the teams' first meeting this year, when Sato and McAfee were held to a combined 10 points on 2-of-11 shooting from the field. DePina and his backcourt mates also did a bang-up job of protecting the basketball, committing only four turnovers (two each by DePina and Mack) total.

"We didn't make too many mistakes, too many turnovers that led to layups," DePina said. "We kept their guards in front of us, kept them from running and penetrating too much."

Lest DePina forget, they also kept Xavier from winning.

"Scrap" – Though his scoring line doesn't always turn heads, fifth-year senior Smith may be the team's best player when it comes to all-out hustle – "scrap," as Flint likes to call it. The tri-captain has led the team in steals on seven separate occasions, and in rebounds and assists twice each.

His two biggest rebounding nights also came against two of the team's toughest opponents: North Carolina (a career-high 14 boards) and – you guessed it – Xavier (11).

Flint credited not only his swingman's glass prowess against XU, but also his tenacious on-the-ball defense.

"Winston did a great job not only rebounding the ball, but also defensively," Flint said after the win. "He was great against [Lloyd] Price, and against Sato when they put him in at the three."

So whatever the Musketeers throw at the Minutemen tonight, there is no question that the home team will have the manpower to persevere. There is only the issue of which X-Men will be needed, which heroes will be called upon to provide a supercharge to the Maroon and White.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 82 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, February 15, 2001

Freddy Prinze Jr. is head over heels in his new movie. Check out the review inside Arts.

ARTS p. 9

UMass again won in a key situation, this time led by Jonathan DePina who came up big despite his small stature. Read all about it on the back page.

SPORTS p. 14

Part two of two in a series.

Looking towards the future

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Member's of SGA's embattled ALANA caucus at a meeting earlier this week discussing the future of the appointed student representatives. ALANA's appointed seats were eliminated last year by three Senate votes. The issue will come to a student vote during this Spring's President and Trustee elections.

Are there solutions to ALANA's decline?

By Jen Eastwood
Collegian Columnist

ALANA (African American, Latin, Asian American and Native American) students only make up 17% of the student body of the University of Massachusetts. While questions continue to circulate over why this percentage is so low, the search for a solution on how to increase the numbers of students of color is a complicated process.

"Where are they [the university] recruiting students?" Asked Natalie Transtamar a junior who's the President of Haitian American Student Association (HASA), a university Registered Student Organization (RSO). "I feel that if they [the university] went into inner cities, they could easily find people who would meet all the requirements."

Treasurer of HASA Senior Farah Victor agreed with her colleague. "The question is do they make the effort to go out and recruit ALANA students," she said.

Dean of Enrollment Services Joseph Marshall responded that forces working against admissions policies for ALANA students make it hard to keep the numbers of students of color running high, such as the court ruling made during the 1998 "Boston Latin' case which declared that no student could be admitted to a Massachusetts school on the basis of race.

While ALANA enrollment for the freshmen class of 1999 did take a dramatic plunge down to 14.9% of the class, Marshall expressed his relief that the numbers did not drop even lower.

"After the ruling, we predicted that ALANA enrollment would drop to about 12%," he noted, "and we've been working hard to keep that percentage from dropping lower."

Marshall reported that Enrollment Services reviews new statistical data every year in hopes of finding better ways to encourage ALANA students to come to UMass. He claimed, "We've set up a new wing in Enrollment Services in Outreach and overhauled scholarships."

Still, the debate rages on as to whether or not these actions are enough to make a dramatic difference in the numbers. Rene Gonzalez, a Senior Legal Studies major does not believe so.

According to Gonzalez, it all comes down to where the funding is distributed. He believes that instead of cutting funds for ALANA programs, such as the English As a Second Language program, the university should cut spending on programs that are less important to student enrollment, such as PeopleSoft and the Distance Learning program.

According to the Striving for Excellence university website, the implementation of PeopleSoft involves a shift from the current two-step course registration system to a one-step registration system, allowing students to receive immediate feedback on course openings and offer a waiting list for oversubscribed classes.

Furthermore, the system offers enhanced connections between the Registrar and their offices, resulting in more accurate bills for graduate students and part time undergraduates who are billed on a pre-credit basis as well as allowing for automated Financial Aid Office packaging for continuing education, part-time, graduate, and exchange students who have all had their packages previously assembled manually.

While this system may appeal to some, Gonzalez has looked at other universities to see if the results are as reassuring as the proposals. "PeopleSoft has failed as four or five different institutions," he said, "and the last I heard, it's already four times over budget."

In addition, under the PeopleSoft system, both Housing Services and Admissions will keep their current computer systems and not use the PeopleSoft software.

"Because data entry in PeopleSoft is significantly slower than in the previous system, Undergrad Admission staff may type inquiry and applicant data into the web application for downloading into PeopleSoft rather than into

Turn to ALANA, page 2

In attempt to save, Earthfoods to allow utensils to biodegrade

By Tanya Mannes
Collegian Staff

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students check out prices at the now even more enviornmentally friendly Earthfoods.

A pilot plan to use compostable utensils at Earthfoods has significantly impacted the amount of landfill waste they generate. By the end of the semester, the collective will also begin using biodegradable plates.

Since last fall, the vegetarian collective has been using utensils made from environment-friendly cornstarch and cottonseed oil. Large signs ask customers to throw the forks, knives and spoons, along with food waste and napkins, into compost bins. During the spring 2000 semester, Earthfoods generated an average of between 2,500 and 2,800 pounds of compost per month, which has nearly doubled since the introduction of the new utensils.

"Last [fall 2000] semester, we saw an average of 4,000 pounds of compost per month," said Lorenzo Macaluso, Special Projects Coordinator at the Office of Waste Management. "But the real difference is in volume. Some of the stuff doesn't weigh much, but would take up a lot of space in a landfill."

By volume, the monthly amount of compost, which is processed at the Intermediate Processing Facility near Mather Career Center, has increased three-fold. The amount of compost reflects solid waste that ordinarily would go into a landfill.

The finished compost is available to members of the UMass community for one dollar a bucket, or 30 dollars for a small truckload.

Because the utensils are around three times as expensive as plastic ones, some Earthfoods staff expressed worry about the necessary price increase. For the duration of the semester-long pilot program, the Office of Waste Management is splitting the cost with Earthfoods. However, if the collective continues to order them beyond the duration of the program, it will have to find a way to cover the cost difference.

Collective members responded with relief to a recent survey by the Office of Waste Management, which revealed that nearly all the customers would be willing to pay extra for the biodegradable utensils.

"Of the people in Earthfoods that responded, 97 percent would pay an additional 5 to 10 cents each [for the utensils]," said Macaluso.

"If we were to charge a nickel a fork, it would be awkward, but it would be great," said collective member Christopher Dodes, a senior Sociology major. "The study shows people are willing to do it."

By May, the group expects a shipment of biodegradable plates to replace the polyethylene-coated paper plates that they use now, which they believe will further decrease the amount of trash they produce.

The new plates are made in China from sugarcane and other reed-type plants, according to Macaluso. "There's a cellulose-type lining on top of the plate so oils don't seep in," he said.

Although the pilot plan thus far has been successful, some customers continue to omit the crucial step of throwing the forks, knives and spoons into the composting bin, according to Earthfoods member Ruth Armory, a junior Sociology major. She bemoaned the fact that many of the expensive utensils end up in a landfill where they will be unable to decompose.

Angela Zammarelli, a sophomore Art and Plant and Soil Science double major who works at the collective, emphasized that using biodegradable products is only part of a strategy to reduce waste.

"It's no substitute for bringing your own mug or plate, and washing it and bringing it back," she said, adding that Earthfoods offers a discount for customers who bring their own containers.

Yesterday, Earthfoods used the last of its stock of biodegradable utensils, but it plans to re-order them soon.

■ ALANA

continued from page 1

"I don't blame UMass entirely," said Payano, "We [ALANA students] have to take responsibility to find out what programs are available to us, but while I was very lucky to have gotten a good counselor, I know there are those who were not as fortunate as me, and it's due to inadequate funding."

PeopleSoft directly," according to the summary of the admissions proposal on the Striving for Excellence website.

Gonzalez feared that such a risky investment that will not enhance every aspect of all school departments is both a waste of time and money that could be put to better use for the good of all UMASS students.

In addition to PeopleSoft, the Distant Learning program also worries Gonzalez.

The program was first proposed as a way for students who cannot come to the university, perhaps due to the high financial costs, to take classes at home through their own computer.

However, Gonzalez explained that the program has often become a college replacement program where high-class white students who may indeed have the means to enroll in day courses at the university throw out low class whites and ALANA students.

"If all of the millions of dollars spent on the bad funding for these programs were to be added to student support programs," he added, "the university would become much more appealing to ALANA students."

Chairperson of the university's RSO, Casa Dominicana, Senior Shahria Payano shares Gonzalez's sentiment. "The Bilingual Collegiate Program [crucial to those trying to learn or improve their English on a predominantly English-speaking campus] doesn't have enough funding, and there's not enough staff for all of the students."

According to Payano, under funding such as this definitely gives the university a bad image in the eyes of ALANA students.

"Massachusetts is not the greatest populated state [as far as ALANA numbers are concerned]," she remarked. "UMass can only change its programs in terms of education, and I've found our university to be very limiting in options of education for ALANA students, whereas at other schools, Financial Aid and other means are used to make some more effort to attract people of color."

She recalled how at the beginning of this semester, many ALANA students were told that they owed more monies on their tuition bills, when they were previously told that their financial aid would cover the costs.

However, her frustrations did not end there. Payano argued further that while ALANA support programs are present at UMass, they do not always work effectively – due to significant promotional failures. That can be interpreted as another display of systemic underfunding.

"I don't blame UMass entirely," said Payano, "We [ALANA students] have to take responsibility to find out what programs are available to us, but while I was very lucky to have gotten a good counselor, I know there are those who were not as fortunate as me, and it's due to inadequate funding."

In addition to under-funded programs, Payano worries that other factors need to be adjusted before UMass will appeal to prospective ALANA students, such as racism on campus. "It's a lot to deal with when you're constantly being questioned if you have what it takes to perform as well as a non-ALANA student," she commented.

She remarked how conditions in different classes can be very trying at times if dealing with racist professors or students. "It just hasn't been the same since my freshmen year in terms of the environment for people of color," she concluded.

Transtamar fears that without a large numbers of ALANA students, even student run organizations, such as HASA and Casa Dominicana, will suffer greatly.

"Membership has been dwindling [over the past few years] because nobody's here to be a part of our organizations," she stated. "I worry that within the next two or three years, no one will be here to run them, and that will impact everyone – both students and the community."

Upon returning to her home and trying to promote UMass to other ALANA students, Transtamar was disillusioned.

"It's hard for ALANA students to give UMass a good name because they [the university] are turning their backs on us. The programs that keep ALANA students here are being dismantled. We often get treated as though we're not a part of the community, but we are," she stated.

In hopes to attract more ALANA students to UMass, and more importantly, to present more opportunities for current UMass ALANA students, Ruth Carey of the Campus Career Network (CCN) has led the way in assembling last Tuesday night's ALANA Job Fair in the Campus Center Auditorium.

According to Carey, representatives from various ALANA Affairs Organizations have been working together with the CCN all year in preparation for this fair, which has grown from 15 companies present during the first job fair to 65 companies present at this year's.

Geared primarily towards ALANA students from UMass or any other interested college, the job fair offered internships and corporative education and employment opportunities. Carey's goal is to aid ALANA students in their career searches and help them to prepare for life after college.

"People of color who're students don't always realize the intricacies of gaining and staying employed," she said. "Often they find themselves in a situation when there's no one else who looks like them in their place of employment. We try to prepare them for what they may face, and what they must do to become successful."

She added that all ALANA programs on campus strive to help their members academically understand what being a minority in the work force entails.

"While the ALANA Job Fair is our big push for the year, sometimes we [CCN] are asked by resident advisers to do workshops in the dorms that will help all students (yet often geared toward ALANA students) to complete a resume, practice interviewing skills, and learn about jobs services."

Carey believes that opportunities available to ALANA students on campus are at least getting better as time goes on, mentioning how programs such as the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students provide an ALANA student honor society.

"The staff of ALANA programs works very hard with their individual students to prepare them for employment after college," she said proudly. "Why, we even had some recruiters [at the fair] comment on how our kids were especially well prepared."

SGA concerned; questions remain

Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

With inner room debates continuing to run throughout the Student Government Association, and an up-and-coming election on the rocks, questions of whether or not the five percent student vote needed to make the impending elections constitutional, have come into question.

The recent removal of the ALANA (African American, Latino, Asian American and Native American) referendum question from the approaching Senate election ballot, has left an overall concern stressed amongst members of the SGA as to what the future of the election will hold.

Speaker Jim Eltringham expressed concern that even though there are hard-pressed referendum questions that will be on the election ballot, ALANA would have provoked a higher voter turnout amongst students.

"It hurts that we don't have a huge referendum question on the ballot," Eltringham said. "We do have the issue of privatization and the Index yearbook, but it would have helped out this election."

Eltringham continued to add that he questioned the legality of the removal of the ALANA referendum question on the ballot and that with unknown deals being cut, it left important people uninformed about the situation.

"The whole point of the SGA is to lead and inform students on what is going on, and this just did not happened," Eltringham said. "Legally, I'm not sure that the elections commission has the right to take a motion passed by the Senate off the election ballot, but it happened."

Uncontested positions have also been a factor brought up by members of the SGA in relationship to the elections. Electoral districts have been left with empty seats, leaving no room for competition. Others with competition have been left to campaign for an election without funding from the SGA. Unlike Presidential and Trustee candidates, Senatorial candidates do not receive funding from the Elections Commission for their campaigns. Eltringham also explained that the fear of losing is normally a pretty big motivator for election campaigns and without that, students are more unaware of the elections and when they take place.

"This election is being held at a hectic time. Candidates are just getting back and we're on a tight schedule that has left many not caring about campaigning," Eltringham said. "It also sucks because we have so many uncontested races, which leaves candidates not needing to campaign either, leaving students more unaware of elections."

Whitehouse agreed with Eltringham in stating that students who run for Senate are also spending money out of their own pocket for a chance to serve the better of the community.

Seats with a noticeable amount of vacancies lay directly under the commuter district with only 13 out of the 28 seats filled as well as various on campus residence halls. However, Chancellor of Elections Sam Blasiak explained that if students still do not want to run, they can submit a written nomination which will put them on the ballot on the day of elections.

"This is actually better than some years, but we need to get a high voter turn out, otherwise the elections are meaningless," Chancellor of Elections Sam Blasiak said. "If students still want to run on the day of elections for a vacant seat, they can do a written nomination on the day of elections."

However, a lack of general student interest has left the SGA in limbo, and only time can tell what the Feb. 21 elections will hold.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager

Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargunta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

UMass basketball
IT'S AWESOME BABY!

abc SPORTS
SATURDAY
1:00 PM
TEMPLE
WITH DICK VITALE
& BRENT MUSBURGER
STUDENTS
GET YOUR TICKETS NOW @
CURRY HICKS CAGE
CAMPUS CENTER
MULLINS CENTER GAME DAY

Police Log

Accidents

Feb. 2
There was a two-vehicle accident reported in lot M2 (Meters South of Rohsham). No injuries were reported.

There was a report of a car leaving the scene of an accident in lot 13 in which damage was done to a parked vehicle.

There was a report of a parked vehicle being struck by an unknown vehicle in front of Van Meter Dormitory.

There was an accident reported on University Drive when a vehicle stuck a light pole.

Feb. 3
There was an accident in lot 44 when a vehicle slid off the roadway.

An unknown vehicle in lot 22 stuck a parked vehicle.

Feb. 6
There was an accident on Chancellors Drive when snow removal operations damaged a chain link fence. The estimate of damage was 1000 dollars.

A parked vehicle in lot 26 was struck.

Feb. 8
An unknown vehicle in lot 12 did damage to a parked car.

Feb. 9
There was a minor accident on President's Drive involving two buses.

Annoying Behavior

Feb. 2
Individuals throwing snowballs were reported outside of Mackimmie Dormitory.

Individuals were reported as banging on resident's doors in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.

Feb. 5
There were reports of individuals throwing snowballs outside of Worcester Dining Commons.

There were reports of individuals throwing snowballs in the Sylvan Quad area.

Feb. 6
A snowball fight was reported outside of Brett Dormitory.

There was a snowball fight reported outside of the Southwest Mall.

Feb. 7
Intoxicated individuals refused to leave Mackimmie Dormitory. The incident was referred to the Housing Staff.

Vaginal Monologues AOK

By Tanya Mannes
Collegian Staff

A benefit performance of Eve Ensler's The Vagina Monologues played to an appreciative crowd in Bowker Auditorium last night in honor of V-Day, a campaign to end sexual violence against women. A number of universities and colleges in America and throughout the world staged the play last night at the same time.

To illustrate the play's undisguised mission, director Christy Penney introduced the performance by instructing counselors and advocates in the audience to stand up, identifying them so that women could approach them afterwards. Next, a charismatic narrator asked the willing audience to repeat the word, "Vagina!" as a warm-up.

For a series of monologues, ranging from coy descriptions of sexual pleasure to grittu tales of rape, mutilation and blood, the student actors approximated the personalities and mannerisms of real women who had been interviewed about their vaginas. Several pieces were dedicated to those unnamed women.

The self-conscious opening monologues expressed fear and shame about using the word "vagina," but they soon gave way to testimonials of experiences that enlisted even more powerful vocabulary.

On a minimalist stage, the actors used their voices and bodies to scream, yell, and whisper the little-used words of sexual pleasure and pain, in front of a screen with projected images of, among other things, a paper doll, an African fertility goddess, a blood mattress, a wasp-waist corset, and the torso of a woman wearing sadomasochistic leather hand gear.

The monologues were punctuated by a chorus of sixteen women, who, one by one, listed such things as what vaginas, if they could, would say ("Is that you?" and wear ("A man's tuxedo.").

In the piece "Hair," Rachel Bouvier played a woman with a poignant tale of a husband who could not accept her sexually unless she shaved herself.

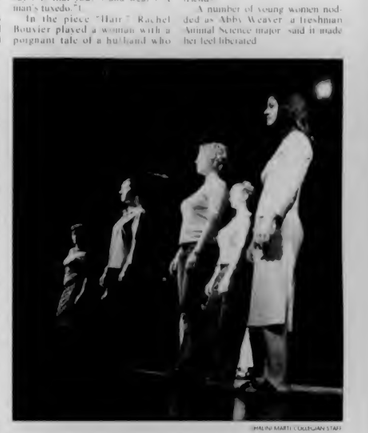
Lindsay McCarthy's performance was a stand-out, as a somewhat prim-and-proper but inwardly exuberant woman who had learned, with trepidation, how to give herself pleasure in "The Vagina Workshop."

Courtney Berne did not miss a beat in her perfectly timed "The Woman Who Loved to Make Vaginas Happy," as a sex worker who served women and who could thus perfectly mimic all kinds of moans.

The nearly full house gave a standing ovation to the play. Afterwards, audience members congregated in the lobby, and outside to share their overwhelmingly positive opinions, and some giggles.

"We were all horny," said Maggie Ridden, a sophomore Political Science major of herself and her friends.

A number of young women nodded as Abby Weaver, a freshman Animal Science major, said it made her feel liberated.



DAILY COLLEGIAN STAFF
Performers last night in Bowker Auditorium

Survey says: marriage getting more difficult

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

While Valentine's Day is considered by many to be a meaningful day of celebration for many committed couples, experts warn that people should be careful how they deal with relationships in early stages of their lives as it may have a profound affect on their opportunity for a successful marriage later on.

According to a Gallup poll performed over several years, 40 percent of all people never make it down the church aisle to exchange vows. Of those who do marry, the study reports nearly 50 percent split in the first ten years, compared to 30 percent for those who didn't live together before marriage.

A review of the past fifty years indicates that these statistics reveal a dramatic increase in the divorce rate and a trend towards more people marrying less and of those who do marry, do so at an older age, according to the study.

The increasing rate of single, non-married people and incidents of divorce has led to the seemingly clear explanation that most are no longer willing to commit to a long-term relationship because of the eminent fear of divorce.

"We now know that the most powerful impact from divorce occurs in the early 20's, when man and woman relationships come center stage," relationship expert Judith S. Wallerstein discussed in her book, Divorce: Unexpected Legacy.

Wallerstein believed the hardest part of divorce for teenagers and young adults would be five years from the time of the breakup, but accordingly, Wallerstein found that she had to continue extending her study well beyond the five-year expectation because the problems were not going away.

Many experts contend likewise against the negative effects of divorce, arguing that it can be a personal good rather than a social ill. Several studies of marriages gone sour over the years leading to divorce, suggest divorce can remedy a dissatisfied marriage, providing relief to the couples involved.

However, other experts such as Charles Williams contend that marriages may be beneficial to some, but can have dramatic effects to children and young adults, when the image of a healthy relationship is starting to be formed in their minds.

"Divorce is bad metaphysics because it forever changes the unchangeable basic material and substance of family life," Williams stated.

When research was done on cohabitating couples (couples not married but living together) several years before marriage, psychologists and experts alike expected to see a dramatic decrease in the divorce rate, likening the cause of relationship difficulties to long-term commitment.

Surprisingly, however, one report indicates that cohabitating couples have an 80 percent greater chance of divorce than those who don't cohabitate, suggesting many couples live together primarily out of fear of divorce.

"People who break up after living together feel as betrayed and emotionally scarred as people who divorce," the study stated.

In addition, women who cohabitate are twice as likely to experience domestic violence as married women, the study states. According to experts, marriage is in many cases more beneficial to long-lasting health. Sociologist Linda Waite cited research that shows marriage is good for both men and women with benefits ranging from satisfying sexual lives, swifter recovery from illnesses and physical and emotional well-being.

But if marriage is so beneficial, experts are stumped as to the reason the United States has one of the highest fallout rates conipared to other countries.

The question induced curiosity in the Campus Crusade for Christ chapter at the University of Massachusetts, conceiving a campus-wide survey on "Hope for a Lasting Marriage."

The survey, distributed in Franklin and Worcester Dining Halls to 824 students, asked various questions about steps towards a successful marriage. 67.8 percent didn't believe they'd ever be divorced, while 3.6 percent were less optimistic. 80 percent have seen their parents resolve conflict in a positive way and believe there is a perfect mate compared to 20 percent who were in disagreement for both categories.

When asked the keys to a lasting marriage, 63 percent said good communication skills, 51 percent said trust was an important factor and 45 percent felt the ability to resolve conflict was just as important.

Overall, experts suggest that marriage is a dynamic, not static relationship, ever-changing as the love grows and differences and difficulties emerge, but good marriages still almost always evolve into happiness and commitment.

TRUE CONFESSIONS

OFF campus ON line
Log on and listen in as Laura, Ruth and Deanna make their True Confessions every Thursday night at 7:00 p.m.
Live, uncensored, online! Watch for the occasional surprise on their doorstep. Watch and learn at: www.masslive.com/offcampus
3 students 1 Web cam 24/7!
www.masslive.com/offcampus
mass LIVE www.masslive.com
Get On It!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, February 15, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

To the SGA :
remember the goal

Continued problems in the Student Government Association? There couldn't be, we ask sarcastically.

With a few short days before its re-election election, the SGA has again run into trouble, this time focused around the future of ALANA's appointed seats. While they're supposed to have 13 percent of the seats in the Senate, ALANA senators, their opponents and the SGA leadership agreed last year that the seats should be gradually eliminated. All sides agreed to the proposal.

Where it gets hazy is a promise supposedly made for those same seats to be voted upon by the student body during an election and when, exactly, the students were supposed to vote. No formal agreement was made after last year's meeting – a heated one in which President Jeff Howe cursed at Senators - and some are alleging that, in fact, it was made quite recently in an attempt to placate the ALANA community.

Perhaps.

Such allegations are dangerous to make and dangerous to prove.

Of course, when hotheads like Ed Cutting are making the allegations, one wonders how accurate they are. That said, no agreement was ever reported in the pages of the Collegian last year, despite intense coverage of that meeting.

But The Daily Collegian implores all involved in this debate to remember one thing, something that has regularly been forgotten during the past year of political infighting: the SGA has a responsibility to represent students and student interests.

That clearly hasn't happened this past semester and what troubles us most is that nobody seems to care about it.

There are students who don't have a Senate right now, and those people are the real issue, the real problem. In this whole ridiculous mess.

It isn't about how much the conservative senators hate the liberal senators or the other way around. It isn't about how much money one club or another is going to receive. It isn't about the Greeks getting cheated (they did); nor is it about the fact that Avakian and Howe have gotten away with figurative murder (they did too).

What it is about is students who no longer have representation and see, again and again and again, ridiculous infighting, backbiting, sniping and complaining from all segments of the Senate. Some members of the Senate would blame The Daily Collegian, arguing that we shouldn't cover such immaturity, but we contend that what few shards of the SGA that remain are what few shards we shall cover, regardless of who ends up looking bad.

What few in the SGA seem to truly understand is that students end up suffering when they don't have a Senate to represent them. The Senate has such promise, such possibility to fail as mightily as it has. A Senate can be the collected voice of students again at the Administration. A Senate can be the collected voice of students in regards to ongoing issues. Most importantly, a Senate can be the collected voice of students for themselves, a place where students can, as one and in a democratic fashion, stand together and voice and an opinion.

But that isn't happening now.

Petty fighting is, and nobody's benefiting.

A path less taken

ADAM MARTIGNETTI

"I hate when things are over, because so much is left undone."

The band Deep Blue Something may not be remembered for much of their work, if any at all, but they did give us that lyric in 1995's pop ballad, "Breakfast at Tiffany's."

It strikes me now because, well, my college career is almost over and I stumbled across this unfinished column on an old computer diskette that I had long since forgotten about. So, in an attempt to remedy this situation, I decided to finish the column, even though it has little relevance to my life anymore. Who knows? Maybe I can give a little back to this University, which has given me so much.

First, however, you need the context in which the column was first undertaken. I began it almost one and a half years ago, in the Fall 1999 semester, at the beginning of my junior year here at UMass. I like to think that I began it sometime in November, when the cooling northern winds swiftly descend upon the Pioneer Valley after the sun decides to disappear for the day. I like to believe that I began it as the days were becoming shorter, the temperatures dipping lower, the air becoming frostier. I like to believe that I began it as frantic UMass students called home yearning for wool hats, warm scarves and thick gloves that were overlooked while moving into the dorms. However, I can pinpoint the starting point in no greater detail than the fall semester of my junior year.

At the time in which this endeavor was undertaken, I was spending a lot of time traveling between Sylvan and Orchard Hill. More specifically, I was spending a lot of time scurrying between my humble abode in 304 Field and my girlfriend's room in 703B Macnamara. In case you were ever wondering, this is what will happen if your girlfriend somehow procures a single for herself in a building other than your own. The following column was begun in response to my travel experiences during that time. It is finished now to prevent it from remaining undone.

Two roads diverged in a wood, and I – I took the one less lit by, and that has made all the difference.

No, this is not some obscure, alternate version of the oft-quoted Robert Frost poem, but rather a sincere, wholehearted and, yes, even a desperate plea for this University to meet students' real needs.

Students who live in Central likely know what I refer to when I say "the goat path." Students who live in Sylvan will likely know what I refer to when I say "the rape trail." And students who live in Orchard Hill are probably familiar with both of these passageways, since Orchard Hill is the ill-fated crossroads where the two join. For those of you who don't live in one of these three residential areas or are unfamiliar with this campus slang, I will explain.

The goat path is, or at least it used to be, a dirt trail leading from the top of Orchard Hill, down past the Chancellor's House, through the woods and past Durfee Conservatory. In short, it is the quickest and most direct route from Orchard Hill to the main part of campus.

I find it somewhat ironic that the goat path is now closed down due to University construction on water pipes. Anyway, I interrupt the old version of myself...

The rape trail is the unpaved, unlit, pot-hole laden gravel pit that runs between Orchard Hill and Sylvan. In short, it's the quickest and most direct route from Orchard Hill to Sylvan.

Mind you, that when I say "recently," it is a relative term referring now to a time long since passed.

Recently, the University decided to install new lights and put down wood chips at the top of the goat path. You can imagine my surprise as I trudged to the top of the path to find these newly accommodating conditions. The parking lot across from Webster was now well-illuminated and the goat path now felt like a well-kept AMC trail in the White Mountains. Don't get me wrong. I'm not one to complain about improvements on campus, especially ones designed to ensure greater student safety; however, the choice of location for these new safety features baffled me somewhat.

As I said above, the location is almost directly across from the Webster residence hall – probably about 100 yards or so from Webster's entrance. The area was not so dark and obscure to merit a whole slew of new light posts surrounding the purple lot. (This University parking designation has gone its way like so many other things). In addition, the goat path was not so treacherous to merit the destruction of a few trees to improve walking conditions there. I will not complain about these improvements though.

I will complain, however, and I believe justifiably so, about that quarter-mile stretch that runs between Orchard Hill and Sylvan. I will complain about that lovely rape trail. Now, I have no idea how the fabled path got its name and I would venture to say that it is nothing more than an urban legend. However, anyone who has ever tried to walk the rape trail at night knows just how frightening a task it can be. Quite simply, it's blackness. If there is no moonlight, then you literally cannot see more than half a foot in front of your face. Good luck trying to stay on the trail, never mind trying to avoid the five-foot deep, crater-like holes. And I hope you're not faint of heart, because the slightest sound – a branch falling – is enough to terrify the bravest person in the unfathomable solitude of the rape trail.

I know that the University has "shut down" the trail. I know that there are signs on both ends warning students not to take it EVER! I know that the University claims the campus shuttle bus is more than sufficient to transport students between the two residential areas.

However, I will politely disagree with the University. I have spent many a chilly fall evening waiting curbside for a shuttle bus to arrive only to be met by darkness and the unwelcoming reality of a half-mile, take your life into your hands, walk to Sylvan. I have spent many a chilly early-morning taking my life into my hands because the campus shuttle was not running at the hour that I wanted to get to Sylvan. I have had many a scary encounter with a fellow brave soul making the same trek in the opposite direction. I won't even mention the observatory that lies off the rape trail.

Students use this path. For the University to ignore it or somehow deny its existence is like telling a kid to keep his hand out of the cookie jar. It's an exercise in futility.

And it's not a hard situation to remedy. The University only needs to follow my lead and take some initiative. Even if the rape trail is not paved, some of those new light posts and a call box every twenty feet or so would make the trail 100 times safer. I cannot think of another university in this country that would let such a virtual death trap remain for so long without trying to improve safety. For UMass to do so is simply an injustice to student's needs.

It is never good to leave things undone.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian columnist

LIFE IN HELL
©1997 BY MATT GROENING
CALLING ALL YOUTH!
So You Want to Get Pierced
HEY! OOOK AH ME!
MA TUG IH AHMO HEAHED!
NOW YOU CAN WEAR YOUR ABUSED CHILDHOOD AS A PERMANENT FASHION STATEMENT!!!

Bay State living

ROB SCHULTZE

There was ice on the inside of my window.

On the inside.

This is the key integral fact about New England in the winter: it is cold. Not just a little cold, either, but cold like you feel as though your face may peel back from your skull at any moment, cold that makes you surprised that the rocks haven't exploded from the force of it, cold that registers itself on your body as physical pain.

The ice on the inside of my window is what happens when it's freezing outside, hot inside, and the windows get fogged up. The condensation takes it upon itself to form a sheet of ice (at one point – I measured – it was seven inches high) across the entire window. This is ungodly, and it always makes me ask the same question:

Why here?

Why Massachusetts, why New England in general? Why live in a place that freezes solid in the winter, where the people are rude, where the taxes are high, where it's illegal to keep score in children's soccer, where driving is suicidal, and where you can't throw a rock without hitting some Nader guy in the head? Why?

For most of my life, I didn't have a choice. My parents raised me in Massachusetts, and there wasn't much I could really do about it. I mean, I wasn't going to demand a relocation to Delaware or something; in fact, I had only the vaguest idea of who or what 'Delaware' was, let alone where he or it might be located.

So I grew up in New England. I've lived here my whole life, actually. Never been anywhere else for more then a few days, and then only sporadically over the course of my life. I'm a small-town Yankee hick, basically. Cities intimidate me. I can tell you all about cranberry farming, if you really want to know. Some of my earliest memories are of shoveling.

Some people would think that the cold would not affect me any more after dealing with it all my life. Leaving a movie late at night with some friends last month, we were all gasping and shivering and bitching about the cold, which the sign on the bank pegged at 7 degrees. One of us, a largish gentleman from West Virginia, said to us locals "Isn't it like this every winter? I mean, you're from here – don't you just get to the point where it doesn't bother you anymore?"

No. When it's 7 degrees, it doesn't matter if you're from Antarctica or the vastness of the desert. It is cold. You say to yourself "Why? Why do I do this to myself every winter? Why do I suffer? Is there no escape?" There are reasons.

For one thing, the cold weeds out the weak. Some people who ask themselves that question every morning when they have to warm their car up for a good 35 minutes before they can go to work finally discover that they have no answer, and they go. Only the strong survive here, as opposed to someplace like, say, Delaware.

And the rudeness of the people? I love it. There is nothing worse than going into the store for milk, cream, and a bottle of Pepsi and having the cashier talk to you about the universe without actually getting you the hell out of there. This is the exception to the rule here – people do their job and they do it as fast as possible, because that's just the way it's done. It's refreshing and comfortable to me. I think I'd go insane in a place where everyone was nice and smiling and talkative all the time, mostly because I'm just as rude as everyone else. You know where you stand with people, and if they hate you, which typically they do, you know it right away. It speeds things up.

Taxes are high because they are used to do things. A liberal state, a liberal region, remember? To do good things you have to pay for them. I support this.

I stay here because the advantages outweigh the disadvantages. Even a hick like me gets a great public education. The opportunities for personal growth and for new experiences seem limitless – just look at what's available simply in the Five College region, then expand that to cover the whole state, then the whole region. Look at the history that is all around you; I used to drive my sister to work past the Plymouth Rock every day. Candlepin bowling is readily available. This is my home.

The cold sucks, and, like everyone else, I will always be questioning as to whether it is really worth it. The answer will always be yes.

And hey, tossing rocks at Nader hippies builds arm strength, coordination, relieves tension and is really just an all-around barrel of laughs.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Fire and ice: A tale of two nights

BRIAN LOHNES

Last week I was sent into two very different emotional situations where I learned what it felt like to be empowered and then completely powerless.

I believe that people are generally good. Sure, there are a few loose screws out there, but I suppose that there has to be to keep things interesting. In times of need, people pull together to help each other out. Most often we see this on the news when horrific natural disasters strike third world countries and we feel enormous sympathy for those that are faced with such a grave situation. But we see those things happening far away, on the television, so the gravity of the situation doesn't hit home very hard. We are uplifted by the heroic stories of people risking life and limb to save those trapped in rubble or wreckage. This all brings me back to last week.

Monday started off nicely. Sure, they were predicting some snow, but we are at UMass damn it. They never cancel classes here. There wasn't much to get excited about, until one o'clock rolled around and we were surrounded by a wintry hell, the likes of which not many people had ever seen before. After about six or seven hours of this snow, the transit service had to pull the buses off the roads because they were virtually impassible. Word on the street is that it was the first time in ten years they had to do that.

I got out of work at about 8 p.m. to find swarms of people trying in vain to move their cars either into spaces or out into the street to get home. After pushing and pulling several people in my truck, I went home. I was warming up at home for about 20 minutes or so when I started to feel guilty about all the people who were stuck in the storm. So I grabbed my roommate, who is aptly named Brian, and we headed out in my pickup truck. We were able to help quite a few people. We saw many people trying to brave the elements and walk home after their cars were snowed in and the buses were no longer running.

When we saw those people, we rolled up and offered them a ride. Several refused, after all, it is kind of suspect when two guys in a truck offer you a ride home on a dark snowy night, but our intentions were good. It's also an interesting way to meet people. Of the people we drove home, we had an English man, a French man and a few guys who spoke with distinct Russian accents. We also helped out a lot of students who were trying to either get out of parking or, after getting the car halfway out, were trying to get back into the parking space. We didn't ask for any money or anything like that. We just wanted to help the people out. So if you were one of the people visited by, or driven home by the two guys in the red truck, you actually met a real live Collegian columnist! I really do exist and that picture is not some horrid computer animation. All we ask of the people that we helped is to help someone else the next time they need a hand.

My second experience with helping out hit way too close to home and was damn scary. I am sure many people remember the picture that was on the cover of the Collegian last Thursday of the burned out apartment at The Townhouses. That apartment belonged to one of my best friends, a guy named Dave Bernstein, and his roommate, John Rugo, also a good friend of mine. Well, the story itself is pretty self-explanatory. Their house was gutted by fire. I had no idea that any of this had happened until I was driving a friend home from work and we rounded the corner to see half of the fire fighting equipment in western Massachusetts and two dazed and stunned friends. My heart jumped up into my throat when I saw their place, as it appeared to be a complete and utter loss. Dave and John were covered in soot and had this empty look on their faces. This was one of those situations where you are totally powerless over the events that are taking place and it reminds you that even in this "perfect" environment things can go horribly wrong.

I can't imagine what it could feel like to have that happen to me. To have most of my belongings and memories of college life melt and burn is something that I don't even want to think about, but the two roommates stood strong. They were even cracking jokes about what had happened that evening. I can only believe that laughing was the only possible way to deal with a disaster like that without falling apart. So our group of friends went into "help" mode and immediately began making plans on how we could get the guys some money, or have them live at our places while they looked for a new place. We thought about what furniture we could spare to give them in their new place.

The night before it had been fun, almost a game to help people out of their predicaments, and now it was all too real. Brian and I had been the proverbial white knights the previous evening, raising people's hopes when we pulled up to give a hand. On the night of the fire, however, no one could show up to give a hand, no one could fix this particular problem.

Dave and John wanted me to give a very special thanks to the Amherst fire department. The firemen were there as quickly as one could hope for them to arrive and they did an incredible job in containing the blaze and saving the few things that made it out of the fire. Without their quick action, much more property could have been destroyed and people may have been injured.

So, as I said in the first place, I was put in two very different emotional situations doing the same thing. Giving help. In the first place I was empowered, in the second I was along for the ride. It's funny how life deals you a hand like that. It was the most memorable 24 hours of my life and a day I will never forget.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

Arts

TEEN POP STARS

The elements of pop

Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

Pop culture has an indelible role in our lives – it surrounds our everyday actions and it's a central part of our lives that will only find its part grow and become even more intrinsic in the 21st century.

The things we watch and listen to often shape the way we walk, talk, and act. There's no doubt then that pop stars hold the creative power that molds our actions.

More than any other celebrity, music stars are the most intriguing. Musicians, unlike movie stars, use their art as an outlet for their inner thoughts. That confessional side is what draws us to rock stars in the first place; unlike actors, they are, in theory, not merely playing a role. And an album, which can place a rock star in the pop culture limelight for over a year, stands in stark contrast to a film that vanishes from culture after few short months, generally speaking.

Music stars hold a drawing power like no other. It is pop stars that can cavort wildly and passionately on stage only to be later emulated by teenagers. From Michael Jackson's white glove to Britney Spears' Catholic schoolgirl get-up, teenagers cop the looks and make them their own. It is undeniable then that pop stars have a way to connect to fans like no other persona.

CONTROVERSY

Pop stars are credited as pushing boundaries and living on the edge – a place where most of us only dream of being. Perhaps that's what drives fans to obsess over an act. But a pop star can grow larger than life and may, all too often, showcase a side that may produce an admonishing crowd. Take for instance Eminem; the shock rapper has elicited more outcry than any other entertainer in recent memory. His four Gammy nominations earlier this year for the eight-times-platinum The Marshall Mathers LP caused uproar by many listeners, most notably by the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation, due to scathingly contemptuous misogynist and homophobic lyrics found in the record. The matter hit a fever pitch when, last week, it was confirmed that Eminem was to perform at the prestigious award show...with proudly gay pop icon Elton John. The organization is now planning to stage a protest on the day of the Grammy's.

Another prominent example that pop stars can have a big impact on their fans is Limp Bizkit's appearance at Woodstock '99. The rap-rock band is partially credited

Turn to POP, page 9

The tripe we crave

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Staff

Teen Pop Music. It's a term that conjures up many thoughts in many different people's minds. Thoughts of love, hate, obsession, contempt, and masturbatory fantasies arise, but rarely does it spawn indifference. With the countless talented musicians who have worked their entire lives to produce a genuine emotion-evoking peace of music, it is the least talented performers, who don't write or produce their own music, which reap the majority of money and fame that comes with the record industry. It is for this reason that the thoughts of contempt and even hate encompass people's minds when the thought of Teen Pop enters. And for entirely different reasons the thought of love, obsession, and sexual attraction enters others peoples minds. The current wave of teenybopper music has dominated record sales, saturated MTV, sold out arenas and even stadiums worldwide, but why? Why is it so popular? When will it end? And in either side right – the groups of predominately teenage girls who love it, or the critics who loathe it?

For a while there wasn't much of any teen pop music in the United States. In the early 90's grunge rock and gangsta rap appealed to the jaded MTV generation. Fast-forward to a few years later, and while gangsta rap still thrives, grunge has been replaced by bubble gum, at least on MTV and in record sales. The very first time the Spice Girls single "Wannabe" was played on US radio, the current wave of teen pop music started building. It reached its crescendo over the next few years as we were met the likes of the Backstreet Boys, N'Sync, Britney Spears, and Christina Aguilera. The appeal was widespread and the money made was immense.

The actual appeal isn't so difficult to understand. There have always been groups or musicians who teens developed a love affair with – Elvis, The Beatles, New Kids on the Block – so the phenomenon is nothing new. Whether it's Britney or Christina or one of the boy bands, the songs and the images that are meticulously presented are perfect for their audience of mostly impressionable teenage girls. The "divas," and newly formed girl groups like Dream, present the optimal image of femininity, which these girls desire to be. Meanwhile, the guys in the boy bands and such are the perfect objects of their sexual fantasies. These are the kind of guys that say actually say "I love you" and call back. Usually each boy group is carefully stacked with guys of different personalities, and looks to appeal to all different types of girls. The guys are rarely seen in public with girlfriends – usually under direction from their managers – so that they seem "available" to their female fans. Touches of sexual innuendo are thrown in as well. Song titles like "Liquid Dreams," pelvic thrusting, and Michael Jackson-esque crotch grabbing aren't there by accident. For these artists, the carefully constructed image, not the music, is everything, and that's another issue that fuels their critics.

The music itself often comes under fire for being too formulaic and too unauthentic to be considered any good. If what makes a song no-good is that it isn't written or produced by the artist, well then almost none of the current pop acts have had any good songs. Examing the hit singles of the "big four" – N'Sync, Backstreet, Britney, and Christina – shows that a grand total of one out of 29 hit singles was actually written by the artist or group member, and in that one example it was only co-written. Furthermore, 17 of the 29 hits were written by the same Swedish Production Team – Cherion – headed by Max Martin. If Cherion ceased to exist, it's not unfathomable that the genre itself would be far less popular. Another common criticism is that the music itself resembles more of a commercial jingle and less actual music. Most of the choruses center on lyrics that function more as sing along fare than any sort of deep thought-provoking composition. For many musicians it's considered a slap in the face to them as artists when this sort of fluff is chosen continuously over theirs.

Although the music itself is mainly R&B fused with pop there are some critical differences from an N'Sync song and a song by most true hip-hop flavored R&B acts. For one, the lyrics are not overtly sexual; instead, as Eminem would say, all of the songs are about "love from above." Couple this with all of the dancing, and generally unmasculine behavior, and the word "gay" is often used to describe members of these boy bands. Whether they are in fact gay or not really shouldn't be used as a sort of put-down under any circumstances, yet it does again arise questions as to whether all of these love songs directed at girls really come from the artist's heart or not.

Even if the music is "fluff," it seems as though a lot of people genuinely like it. And isn't that one purpose of music? A song like "Bye Bye Bye" or "I Want It That Way" may not be deep singer-songwriter material, but when so many people enjoy a pop song isn't it worth something artistically? Sure most of the songs are about love and relationships, but is there more of a driving force in our culture than love? Maybe these singers and groups aren't writing their own material, but certainly the people who are writing it posses some level of talent. The fact is it does take creativity, talent, and an artistic vision to create a piece of music that is enjoyed by so many. In this respect, the writers and producers in the genre of teen pop music should be given the credit they rightfully deserve by critics.

Not all the teen pop music is created equal either. The idea that it's all the same" is a complete misconception. Not being able to tell the difference between a 98 Degrees song and an N'Sync song would be similar to not being able to tell the difference between say, Limp Bizkit and Blink 182. For instance N'Sync's sound is far more R&B and dance oriented than 98 Degrees, which generally has a slower more vocally driven sound (plus they can't dance). The Backstreet Boys basically have two songs in their repertoire- fast paced danceable pop, and classic pop style songs like "I Want It That Way". On the girl side Christina Aguilera's sound generally is more R&B flavored and vocally driven than Britney's more bubble gum flavored pop.

The phenomenon of teen pop music tells us a lot about our culture. Maybe a lot of it we already knew anyway, and it just further proved itself. It shows we care more about style than substance. If we didn't No Strings Attached wouldn't have out sold Kid A by millions. Oh, and don't think that all of the "guilty" people who bought the album were stereotypical 15 year old girls. Common sense and Soundscan numbers tell a different story. Acts like

Turn to TEEN, page 9

Look inside on page 9 for the top ten pop songs.

MEG MURPHY designer

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian — Every Thursday!

COURTESY THE AUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY

Cliff Matias, Native American Hoop Dancer.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – "Christopher Wilmarth: living inside" presents a selection of sculptures, drawings, and prints by an artist best known for a sparely sensuous style that marries formal elements with mysterious reverie. "Brenda Zlamany: Figure Ground: Color Studies of Chuck Close, Lisander Hollfield, and John Yau" features this artist's most recent paintings series which marks a further step in her ongoing investigation of color and light as they are translated into psychological content. Both exhibitions will have an opening reception on Friday evening, February 2 from 5 to 7 p.m. "Christopher Wilmarth" will be on view from February 3 through March 16 and then April 1 through May 18. "Figure Ground" will be on view from February 3 through March 16.

UMASS – "Dreaming: Prophecies, Speculations, and Good Guesses." A collection of works created to reflect a visionary gaze into the personal and social future of society. "Dreaming" will run from February 12 to March 9 in the Augusta Savage Gallery, with an opening reception on Monday, February 12 from 5 to 7 p.m.

AMHERST – "Armenia: Photographs of Monasteries, Portraits of People." Black and white prints by Edwin Nazarian. Burnett Gallery, Jones Library through February 15.

SMITH COLLEGE – "The Refugees." Two life sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck depicting refugees carrying a child and all their worldly possessions. Part of the Khan Institute's "Anatomy of Exile" project. Through May 28. For more information, call (413) 585-4292. Third floor, Neilson Library.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Biblical Women." Story quilts by artist Lee Porter, depicting several scenes women from the Bible. Through March 30. Reception and gallery talk 3 to 7 p.m., Friday, February 23. For more information, call (413) 585-2043. Alumnae House Gallery, 33 Elm St.

NORTHAMPTON – "Gardens Large and Small." A collection of eighteen impressionistic watercolor paintings reflecting the artist's love of landscape. February 1-28 at the Forbes Library.

NORTHAMPTON – "Exposed Surfaces: Architectural and Other Moments." Black and white photography by Michael Shalls-Jensen centered around the surfaces and textures of architecture. February 3-March 1 at the Forbes Library.

WILLIAMSTOWN – "Photography EXPOSED." Includes 45 examples of portraiture as part of the Williams College Museum of Art's 75th anniversary celebration. The exhibit will continue until September 3, 2001. The Museum is open Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 a.m., and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – "Slanguage." Universes, an ensemble of five performers, will present this fusion of poetry, theater, jazz, Hip-Hop, politics, down-home blues and Spanish boleros to challenge the conventions of theater. Shows will be on February 21 and 22 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

UMASS – "Native American Hoop Dancing." Cliff Macias will present hoop dancing that tells a story to the beat of a traditional song. Matias has traveled throughout Indian Country, gathering dances, songs and stories for his performances. The show will take place on March 6 at 7 p.m. at the Augusta Savage Gallery.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – "Hampshire College Winter Dance Concert." Eight solo and kinetic group works will be presented in the annual Winter Dance concert February 16 to 18 at 8 p.m. in the Dance Studio Theatre at Hampshire College. Reservations are recommended and may be made by calling (413) 559-5889 after February 5. Tickets are $6 for general admission and $4 for students.

AMHERST COLLEGE – "The Doctor in Spite of Himself." The Amherst College Department of Theatre and Dance presents Moliere's raunchy, comedic romp February 15-18 at 8 p.m. in the Experimental Theatre, Amherst College. Admission is free, but reservations are suggested; call 542-2277 between 1 and 4 p.m. and until 8 p.m. on performance nights.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Infusion with Fire." This historic production is told through the voices of artists on the Federal Theatre Projects, and reconstructs the dynamic of the New Deal era and The House Un-American Activities Committee. February 23 and 24 at 8 p.m. and February 25 at 2 pm, at the Rook Theatre. Admission is free, though reservations are strongly recommended. Call the box office at (413) 538-2406.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – "William Parker and the Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra." Parker, an bassist and composer, has established himself on the international music scene through his improvisational music. He will perform on February 22 in Bezanson Recital Hall at 8pm.

UMASS – "National Association of Teachers of Singing Benefit Concert." Several of the area's prominent voice teachers and performers will take part in a benefit concert for the Association's local educational offerings, February 18 at 4 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $10 for general public, and $5 for students, elders, and children under 18, and can be purchased in advance at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (545-2511), or at Bezanson Recital Hall on the evening of the concert.

UMASS – Faculty Saxophonist Lynn Klock will perform with Professor Nadine Shank, pianist on February 28 at 8 p.m. at Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $8 for the general public, $4 for students, elders, and children under 18. Tickets can be purchased in advance at the Fine Arts Center (545-2511) or at Bezanson Recital Hall on the evening of the concert.

UMASS – The Grieg Trio, featuring violin, cello, and piano, will perform in the Bezanson Recital Hall on Thursday, March 1 at 7:30 pm. Tickets are $20 for general public, $10 for children age 17 and under, and $7 for Five College students. For tickets and information, call the Fine Arts Center Box office (545-2511).

SMITH COLLEGE – "Fin Deutsches Requiem." The Smith College Orchestra and Glee Club and Choir with the University of Michigan Men's Glee Club, and Featuring Karen Smith Frierson, soprano and Timothy Jerome Jones, baritone will present Brahms' "Requiem" on February 1h in John M. Greene Hall, at 2 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – Smith College faculty fortepianist Monica Jakuc will present a concert of chamber music on Friday, February 16 at 8 p.m. in Sweeny Concert Hall, Sage Hall. This concert is free.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS- Ben Marcus. A reading by Ben Marcus, author of The Age of Wire and String, the award-winning writer and professor at Columbia University will read from his fiction on March 1st at 7pm in the Augusta Savage Gallery. Admission is free and the lecture is open to the public.

COURTESY ATELIER KUNGSHALL

The Grieg Trio is Solve Sigerland on viglin, Ellen Margrete Flesjo on cello and Verbjorn Anvik on piano.

IT'S NO SECRET, SERVICE AND PRICES THAT ARE POSITIVELY PRESIDENTIAL!

LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive

EVERYDAY PRICING

1/2 KEGS COORS LIGHT, MICHELOB LIGHT $44.99

1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB $45.99

1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99

1/2 KEGS BUDWEISER, BUDWEISER SELECT, ALL FLAVORS $88.99

Coors EXTRA GOLD 30 PACK $10.99

MICHELOB & MICHELOB LIGHT $10.99

18 PACK OTTER CREEK $9.99

12 PACK HARP LAGER $10.99

12 PACK GENUINE DRAFT & GENUINE DRAFT LIGHT $10.99

CASE MIKES HARD LEMONADE $9.99

"SHOPPE" THESE ENTRANCE SPECIALS

Australian Wine Sale 20% OFF ALL AUSTRALIAN WINES 750ML Only! No additional case discounts available

CARLO ROSSI $6.99

C K MONDAVI $11.99

LUNA di LUNA CHARDONNAY PINOT GRIGIO $7.99

J. VIDAL FLEURY COTES Du RHONE $7.99

SUTTER HOME WHITE ZINFANDEL $3.99

RUBINOFF VODKA $8.99

BACARDI LIMON RUM $9.99

SOUTHERN COMFORT $17.99

CLAN MACGREGOR SCOTCH $12.99

POLAND SPRINGS GIN $9.99

JAGERMEISTER $14.99

Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA

HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555

SALE PRICES THURS. 2/15/01 THRU WEDS. 2/21/01

SEEKING

COLLEGIAN ASSISTANT DIVERSITY EDITOR

Help develop and support extensive coverage of campus, local, and world issues that affect the GLBI, ALANA, Jewish and women's communities, as well as other groups.

Be committed to good writing! Newswriting experience preferred but not necessary.

CONTACT TANYA MANNES, DIVERSITY EDITOR

DIVERSITY_EDITOR@HOTMAIL.COM

OR IN THE COLLEGIAN OFFICE

with special guests COLD and SYSTEMATIC

MULLINS CENTER University of Massachusetts Amherst

TICKETS ON SALE NOW! MARCH 4 7PM SHOW • ALL AGES

get tickets at sfx.com

TICKETS AVAILABLE AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE AND ALL LOCATIONS. CHARGE BY CALLING (413) 733-2500 OR (617) 931-2000. Prices, time and ticket price subject to change without notice. A service charge is added to each ticket purchased through SFX.

Chili Peppers guitarist releases solo disc overflowing with tortured oddities

COURTESY SUNYA KOSKOFF

John Frusciante, one interesting solo artist.

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

JOHN FRUSCIANTE
To Record Only Water For Ten Days
Warner Bros.

John Frusciante's musical resume may not be particularly long, but membership in the Red Hot Chili Peppers for both of their most celebrated albums, Blood Sugar Sex Magik and Californication, should be enough to quiet anyone doubting his right to break free from his role as axeman and take the spotlight, solo album-style. Similarly, anyone doubting the precariousness of John Frusciante's sanity need only read from the press release accompanying said solo album: "Between 1992 and 1997 John Frusciante had many periods where his main social activity was with spirits manifested as voices, thought waves, astral bodies and decay of physical matter. The things they taught him (often in non-earth language, but often in English) are contained in this record's words."

By way of an invitation, however, that sort of weirdness serves well, allowing us to separate Frusciante's dark, disturbed music from that of the Chili Peppers' more playful style. Anyone expecting another Chili Peppers album will be disappointed. But then, that's part of the point: these are the songs that John didn't want to see pumped up by Flea's assertive bass playing, or refined with slick vocal overdubbing and Anthony Kiedis' smooth melodies. There's none of the Chili Peppers' signature blend of funk, rock and hip-hop here; the energy is of a different sort, and works in different ways.

"Going Inside" opens with a gloomy, minor-key guitar figure, and although there are glimpses here and there of the Chili Peppers, especially in the construction of the melody, the song moves forward with a rawness all its own. Frusciante's voice is unpracticed, unrefined, and in that way compelling and irresistibly strange. There are several moments on the album when it becomes evident that he has taken some of his vocal cues from Kiedis, and this always works out to his advantage. The short "Someone's" follows with more moody alt-pop, and typifies the sort of asylum-floor anthem that continues to crop up across the 15 tracks of To Record...

The production across the album is remarkably sparse; often, Frusciante plays without bass accompaniment, and uses only a simple canned beat to support his guitar. And this, in turn, exhibits far less complexity than we might expect, considering some of his Chili Peppers-related chops. Less complexity, however, is not to say less sophistication, and he never applies more or less sound than a song requires for definition. Chili Peppers' music is often about showy musicianship and the energy that comes from four nutty guys throwing themselves into a musical groove, whereas Frusciante's solo work concerns itself more with pained melodies and the more subtle communication of mood.

There are weak points, of course, as whenever he attempts to sing in a falsetto: "Wind Up Space" is a particularly unfortunate casualty of this mistake. Frusciante's natural range, for that matter, doesn't stretch too far in either direction, and points of particularly distracting vocal weakness crop up too often.

Not surprisingly then, some of the album's finest moments are found in the instrumental tracks. "Ramparts" blends several guitar parts together with delicacy and beauty, and "Murderers" nearly begs comparison to Mohy (if Mohy played weird, maniacal guitar).

Although any single track from To Record... may not seem too impressive, the effect of a disc of such roughly-recorded but sincerely-presented songs, none of them bad beyond being listenable, most of them exhibiting a sort of wormy charm, and some of them achieving an undeniable jagged beauty, is on par with the best of confessional singer-songwriters. Perhaps the greatest compliment to be paid to these songs, however, is to say that not a single one would benefit from being a Chili Peppers song. Their appeal is in their pride, and their pride is in their unpolished form.

McKeown in Noho

David Piper
Collegian Correspondent

ERIN MCKEOWN
Iron Horse
Feb. 10

Some people are just good at everything. At 22 years old, Erin McKeown has released two full-length cds, sold countless copies of her own independently released cassettes, won the Providence Pheonix's "Best Folk Artist" category and established herself as a nationally touring artist. And did I mention that she's done it all while earning a degree in ethnomusicology from Brown University?

McKeown seemed anxious to start her set at the Iron Horse this past Saturday, and kept stage banter to a minimum. It wasn't until after her third song that she turned to the mic to say, "There's a sold out number of you guys, thanks!"

McKeown was hardly short on having anything to say though, and throughout the night her explanations of songs yielded up some great stories in and of themselves. She described one song's Inspiration simply, saying "I was lonely, because all my friends had gone to the WTO protests, so I wrote a song." While the modest intro had everyone envisioning a solitary artist staring at bedroom walls, the bouncy swing number eventually found its way into some not-so-subtle political jabs like "tell me white boy / are you really gonna know what jail's like / gonna sit on a bus for six hours in plastic handcuffs?" In a completely different stylistic vein, the funky, upbeat "Love is Out to Get Me" found its inspiration in an elderly, saxophone-playing duplex resident. When a mischievous researcher asked him to play a tune of the same name, the man started right in, despite the fact that there was no such song. McKeown heard the story and decided that she would write her own "Love is Out to Get Me" as a tribute to the man.

It is diverse ground that McKeown mines not only in terms of her subject matter, but musically too. While she does not possess a particularly refined voice, it succeeds in telling a story with an honest, plain quality that might be said to borrow from Billie Holiday, or even a less bombastic version of Bjork. Her guitar playing ranged from gentle, fingerpicked folk one moment, to subtle swing soloing the next, to barre chord rock & roll the next. She made good use of live samples throughout her set, first laying down guitar tracks and then looping them to free her up for singing, lead lines, or improvisation. While some acoustic music purists might argue that the synthesized effects have no place in live music, seeing her crouched down center stage, equal parts folk performer and DJ mastermind, was captivating and exciting.

McKeown was joined for her performance by Dave Shafan on guitars and bass, and by Dave Flower on drums. Shafan's bass playing was solid all around, but the beautiful washes of reverb and down-home slide work he displayed on guitar were especially intriguing. Flower's sensitive playing with sticks, brushes, and mallets complemented the music, without ever cluttering. Another group of note worthy musical guests was the opening band bluanist, whose no-frills pop rock seemed to please the crowd.

Mckeown finished off her set by playing the bluegrass romp "O Asiel," complete with sing along chorus, before the final song "Blackbirds." She returned to play "Lullabye," a poignant three-four ballad, as an encore. The crowd left satisfied, with an earful of the musical jambalaya that Erin McKeown has gained a reputation of serving up.

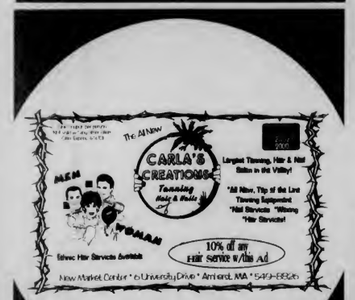
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com

549-RENT

U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL

• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration 11am at the Amherst Library Conference Room
(43 Amity St downtown Amherst)
MERCYhouse It's a church! www.knowmercy.org



CARLA'S CREATIONS
Tanning Nails & Nails
Largest Tanning, Hair & Nail Salon in the Valley!
10% off any HAIR service w/this Ad
New Market Center • 61 University Drive • Amherst, MA • 549-8822

Asian American studies Speaker Series

Rethinking Immigration

Marcelo Suárez-Orozco
Professor of Education at Harvard University

Thursday, February 15, 6.pm Herter 301, UMass

Co-sponsored with the Center for Latin American, Caribbean, and Latino Studies; Spanish and Portuguese; and Anthropology

For more information, contact Sunaina Maira at maira@english.umass.edu or 545-2972

Redefine... success boundaries friendship
strength differences courage

Join us at U Mass for an information meeting and view the new Peace Corps film featuring volunteers in Ghana, Turkmenistan, Armenia and Nicaragua.

Thursday February 15th 7pm
Campus Center Room 903
or stop by our information table in the Campus Center all week
Feb 5-9 from 10 am - 2 pm

Redefine your world in the Peace Corps.
www.peacecorps.gov 1-800-424-8580.

STUDENT TRAVEL

London.....$211
Paris.....$286
Amsterdam.....$273
Tokyo.....$609

student airfares
STUDENT AIRFARES • ISIC • HOSTELS • ACCOMMODATIONS
BUS PASSES • EURAIL PASSES • TOURS adventure travel • language courses • hostel cards rail passes
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

Cellular Phone Sales

Part time and Full time positions available through Pro Staff, a leader in the staffing industry. Sales of cell phones and accessories in a retail environment. Base plus commission. Flexible work schedule. Paid training provided. Excellent opportunity! Positions available in Northampton, Hadley, Westfield and Sturbridge. Meet us at the Campus Center Concourse on Wednesday 2/21 from 10am-2pm! Or call us today at (508) 620-7600!

PRO STAFF
people you can count on

Sales & Marketing INTERNSHIPS 2001

The nation's largest publisher of college and university campus telephone directories is offering paid full-time summer sales and marketing internships. Tremendous practical business experience and resume booster. Position begins in May with a week-long expense paid program in Chapel Hill, NC. Interns market the official University of Massachusetts campus telephone directory, selling advertising space to area businesses in Amherst. Earnings average $3200.00 for the 10-week program. All majors welcome!

There will be an information session Thursday, February 15 from 6pm to 7pm in the Robsham Visitors Center (opposite Whitmore)

Call 1-800-743-5556 x337 or visit our website at www.universitydirectories.com for more information and to apply

80 ViCom Circle
Chapel Hill, NC 27514
(800) 743-5556
Fax: (919) 968-8513
www.universitydirectories.com

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS

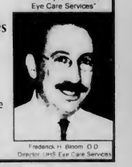
A great place to get contact lenses

Convenient hours and location

FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"



Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

UMass RUGBY

THE sport, THE game
THE people, THE best

Become part of a tradition

Play UMass Rugby

Info Meeting
Thursday, Feb 15

Men's Rm. 162 Campus Center @ 7PM
Women's Rm. 51 Goessman @6PM

For more info, call Matt @ 549-6468 or Ellen @ 549-9403

Apoptygma releases perfect single

APOPTYGMA BERZERK
"Kathy's Song (Come Lie Next To Me)"
Metropolis

What does a good single offer?

Far too often, your average single is simply a song that's currently on the radio and a 'bonus' track that's either a crappy song from the same album the single came from, an unreleased song that was cut from the album for being too poor, or a special remix that sounds exactly like the song you paid for, only far, far worse.

Then there are singles like Kathy's Song.

This single is everything that a single has the potential to be – a worthwhile experience altogether independent of the original album, well worth the purchase for a fan of the band for value other than just the collector's urge, which tends to be the only real reason people buy singles anymore.

The Kathy's Song consists of six versions of that very song, all of them remixes and alternate versions. One version that you will not find on the single is the album version, an absolute rarity, which makes this disc an entirely unique experience featuring wholly unreleased material (the single version is close to the original, but not identical). Two of the versions are by Stephan Groth, who is Apoptygma Berzerk, and the others are by different EBM (electronic body music) notables such as Terrs Corsten, who has also remixed acts such as Moby.

Still, all this would be in vain were "Kathy's Song" itself not the superb techno/industrial gem which it is. There is some ambiguity as to whether it is a sweet and simple love song or a truly disturbing ode to technical fetishism, but it hardly matters. I myself like sweet, simple love songs, so that's how I choose to view it, but either way the song's smooth, relaxed beats and simple keyboard layerings are simply pretty.

The song's alternate versions maintain the core of the original while expanding upon different themes. The "VNV Version" clearly plays up the technophile aspects, which extra computerized voice-overs and stripped, mechanical beats underneath the untouched vocals. The "C-64 Version," done by Groth, speeds up the beats and significantly shortens up the length of the song while not axing any of the lyrics, giving the song a manic edge and more of an obsessive, stalkerish air than the sweetness of the original. In fact, not only are all the interpretations of "Kathy's Song" interesting, they are also that rarest of breeds when dealing with remixes – listenable. There is no diluted crap on this single.

Apoptygma Berzerk have produced a well-packed and enjoyable experience with the Kathy's Song single, a unique and involving piece of music which other bands should imitate when putting out their singles. (Rob Schulze)

SEVENTEEN
Bikini Pie Fight
Nail Records

With an album name like Bikini Pie Fight, an opening track called "Porno Getaway" and other song titles such as "Big Lo[illegible] Friend" and "[illegible]

significant others

"Mountains."

Literally Mountains, of Coke" – it's a pretty safe bet to say that Seventeen doesn't take itself too seriously. Contemporary commercial music has plenty of examples of tongue-in-cheek successes, from Green Day to Beck, and so there's nothing immediately alarming to see a band adopt this attitude. It does, however, place more pressure on the band to prove themselves capable of rising above its own self-inflicted goofiness to produce worthwhile music. Green Day did this with irresistible melodies and stellar percussion, and Beck did it with marvelous textural innovation. Seventeen, however, offers little more than a reiteration of previous grunge fallout bands (remember Dig?).

Most of the tracks on Bikini Pie Fight sound like they could have been early, abandoned demos for Stone Temple Pilots, minus STP's vocal strength and talent for excellent pacing. The singing on Bikini Pie Fight is loose and off putting, the drumming simplistic and boring. The album is populated by ho-hum riffing ("My Man Mike"), jokes that don't work ("Return to Disco Mountain"), and a pervasive sense of boredom. The songwriting lacks edginess and sophistication, preventing the apparently competent band from achieving any sort of sonic critical mass; there's simply nowhere interesting for these songs to go.

Certain tracks, such as "Number 9", switch genres and adopt a more punkish sound, but these are even less successful at channeling the appeal of that genre's successes.

Ultimately, Bikini Pie Fight is the sound of a good (if vocally lacking) band going through other artists' motions without the enthusiasm or wherewithal to create anything uniquely interesting. (David Troupes)

KING CHANGO
The Return of El Santo
Luaka Bop

According to the press release that accompanies their most recent album, The Return of El Santo, "King Chango have gone Godzilla size." While it is true that the feisty New York-based Latin group brings so many sounds together to make them seem a lumbering collective of styles and instruments, they also share another characteristic of everyone's favorite radioactive lizard. Just as Godzilla tramples Tokyo, King Chango often tramples tight song structures and melodies with their drive to be a true "melting pot" of countless different elements. The twelve tracks on The Return of El Santo all run a little long, and this is a band that could really shine with some editing. After all, their pervasive sense of boredom makes quite developed when it rears its head on songs like "El Santo" and "Full Time Business," but sounds lost and unfocused.

Truth be told, however, this crew hits enough of the time to justify their ambition. The smooth and funky "What Politicians Say" is the kind of socially conscious song that you can actually groove with, proof that discontent doesn't have to be screamed or hammered into the listener's brain. "Lil' Sister" is an engrossing, tripped-out voyage into dub territory that unfortunately is placed in the soft middle of the album. "Finalmente" has the most recognizable hook on the album, and incorporates the myriad sounds Chango loves with a melody one can grab, making it a perfect opener and introduction to the band's style.

Even with little knowledge of Latin music or the Spanish language, King Chango's latest is a fine introduction for those curious of the style and to one of the more progressive hands in the genre. Although containing far too many holes to be considered a truly successful album, The Return of El Santo is a nice reminder to the mainstream that the Latin scene doesn't begin and end with Ricky Martin and J-Lo, and this off-the-radar blip moves a lot more than those two shakers. (Michael Delano)

MARZ
Lung Fu Mo Slue 5-Track Album Sampler
E-Magine

With everything in the world crossed over to no end (I personally have a thing for country-jazz-death-techno), it was only a matter of time before someone decided that a hip-hop/industrial cross-over would work, and Marz is the result.

On the surface, this is actually a no-brainer idea. While hip-hop has no real elements of industrial in it, industrial has always borrowed extensively from hip-hop. Listening to old-school KMFDM reveals numerous hip-hop beats beneath the noise guitars and the effects, and every band since them has drawn at least a little from the rhythms and production of urban music. Why not combine the two and see what happens?

Well, Marz effectively provides the answer to that: the finished product sucks.

The brainchild of former Ministry touring guitarist Zlatko Hukic, Marz blends the worst elements of both genres to maximum disastrous effect. The genius of Ministry, combining random sounds (such as old computer printers) and harsh noise with traditional guitars and vocal samples to create inherently brutal yet musical songs is lost here. On the industrial side, the music tends toward the pure noise/fuzz side of the spectrum, which at times can become unlistenable even for the hardened fan. A rhythmic sound of someone banging their head into a wall is still just the sound of someone banging their head into a wall, after all.

On the hip-hop side, the worst over-the-top bravado and cliché tough-pimp lyrics dominate to destroy the sanity of anyone who dares to pay attention. "I need a bitch I can fuck in the mud," sings Hukic on the aptly titled "In the Mud," and it never really gets any better than that. All boasts as to sexual prowess and toughness and streetness (I think that's the proper adjective) made me want to vomit.

It still stands to reason that the worlds of industrial and hip/hop could merge with good, or at least listenable, results, but Marz fails miserably in their attempt at the task. If anyone could ever take the typical, technical and musical layering, tortuous, industrial song and combine it with rap-style vocals that fit the dark mood of the music and weren't simply penis-bragging, the end product may well be revolutionary. For the moment, however, I'll stick with my old-school KMFDM. (Rob Schulze)

PATRICIA BARBER
Nightclub
Premonition Records

Patricia Barber, through soft, sinuous renditions of established jazz numbers, looks to capture the silky, smoky mood of a dimly sparsely attended nightclub. Her piano takes center stage in nearly all of the 12 tracks on Nightclub, even over her breathy (sometimes to the point of disadvantage) voice, supported by tastefully ambient bass, drums, and the occasional guitar.

While each track offers its own welcome variation of mood, highlights are easy to find. The six-and-a-half minute "Yesterdays" gives an exciting demonstration of the full range of Barber's talents as a pianist; the song devotes thankfully little time to Barber's singing — I mean this not as an insult to her voice, but compliment to her musicianship — and, as the song progresses, moves through increasingly wide-ranging shifts in momentum and dynamics, opening up into a minor key shower of sound, the effect all the more arresting for the album's general gentleness of tone.

That gentleness, indeed, is Nightclub's only true shortcoming, as it becomes too easy to accept without appreciation ot the elegance of a song when there is little else present sufficiently different to allow comparison. This is a minor quibble, however, and what we have leaves us with little to complain about. (David Troupes)

Potter can't save Heels

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

HEAD OVER HEELS
Directed by Mark S. Waters with Monica Potter and Freddie Prinze Jr.
Playing at AMC Mountain Farms 4

If you have ever wanted to hear an obscenely surreal bowel movement by teen heartthrob Freddie Prinze Jr. then his new movie Head Over Heels is for you. Apart from that Dumb and Dumber meets American Pie-esque moment, and a bit with a horny dog, Head Over Heels is totally devoid of anything memorable, and may inspire one to perform a similar act of painful excretion.

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB
Freddie Prinze Jr. and the rest of the cast of Head Over Heels.

In this latest instance of fecal filmmaking, Freddie Prinze Jr. attempts to broaden his weak film career, which, until now, consisted only of repugnant, post-pubescent, high school movies like She's All That, Down to You and Boys And Girls. Not since Steven Seagal's heyday have I seen so many appallingly similar movie plots with lame-brained three-worded titles.

Head Over Heels is not much of an exception, even though Prinze plays his first "grown up" role, possibly in hopes of becoming Hollywood's latest romantic leading man. He could not have been more miscast, since his chemistry with co-star Monica Potter is staler than three-week old matzah. Furthermore, Prinze doesn't look a day older than sixteen, and when he engages in America's second favorite pastime with the aforementioned Potter, I can't help but think, "Is that legal?"

Potter, a talented and blossoming young actress last seen as Robin Williams' flame in Patch Adams, deserves far better than this glaringly trite film – it is apparent that she is trying her damnedest to keep Head Over Heels on its feet.

Head Over Heels strikingly resembles Alfred Hitchcock's ageless thriller Rear Window, albeit with a romantic twist. Potter is Amanda Pierce, who has recently moved out on her cheating boyfriend and taken up residence with three supermodels in an upper class Manhattan penthouse. All model stereotypes are exhausted here: a blonde airhead, a foreigner with an attitude, and, of course, the obligatory minority model.

Her next-door neighbor is Jim Winston (Prinze), a fashion designer whom she meets and falls immediately "head over heels" for, giving us the blasé title we've come to expect from films like this.

Judging from the bad string of her past relationships, Amanda sets out to find something wrong with this seemingly faultless man, spying on him from her apartment overlooking his. The error of Winston's ways appears when he murders a young woman in his more than humble abode, conveniently taking place directly in front of the open window. Didn't Mother tell you to pull down the shades when you kill someone? Some people never learn.

Finally, after what feels like a day and a half of watching the movie, the ending arrives, a great weight being lifted off the moviegoer's shoulders. It comes as no surprise to anyone that Winston is not all he was originally suspected of being.

And herein lies the biggest let down of the film. It would have been something completely new and different if Prinze played a bad guy, and he didn't fall in love with a character for once. Certainly, Prinze understands that the teen following he has accrued over the years wants to see him as the nice guy who always gets the girl, but unless he takes bolder acting strides, he will most likely be the next Judd Nelson. (Who?)

I won't bother to mention the director's name here, since I doubt he'll have much of a career after this catastrophe, nor will I attempt to understand why it took four screenplay writers to pen this celluloid waste. I, personally, am greatly awaiting Monica Potter's next film Along Came A Spider, a potentially more sound movie vehicle. On the other hand, my view of Prinze remains the same – a pretty-boy whose movie choices, like Head Over Heels, leaves much to be desired.

■ teen

continued from page 5

N'Sync, BSB, and Christina in particular do have an appeal to an older teenage, college age, and even older than that fan base. In fact, many easy listening stations designed to attract middle age listeners have Backstreet and N'Sync on their playlists. Although the genre is obviously targeted to teenage girls its appeal is not necessarily limited to that.

In a few years when Britney is posing for Adult magazines and N'Sync is on "Behind The Music" talking about all of the drugs and booze they consumed, and barely legal groupies they got it on with, the genre won't necessarily die out. There will likely be a new crop of young stars with just the right look to become the next teen idols in our culture. As long there are people to write songs for them, and mass society imbraces it, the genre will continue to thrive on prepackaged image, looks, and oh yea....the music too.

■ pop

continued from page 5

for the riotous uprising at the "peace and music" festival, where Bizkit frontman Fred Durst has been blamed at exploiting the already hateful, hostile feelings from the frustrated audience of 250,000. Certainly, Durst's exhortations ("Let's all start some shit!") seemed to provoke the enraged audience.

SEX

Pop stars ooze so much sex appeal that it can sometimes make Pamela Anderson seem like an innocent schoolgirl. They never feel limited to music as a means to entertain. Take for instance supreme provocateur Madonna – who, by the way, holds the crown as the most famous person in the world. The Material Girl has used sex as a tool to garner the attention she so earnestly desires, and while others berated her scandalous behavior, it helped her sell over 130 millions albums worldwide and catapulted her as one of the most successful entertainers of all time. Millions of teen girls idolized the controversial pop star in the '80's and claimed that it was the only person they could look up to.

Britney Spears, who, like Madonna, has been publicly scrutinized for her controversial image, has taken the reigns and become the biggest teen idol since Madonna's heyday back in the '80's. But Spears' galvanizing image has drawn some insidious remarks from parents who believe her barely-there ensembles provoke pre-pubescent preteen fans to do the same. The buxom babe brought her notorious image to an even more eye-popping level when she went into a quasi-striptease at last year's MTV Video Music Awards.

Pop stars also have a history of dealing with bouts of alcohol and drug abuse. Whitney Houston is the latest in a long line of celebrities dealing with the perpetually damaging substances. Critics condemn the stars as glamorizing drugs and alcohol, and we don't need any more of VH1's "Behind the Music" documentaries to convince us that there have been more than a handful of rock stars addicted to painkillers, drugs, and alcohol.

BOY BANDS

Saturating the pop music landscape, boy bands have been around just about as long as pop music itself. From the Beatles to the Backstreet Boys, the cutesome images brought on by these pop stars makes them a continuous critical victim. But as fans of super-adorable bands such as 'N Sync and the Backstreet Boys show, these groups are the epitome of pop star obsession. Their amazing fan bases can create near pandemonium when either band makes an appearance on high profile appearances such as "TRL." When asked when the boy-band phenomenon is going to end, Lou Pearlman, the man responsible for the creation of BSB, 'N Sync, and (newly manufactured) O-Town wryly answered: "When God stops making little girls."

To expand the statement one step further, the pop star era may never end. Our fixation on inherent pop stars may never fade away. We will continue to wait for the next hip pop star, continue to be awed by racy sexual content, wait for Madonna's next reinvention and continue to turn up our noses on dispusable prepubescent boy bands.

Top ten pop songs

They might be lame. They might have little to no artistic merit. But here they are: the Top 10 teen pop songs of all time as determined by a truly qualified musical critic: me.

10. "The Right Stuff" – New Kids on The Block.
The first hit by the first of the modern era boy bands. A lame chorus, and inane dance, what more can you ask for?

9. "Calculus" – 2gether.
The best song from my personal favorite boy band of all time. This one is truly deep stuff. The classic line- "I need a young thing to keep up with my pace. To hold me in her arms and take me straight to second base."

8. "Oops I Did It Again" – Britney Spears.
Britney's apology to the music industry, oops, she didn't mean to make another crappy album that sold so well. Plus that Titanic sample mid-song is true song writing genius.

7."Tearin Up My Heart" – N'Sync.
Who says teen pop isn't deep? These guys can't live with or without each other, errr... without their girlfriends.

6."Genie In a Bottle" – Christina Aguilera.
A personal plea to be rubbed the right way. Most guys will gladly oblige.

5."Baby One More Time" – Britney Spears.
This is where the world met Britney Spears, and her Catholic school-girl outfit. This video sends a great message... school is boring so hit me one more time.

4. "It Gonna Be Me" – N'Sync.
I've personally witnessed someone who claims to hate this kind of "crappy" music blasting this in his car when he didn't know anybody was looking. Nothing to be ashamed of, it's a good song.

3. "Hangin Tough" – New Kids on the Block.
Are you tough enough?

2. "I Want It That Way" – Backstreet Boys.
Probably the single biggest sing along style pop song ever. Who didn't know the all words to this song after they heard it 3 or 4 times?

1. "Bye Bye Bye" – N'Sync.
Hard-edged pop, that says, YO GIRL HIT THE DOOR! DON'T MESS WITH ME I'M IN A BOYBAND! Actually not really, but hey, some song had to be number 1.

-Kurt Polesky is a Collegian staff member.

Choose the Avenue to Your Future
FASHION AV
RETAIL CAREER FAIR '01
OPEN TO ALL MAJORS!
UMass Amherst
Campus Center Auditorium
Wednesday, February 21, 2001
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
For more information please call 545-5014.
Sponsored by the Apparel Marketing Program, Department of Consumer Studies
Companies attending include:
Casual Corner
Crate & Barrel
Ethan Allen
Filene's
JCPenney
L.L. Bean
Nordstrom
Osh Kosh B'Gosh
Reebok
Sears
TJX Companies
Wal-Mart
Yale Genton
... plus many others

Your parents couldn't make it last. Now you're wondering if you can.
Hope for a Lasting Marriage?
Free Article: Is there hope for a lasting marriage?
February 15th at 7:00 p.m.
Campus Center rm.101
The following night there will be a Karaoke Party in the Coffee Shop at Campus Center at 8:00. Please join us.
Sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ
yako@external.umass.edu

18+ WELCOME
fun·food·spirits
THE PUB
amherst
21+ TO DRINK
PRESIDENT'S DAY WEEKEND BASH!
Thursday · Dj DK Spinning
10-1 techno-funk, house, hip hop r&b, rap
Friday · Guest Dj spinning your requests all night long 10-1
Saturday · Dj Skeptical
10-1 reggae, house, hip hop
Sunday · One More Night – Dj DK Spinning all night
9-1
· 21+ Positive I D Required · 18+ Admitance with State and College I D Card · License

COMPLETE AUTO BODY REPAIRS
ALL MAKES AND MODELS
DANA AUTOMOTIVE
Chevrolet Volkswagen
COLLISION REPAIR • GLASS INSTALLATION
Authorized GM/VW Body Shop
Frame & Unibody Straightening
24 HR HOTLINE 586-7250 | FREE LOANERS! | 968 Bridge Road NORTHAMPTON RS# 2427

IT'S NO SECRET, SERVICE AND PRICES THAT ARE POSITIVELY PRESIDENTIAL!
LIQUORS 44
Don't Drink & Drive
EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS $44.99
1/2 KEGS $45.99
1/2 KEGS $37.99
1/2 KEGS $88.99
30 PACK Coors Extra Gold $10.99
MICHELOB & MICHELOB LIGHT $10.99
18 PACK OTTER CREEK $9.99
12 PACK HARP LAGER $10.99
GENUINE DRAFT & GENUINE DRAFT LIGHT $10.99
CASE MIKES HARD LEMONADE $9.99
Summer Thirst Quencher Specials
Australian Wine Sale
20% OFF ALL AUSTRALIAN WINES
750ML Only
CARLO ROSSI $6.99
C K MONDAVI $11.99
LUNA & LUNA CHARDONNAY/PINOT GRIGIO $7.49
J. VIDAL FLEURY COTES Du RHONE $7.49
SUTTER HOME WHITE ZINFANDEL $3.99
RUBINOFF VODKA $8.99
BACARDI LIMON RUM $9.99
SOUTHERN COMFORT $17.99
CLAN MACGREGOR SCOTCH $12.99
POLAND SPRINGS GIN $9.99
JAGERMEISTER $14.99
Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS 2 15 01 THRU WEDS 2 21 01

jostens
TO PURCHASE YOUR OFFICIAL UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASS RING
A Jostens representative will be on campus
Wednesday, Thursday, Friday
February 14, 15, 16
10am - 2pm Outside the University Store.
$50 DEPOSIT REQUIRED
MAJOR CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED

Revup your engines as NASCAR season hits road

MATT BRADY

It seems that it was just yesterday when Bobby Labonte was basking in the glory of his first Winston Cup championship, but the NASCAR 2001 season is about to get underway.

The biggest shocker surrounding Daytona 500 Speedweek events has been the re-emergence of Dodges in NASCAR events. The Dodges have burst onto the scene, with Bill Elliott securing the pole position by turning a lap of almost 184 mph.

The real surprise was Elliott's teammate, who will sit alongside Elliott in the front row on Sunday. Stacy Compton, a rookie last year, drove his No. 92 Dodge to the two slot by finishing his qualifying lap with an average speed of just under 183 m.p.h.

Compton, 33, out of Hunt, Va. finished fifth in the Rookie of the Year voting last year, his best finish of the season being a 10th place at New Hampshire. But he turned many heads this week, not only because of his performance but also because he is part of the return of Dodge cars to the NASCAR circuit.

The rest of the starting positions will be determined by today's Gatorade Twin 125's which will run at noon.

Of course, this is the "Great American Race", and there will be many different drivers competing for the victory and for the Winston Cup Championship this season.

The favorite for both the race and for the championship has to be Labonte, who dominated the field for the second half of last year. He drove Joe Gibbs' No. 18 Ford to four victories last year and a whopping 17 top five finishes en route to the title.

Another car that all eyes will be on is the No. 88. Dale Jarrett won Daytona last year and finished fifth on the circuit last year, coming off his first championship the year before. He had the third best time in trials, and, barring accident, should be starting in the top ten. DJ simply knows how to drive, and the best drivers are the ones who wind up in victory lane at Daytona.

The other youngster to turn heads this week was Tony Stewart. The former IRL champion turned the fourth best lap in qualifying, but it was his escapades last Sunday that got people's attention. After losing the lead in the Bud shootout to Dale Earnhardt in the waning laps, Stewart regained the lead with a lap to go and held off Earnhardt to win the race. Stewart finished sixth in last year's championship.

Speaking of The Intimidator, he has shaken the taboo, which used to surround the 500 since winning the race for the first time in '98. Last year, he had a disappointing 21st place finish in the "granddaddy of them all."

Overall, Earnhardt had a pretty solid season last year, finishing second in the points race to Labonte. However, "The Dominator" only found his way to victory lane twice last year, in Las Vegas on March 4 and at Talladega on Oct. 21. He finished only 300 points behind the champion, due mainly to the fact that he finished in the top ten 21 times last season. All eyes will be on Earnhardt and his quest for a record 8th Winston Cup championship.

Of course, he was certainly not the biggest story of last year. In fact, he wasn't even the biggest story in his family. Son Dale Jr. had a phenomenal rookie season, finishing just behind Rookie of the Year Matt Kenseth. Little Dale was the first rookie to win a race last year, but he only logged five top ten finishes despite his two wins.

The other big family story surrounding the 500 involves the brothers Burton. Jeff had a career year last year, finishing third in the points championship and notching three wins and 16 top fives. He was Jarrett's only real challenger in the late laps last year, but his second place finish was a sign of good things to come.

Brother Ward Burton finished the season one of the hottest drivers in the league, ending the season in 10th place on the circuit. The elder Burton turned the sixth best lap in time trials, just ahead of Jeff Gordon and his "rainbow warriors."

Gordon finished last season 9th in points, a disappointment for the kid from Pennsylvania. His year seemed never to get off to a start, as he finished 34th at Daytona and didn't crack the top ten until a ninth place finish at Las Vegas. This year, he did well in qualifying, but will need a strong performance in the Twin 125's in order to put himself in a position to challenge in the 500.

When Sunday rolls around, and the immortal words, "Gentlemen, start your engines" roll throughout the great 2.5 mile oval, it will be a wide-open race.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

Tournament time for UMass track

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's indoor track team has had a tumultuous season so far, to say the least. The Minutemen brought in a fresh crop of talented but inexperienced athletes, and questions arose as to how successful the team would be.

Then, as the season progressed, the Maroon and White received significant contributions from its underclassmen, but then the injury bug began to strike. UMass has since tried to maintain focus as the pivotal meets approach.

This weekend, the Maroon and White have arguably the most important event of the season at the Atlantic 10 Championships in Kingston, R.I. Although the team has traditionally fared well at the conference championships, it will take another solid effort by the squad to finish high in the eleven-team field.

"I hope everyone brings it together for this one," said senior sprinter Marc Sylvander. "Hopefully with everyone back, we can compete and defeat URI."

Marc Sylvander

The Rams, the indoor track powerhouse in the Atlantic 10 and the host of the meet, have overtaken the Minutemen several times this season, so UMass is hoping for some revenge at its biggest showcase so far on the campaign.

Fortunately, the Maroon and White might be fully healthy for this meet, one of few such meets this season. Sylvander and another of UMass' strongest runners, Hugh Reid, both have fallen victim to injury in recent weeks. Reid recently suffered a concussion after a nasty fall against the Rams.

"When we last faced URI, we weren't running at full speed because of our injuries," said Sylvander. "We didn't feel like we had to win the meet, but just to compete so we might be able to beat them the next time around."

Sylvander, Reid and senior Mike Harris look to shine in the sprinting events, while newcomer David Mullert has been performing well as of late in the mile, and could potentially be a force to be reckoned with on Saturday.

In the throwing events, freshman Jeff Jason will be looking to step up even more in the shot put after an enormously successful freshman season, exceeding even head coach Ken O'Brien's wildest expectations. Sophomore Eric Uliano also should have a solid performance along with Jason in the shot. Finally, Tony Ortega has had some quality showings in the long jump this season and could very well place high for the Maroon and White.

With a great balance in the sprint, distance, throwing and jumping events, the Minutemen have the talent to possibly come out on top, despite enduring what O'Brien has called a "rollercoaster ride" of a season.

"We've definitely got some promise and a good bunch of veterans and underclassmen to really go somewhere this weekend," said O'Brien.

Verizon Wireless

Introducing Mobile Messenger℠

Now you can chat without talking.

Loud concert? No problem. Quiet libraries? A cinch.

Now you can send and receive text messages right from your wireless phone without losing your voice or disturbing a soul. You can exchange messages one on one, or to a group of friends—whether they're across the room or across the country. So now nothing can keep you from staying connected.

Simple. Affordable. National.

Join in.

Drive responsibly. Call with care. Verizon Wireless.

verizonwireless

verizonwireless.com 1.800.2 JOIN IN

COMMUNICATIONS STORES

BOSTON, MA — Summer Street (across from Macy's) 617-345-0500
BURLINGTON, MA — Burlington Mall (next to Lord & Taylor) 781-270-0430
CAMBRIDGE, MA — 87 Brattle St (1 block from Galleria Mall) 617-864-0300
CHESTNUT HILL, MA — Route 9 (Star Market Plaza) 617-734-9000
MARLBOROUGH, MA — Solomon Pond Mall 508-624-9070
NORTH ATTLEBORO, MA — Emerald Square Mall (Lower level, next to Sears) 508-695-0577
SAUGUS, MA — Kmart Plaza (Next to Square One Mall) 781-941-8300
SHREWSBURY, MA — 77 Boston Turnpike (Route 9) 508-845-0900

Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Price Plans. Credit approval required. $175 early termination fee. CDMA Web Enabled phone required. All calls subject to taxes, tolls and other charges. Available where compatible digital service is provided. Two-way messaging requires a two-way capable wireless phone. Phone must be purchased separately. ©2001 Verizon Wireless

There will be a mandatory Sports staff meeting tonight at 7:30 in the newsroom.

After marriage to Pavel Bure, Kournikova scanned for viruses

Many of you will think this is fiction. It's not. Most of you will think it's in bad taste. It could be. But just remember, it's a column we run every week to try to make someone laugh. It's college, it's funny, it's Larry. Also keep in mind that it's just a column (probably the greatest in Collegian history).

But of course, the Kournikova virus is real. And yes, the QuoteMaster lives. We stand behind everything we print. We've never constructed information or quotes and we never will. That's why it's so fun – to see what we can come up with each and every week. Enjoy...and Happy Holidays.

The QuoteMaster

Let us formally introduce you to Randy Ingham, the first official domestic "Third and 48" correspondent. Sometimes we joke around and call him our "Ambassador to Canada," but then he gets mad.

The sign on his desk says "Third and 48 Quotemaster." We're actually not too sure who gave him the sign, but that doesn't matter. He called us up and convinced us that we hired him. So what the heck...Mr. Ingham, we're glad to have you on the staff. Note: From now on, he'll be referred to as the Big Q.

So why, you ask, is he The Quotemaster? Because he says stupid things we think you'll enjoy. For example, let us recall the time the Big Q told us that he liked to go to the beach, hide in the dune grass and jump out at people as they scampered down the boardwalk.

"It's my favorite sport," the Big Q insisted. "But it's nothing compared to the athletic competition I call 'Aquatic Archery.' (Let us apologize for this break, but we couldn't understand his next sentence because someone in the background yelled "dude get over here, another victim to the Milk Challenge!") The quote now continues...

"No, but I've tried this before," he said. "Thirty one mackerel, seven striped bass, three marlins and one giant squid."

Do you see what we mean? Hilarious.

When we talked to the Big Q yesterday, he was kind of under the weather, suffering from what we like to call the "Valentine's Day Blues."

"I think that V-day is a crock," Q said. "I mean just because it's February 14, I need to go out and spend 50 bucks on gifts and then dinner on top of that...yeah I might do that. Don't these people know I maxed out my credit card buying AC/DC tickets?"

Then he started talking about the UMass men's basketball team.

"I think UMass knew exactly what they were doing when they scheduled a game last night," Q said. "They were banking on the fact that no one goes on dates in college and that only 'drunken hook-ups' occur. If there's not a full house then there's way too much love on that campus.

"My favorite sport on V-Day, however, has always been getting really loaded and then call up all the girls that I didn't have the guts to call before I had my 8 beers. Sometimes I actually say something rather than hang up as soon as they answer."

Professional Tennis

We received some very bad news here at "Third and 48" last week. Apparently we can't download fake-nude pictures of Anna Kournikova anymore. This has led to an increase in office violence and the enrollment of most of the Sports staff in various twelve-step programs. Sadly, we can no longer gaze upon the blonde tennis bombshell's sassy backhand; well, not without being careful.

It seems that we can no longer examine Anna without scanning her for viruses. (Actually, since it has been noted that Kournikova has been with both Sergei Fedorov and Pavel Bure, the "Third and 48" editors suggest scanning her for viruses anyway.)

The utterly scary "Anna Kournikova Virus" hit the world last week, when some sleazy, twenty-year old pervert decided to mess with the minds and hard drives of lonely men everywhere. Can we just discuss how terribly wrong it is to mess with men's emotions like that? Some people are pathetic and have needs (Lyon Renharris).

Speaking of sleazy perverts, one unnamed Third and 48 Editor (that's not Eric Soderstrom) called his favorite place to hang out Adults Only Video. We talked to the very best news resource in Massachusetts, our good friend Larry.

Larry had heard of the devastating Anna Kournikova case. He said he watched it on MSNBC. He is familiar with the obsession with online pornography, and the reasons that some would be attracted to downloading her naked pictures on the Internet. He also commented on her rumored desire to be naked online.

"If she's 18, and that's what she wants to do, then she's allowed to," he explained. "It'll spike her career, but whether its stays up there or not is up to her."

Larry had a stern warning for all of you Internet adult site fanatics out there. "My advice to anyone buying adult material over the Internet is to be careful," he said.

If you get the email, we actually suggest opening it. Think about it, seeing a naked picture of Anna Kournikova is easily worth the petty inconvenience of getting a minor computer virus.

Ryan Benharris and Eric Soderstrom are Collegian Columnists. Email us at Thirdand48@yahoo.com.

COURTESY WWW.KOURNIKOVA.COM

Kournikova is trouble for her opponents on the court, but is even more trouble for computers across the country.

On-campus Recruitment Days • March 1 & 2

Be there!

Information Systems (IS) Consultant

Information Session
Thursday, University Club
6:00 p.m. - 8:00 p.m.

Interviews
Friday, Campus Career Network Building

Sodexho Marriott Services, North America's largest provider of outsourced food service and facilities management, is seeking a bright, professionally competent campus leader for a traveling IS Consultant position. If you're an ambitious Spring 2001 graduate with excellent problem-solving skills and an understanding of inventory and operations processes, then come claim this rewarding position with a leader.

If hired, you will work out of a home-based office, traveling to manage room and equipment inventory services, and oversee budgetary responsibilities for new and existing clients.

Qualifications include:
- One year of management experience or internship in related field preferred (in environmental services or contract management)
- Proficiency in Microsoft Office
- Database, software/hardware experience (in both independent and network environments)
- Ability to provide business analysis service to national customers (in healthcare setting)
- Ability to travel 3-4 weeks per month and some weekends

We offer an excellent salary and benefits package including paid vacation, life/health insurance, 401K and outstanding opportunities to advance. If you want to begin with the best, this is your chance!

To be considered for an interview, e-mail your resume to our Corporate Recruiting Manager: slyonsberk@sodexhomarriott.com

www.sodexhomarriott.com

Sodexho Marriott

Gymnastics squads split

Men head for Michigan, women host meet

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts men's and women's gymnastics return to action this weekend as the men head West to Michigan for a tri-meet on Sunday while the women host a quad-meet with M.I.T., Yale and Alaska-Anchorage on Saturday.

The men's gymnastics team is off to a great start with its first two out of the season, at Penn State and Navy. The Minutemen, now ranked 10th in the country, downed the defending National Champion Nittany Lions by a mere three points in January in State College. Navy was another top competitor, but the Maroon and White came out on top again beating the Midshipmen by close to four points.

Eric Bacon

With top finishes against highly-touted teams, men's gymnastics can look to a close day against the Wolverines and No. 1 Oklahoma.

Second ranked Michigan has Kris Zimmerman, a gymnast who is ranked sixth in the national all around. The Sooners are on top nationally right now, and this tri meet could bring major implications to the National Collegiate Athletic Association standings when the weekend is over.

Brendan O'Neill, a top gymnast for the Sooners, has led OU to be the best team for floor exercise in the country.

"Our goal is to say with them. It's hard to catch up. Michigan's had a couple injuries. It'll be hard," said UMass head coach Roy Johnson.

UMass is holding its own secret weapon. Sophomore Pat McFarlin, recently named rookie of the week by the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC). McFarlin has been dealing with a knee problem lately but is expected to be in full force Sunday.

McFarlin placed second in the nation last weekend on the pummel horse at nationals last weekend. Eric Bacon, a senior and veteran for UMass, is also expected to be a great contribution in the fight for the top team.

While the men head off to the Michigan, the Minutewomen will be home at Boyden Gymnasium as they host a quad meet against some of the NCAA best teams.

Coming from the far west will be the University of Alaska-Anchorage. Not expected to be one of UMass' toughest competitors, the 69th ranked Seawolves will come and give something a little different to the Minutewomen. UAA is not a team that UMass annually competes in, so a fresh team will be stepping through the door. Alaska-Anchorage has recently posted their season high score against West-Chester (PA), and gymnast Mandi Burdick had her best all around of the season.

"I don't really know about Alaska. We'll train hard and come out on top though," said Minutewoman Megan Donoghue.

The Engineers will also be coming on Saturday. Ranked 83rd nationally, M.I.T is coming off a successful meet against Vermont and is looking to continue the good returns.

Yale is noted to be the women's gymnastics toughest competitor on the season. The highest ranked for Saturday's meet at 59th, the Bulldogs are just a step ahead in the Minutewomen's path. After last year's banner season Yale has already been putting out strong waves. Top gymnast Lisa Crosby has shown great promise for the 2001 campaign, while Lara Hath has been consistent on the floor and vault. Yale could possibly see another Ivy League title at the end of the 2000-2001 season.

Pat McFarlin

The Minutewomen will put up a tough fight to be the best on Saturday afternoon. Second-year athlete and top competitor Katie Telt will again be absent from the all around because of a healing ankle. Telt is expected to compete in the vault, bars and balance beam exercises. The Minutewomen have been working hard all week in effort to surpass the Bulldogs and pull up their rank.

"We're ready. Yale's going to be tough, but I don't think it'll be tough to beat them. They'll be good competition," said Telt.

Donoghue described the team to be ready for the quad meet. With practice all week and everyone in good health, UMass will have their entire best ready.

"We've really been motivated this week and been putting up our best routines," said Donoghue. "We've got three teams coming. We can beat all of them and hopefully get a good team score."

With postive attitudes going into the weekend both the men and women's gymnastics teams could bring victory and higher rankings. A good weekend for the men could move them up the in the standings. The women's team just might be able to surpass the rival Bulldogs and raise the season average.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Megan Donoghue and the women's gymnastic team play host to three teams this weekend while the men head to Michigan for a tri-meet.

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
(02/13/01-02/21/01)
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarettes, Phone Cards
Stolikchnaya Strasberi 750 $16.99
Dinkel Acker 12 pack $9.99 +dep.
Malibu Rum 750 $12.99
Beck's, Amstel, Hieneken, 12 pack $10.99
Magic Hat 9 pack $8.99 +dep
Spaten Lager 6 pack $5.99 +dep
REGISTER FOR WEEKLY PRIZES
Visit the Beer of the World Section!

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
2 [illegible] 7 8 7 8
[illegible]@lincolnrealty.com

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
* See what you eat!
* See what you drink!
* See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS — See You There — DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

Asian American Studies Speaker Series
Rethinking Immigration
Marcelo Suarez-Orozco
Thursday Feb. 15, 6pm
Herter 301, UMASS
Co-Sponsored with the Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies, Spanish and Portuguese and Anthropology
Marcelo Suarez-Orozco is a Professor of Education at Harvard University
FOR MORE INFORMATION: CONTACT SUNAINA MAIRA AT MAIRA@ENGLISH.UMASS.EDU OR 545-2972

EAT!
A new play about the cult of fitness and one young woman's struggle with disordered eating.
Wednesday, February 21, 2001
7:30 pm Blanchard Campus Center
Mount Holyoke College
Presented by Tempest Productions, Inc.
Co-Sponsored by: Health Services, H.O.P.E. (Helping Overcome Problem Eating) and the Kennan Fund

The Umass Oxford Summer Seminar offers talented students an exceptional opportunity to study British literature, history, politics and law in a six-week residential program at Trinity College, Oxford. Interested students are invited to attend an information meeting and discussion about the 2001 seminar.
Date: Thursday, February 15
Time: 4:30-6:30 pm
Place: Campus Center 803
Alums from last summer's Seminar will describe their experiences and program administrators will describe next summer's seminar. For brochure or answers to questioins, contact the Seminar via e-mail at:
oxford@english.umass.edu

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

CENTER OF TOWN 1,2,3 bedroom apts. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb showings for June and Sept. No Fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com

CONDOS 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showing for June and Sept. No Fees 253-7879 www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com

1 Bedroom Utilities Free Minutes from UMass. Available April 1 $700 a month 665-3521

1 Bedroom Apartment at Cliffside. In Sunderland for sublet thru May. $600 reduced from $720 Call 549-6408

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 Nissan Maximaloaded 160,000 miles. $2500 413-323-5390

1991 Honda Civic SI low mileage. Great condition. Call Erica 253-6504

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained. $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

AUTO FOR SALE

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition. $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

CHILDCARE

Babysitter with references and own car. Needed for evenings. 256-3756

COMPUTERS

Mac G4, 400 MHZ 20 GBHD, 128 MB Ram, DVD/56k modem, zip drive, 17" studio display monitor, Epson Stylus 740 printer, games, DVD movies. (mint condition) Market price $2200, asking $2000. Mike 665-3572

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Interns Needed Music Producion Co. seeks PT interns for help w/ festivals, national tours & promotion. No pay but lots of perks (concert tix, CD's, Merch, etc.) 888-595-3122

WATNED: Native Speakers of American English for listening experiments $8/hr ph545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Join Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life
5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for : Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama, Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.campwayne-girls.com

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Care Attendant for disabled man $10. 413-253-0415

PCA for Male Quad. Mon-Fri. morning $10-$12 perhr. 546-0666

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

Single Dad and business owner too busy to do everything. I need help! Shopping, light cleaning, errands, bills, etc. Compensation negotiable. Very part-time, flexible schedule. Need to have car. Phone # 413-253-4642 ask for James

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Flexible hours and a fun working environment. Raises commensurate with performance, possible tips. 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Join Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life
5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161 Call 253-2378

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Long distance relationships CAN WORK! Find out how at www.sblake.com

Fraternities * Sororities
Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Near UMass. Quiet setting. No smoking vegetarian kitchen. Car needed. $325+ 549-4853

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TICKETS FOR SALE

2 Great Barnaked Ladies seats. Call Renee 253-2445

One Barenaket Ladies Floor Seat Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $179 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Spring Break Still Available! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do it on the Web! Go to www.studentCity.com or call 1-800-293-1443 for info.

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@gofliptrips.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break! Last Minute Deals! Cancun, Bahamas, Florida, Jamaica & Mazatlan. Join MTV and Baywatch for Spring Break! Call for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

- 2 HSCN Bulletin Board
- 3 CBS Hartford
- 4 NBC Boston
- 5 ABC 40 Springfield
- 6 PBS 57 Springfield
- 7 HSCN Movie Channel
- 8 UPN 18 Hartford
- 9 HSCN New Movie Channel
- 10 CBS 3 New Haven
- 11 Fox 61 Hartford
- 12 PBS 24 Hartford
- 13 NBC 30 Springfield
- 14 Educational Channel
- 15 WMFO (Academic Channel)
- 16 WHUS New Haven
- 17 ESPN
- 18 ESPN2
- 19 USA TV (Student Channel)
- 20 Weather Channel
- 21 Cartoon Central
- 22 Nickelodeon
- 23 Disney
- 24 CNN
- 25 CNN Headline News
- 26 Lifetime
- 27 USA
- 28 TNT
- 29 A&E
- 30 Sci-Fi
- 31 Discovery
- 32 TBS
- 33 Comedy Network
- 34 Sci-Fi Net
- 35 TV Land
- 36 Comedy Central
- 37 BET
- 38 The Nashville Network
- 39 Bloomberg Financial Network
- 40 College TV Network
- 41 MTV
- 42 VH1
- 43 VH1
- 44 The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 15, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (C)		On the Waterways (in Stereo)		Mystery! "Inspector Morse" "The Wench Is Dead" (In Stereo) (C)		Wait for God		This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News (C)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		48 Hours (In Stereo) (C)		News (C)	Late Show (C)
WBZ	4	News (C)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		48 Hours (In Stereo) (C)		News (C)	Late Show (C)
WCVB	5	News (C)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (C)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (C)		News (C)	Nightline (C)
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends (C)	Nanny (C)	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo) (C)		Charmed (N) (In Stereo) (C)		News		Friends (C)	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (C)	Friends (N) (C)		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "A Walk in the Woods" (C)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	7th Heaven "Ties & Wings"		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo) (C)		Charmed (N) (In Stereo) (C)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (C)	Hollywood	Friends (N) (C)	Friends	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "A Walk in the Woods" (C)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons (C)	Frasier (C)	Seinfeld (C)	Foendz (C)	Incredible Animal Rescues 3		Conspiracy Theory		News		Frasier (C)	Frasier (C)
WVIT	22	News (C)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (C)	Friends (N) (C)	Friends	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "A Walk in the Woods" (C)		News (C)	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (C)		This Old Hse.	Ors. on Call	Mystery! "Inspector Morse" "The Wench Is Dead" (In Stereo) (C)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (C)
WGGB	28	News (C)	ABC News	Seinfeld (C)	Frasier (C)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (C)		News (C)	Nightline (C)
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (C)	Judge Judy (C)	Seinfeld (C)	Frasier (C)	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (C)				Frasier (C)	Mad Abt. You	Spin City (C)	Spin City (C)
WTBS	72	Roseanne (C)	Roseanne (C)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★ "Striptease" (1996, Comedy-Drama) Demi Moore, Armand Assante.					★½ "Air America" (1990) Mel Gibson.
AAE	60	Night Court	Newsradio (C)	Law & Order (C)		Biography: Mackenzie P.		Behind Closed Doors (N) (C)		Investigative Reports (C)		Law & Order	Damaged Goods
CNN	23	Worldview (C)	Moneyline Newshour (N) (C)		Crossfire (C)	Wolf Blitzer (C)	The Point (C)	Larry King Live (C)		CNN Tonight	9pm Room (C)	Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live (C)		Daily Show (C)	Stein a Money	Penn & Teller: Photophilia		Battlebots (C)	Battlebots (C)	Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show (C)	Turn Ben
DISC	63	Wild Discovery			Wild Discovery	Mysteries of the Sea		Shipwreck – Edmund		Bermuda Triangle		Justice Files
ESPN	61	Sportscenter (C)			Track and Field	Bob Knight		College Basketball: Cincinnati at Memphis. (Live) (C)				Sportscenter (C)
LIFE	69	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo) (C)		"A Mother's Right for Justice" (2001, Drama) Meredith Baxter. (C)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Senseless	Celebrity	Cribs	VJ Jor a Day	TRL (In Stereo) (C)		Say What Krbo	Cribs (N)		Diary (N)	Undressed (C)
NICK	64	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold! (C)	Rugrats (C)	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons (C)
SCIFI	65	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Secrets of the Soul"		"Babylon 5: A Call to Arms" (1998, Science Fiction) Bruce Boxleitner, Jerry Doyle. (In Stereo) (C)						Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	28	Operation "Aneurysm"		TWA 800 – The Investigation		Secrets of Forensic Science (C)		Best Kept Secrets-Love		Wild Weddings		Secrets of Forensic Science (C)
TNT	62	ER "Blizzard" (In Stereo) (C)		Pretender "Jarod's Honor" (C)		NBA Basketball Miami Heat at Toronto Raptors. (In Stereo Live) (C)					NBA	★ "Chasers" (1994)
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger (C)				JAG "Vanished" (In Stereo) (C)		Nash Bridges "Moving Target"		★★ "Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult" (1994) Leslie Nielsen. (C)		Martin (C)	Martin (C)
HBO	43	(5:15) ★½ "Blue Streak" (1999)				★★★ "Escape From Alcatraz" (1979) Clint Eastwood. "PG" (C)				"The Enemy" (2000, Suspense) Luke Perry. "NR"		Mexican: First	Orgasm: A Real Sex Xtra (C)
MAX	51	(5:30) ★★★ "FIX" (1998) "R" (C)				★½ "Universal Soldier: The Return" (1999) "R" (C)		(4:1/2) "Candyman 2: Day of the Dead" (1999) "R" (C)		★★½ "The Prophecy" (1995) Christopher Walken.			"End of Affair"
SHOW	46	★★½ "Terminal Velocity" (1994) Charlie Sheen. "PG-13" (C)						"South Park: Bigger, Longer & Uncut" (1999) "R" (C)		Filmmaker		Rude Awaken.	★½ "China Moon" (1994) Ed Harris. "R"

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I'LL TAPE A PENCIL TO HIS HAND AND USE IT TO SIGN OFF ON A RAISE FOR ME
THAT WOULD BE SO UNETHICAL... HICCUP MAY I HAVE TEN PERCENT?
THAT HICCUP DAMAGED MY MORAL COMPASS.
www.dilbert.com scottadams@aol.com

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

SEE, UNCLE JOHN, WITH THE SCHOOL THING NOT COMING TOGETHER, IT JUST SEEMED LIKE I SHOULD BE EXPLORE MY OTHER OPTIONS.
INTERNING FOR YOU WOULD ALLOW ME TO CHECK OUT THE GLAMOROUS FIELD OF CHILD CARE.
GLAMOR DUST
SEEMINGLY NOT SO!
ZIPPER. I WORK FOR FOOD.
WOW, GREAT! DOES THAT INCLUDE SNACKS?

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

THE BEST PART WAS WHEN MR. VYVONA COULDN'T FIGURE OUT WHY EVERYONE WAS LAUGHING AT HIS—NICOLE?
DID YOU JUST HEAR A CLICKING SOUND?
YUP. SAME AS LAST WEEK.
C'MON! LITTLE BROTHERS TRADITIONALLY BUG THEIR SISTERS!
THAT DOESN'T MEAN WIRETAP!

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

MY MAN'S OUT THERE SOMEWHERE - I JUST KNOW IT!
I HAVE TO FIND HIM AND MAKE THINGS RIGHT. MAKE HIM FEEL WHOLE AGAIN.
IS THAT SO WRONG? JUST WANTING TO SOOTHE HIS FEVERISH BROW. TO CHERISH HIM. TO CARE FOR HIM UNCONDITIONALLY?
THAT WAS CLOSE...

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

AHH. THE LAST NUT. LONELY LITTLE FOOD. YOUR LONG JOURNEY IS NEAR AN END.
YOU SPENT MANY MONTHS GROWING ON A SUNNY HILLSIDE IN A FAR-OFF LAND. THEN, ONE DAY, YOU WERE AT LAST PICKED AND SENT MILES AND MILES HERE, WHERE YOU ARE NOW THE LAST OF YOUR NUT BRETHREN.
ALL THIS JUST SO I CAN UM...
CRUNCH CRUNCH CRUNCH

Darby Conley By Darby Conley

OH, YOU'RE ON A DATE... DON'T SCREW UP...
SO I WAS THINKIN' THAT FOR DINNER, I'D LIKE HOLD ON, EARTHQUAKE COMIN' RRUMBLE!!
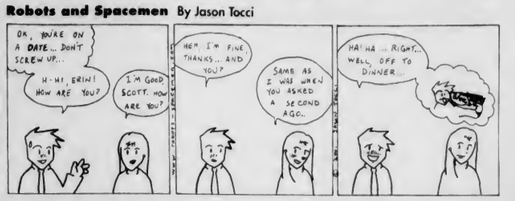
YOU SENSED THAT BEFORE IT HIT?! THAT'S INCREDIBLE! DO YOU HAVE ANY IDEA WHAT THIS—
YES YES YES. IT'S ALL A BIG, GLORIOUS ELECTRO-MAGNETIC THINGY. ANYWAY, I'M FEELIN' LIKE PIE.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci



U-HI, ERIN! HOW ARE YOU?
I'M GOOD SCOTT. HOW ARE YOU?
HEH. I'M FINE THANKS.. AND YOU?
SAME AS I WAS WHEN YOU ASKED A SECOND AGO..
HA! HA ... RIGHT. WELL, OFF TO DINNER...

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

CUT THE CRUSTS OFF MY SANDWICH
LOWE TECH
WHAT? THE CRUSTS ARE THE BEST PART! AND EVEN IF YOU LIKE THE BREAD PART BETTER, SOMETIMES IT'S GOOD TO CONTRAST WHAT YOU LIKE WITH SOMETHING ELSE. IT MAKES YOU APPRECIATE IT EVEN MORE WELL, WHY DON'T I JUST SMACK YOU IN THE HEAD THEN? WOULDN'T YOU "APPRECIATE" EVERYTHING MORE?
OK, NO SANDWICH FOR YOU
I'VE NEVER FOUND THAT BEING SMACKED MAKES ME APPRECIATE ANYTHING, PARTICULARLY.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

RJ's GUILT RELIEF! YEAR 2000 ABSOLUTIONS FOR BLOWN RESOLUTIONS
I RESOLVED TO START GROWING UP.
WHAT HAPPENED?
I HANG OUT WITH YOU GUYS.
OH...RIGHT... YOU'RE ABSOLVED.
www.hedgeweb.com

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Your drive and motivation are at a peak right now, and it is good time to take on a new project. Today, someone may make an unusual offer.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – This is a good day for asserting your independence, even at the workplace where such bold steps are often looked upon with disdain.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Strategy is everything today and you certainly don't want to be caught by surprise. See to it that you are prepared!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – This is a perfect time for you to take a much-needed breather, but don't make the mistake of staying out of the loop for too long!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – What seems tough at the beginning will become routine before you know it. It's that which seems too easy at first that may prove dangerous!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You must be willing to drop everything and lend a hand to a friend when the need arises today. There will still be time to face your own issues.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You mustn't be too emotional today when dealing with an otherwise emotionally charged issue. Temper your feelings with thought.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your earning power is likely to be a major issue today. Take care that you're not misinterpreting financial signs and indications.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A reunion of sorts can prove enjoyable and profitable, too! Now is no time to ignore an attempt by an old friend to get in touch.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Family matters take precedence today. You must be willing to address an issue raised by a younger family member or your spouse.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec. 21) – Important developments in your love life may take you by surprise today – and demand that you make an important decision in a little time.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan. 19) – Information will come to you today quite rapidly, and you must be willing to work with it as it comes. Don't let anything pass you by.

Quote of the Day

"Adam M., Your dedication to me is truly inspiring. Screw Chris Klein! Will you be mine?"

-Katie H.

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 19	HIGH: 37 LOW: 31	HIGH: 39 LOW: 18

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Italian Sausage with Peppers

Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

Grilled Cheese on Wheat Bread (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

DINNER

Chicken with Pecan Dijon Sauce

Black Eyed Peas Jambalaya (vegan)

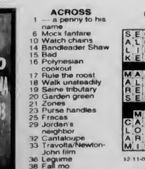
CREPES SPECIAL

Today's Staff

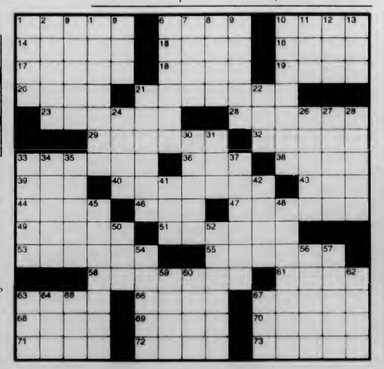
Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Shalini Mark
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	John Zawislak, James Gibson

ACROSS
1 – a penny to his name
6 Mock fanfare
10 Watch chains
14 Bandleader Shaw
15 Bed
16 Polynesian cookout
17 Rule the roost
18 Walk unsteadily
19 Seine tributary
20 Garden green
21 Zones
23 Purse handles
25 Fracas
29 Jordan's neighbor
32 Cantaloupe
33 Travolta/Newton-John film
36 Legume
38 Fall mo.
39 "Eureka"
40 O Hare event
43 "Ballad" finish
44 Hummus holder
46 "Gidget" actress
47 Informal
48 Foe
51 On terra firma
53 Unconscious defense
55 Decree
58 Gave out prizes
61 Door handle
63 Untidy person
66 Sundial numerals
67 Fishing boot
68 Communism's Marx
69 Like — of bricks
70 Springtime
71 Team of oxen
72 Warbled
73 Breadmaker's need

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



DOWN
1 Listen
2 Districts
3 Clown's prop
4 African nation
5 First-down yardage
6 Mother —
7 With, to Henri
8 Restrict calories
9 Distribute mechanism
10 Follows the dentist's orders
11 "Yes," to Yvette
12 — relief
13 Take to court
21 Jam, e.g.
22 Sugar-cane product
24 Exec. aide
26 Glossy
27 Bounds
28 Doorway
30 Fancies' needs
31 Name for a lion
33 Starred
34 Type of wine
35 Gobbled up
37 Be able to pay for
41 Green parrot
42 Auto magnate
45 Congenial
48 Loss through seeping
50 Swing around, as a ship
52 Weeding
54 Volcanic emissions
56 Delhi's place
57 Seasonal songs
59 Actress Moreno
60 Singer Celine —
62 Writer Harte
63 Upper atmosphere
64 — -tzu "Tao" author
65 Mork's home planet
67 Route



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, February 15, 2001 | 14

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen gun down Xavier

Late run leads UMass to 59-49 victory

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It was an old-fashioned gunfight, but instead of death, the loser of yesterday's contest between Xavier and the Massachusetts men's basketball team would drop in the standings to third place in the Atlantic 10.

At times it was a little ugly, but after the dust settled, the Minutemen were the only ones left standing at the William D. Mullins Center, sending the Musketeers retreating back to Ohio with their rifles between their legs after a convincing 59-49 win.

Not only did the victory improve UMass' record to 11-11 (9-2 A-10), but it also shed fear into the hearts of Xavier fans about the prospect of these teams meeting again in the A-10 tournament. In addition to yesterday's win, the Maroon and White has a 73-64 road victory over the Musketeers to its credit, which took place on Jan. 9 in Cincinnati.

Normally this would not be so shocking, but Xavier opponents have made a habit of walking off the court in defeat this year, as the Musketeers still stand in excellent position to make the NCAA tournament with an 18-5 (9-3 A-10) record. In all likelihood, the Minutemen will be the only team to claim two wins against their conference rival this season, as Xavier has already collected single wins against the rest of the A-10's elite, St. Joseph's and Temple.

"Guys went out, played hard and did the things Coach wanted us to do," said UMass shooting guard Monty Mack, who led all scorers with 23 points. "So you've got to have confidence right now."

At the beginning of the game, both teams got off to awful starts, and it took over three minutes before Shannon Crooks finally broke the 0-0 deadlock with a deep trifecta from the left elbow. The cold shooting would only be a sign of things to come in the first frame, however, as both teams seemed to throw up enough bricks to lay the foundation for the Mullins Center.

Mack and Winston Smith were the main culprits for UMass, going a combined 3-for-19 from the floor in the first half, but the rest of the team also contributed to shooting a woeful 30 percent from the field.

Luckily for the Maroon and White, Xavier was not without its shooting woes. The Musketeers managed to shoot a semi-respectable 38 percent from the field, but most of their baskets came on layups and putbacks, as they controlled the glass in the first frame. Their jump-shooting was no better than that of the Minutemen, though, as they were only 3-of-11 from behind the arc.

"Because we tried to block a lot of shots, we gave up a lot of rebounds on the weak side," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "And they got a lot of defensive rebounds because we missed a lot of shots."

Still, the Maroon and White was somehow able to keep the game close, as it only went into the locker room down 29-25, despite being outplayed at both ends of the floor.

"We shot 30 percent in the first half and we were very lucky to only be down four," said Flint.

In the second half, however, the Minutemen began to convert their chances on the offensive end. Micah Brand started things off with a huge two-handed dunk for two of his seven points — all of which he would total in the second frame — and then Mack tied it up a minute later with a baseline jumper.

Two Mack free throws put his team up 36-33 with 12:05 remaining, but from there, the Musketeers went on a 9-0 run, capped by a David West driving left-handed layup. At that point, it looked like Xavier was about to put the game away, but the Maroon and White was able to counter its opponents 6-0 run with a 14-0 run of its own, and that was what essentially garnered the win for Flint's squad.

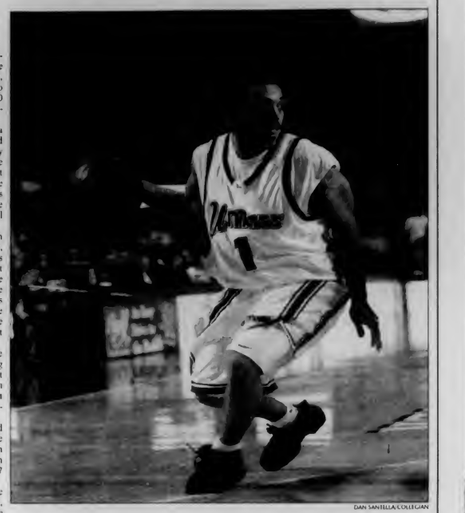
It all started when Jonathan DePina drilled a three from the top of the key and got fouled, for a pivotal four-point play with 8:30 left. That seemed to ignite UMass, and in the next four minutes, it just exploded, hitting shots from all over the floor. By the time Maurice McAfee was able to finally end the spurt with a free throw at the 4:08 mark, the game was all but over.

A West dunk closed the gap to within six with 1:56 left, but it would be too little, too late. Throughout the first nine-tenths of the contest, the Minutemen couldn't seem to hit sand from a camel from the free throw line, going 14-for-26 in the game, but down the stretch, Mack, Crooks and DePina combined to go a respectable 7-for-10, and made sure that the Musketeers would not slip out of Amherst with a victory.

Mack was once again the main offensive hero for the Maroon and White, scoring over 20 points for the seventh straight game. Fellow guards Crooks and DePina also made considerable marks on the stat sheet, totaling 10 and nine points respectively.

As far as rebounding went, Brand led the Minutemen with 10 boards, while Kitwana Rhyner and Eric Williams each chipped in four. Smith led the team in assists with four, despite going 0-for-7 from the field on the game.

For Xavier, West once again led the team with 19 points and 12 rebounds, picking up his 16th double-double on the year, despite receiving little help from his teammates.



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Jonathan DePina and the rest of the Minutemen handled A-10 power Xavier last night 59-49 at the William D. Mullins Center. UMass is now 9-2 in the A-10 Conference.

Depina's clutch plays turned the tide for Maroon and White

Sometimes, it is a single play that allows a team to come from behind and propel itself to a much-needed win.

Sure enough, yesterday's contest between the Xavier Musketeers and the Massachusetts men's basketball team contained such a huge play.

The situation was this: with 9:58 remaining, Xavier center David West drove in for a layup that extended his team's lead to 41-36. At this point, the Musketeers were outplaying the Minutemen, and it looked like they were primed to hold on to their position of second place in the Atlantic 10 Conference, a position they would only lose if they happened to be defeated by the upstart Maroon and White squad.

Then, with 8:50 left in the game, the tides suddenly turned, Jonathan DePina was dribbling the ball up around the top of the key, and the shot clock was rapidly winding down. With one second left, he did the only thing that he could do. He chucked the ball up towards the basket.

By some divine intervention, not only did the ball fall through the net, but DePina was also fouled on the play, and he was able to convert the rare four-point play by drilling the free throw.

Suddenly, instead of being up five, Xavier was only up one, and from that point on the Minutemen would have the momentum they needed to propel them to the win.

"It was a big shot," said UMass' leading scorer Monty Mack. "I know [DePina] got jacked up after it. Sometimes you need some luck on your side, but it was the turning point of the game."

"He played great," added head coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "He made the big four-point play for us and had a key tip-in. He settled the team down and made some big plays for us."

Once the gap was cut to one, the Minutemen just exploded. Micah Brand converted a put-back to give his team the lead, and soon after, Shannon Crooks extended it to four with a three from the top of the key.

The next UMass points came on probably the second most remarkable play of the day, a DePina tip in off a Mack miss. By his own assertion, it was the first time he had made a play like that since his days at South Boston High School, and it really ignited the crowd and gave his team a six-point lead.

"That tip-in was big," said Mack. "From that point on there was no looking back."

Almost two minutes later, Mack would earn the run by netting a three from the right wing, which put the Maroon and White up by a score of 50-41. Maurice McAfee hit one-of-two from the line 10 seconds later to finally halt the onslaught; but the damage had been done.

From the 8:50 mark to the 4:08 mark, UMass outscored the Musketeers by a count of 14-0, and played some of its best basketball of the year. Before the four-point play, the Minutemen looked destined to pick up a loss that would end any chances of an at-large bid in the NCAA tournament, but because of the play, they now have some confidence going into this weekend's clash with Temple.

And everybody knows that things will not get any easier when the Owls make an appearance in Amherst.

"If you can't get pumped up for Temple, than there is something wrong with you," said Mack.

Tip off for the Temple game takes place this Saturday at 1:00 at the William D. Mullins Center.

Jesse Greenspan is a Collegian Columnist.

Swim and dive teams head to Buffalo for tourney

Dexter, Detloff lead Minutewomen into battle

By Matthew F. Sacca
Collegian Staff

Now that the Atlantic 10 campaign is over, a 10-3 Massachusetts women's swimming and diving squad must rotate its guns and put the A-10 championships in its crosshairs.

Never before has such a young and inexperienced UMass team been so successful. In the very rough waters of the A-10, the Minutewomen managed to tie a school record for wins in a season and capture a conference title for the first time.

Now the Maroon and White will head due north to the icy waters of Buffalo, N.Y. where the final battle will take place. UMass' stiffest competition will probably be the Colonials from George Washington.

However, with the way the Minutewomen have been swimming, the Colonials and the rest of the A-10 may end up looking like a beached whale.

The reason for the instant success of this fledgling team has been in the veteran-like performance of its newcomers and the inspiring feats of its upperclassmen.

Anne Dettloff, Andrea Kazanjian and Becky Hunnewell have provided some much needed "junior" leadership. This junior triumvirate has not only showed the rookies the ropes, but they have also led by example.

Kazanjian, who holds the conference best time in the 50-yard and the 100-yard freestyle, has helped to solidify UMass' dominance in the A-10.

Dettloff and Hunnewell are also high on the conference leaderboards in the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard backstroke respectively.

The real surprise for the Maroon and White this year has been the extraordinary performance of Christen Dexter. Dexter, who is only a freshman, has exceeded all expectations in dominating the breaststroke and providing depth in any other event she swims.

The rookie has been largely unbeatable at the 200-yard breast and she is still getting better. Meet after meet, she keeps improving, a fact that is supported in that she has shattered the school record three times this year.

Although the juniors and Dexter garner much of the ink, what makes this team special is its versatility. Dettloff and company are simply a microcosm of the entire team. This is a squad full of utility athletes.

Dettloff is a swiss army knife in the pool, as she competes in the freestyle and the relays.

Hunnewell is no less versatile; she is a backstroke specialist who is also very strong in the relays.

UMass has the depth to be a huge factor in the championships this weekend. The Maroon and White have at least one strong swimmer in every event and when they all come together for the relays, the Minutewomen are an underwater juggernaut.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Anne Detloff has been a force for the women's swimming and diving team this year, leading the Minutewomen to a 10-3 record.

Men try to build on success

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

More than five months ago, the 2001 Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team got together for the first time with one goal in mind – win the Atlantic 10 Championships. This weekend it has the chance to bring that dream to fruition when it heads up to Buffalo, N.Y. for the A-10's.

After posting an A-10 best 10-4 record in the regular season with victories over conference rivals LaSalle, Rhode Island, George Washington and Fordham, all eyes will be on the Minutemen to see if they can continue their strong regular season form. They will need to do so if they are to recapture the A-10 title for the first time since 1998.

The 2000-2001 season has been a breakout year for many Minutemen and this weekend in Buffalo will be the culmination. UMass holds the top time in 14 of the 20 events this season in the A-10, including all five relay events. Leading the way with five of those top times is senior Chris Arsenault.

Arsenault, the four time A-10 Performer of the Week, holds the top times in the 100- and 200-yard freestyle, the 100- and 200-yard butterfly as well as the 200-yard Individual Medley. He has won at least one event in each of UMass' meets this season and will look to finish off the season sweep with a strong performance in Buffalo.

At the 2000 A-10 Championships, Arsenault took the 200-yard freestyle with a time of 1:38.41 to set a new conference and UMass record, as well as qualify for the Olympic Trials.

Also qualifying for the Olympic Trials on that day was fellow senior Billy Brown. Brown took both the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke at last year's A-10's and currently holds the second best times in the conference this season in those same two events.

These two, along with fellow seniors Joe Martin and Mike Sabina, have provided the Minutemen with much needed experience and leadership. But the Maroon and White have also picked up key contribution from a number of underclassmen.

Spearheading the underclassmen has been sophomore Tommy Keane. Keane, the only Minuteman other than Arsenault to take home the A-10 Performer of the Week Award this season, has been the Minutemen's best performer in the long distance events. Keane has the best time in the A-10 this season in the 500- and 1000-yard freestyle.

While those three have gotten the job done in the pool for UMass coach Russ Yarworth, freshman Logan Alomar has done it above the water. Alomar tallied the highest score in the conference in the three-meter dive event (503.55) and the second-best score in the one-meter (429.75) this season.

But regular season records mean little to the Maryland native who has been focused on this weekend since the beginning of the season.

"I'm just looking to do the best I can to help the team win," said Alomar.

Alomar's sentiment was echoed by fellow freshman Peter Tawczynski, the A-10 Rookie of the Week during the second week in January.

"It was good to be named Rookie of the Week but I'd rather win [this] weekend and help us capture the title.

Read all about Talib Kweli and the Black Eyed Peas in today's Arts page.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

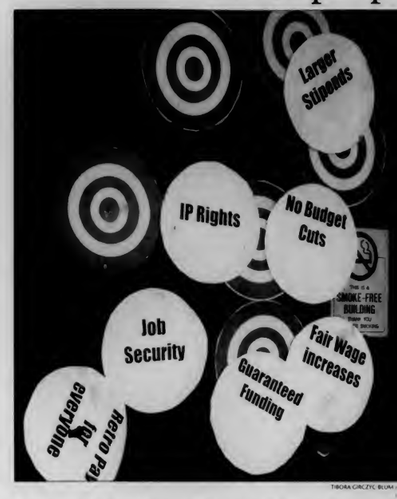
The Minutewomen take on GW tonight... check it out in Sports!

ARTS p. 5 | SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 83 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, February 16, 2001

Graduate students march on Whitmore

Post contract proposals up for negotiation



TIBORA GIRCZYC BLUM / COLLEGIAN

GEO propaganda targeted the doors of Whitmore as well as the hallways.

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Members of the Graduate Employee Organization/United Auto Workers Local 2322 chanted their way through the Whitmore Administration Building yesterday.

The group passed through the north entrance and headed up stairs into the corridor that houses the offices of the Chancellor and Provost. The Chancellor's inner offices, as well as many of the other offices were all closed.

Estimates of the crowd size vary between 150 and 400 people. James Shaw, a Sociology graduate student and GEO member, posted several large sheets of paper on the walls of the hall. The posters contained over fifty points to be raised by GEO at the bargaining table.

"We demand that all fees be waived, including the tuition for Continuing Education courses," read one poster. "We demand that all health services required as a condition of employment be provided free of charge, and that all health fees be waived."

Other demands included free computer training for graduate students, child care and improvements to job security.

After the protestors had left, Whitmore employees viewed the demands.

"They want May Day off?" one unidentified employee wondered aloud.

According to UMass Spokeswoman Kas Scanlan, all of the unions are in negotiation. The GEO negotiations are scheduled for March. The postings came in response to a letter University of Massachusetts Associate Provost Susan Pearson sent to GEO President Peter Tamas proposing several changes the University wished to make at the upcoming negotiations.

The University wishes make fifteen changes to the contractual agreement with GEO/UAW 2322. Among the changes is the deletion of Memorandum of Understanding number 6. Memorandum of Understanding number 6 orders the University to increase funding for sole purpose of increasing diversity in the graduate schools a total of $705,000 in fiscal year 2001.

University of Massachusetts Police reported no problems during the protest.

"It was more a rally to kick off the contract campaign and demonstrate to the university that we have a high level of support for our activities. We had somewhere between 300 and 400 people come out and I know the University has been giving us a really hard proposal because they think we don't have organizing base," Tamas, a School of Education graduate student explained. "This is, we've demonstrated we have base and we have a lot of strength and we're going to do very well in these contract negotiations."

"The administration has really lost its way," Tamas added.

Shaw agreed.

"The University made their proposals and the University wants to hurt grad students. They want to cut our pay up to forty percent, they want to take away our vacation time," Shaw said. "They want to take research assistants and assistant RDs and take their union rights away, and its something we need to fight back against."

"I think the University has no idea what's in store for them," Shaw added.

Whatever GEO's plans are, Amherst campus Provost Cora Marrett hopes that they are more refined than yesterday's.

"My concern remains the issue of civility," Marrett said. "Some of the actions and language today did little to garner support from the staff of Whitmore."

James Shaw didn't expect to be welcomed with open arms by Whitmore.

"We're going to go in there, we're going to make a public statement, we're going to put this stuff on the wall," Shaw said. "There's going to be no hiding from us anymore."

"I don't know if I'd call it hostile, but it's certainly aggressive. And we want it to be aggressive."

Story named to Board of Trustees

History professor Ron Story

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate named History Professor Ron Story associate delegate to the Board of Trustees yesterday.

Story, who served in the President's Office as a Vice President ten years ago, will return to One Beacon Street, Boston.

"It'll be nice to be reacquainted with some of the trustees. There are still some people on the Board that were there when I was working in the President's Office," Story said. "I think it's always good for faculty and trustees to be in close communication."

The Faculty Senate also approved two motions that add five new undergraduate classes and two graduate courses to the course catalogue.

African American Studies 238 "The Arts and Cultural Identity" and Comparative Literature 385 "Russian Themes in World Cinema" were unanimously passed. Economics 178 "Introduction to Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Economic Issues", Physics 125 "Seeing the Light" and Political Science 345 "Revolutionary Nationalism and Imperialism in the Caribbean" were also approved as undergraduate classes. Each would be worth three credits.

Two Public Policy and Administration graduate courses were added through a separate motion.

Part of the meeting was taken up with questions over concerns with budget meetings and faculty consultation during those meetings. The Senate passed a motion unanimously calling for the inclusion of faculty in any budget making process.

"There needs to be an open and collegiate process," Senator Craig Moore said.

SGA Coordinating Council fumbles financial allocations

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association's [SGA] Coordinating Council was brought face to face with issues regarding the allocation of funding from their finance reserve fund.

Members of the Coordinating Council were faced with decisions regarding how much money could be allocated to RSO's in relationship to the rest of the spring 2001 semester.

"It's not an ideal situation when we are dealing with finances right now," Speaker Jim Eltringham said. "It's difficult to say to someone that you have to give them less money then they are asking for."

Consideration for money allocation to RSO groups became an issue when the University of Massachusetts Juggling Club came before the coordinating council requesting $1000 for new equipment. However, due to a lack of money in the finance reserve account, they could only be allocated $600 for their start up fee.

"To start out an active RSO group we normally allocate funding of at the maximum, $750, however they [the Juggling Club] only have eight members rather than the ten members needed to form an active RSO," Chair of Ways and Means Mike Taugher said. "I think that $600 would give them the ability to get started and get what equipment they need, and then they can come back next fall and request more funding if needed."

Other groups requesting SGA funding was the UMass Dance Team, who came requesting $2000 for competition. They argued the fact that they have received no help from the UMass Athletic Department, and being able to compete would give them exposure for the future.

Coordinating Council member Aaron Saunders agreed by explaining that he felt that it would be good for the SGA to reach groups on campus not normally funded.

"I think it would give us a good opportunity to reach other groups on campus," Saunders said.

The Coordinating Council voted unanimously in favor of allocating the UMass Dance Team $2000.

Funding was also granted to Students Helping Area Reach-Out Efforts [SHARE] who requested the allocation of $300 to help contribute to their transportation to Boston to participate in the "Walk for Hunger" in Boston on May 6. SHARE explained how they would be walking 20 miles in an effort to raise funding to fight hunger. They also explained that up to the "Walk for Hunger" they hope to raise an overall campus wide awareness and encourage students to get involved.

Taugher explained how the SGA normally does not fund transportation, but due to the fact that it was a charity event, the SGA had no problem in allocating them the requested $300.

Beyond the allocation of funding, a general concern rang throughout the SGA, as members of the SGA expressed the concern of meeting the five percent student vote on Election Day. Issues surrounding the removal of the ALANA referendum question have still left members of the SGA with questions regarding decision for removal.

"The only thing that truly upset me about this whole thing, was the fact that an agreement was made and no one was aware of it," Eltringham said. "It wouldn't be in my mind to talk to [SGA President] Jeff Howe about this, I was just surprised that know one had even heard about it."

Eltringham continued to add that he felt that it seemed rough in the way that the overall event turned out.

"What could have been a discussion turned into a heated event, and it didn't need to," Eltringham said.

Election Day begins on Feb. 21, and the Coordinating Council will be meeting at 7 p.m. on Feb. 22 to ratify the elections.

New rules for bulletin boards: now only three sheets of paper

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

In an effort to clean up and organize the halls of the Lincoln Campus Center, the Campus Center and Student Union Commission announced their new plan for the bulletin boards in the hallways of the building.

Michael Whitehouse, former student senator, along with the Commissio, decided on five new rules regarding these bulletin boards.

The new rules were instated to try and cut down on wasteful paper as well as give equal opportunity to every student, student group or student interest to display their flyers and messages.

Starting immediately, the boards will be separated into different categories, including on-campus events, off-campus events, registered and student organizations.

The other rules are as follows:

-No announcement on any board may take more paper than 22x17 inches, or four sheets of paper.

-No more than three announcements per event may be posted on any board.

-Each board has a specific category and only announcements within that category may be posted.

-Announcements that fit into multiple categories may be posted on any boards that apply.

-No announcement may be posted over other announcements.

These rules were found on a flyer that was posted on the bulletin board in the hallway between the Campus Center first floor and the Student Union.

The flyer also said that any announcements in violation of this policy will be removed.

In the past, the bulletin boards have been cleared of all announcements and flyers at the end of each month. Campus Center employees are responsible for the removal of the paper.

"The difference it will make will not be huge," said Kenzo Nakwatase, the Campus Center employee responsible for the removal of the old announcements yesterday. "Once the first layer goes up, it's every man for himself."

It is unknown whether the new system will work or will be recognized by those who flood the boards with paper.

Michael Whitehouse was unavailable for comment.

TIBORA GIRCZYC BLUM / COLLEGIAN

Posters will no longer clutter the walls of the Campus Center / Student Union concourse.

TIBORA CHYCZYC-BLUME | COLLEGIAN

Resume days

Students dress up, themselves and their resumes, to explore summer job options in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Pondering Napster

By Jon Reese
The Daily (University of Washington)

In essence, the Internet is a huge shared network, a collection of individual computers whose users seek information. The introduction of Napster, the free mp3 swapping program, could be considered Internet media's coming-out party. The Internet could do more than just display static web pages; it could power a file-sharing network that has grown to over 50 million users in less than a year and a half.

When the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled Monday to uphold an injunction to halt the trading of copyrighted music on Napster, it may have also dealt a serious blow to the future of online file-sharing and Indeed the Internet as a whole. Napster may be shut down, pending a trial, within the next few weeks.

Universities have been in the crossfire since fall 1999, when Napster was first introduced and millions of college students with high-speed connections began using the service. File transfers take up a lot of bandwidth, and connections got slower and slower. Due to the bandwidth usage and impending legal action, many colleges – including Harvard, Yale, and USC – began banning Napster from their servers.

The UW has never banned Napster from its servers, although HFS Ethernet rules state "You MAY NOT use applications that consume disproportionate bandwidth."

According to Terry Gray, Director of Networking for Computing and Communications, the UW does not track Napster usage on its servers.

"We do not currently have statistics by type of application, although this may change in the future," he said.

UW servers also allow file sharing of a different sort. Like most major universities, the UW operates on a network. This allows users to share any files they wish with other users on their respective network, usually a floor of wing in a dorm or a specific department. These smaller networks, usually less than 100 computers, connect to what Gray calls the "campus backbone." This sort of file sharing is common in higher education and in corporations.

Napster has raised serious questions about copyrights and intellectual property, and since it's inception, has been battling the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) for its very livelihood.

But is Napster really hurting record sales, as the RIAA claims? A report issued by SoundScan, which tracks sales of nearly every CD sold in the country, has shown that the country has seen a 20 percent boom in music retail sales in the last 2 years. However, according to the survey, sales in record stores near universities have declined by 4 percent. This number could be considered more indicative of Napster's effects because college students tend to use Napster more than any other group. According to the SoundScan report, increasing popular online music stores and the ability to burn copies from store-bought CDs may be the major factors contributing to this decrease, rather than Napster usage. Proponents argue that Napster actually increases record sales by allowing users to preview music before they buy.

Cellophane Square, an independent music store on the Ave., reported that their sales have not been affected by digital music. In fact, their sales have improved in the past year. The recent closure of Disc-Go-Round, another music store on the Ave., was not due to decreasing sales, but rather consolidation.

Napster has an uncertain road ahead of it. Scour Exchange, another popular file-swapping program, voluntarily shut down in December to avoid a possible lawsuit with the RIAA. Rather than shut down, Napster has opted to fight their case as far as it will go, and many legal analysts believe the complex issue will ultimately be decided before the Supreme Court.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian • published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts academic semesters. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager

Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Silver Fimo Plaster Beads Leather Silkpainting Copper Tie-dye Screenprinting Brass Photo Marbling Buttonmaking Stained Glass AND MORE

Student Union Craft Center

We Offer: FREE MEMBERSHIP AND INSTRUCTION TO ALL UMASS STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF. MEMBERS FROM THE FOUR COLLEGES MUST PAY A SMALL FEE, $15/SEMESTER OR $25 FOR THE YEAR.

AS A MEMBER OF THE STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER YOU CAN USE THE FACILITIES ANY TIME DURING OUR DROP IN HOURS

MONDAY CLOSED
TUESDAY - THURSDAY 11:00-5:00
FRIDAY 11:00-6:00
SATURDAY-SUNDAY 1:00-6:00

We Offer: SMALL EVENING WORKSHOPS THROUGHOUT THE SEMESTER. THESE WORKSHOPS ALLOW FOR INDIVIDUAL ATTENTION AS YOU LEARN NEW SKILLS AND TECHNIQUES

PHONE 545-2096
www.umass.edu/rso/craftctr

THE CRAFT CENTER IS LOCATED IN THE BASEMENT OF THE STUDENT UNION

HIRING SKILLED STUDENTS

THINGS TO DO:
- GO TO CLASS
- PLAY VIDEO GAMES
- WORKOUT
- SEE A MOVIE

WHAT COULD YOU DO...

IF YOU WERE DONE WITH WORK BY 9AM??

THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR STUDENTS TO DELIVER NEWSPAPERS MONDAY THRU FRIDAY.

INTERESTED? CALL SHAWN @ 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT

Applicants Must Have Own Car

Scientist questioned over role in deaths and volcano eruption

By Mark Bubriski
The Dartmouth (Dartmouth College)

Controversy surrounds the story of the 1993 deaths of six colleagues of the Arizona State University professor questioned by investigators in connection with the Zantop murders.

Stanley N. Williams, a former visiting professor at Dartmouth in earth sciences and a professor of volcanology at ASU, allegedly ignored scientific data that predicted the eruption of Colombia's Galeras Volcano, according to author Victoria Bruce, whose book about the tragedy is due out March 20.

"Stanley Williams failed to read... pertinent seismic data, which could have possibly saved the lives of many people in the expedition," Justin Loeber, a publicist for publisher HarperCollins in New York, told the Boston Herald.

Williams also erred when he claimed to be the only survivor of the tragedy, according to Bruce's book. A New York Times article from 1993 calls Williams "the lone survivor."

"Stanley had gone around in his circle and in the media ... saying he was the sole survivor at Galeras, despite five other people who lived," Loeber said.

Williams and his wife, Lynda, were in Hanover the weekend professors Ilalf and Susanne Zantop were murdered to attend the 90th birthday party of Williams' dissertation adviser, Richard Stoiber, a professor emeritus of earth sciences. (Stoiber died last Friday at his home in Norwich, VT.)

Police impounded the white car Williams had rented from Thrifty Car Rental at the Manchester airport. Senior Assistant Attorney General Kelly Ayotte told reporters last week that the car was one of several being detailed by investigators.

She said the man who rented the white car was not a suspect, although she did not identify him as Williams.

Williams declined to comment to The Dartmouth on the Zantop investigation, saying, "I have been advised by the authorities that they would prefer that I not talk about the Zantop case."

He also declined comment last night on the controversy surrounding his book and the Galeras tragedy. "These are police matters and business matters. I really shouldn't interfere with them."

Williams directed questions to his publicist, who could not be reached for comment, but told the Herald Monday, "[Williams] does address the fact [in the book] that given the information he had at the time, neither he nor his colleagues could have known Galeras was going to erupt."

Williams has written a book with Fen Montaigne about the eruption and deaths of his colleagues. "Surviving Galeras" is due for release in April. Eight expert volcanologists testify in the book that Williams had no way of knowing the volcano would erupt.

However, Bernard Chouet, a geophysicist at United States Geological Survey who conducted a study of the same volcano said the eruption was apparent. In January of 1993, Galeras exhibited behavior similar to behavior before a July 1992 eruption. Chouet told the Herald.

Peeling said Williams' claim to being the only survivor was in error: "Stan initially said he was the sole survivor because that was his memory of the event. When he was reminded by others that he was not the sole survivor, he stopped saying [it]."

On Jan. 14, 1993, Williams led a party of 15 volcanologists and tourists up to Galeras's crater. The scientists were assembled for a conference that Williams had organized.

Galeras is one of the most active volcanoes in the world, but it had been quiet for several months at the time. The monitoring station in Pasto, a city of 300,000 located a few miles east of the volcano, reported no signs of trouble, Williams told The Dartmouth in November 1999.

Standing on the rim of the crater, Williams urged the scientists to leave as soon they had completed their tasks. However, 10 people were still in and around the crater when the ground began to shake.

Nine members died, but Williams survived, though he was severely injured.

"Before people could really have much chance to do anything except look up, it exploded, and instantly, nine people were dead. Everybody that was standing next to me, talking to me, was dead," Williams said in an interview with The Dartmouth in November 1999.

Flying rocks punched a hole into Williams' skull and broke his jaw. As he fled, one leg was broken and another shattered.

Incandescent rocks rained from the sky, igniting his clothes and backpack as he crawled behind a large boulder to protect himself.

Several hours passed before anyone was able to venture near the crater to check for survivors. Once found, Williams was flown to the local hospital where he underwent surgery, but was quickly evacuated to Arizona State University by air ambulance, where the hospital was better equipped to treat him.

Since the eruption, Williams has undergone surgery 16 times.

At the time, doctors were unsure whether he would ever regain his full physical or mental abilities.

But Williams spent only a month in the hospital, and after a year and a half, went back to Galeras.

Write for Collegian News

WIR SPRECHEN VOLKWAGON
The Valley's largest VW inventory!

Whether it's a simple tune-up of a full blown restoration project; from engine valves and bearings to door handles or gas caps, we have the parts for just about any model VW ever made! Plus a full inventory for Japanese and Korean cars and trucks.

WE SPEAK VOLKSWAGON!
It All Starts With Parts...
PELHAM AUTO PARTS
Route 9
Amherst/Belchertown Line
256-0457
Hrs: M-F 8-5:30 & Sat: 9-2:00

UMass basketball

IT'S AWESOME BABY!

abc SPORTS

SATURDAY
1:00 PM

TEMPLE

WITH DICK VITALE & BRENT MUSBURGER

STUDENTS
GET YOUR TICKETS NOW @
CURRY HICKS CAGE
CAMPUS CENTER
MULLINS CENTER GAME DAY

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Keeping Napster
Safe For Me

Napster.

It is obvious that the college community supports Napster. After all, the college community was what made Napster. The program is largely useless without a strong interest in music, a knowledge of computers and high-speed, efficient internet access – all things available in abundance on almost every college campus in the United States.

From the start, Napster was an issue of vital importance to college students, for reasons ranging from the mundane and obvious (college students, from credit card t-shirts to Health Services condoms, just like free stuff) to the more critical, such as a dual concern for the freedom of the online world and a respect for the much-loved artists whom some fear are being ripped off.

The events in the life of Napster have been followed and dissected in unimaginable ways as they have come up. The first trials. The defeats. Lars Ulrich of Metallica acting like a complete, pompous ass. The Bertelsmann buyout. And finally, this week's court decision reiterating a previous decision that Napster should, in fact, be shut down.

As the student voice of the UMass campus and as a concerned group of college students ourselves, the Daily Collegian is taking this opportunity to come right in the open and declare our support for the Napster Music Community and our hope that it will survive the storms in which it is currently sailing uncrashed.

The sheer beauty of Napster in its sharing and egalitarianism speaks for itself. The easy spread of art across the world and across any conceivable artificial lines is a thing to be treasured and preserved.

Unlike the people who are in charge of running the country, we grew up with computers, digital technology and, for the past few years, Napster. We have seen its effects, not in a report on some judge's desk or in a lawyer's brief, but in our day-to-day lives. And we see that the arguments leveled against it are ridiculous.

Napster does promote the purchase of albums by spreading appreciation to a greater crowd. Napster does help launch the careers and expand the fan bases of local and independent acts, without the fesers of the corporate record labels. Napster spreads appreciation of music in general, with new songs that one would never have the option of hearing on radio or anywhere else brought immediately into your own room, where you may spread the joy to others.

Napster threatens the dominance of the large companies in this country, this is true, totally and unequivocally. This does not strike us, by any means, as a negative thing. The court decisions reinforcing this dominance seem to us to be the establishment protecting itself from progress yet again, and this does strike us as an extremely negative thing.

The future is coming, and the Daily Collegian supports it.

And yes, we have Napster on the computers in the office.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

A womanizing, lying thief

Usually when Presidents leave office, they fade away from public life, perhaps going on a speaking tour, writing a few books and building houses for the less fortunate. Side note – "I never understood that 'homes for the less fortunate' thing; if somebody builds me a free house, I'd feel pretty damn lucky.

Now, I don't want to make enemies, but will Bill Clinton ever stop screwing up?

I'm not talking about his extra marital relations, or his shady pre-office land schemes, but now, as he sets his sights on what's next, Billy is still putting his foot directly in the bear trap.

Take his last-minute pardon of financier Marc Rich, a man who is charged with over 50 counts of tax fraud and has been living in Switzerland for about 18 years now. He also might have traded with Iran while American hostages were being tortured and tormented. Presidents are allowed to pardon pretty much anybody they want. Abraham Lincoln used to sign stacks of pardons for soldiers who fell asleep on guard duty in the Civil War. President Truman, my favorite Democratic president, signed almost 2,000 pardons. Johnson signed just under a thousand. According the the New York Times, out of the past ten Presidents, W's daddy signed the least at 74. So I'm not saying that Clinton was doing anything illegal when he signed Rich's pardon, one of the 200 some-odd that Clinton signed in the twenty days he served in 2001.

But maybe something unethical went on when Clinton's library cashed Rich's ex-wife's checks.

See it seems as though, coincidentally of course, Denise Rich has donated nearly 1 milllion American dollars to Clinton's presidential library. Pretty much everybody in the government has an opinion on this, but its all moot. It's done. Clinton, yet again, has slipped the noose and gotten away with another shady act.

So why is Congress holding hearings on the issue? Answer: Republicans rarely learn. They never quite figure out that the American public, for the most part, aren't C-SPAN junkies. If the GOP was focusing on the fact that Rich just bought a pardon, they'd get someplace. But they're too busy focusing on the errors and missteps of the people that would have been in the Gore presidential administration who are involved in brokering the Rich pardon. The only reason I can figure out is that the GOP is trying to say that if Gore had become President his administration would have been made up of thugs.

KEN CAMPBELL

In other Clinton news, it seems as though when he was packing up his cigars, ties and other personal possessions, he took some White House property. Now if it wasn't bad enough that he and his wife had rented out the Lincoln bedroom, now they were crating up Abe's dresser. Even Billy, whose moral fiber has the tensile strength of cotton thread, realized that he had done a bad thing, and returned about $28,000 worth of furniture and other household items, and made arrangements to pay over $80,000 for the rest of the stuff he stole. He even returned Denise Rich's coffee tables and chairs, valued at a little over seven grand.

And the post-presidential follies keep on coming. This next item from the New York Times isn't exactly Bill's fault, but its funny to think about a company apologizing because the only speaker that they could get was Bill Clinton.

Morgan Stanley, one of those Wall Street giants that make more money than I could ever spend, announced the other day that last week's speech by Clinton at a conference was a mistake. Apparently Morgan Stanley's customers weren't pleased that their investment firm had decide to hire a womanizing, lying thief to speak to them.

The emails and memos from Morgan Stanley make Clinton sound like a convicted pedophile rather than a former president. Using phrases like "I fully understand why you are upset that former President Clinton spoke" and "We should have thought twice before the invitation was extended," Morgan Stanley's chairman sounded as though Billy showed up half in the bag, and then proceeded to tell off-color jokes for forty five minutes.

Which, if you believe the Drudge report, he's done. There was something about Willy telling lesbian jokes in a New York restaurant in a recent issue.

But I am glad he's keeping in the public's eye. I never really liked him as President, but he was always a favorite target for comedians. Quite frankly, Leno hasn't been the same since Bill left office.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Staff Member.

LIFE IN HELL
©2001 BY MATT GROENING
DO YOU LOVE ME WITH ALL YOUR HEART?
WELL, DO YOU LOVE ME A TEENSY LITTLE BIT?
WELL, DO YOU LIKE ME?
WELL, DO YOU HAVE NEUTRAL FEELINGS ABOUT ME?
WELL, DO YOU DISLIKE ME?
WELL, DO YOU HATE ME?
WELL, DO YOU DESPISE ME WITH EVERY FIBER OF YOUR BEING?
OH, I GIVE UP.
DON'T GIVE UP. YOU'RE ALMOST THERE.

Falling Down

I'm glad to be back! This is my first column in almost a year, and I hope that in the meantime you have all been avoiding eating too many packets of Ramen noodles and attending more cultural events. Since it's my first column of the semester, I thought I would tell you about the celebration of a first year anniversary this weekend of what my friends and I kindly refer to as "The Great Battle," or "The Accident." Don't worry, it doesn't involve any psycho ex-boyfriends or stalkers. It's one of those fun when-I-was-a-stupid-freshman-stories that almost everyone has.

My old roommate Kristen is one of those girls that considers bowling and pool contact sports, so she wasn't keen on the idea of having a snowball fight. Eventually she got swept up in the winter spirit and decided to join our Knowlton girls versus 5th Floor Dickinson snowball fight. To make a long story short, the fight moved from the top of the Central trail into the Bowl. That's when it happened. I grabbed my friend's hat and threw it to Kristen who fell on the ground with her foot planted firmly in the snow. In a diving leap to retrieve his hat all 220 lbs. of him fell on her leg causing a loud crunch. We spent the remainder of the night in Health Services arguing over whose fault it was. I still feel partly responsible for encouraging her to the fight and for throwing the hat. My other friend carries the full weight of the guilt for trying that Super Bowl save on his hat. I honestly wonder how many snow related accidents happen every winter at UMass that get reported to Health Services and with that thought, how many of them are alcohol-related. Ours had no alcohol involved and was noted as pre-meditated recklessness on our part. The irony to the situation was that I had just gotten over mononucleosis and now I was about to spend the rest of the semester taking care of my roommate. To our shock [I'm being sarcastic] Health Services couldn't figure out what was wrong and had her wear at least two different casts until she went home and a real doctor told her she had torn two ligaments and would need a leg brace and eventual surgery. I assured her it would be ok if the surgery didn't go well since I read somewhere that many guys are actually attracted to amputees. She wasn't laughing.

JAMIE LOO

A year later, Kristen is one piece and looking into surgery this summer to fuse the ligaments back together. She won't be losing the whole leg. My amputee story had some reality to it though; over the summer Kristen met her current boyfriend who was in a similar accident and had to wear the same type of leg brace. Both of their knees can accurately predict when it's going to rain or snow. My friend that fell on her went into exile in Hawaii for a semester and is back now. However, says that he will not be involved in anymore snow combat. Even he looks back with us and laughs about the whole thing.

Is there a moral to this story? Not really, because everything we do involves a certain amount of risk. The student next to you in your next midterm could go nuts and poke your eye out with a pencil and beat you with his/her blue book. My friends and I are just as reckless as we were last year with snow. On the snow day last week, we built about eight snowmen on top of my friend's car and went sledding in Orchard Hill and Central. I have two words for you: Ethan Frome. Snow (a form of crystallized water) and electrical transformers don't mix; however, that didn't stop a group of snowboarders and skiers from building a ramp on the side of one in Central.

We're in the prime of our lives; we may be in worse shape than we were in high school and possibly a bit lazier. However, it's the perfect time to learn and have fun. A snowball fight seems like harmless fun but resulted in this freak accident, which is exactly what it was: a freak accident. We can't hide in our dorms simply to save ourselves from death by snow or any other activity. College experiences are characterized by these odd occurrences. Whether they are good or bad experiences we'll always look back on them fondly and hopefully laugh. It's these memories that we'll cherish for the rest of our lives.

On this long weekend, go out and do something spontaneous in honor of Kristen's freak accident. Just be careful that one of those nights isn't spent in Health Services; they will charge you extra and are not very receptive at late hours.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

A meaningless birthday

I'm going to be 20 in one month.

My birthday isn't a revelation. In fact, a good amount of people probably won't even know that it has come and gone. Come March, 20 is going to be a big change and no change at all. Last year I turned 19, and that meant absolutely nothing. This year I'll be 20, and it won't exactly mean I am suddenly old and wise, but it will mean that I'm not exactly a kid anymore.

Turning 20 does mean a lot of things. Soon, being a kid won't be a good excuse. When I do stupid things I can't think, and other can't say, "It's all right, she's just a kid." When I turn 20, I feel like I'm going to lose a lot. My Hello Kitty obsession isn't going to be that funny anymore. All I will have is the memories of birthday parties that have come and gone.

In first grade there was the infamous McDonald's party. The influence of this party has lasted, hence McD's still being my favorite place to eat.

Then in second grade I think I had a birthday party at Roller Kingdom. Everyone did – it's that cheesy roller skate place. I remember my ninth birthday being embraced by Disney World characters in sunny Florida, and it washes out any memory I have of my tenth birthday. Fifth grade, turning eleven and just a year away from middle school was a big deal. For my fifth grade birthday party I remember that I had a sleepover. I only wanted four girls to come, but it might have been because I only had four friends. Well anyways, I remember watching Slumber Party Massacre. Why my dad ever let me rent that for my friends and I and then let us watch it by ourselves I'll never know. Sixth grade I can't really remember and then for my 13th birthday in seventh grade I had all the girls in my class to my house. After that I never really had birthday parties. Disney World was again my birthday home for my 16th and 17th birthdays, and my best friend threw a huge party for my 18th.

For my fifth grade birthday party I remember that I had a sleepover. I only wanted four girls to come, but it might have been because I only had four friends.

The ages that ever meant anything were 13, 16, and 18. When I was 12 I told everyone I was 13 because I wanted to be. When I was 13 I thought I was so cool because I was a teenager and I could get second holes in my ears. Then when I was 15 I told everyone I was 16. When you're 16 you're cool because you can drive, especially if your birthday is before all your friends. And so on when I was 17 I said I was 18. For some reason I've always wanted to be a year older than I was.

Now I'm going to be 20. I really don't want to be 20. I've been dreading this turn for the past year. In the eyes of society, that fact that I'm 20 doesn't mean squat. I can drive past midnight for the last two years now, I'm not restricted by law how many hours a week I can work (damn), and I still can't go uptown. So turning 20 will mean absolutely nothing. I'll just be another year older without making any great feats.

A true statement here: 20 is halfway to 40. So all you seniors who are 22, you're halfway to 44. That's scary. In ten years, I could be driving a minivan and paying a mortgage. Those are not things I'm particularly looking forward to doing.

In the next ten years I plan to fill my life with as many things as possible, and maybe it'll slow down the aging process. I'll do some traveling and get a career on TV. Getting old really concerns me, and most of you reading this will probably think that it's really weird that I'm actually disturbed by hitting 20. Just think about it though, elementary recesses are gone, middle school dances are a blur of memory, high school graduation came and went and soon will college. All that lies ahead is the daily 9 to 5 grind that comes at the tender age of 23. Next month I'll be a year closer to uptown, but that doesn't make up for having to get older.

As I sit here and depress myself with "Bittersweet Symphony" by the Verve, and then mix it up with a little Bruce Springsteen, I understand that no matter what I do I'm going to get older. In a few weeks I'll turn 20 and I would do anything to be turning 18 again. Happy Birthday to my sister who gets to be 15 this week.

I will never drive a minivan.

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

Sometimes you have to treat your mind like it's the bad part of town: never go in there alone.

Explore your mind.

Write for Ed/Op.

Ante Up: BEP and Talib Kweli take Northeast

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

BLACK EYED PEAS
Pearl Street
February 13

It was 9:30 p.m. and the band was an hour late. It didn't bode well for a decent show. Neither did the countless Tribe hooks getting played by the dreaded DJ in an attempt to keep the hippies who'd emerged from the woodwork in some sort of check.

At least one character in the audience thought it was a Phish show, twisting about, arms flailing, in some sort of out-of-control command of himself. The DJ pointed towards the back doorway several times; the crowd popped large but then the Tribe hooks started again.

Someone walks out on stage, apologizes to us for the show starting an hour later than it should, and then introduces the Black Eyed Peas. Will.I.Am, Apl.D.Ap and Taboo take the stage. The crowd cheers and BEP launches into one of the highest energy hip-hop shows available.

Not only stunning in the sheer presentation (no FUBU to be found anywhere on a group that was closer to Beck than Method Man), the band's hour and a few minutes set was packed with hits, hip-hop, freestyle and breakdancing. The 500-plus crowd was feverish for the performance at times but generally unable to keep up with the group who gave it everything, regardless of playing a small club.

Hinting at things to come, the band's first song "Bringin' It Back" was interrupted by a "we gonna bring it" chant, almost a threat to anybody who might have been low on energy. Apparently, and unfortunately for the show, the band's microphones went out consistently and while the band made due by passing the mic from person to person, the frustration was evident on their pissed faces. Will.I.Am, after watching Taboo try to get a mic fixed by a techie in the back, simply smashed it on the stage. The crowd howled approval and later backed Will up in a "fuck this microphone" chant.

Taboo, meanwhile, used the microphone problems as an image builder for the band, telling the audience that when "stuff breaks, give it up for the hip-hop culture." The band wasn't all rage and frustration at mechanical failure, especially when after leading a split-room audience participation, the band slowed it down.

It was time to dance.

Like men on a mission to bring back the funk, each of the band got their minute or two of pure break-dancing, each trying to outdo the other while popping the crowd large. Taboo danced first, finishing in the monkey kung-fu pose. Will.I.Am's performance was solid, but based more in his feet and thus impossible to see unless right in front of the stage. Apl.D.Ap finished biggest. Pausing several times while on his hands, his long dreds whipped around the room as the drummer beat out a steady flow.

Those live performances are one of the reasons that a BEP show is just so good – not just leaving fans to hope that the rapping itself can carry the show – and each got a brief chance to shine during a solo. Perhaps the weakest performer was the DJ, but maybe he was tired after keeping the crowd entertained during the first hour before the performers showed up. Beyond their solos, the bassist, guitarist and drummer made both BEP albums better, giving them a funky flow that they'd always lacked otherwise.

BEP acknowledged the effort of the band, proclaiming that hip-hop better start to learn to include instrumentation and musical theory if it was going to move forward, a dangerous critique for the band to make. They're totally right of course, but there aren't many who are willing to go on record admitting that hip-hop's going to need to diversify if it's going to creatively survive.

The band finished with a sudden stop, simply finishing "Request Line" and waving goodbye. A "Black Eyed Peas" chant got them back on stage for a finale including a funk-driven "Weekends." To cover for the missing Esthero, Will.I.Am used a modified microphone produced a much better song than "Weekends" ever was.

Considering the technical difficulties and the short set (just over an hour and a half for the total show), watching BEP took energy, much less participating with them. Such a high-intensity show is a tough thing to find, especially when done so well.

Black Eyed Peas put on a stellar show this week at Pearl Street.

COURTESY OF SUNSPLASH.COM

Talib Kweli played Valentines Day at, appropriately, Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel.

COURTESY OF RAWKUS.COM

By Catherine Turner
and Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

TALIB KWELI
Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel
February 14

PROVIDENCE – You know you've walked into a good show when there is a crowd of people in a circle cheering not for a fight, but for some breakdancing. The crowd for Talib Kweli was a mix of black and white, male and female, casual fan and hip-hop head, it was the kind of diversity that was missing from Tuesday night's Black Eyed Peas show at Pearl Street. Luckily, the audience energy at Pearl Street and BEP's amazing live performance eroded all groaning of the crowd's static make-up. The more interesting audience at Lupo's was just as pumped, and Kweli reciprocated, although in a different way.

Kweli's stop in Providence on Valentines Day 2001 was one of a handful of solo dates he's doing across the country at smaller venues in between dates on his major tour opening for Erykah Badu and Musiq Soulchild. These shows can be a double-edged sword: the proximity and strictly-for-Kweli audience at the smaller shows will undoubtedly create a better atmosphere, but one has to wonder if the smaller venues aren't getting the short side of the stick with the lack of a live backing band and the interaction between the artists on the tour.

The feeling at Lupo's indicated that's not the case, and the Kweli show was probably better than at a larger venue, but not without some holes that could be patched up. The most disappointing aspect was the lack of any live instrumentation. Although Hi-Tek's beats are more than adequate, one is left only to imagine how good cuts like "Too Late" or "For Women" would have sounded played by musicians. Also, Hi-Tek's beats were present without DJ Hi-Tek, as he was working on his solo HiTekNology album in New York. Granted, his presence isn't vital (and was not advertised), and fill-in DJ Chaps was fine, but it didn't feel like the full Reflection Eternal experience without him.

These conditions put the spotlight shining hard on Kweli and his mic skills, and he was more than up to the task. After the bizarre opening band OVM, Kweli emerged clad in a bright red T-shirt with matching cap and tinted glasses. He got down to business immediately with "Move Somethin'" and followed it tight with "Africa Dream." The excitement and Kweli's relentless pace seemed to dull the sharp lyrics and easier pace of the latter song, but a good groove was established next with "Too Late." The song that asks, "Where were you the day hip-hop died?" may be overly harsh, but with the hands waving back and forth during the refrain of "Is it too early to mourn, is it too late to ride?" it seemed as if Kweli was trying to resurrect it all by himself.

Kweli on the mic is a sight to behold. Never out of breath, rarely resting, he means every word and at no time seems like he's going through the motions. His rhyme skills are his greatest gift to the audience and combined with two female backing vocalists brings it close enough to the album sound without losing the vital live vibe.

After turning the clock back for a bit with "Manifesto" and a Black Star medley, Kweli jumped back into material from Train of Thought. "Eternalists" had some creative vocal inflexions and time changes. "Down for the Count" was as mediocre as it is on the album, and "I Love Language" was a given on Valentine's Day.

After closing the regular set with the effortlessly cool "The Blast," Kweli returned for two encores. The first, the only once-performed-live "For Women," was the highlight of the evening. Introduced as "a serious song," this tale about women was a tribute to a song of the same name by legendary jazz singer Nina Simone. Talib's modern version focused specifically on the story of the daughter of dave parents, and brought a sense of intensity and closeness from Kweli's telling.

The show's conclusion was a true moment of live hip-hop. Warning the audience he may forget the words, Kweli launched into "Memories Live," coasting smoothly until the final verse, which he forgot, so he cut the beat and the show was over. The scene was indicative of the show as a whole; all the stops were excellent, but one left with the feeling that we rode close to, but not the whole length of the Train of Thought journey.

"Intuitive Responses" by Christopher Bordenca, Minjung Kim and Steven Duplisea. A collection of abstract paintings on paper, focusing on a spiritual approach to image making rather than a rational, deliberate methodology. The pieces evoke the emotive rather than the preconceived. The show will be ongoing in the Graduate Lounge. Refreshments are always available. Show will run through the month of February.
– Sam Wilkinson

Charitable Brothers & Sisters gather local talent for a good cause

By Joe Cardozo
Collegian Staff

A few months ago, as I was entering a show at the Pearl St. Nightclub, I was handed a flyer... nothing unusual, there are always plenty of flyers being handed out at shows. This particular one was about "Brothers & Sisters Gatherings." The flyer had a list of upcoming Gatherings, most of which were in Enfield, Connecticut in the Powder Hollow Barn. Although this is a bit of a drive – 45 minutes from UMass – I was intrigued by the bands that were playing, among them Jiggle the Handle, The Gordon Stone Trio and Butterfield favorites Psychedelic Breakfast. In addition, every show was a mini-festival of sorts with up to four bands per night. I figured it would be worth my while to check out one of these shows.

Although it took me some time to get there, I finally made it on Saturday, Jan. 27 and I can assure you that Brothers & Sisters Gatherings are well worth the drive. On the bill that night were Psychedelic Breakfast (with a guest appearance by Wolfman from our own Baker Dorm), Buddha Funk Special, Flipper Dave, World Beat and Ipal. As soon as I entered, I realized that the Powder Hollow Barn is a unique venue. It's small enough that it feels like you're in someone's living room, large enough to accommodate a good crowd, has the outdoorsy feel of a barn in the woods but the comfort of being indoors, and features a kitchen in the back where food is served.

The events are organized by Jay Palazzesi (a.k.a. Ipal a.k.a Jay P) who has been putting them on for about three years as part of his mission to "create a scene with a good vibe." On March 31, the Powder Hollow barn will host its fourth annual Spring Phunky Festival featuring Psychedelic Breakfast, Buddha Funk Special, Bath Tub Gin, The Cold Duck Trio, Ipal and others TBA. At all his Powder Hollow Barn shows, Jay P encourages people to bring a canned good for the soup kitchen, and in exchange he offers discounted tickets. All in all, he has done a lot of good things in creating Brothers & Sisters Gatherings, and as he continues to expand his operation into Northampton, Holyoke, and Westfield one would he wise to join in the fun.

This Friday, Feb. 16 there will be a show at the Powder Hollow Barn featuring Jiggle the Handle, Liberty Bus (a Grateful Dead tribute band), Ipal, and more TBA. This is an all-ages show starting at 7pm. The event is BYOB but ID is required for drinkers. Tickets are at the door.

Experimental sounds from the sea

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

MAGNÉTOPHONE
i guess sometimes i need to be reminded of how much you love me
4AD Records

What a strange journey Magnétophone seeks to take its listeners on, a deep-sea exploration of what's underneath the shimmering of the beautiful waters of this world.

Matt Saunders and John Hanson play Magnétophone's keyboards beautifully, their fingers creating the lush underwater world that there music is reminiscent of. Listening to i guess sometimes i need to be reminded of how much you love me, one can imagine spiraling kelp cut by sharp beams of faded sunlight. It's electronica with a focused sharpness, if such things are possible, a preprogrammed randomness like the ocean itself.

Occupying a certain area of the musical realm, one can hardly call what Magnétophone does a collection of songs, but rather dense but flowing compositions of sound, united by underneath beats that, despite the drum and bass feel of the music, hold the total sound together.

"Frankholmes' drive" starts hard, a frantic drum beat trying to make as many sounds as possible while the soft sounds of synth play in the background, pulling the listener's focus away from the dissonance of the percussion's sound. Percussion is probably overstating it: the music is pure drum machine, but the sheer frenzy of the beats sounds like a person gone crazy with the mechanical tool. It's the depth of the music that keeps things interesting, for most technotica is reduced to the simple repercussion of drums and bass, again and again, an aural assault that lacks drive, focus or harmony.

Magnétophone's attempts to capture those three elements at some sort of middle ground makes for fantastic music, cacophonous as it might be. Like battery, the disc's second song is an in-your-face explorations of the ocean's cruelty (one can imagine beautiful creatures being killed by even more beautiful creatures), but the undersea war winds suddenly calm down after seven minutes, replaced by the undulating sounds of dolphins or as close as one can get using synth. There are sudden starts and stops of a song, but not a lyrical one, rather that of natures' own sound-making ability. The dolphin-like sounds are called "didn't I blow your mind?," a strange title close to that of a popular Delphonics hit from the late 70's, but while they finished listeners off with pure soul, Magnétophone works to control the listeners mind. Sounds force imaginations of a wonderfully different place at a depth at which the human cannot usually reach.

Perhaps too flowery a critique, the problem with trying to write about a band like Magnétophone that defies so many typical adjectives while lacking so many musical traditions (where's my chorus dammit), the English band is an exploration of their own watery-world. It might not make Kevin Costner very happy, but Magnétophone's album is pure aqua-genius.

Later on during their submarine explorations, Magnétophone pushes the limits of the synth/drum/bass combination, creating a murky, bottomed-out deep sound. Strange sounds occupy the album's later songs, like the mythical creatures of the deep. Horrendous Kraken like beings make appearances on the seven-minute frightener "air methods," a slight exploration suddenly interrupted by the appearance of a creature from Peter Benchley's imagination. As if Neptune himself had sent these sounds to interrupt Saunders and Hanson during their production, "air methods" sudden shift from south to scary is unnerving.

But the band's true talent might be not in their ability to shift up in gear, but to suddenly and convincingly shift back without having a sound that's somehow forced. Imagine moving from a world of all light into darkness until there was nothing visible and then moving back in a matter of seconds. The sudden end of the album, a poppy-named "love needs you," reminds the listener of where they've been while hinting that they have finally returned possibly bringing with them some of what they saw. A drum and bass beat, slight and with the synth grabbing the spotlight, this time leaving the percussion to try to pull attention from the predominant sound, not the other was around.

An unbelievable adventure, i guess sometimes i need to be reminded of how much you love me is an exploratory stunner, a theoretical cannonball off a pier into creative waters rarely investigated.

Closure opens up: Latest from US' Spahn Ranch personal and relaxed

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

SPAHN RANCH
Closure
Cleopatra

Wow.

I was expecting many things from Closure, the new album from underground industrial heroes Spahn Ranch. I was expecting complex song structure, varied sound, interesting beats and arrangements, thoughtful lyrics, and, when it really came down to it, something I could really dance to. What I did not expect was for it to be so mellow, so gentle, so comforting.

For what Spahn Ranch have done on this album is grow beyond the manic, beat-a-minute industrial madness which spawned them and made them famous, and instead go to a smooth, relaxed, and mature sound that is more reminiscent of Groove Armada than Leather Strip. Perhaps even more surprising than this unforeseen shift is the fact that it works, and works spectacularly.

The music can almost be described as minimalist: most songs have a core drum-and-bass beat in the background, and all the effects and keyboards playing against that and the gentle, melodic vocals of Athan Maroulis (who is never distorted, by the way). There aren't several beats and effects all vying for dominance; rather, they are all made to cooperate for the greater good. Even the core beats are slower, more thoughtful and paced than is the norm in industrial today, or ever, really. The surrounding effects are also gentle, adding and supplementing rather than beating you over the head. Jarring guitars and superfast drum machines, the norm on a typical industrial CD, are in noticeable absence here. Nothing grates, nothing is used for sheer noise effect...everything is used to create an entrancing flow that sucks you in.

The lyrics themselves are a step away from a more traditional, aggressive past. Whereas in the past, in songs like "Succumber," the band railed against things like politics and their own misery, on Closure Spahn Ranch find themselves creating songs which express sadness rather than anger, resignment rather than rage, and internalized anguish rather than outright aggression. The same restraint present in the musical elements of the album present themselves in the lyrics; on "Phase," lines like "When I'm blind you are not there/there's no meaning to the words/you said you want to share," sang rather than screamed, convey emotion and passion just as effectively as flat-out vitriol. The use of nuance rather than raw rage is a new wrinkle that the band has exploited to full dramatic effect.

I pause for an anecdote: the second time I listened to Closure, I began to read a book. I found that the two experiences complimented each other rather than clashing. Try doing that with your average bitter, enraged industrial rock release, which clamors for your full attention at all times with the lunacy of a rabid dog.

I want to make clear that I am not saying that the enraged, insane, manic rage style of industrial is bad; indeed, it is what attracted me to the genre in the first place. It is the fact that I can, with my appreciation of traditional industrial, still find myself blown away by this release that makes it all the more amazing.

Regardless of how Spahn Ranch did it, by either musical minimalism or lyrical and vocal restraint, they have managed to make an album of industrial rock that, as a whole, simply grabs you and takes you out of yourself, like it or not. Mike Delano once compared Groove Armada's disc to lying on the beach; this CD is a similar experience, and certainly owes much to that release, but I would place it as more of sitting in an old, comfortable armchair and reminiscing of better times, reflecting on sadness without anger. Listening to this album by candlelight in a dark room is an experience indeed, a delight of all senses.

Spahn Ranch haven't crossed any boundaries or blurred any borders with Closure. Instead, they've remained within an industrial framework but simply stretched it to accommodate their maturation, for an album that fits like old slippers while sounding completely new.

Wow.

COURTESY OF RALF STRATHMANN

Marooned in Amherst

Barenaked Ladies stop by the Mullins Center tonight.

IT WON'T BE JUST IRISH EYES SMILING THIS WEEK

THE HANGAR PROUDLY ANNOUNCES:

GUINNESS WEEK

PINTS OF GUINNESS - $2 - THROUGH THE GUINNESS TOAST
TONIGHT - JOIN THE HANGAR, LAZER 99.3, AND GUINNESS FOR GUINNESS WEEK KICKOFF, LOTS OF GUINNESS STUFF TO GIVE AWAY
TOMORROW - COME HAVE A PINT AFTER UMASS CRUSHES TEMPLE
NEXT FRIDAY - THE GREAT GUINNESS TOAST 11PM - THE ONLY $2 TOAST AROUND

WINGS Delivery Menu

$2 PINTS ALL WEEK

THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIVERSITY DRIVE

Men's tennis looking for eastern regional ranking

By Elena Ponesis
Collegian Staff

This weekend the Massachusetts men's tennis team suits up to face its first real test of the Spring 2001 season: the Red Raiders of Colgate University.

Coming off a 7-0 sweep of Hofstra University to even its spring record at 2-2, the Colgate men are sure to be a fired-up, formidable opponent for the Maroon and White. They resemble the UMass program in terms of depth and skill but differ in one all-important area: ranking. The Red Raiders are ranked in the East region, which means they are one of the 16 elite teams that receive an invitation to attend the prestigious ECAC tournament. Coach Judy Dixon and crew are on the fringe of that distinction, and a win against Colgate on Sunday would definitely bring them a step closer to not only a ranking but also the NCAA bid they desperately crave.

"In terms of ranking, we beat Boston College and lost to UConn – both are east regionally ranked teams," Todd Champeau said. "A win against Colgate would definitely improve our chances. Plus they're as big a rival as a non-conference team can be. We don't like them. They don't like us. It's going to be intense."

In order to prevail in this battle, the UMass men need to play match tough and avoid careless errors. Also, they need team consistency, as during the fall season individuals peaked at different times and never as a whole. Injuries to No. 1 Steve Prisco and freshman sensation Aron Gortman greatly hinder the team, and will in no way aid them in their campaign.

"We are definitely not one-hundred percent physically," Assistant Coach Scott Wilkins said. "After last night's practice, Steve is probably ready to go. Aron also practiced well but is still a question mark. A couple other guys are a little dinged up but they'll be ready to go."

The Red Raiders and the Maroon and White specialize in their great depth, as the No. 3 and No. 6 do not differ greatly in levels of skill. No. 1 Ivan Paushter, a 6-foot-1 junior out of Easton, Conn. plays a vicious brand of tennis as the standout player on the Colgate squad.

"Prisco and Paushter grew up playing each other in New England tournaments," Wilkins said. "So Steve not only doesn't want to lose, but he doesn't want to lose to this kid."

Champeau plans to keep a wary eye on No. 4 player Owen Fileti, a solid 6-2 sophomore from Ann Arbor, Mich.

"I remember him from the Midwest tournaments since I'm from Wisconsin," Champeau said. "It's possible that we might play each other. If we do it'll be a tough battle between two Midwest guys."

Other crucial matches for the Maroon and White include Atlantic 10 competitors Duquesne University on February 24, George Washington University on March 10 and Temple University on April 7. These spring conference games definitely hold the key to post-season play.

"This is Bill's[Greene] senior year," Champeau said. "We want it to be a good one. It'd be great to end it with a tournament bid for him."

■ basketball

continued from page 10

Owls, then it will have to do another fantastic job of taking care of the ball, as it only lost 10 turnovers to the opposition three weeks ago.

"In the Temple game, we know that if we are sloppy with the ball then they will be tipping and deflecting it everywhere," guard Shannon Crooks said.

"When you play Temple each possession counts," Monty Mack added. "So if you give up turnovers it is going to lead to easy baskets for them."

Tip off will take place at 1 p.m.

■ officials

continued from page 10

reffing in the A-10?" Flint said. "They didn't blow their whistles then, and they aren't blowing them now."

Crowley contends that missed calls are essentially par for the course, and should receive no more blame than the other intangibles within the sport in the face of a loss.

"No player shoots 100 percent in every game, and no coach wins every game he coaches," Crowley said. "No referee has ever gotten every single call right either. Officials are just a necessary evil."

So despite the sour grapes, calls will be made and missed in tomorrow's game. Here's hoping that the contest will inevitably be decided by the guys in the baggy shorts and hi-tops, not the ones in stripes.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

UMass skiers make tracks in Vermont

By Benjamin Hall
Collegian Correspondent

This past weekend the Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams journeyed north for their second to last races of the regular season. While students here enjoyed the warm Saturday morning sunshine, the racers at Ascutney Mountain in southern Vermont wondered whether the soft snow would make for a long day of difficult skiing.

It seemed as though their thoughts were overheard. Hours later, the wind picked up to a harsh 60 m.p.h. forcing officials to close the mountain and cancel the last of the two slalom races.

In the morning race, co-captain Lauren Brodey finished with a fourth overall time of 55.95 seconds. Carolyn Lewenberg provided a strong 13th place finish (59.74 seconds) and Margaret La Bombard drew close behind with a time of 61.98. Although only the top three times count in the women's division, Tina King and Erica Olsun also had strong runs.

The town of Northampton, Mass. was well represented at the Boston College Carnival as well. Kelly Durand, of Smith College, skied a 53.94. Her time secured her and Smith College a first place position in the slalom. UMass fell behind the Smith squad in fifth place.

The men's team faired slightly better in its attempt to overcome the adverse conditions. Ken Thoman and Rich Granger showed off their adaptability with sixth and twelfth place finishes, respectively. David Pomeroy, a freshman, surprised his team by placing 25th in the heat and put himself in the third spot for the team in slalom.

On Sunday the weather provided the skiers with a drastically different course. Lower temperatures and a penetrating wind left the snow drier than the day before.

"Loose snow was hitting all of us like bb's," coach Bill MacConnell said.

The course had changed from wet snow to an icy slick that co-captain Ken Thoman described as ideal to a giant slalom racer.

"An icy course is faster," Thoman said. "But it brings the increased risk of catching an edge."

Thoman didn't seem to be concerned, however. He has never fallen in a race to date and he continued his streak with a time of 96.60 (10th overall).

Peter Glawischnig and Jay Robins came through for the team as well. Glawischnig, who didn't join the traveling roster until his sophomore year, has been proving himself all season with his impressive slalom and GS times.

With one race left on the schedule it looks as though the women will be fighting to the end to earn a spot at the NCAA Regionals. The men however, are almost guaranteed a position and are looking ahead to the prospect of sending Minutemen representatives to the USCSA Nationals at Bogus Basin, Idaho in early March.

"It's our main concern right now," Thoman said.

Come support the Minutemen this weekend when they butt heads with Atlantic 10 rival Temple, this Saturday at 1 p.m. at the Mullins Center.

Cellular Phone Sales

Part time and Full time positions available through Pro Staff, a leader in the staffing industry. Sales of cell phones and accessories in a retail environment. Base plus commission. Flexible work schedule. Paid training provided. Excellent opportunity! Positions available in Northampton, Hadley, Westfield and Sturbridge. Meet us at the Campus Center Concourse on Wednesday 2/21 from 10am-2pm! Or call us today at (508) 620-7600!

PRO STAFF
people you can count on®

McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
37 North Pleasant St
The Mighty Ross Tones
Every Sunday Night
No Cover
Positive ID Required

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
(02/15/01-02/21/01)
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarettes, Phone Cards
Stolikchnaya Strasberi 750 $16.99
Dinkel Acker 12 pack $9.99 +dep.
Malibu Rum 750 $12.99
Beck's, Amstel, Hieneken, 12 pack $10.99
Magic Hat 9 pack $8.99 +dep
Spaten Lager 6 pack $5.99 +dep
REGISTER FOR WEEKLY PRIZES
Visit the Beer of the World Section!

It's coming...

Summer Camp Employment Day

March 14th
Student Union Ballroom
1:p.m. - 5 p.m.

Camps of all kinds will be attending

Everybody is Welcome!

For more Information
email Tina Acker at tacker@acad.umass.edu

Sponsored by the Campus Career Network and the Student Employment Office

The historic Salem Cross Inn 1705
Route 9 West Brookfield, Ma 01585
(508) 867-8337
Open at 5:00 – Valentine's Day
Come and Enjoy a Sleigh ride, Music
Fine Food & Drink
Fireplace Roasted Prime Rib of Beef
P.S. Valentine Celebration on Saturday Feb. 17th 5:00-9:00
salemxinn@aol.com wwwsalemcrossinn.com

SEEKING
COLLEGIAN ASSISTANT DIVERSITY EDITOR

Help develop and support extensive coverage of campus, local, and world issues that affect the GLBT, ALANA, Jewish and women's communities, as well as other groups.

Be committed to good writing! Newswriting experience preferred but not necessary.

CONTACT TANYA MANNES, DIVERSITY EDITOR
DIVERSITY_EDITOR@HOTMAIL.COM
OR IN THE COLLEGIAN OFFICE

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Hampshire College Professor seeks native Trinidadians for language study. Must have grown up in Trinidad. Call Joanna Morris 559-5462

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Utilities Free Minutes from UMass. Available April 1 $700 a month 665-3521

1 Bedroom Apartment at Cliffside. In Sunderland for sublet thru May. $600 reduced from $720 Call 549-6408

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 Nissan Maximaloaded 160,000 miles. $2500 413-323-5390

1991 Honda Civic SI low mileage. Great condition. Call Erica 253-6504

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained. $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition. $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

CHILDCARE

Babysitter with references and own car. Needed for evenings. 256-3756

COMPUTERS

Mac G4, 400 MHZ 20 GBHD, 128 MB Ram, DVD/56k modem, zip drive, 17" studio display monitor, Epson Stylus 740 printer, games, DVD movies. (mint condition) Market price $2200, asking $2000. Mike 665-3572

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

PT Help Wanted Amherst Greenhouse growing pesticide free, hydroponic herbs. 549-3558

Interns Needed Music Producion Co. seeks PT interns for help w/ festivals, national tours & promotion. No pay but lots of perks (concert tix, CD's, Merch, etc.) 888-595-3122

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for : Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama, Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.camp-waynegirls.com

Personal Care Attendant for disabled man $10. 413-253-0415

PCA for Male Quad. Mon-Fri. morning $10-$12 perhr. 546-0666

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life

5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are now booking for the Spring semester. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161 Call 253-2378

HOUSE FOR SALE

3 Bedroom House close to University. 549-6157

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Long distance relationsips CAN WORK! Find out how at www.sblake.com

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Near UMass. Quiet setting. No smoking vegetarian kitchen. Car needed. $325+ 549-4853

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

STEREO EQUIPMENT

JVC Stereo: 3-disc, dual tape deck, 240 total watts, mint condition and includes all packaging. Call Rob at 549-4275 for more info.

TICKETS FOR SALE

2 Great Barnaked Ladies seats. Call Renee 253-2445

One Barenaket Ladies Floor Seat Ticket Call Sara 549-1883

TRAVEL

Spring Break Airport Rides: Students want to save $5 Bucks on a ride to the airport? Call to reserve a roundtrip from Campus to Bradley Airport by February 28 to get your discount. Just mention this ad when making your reservation. Valley Transporter. 253-1350

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $179 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplash-tours.com 1-800-426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

Classified Clerk Needed

Apply at The Collegian

Hours Available

Mon 12:00-1:20
Tue 1:00-4:00
Wed 10:00-12:00
Fri 8:30-12:00

Contact Marty

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

0 - HSCN Bulletin Board
9 - CBS/3 Hartford
1 - CBS/4 Boston
5 - ABC/40 Springfield
6 - FOX/57 Springfield
7 - PBS/2 Movie Channel
8 - UPN/20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC/30 New Britain
11 - FOX/61 Hartford
12 - PBS/24 Hartford
13 - NBC/26 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - USA/ET (Exclusive Channel)
16 - WB/50 New Haven
17 - ESPN2
18 - ESPN3
19 - DVC/TV (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Closed to Cover
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - A&E
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Nick at Nite
34 - TV Land
35 - Comedy Central
36 - BET
37 - Univision
38 - Bloomberg Financial Network
39 - College TV Network
40 - MTV
41 - MTV2
42 - VH1
43 - The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 16, 2001

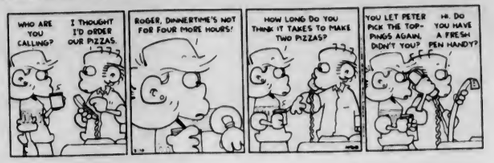
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	CT Business Hour		Championship Ballroom Dancing 20th Anniversary (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Fugitivs (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)		Nash Bridges "Out of Miami"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Fugitivs (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)		Nash Bridges "Out of Miami"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Sabrina-Witch	Popsters "Episode 6" (N)	Grosse Pointe		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Sabrina-Witch	Popsters "Episode 6" (N)		Grosse Pointe	News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Fresier	Seinfeld	Friends	Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)		Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)		News		Fresier	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fresier	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fresier	Gary & Mike	Celebrity	Chasing Spouses		Fresier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	49	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"It Could Happen to You" (1994, Comedy-Drama) Nicolas Cage.						"Straight Talk" (1992, Comedy) Dolly Parton.
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Elizabeth M		Competition (N)		Porrot		Law & Order
CNN	53	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	70	Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show	Stein's Money	Premium	Premium	Premium	Premium			Sportscenter
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Everglades		Wild Discovery: Beavers		Enforcers: Inside the D.E.A.		Crash Files: Inside the NTSB		Casino Dieries	After Midnight	Justice Files "Safe at Home?"
ESPN	50	Sportscenter		Up Close Special (N)		NHL Hockey St. Louis Blues at Chicago Blackhawks. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	69	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"In a Stranger's Hand" (1991, Suspense) Robert Urich.				Division "Secrets and Lies"
MTV	61	Cribs	Cribs	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Making-Video	Cribs	Andy Dick's	Kathy-Reality	True Life (In Stereo)
NICK	63	Pinky & Brain	Cardog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Rugrats	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Fscts of Life	Roc (In Stereo)	Jeffersons	All in Family
SCIFI	65	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Black Scorpion (In Stereo)		Farscape (In Stereo)		Adventures of Jules Verne		Black Scorpion (In Stereo)
TLC	28	Science Times Miracles		48 Hours "Eyewitness"		Dangerous Pursuits				World's Most Dangerous		Test Pilots: Flying the Wing	Dangerous Pursuits
TNT	62	ER "The Gift" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Baby Love"		"Why Do Fools Fall in Love" (1998, Biography) Halle Berry, Vivica A. Fox.				"Red Corner" (1997, Drama) Richard Gere, Bai Ling. (In Stereo)		"Why Do Fools Fall in Love" (1998)
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Against All Enemies"		Nash Bridges "Wild Card"						Farmclub.com
HBO	45	(5:30) "Life With Mikey" (1993)		"Edward Scissorhands" (1990) Johnny Depp. PG-13				"The Matrix" (1999, Science Fiction) Keanu Reeves. (In Stereo)				Dennis Miller
MAX	46	"The Joy Luck Club" (1993, Drama) Tsai Chin, Kieu Chinh. (In Stereo)				"The 4th Floor" (1999) Juliette Lewis				"Switchback" (1997, Suspense) Dennis Quaid.
SHOW	47	(5:45) "Nothing Hill" (1999, Romance) Julia Roberts. PG-13				"Rendeer Games" (2000, Action) Ben Affleck.				Stargate SG-1	Stargate SG-1 (In Stereo)	Beggers

Dilbert By Scott Adams

A MANAGER'S BRAIN IS LIKE A PUMP. IF IT BECOMES EMPTY YOU MUST PRIME IT.
WHATEVER HE LEARNS FIRST WILL FORM THE FOUNDATION FOR ALL OF HIS FUTURE PERCEPTIONS.
THIS GUY HAS BEEN TALKING SMACK ABOUT YOU.
UNH...

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



WHO ARE YOU CALLING?
I THOUGHT I'D ORDER OUR PIZZAS.
ROGER, DINNERTIME'S NOT FOR FOUR MORE HOURS!
HOW LONG DO YOU THINK IT TAKES TO MAKE TWO PIZZAS?
YOU LET PETER PICK THE TOPPINGS AGAIN, DIDN'T YOU?
HI. DO YOU HAVE A FRESH PEN HANDY?

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

ZIPPER, I'M WORRIED ABOUT YOU. YOU GET BEAT UP AT A DEM DEMONSTRATION, BUT YOU DON'T KNOW WHAT YOU'RE DEMONSTRATING AGAINST.
YOU GO TO COLLEGE, BUT YOU DON'T KNOW WHAT CLASSES YOU'RE SIGNED UP FOR. DON'T YOU THINK IT'S TIME YOU COMMITTED TO SOMETHING? ANYTHING?
I MEAN, I KNOW YOU'RE TRYING TO HONOR YOUR UNCLE ZONKER'S BLACKER LEGACY, BUT...
UM... CRICKET? NO, OFFHAND.
AHA!?
THIS IS WHY UNCLE ZONKER NEVER DATED!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HEY HEY HEY. YOU HAVE TO SHARE THOSE TREES WITH SATCHEL! YOU CAN'T JUST LEAVE THREE OR FOUR.
"FOUR." THAT'S LIKE 28 TO SATCHEL!
BUCKY, THAT'S JUST HIS "AGE."
I'M NOT "28."

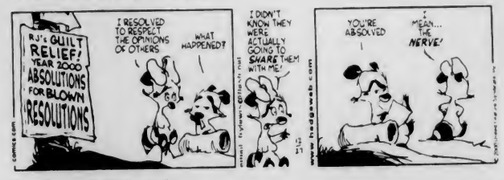
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I WROTE SOME STAND-UP MATERIAL. YOU WANT TO HEAR IT?
"COMEDY"? SERIOUSLY? YOU? YEAH, GO NUTS
UM...OK. GOOD EVENING. SO, DOGS ARE PRETTY DUMB, EH? AND UGLY. THANK YOU, YOU'VE BEEN GREAT. MY NAME IS BUCKY AND I'LL BE HERE ALL WEEK
YOU'LL NEED MORE THAN THAT, BUCK.
THERE'S PLENTY MORE WHERE THAT CAME FROM.
I DON'T GET IT.

Buttercup Festival By Elliott Garbauskis

I WATCHED A BEAUTIFUL SUNSET YESTERDAY, SOFT AND SAD, LIKE ORANGE MILK POURED OVER WEATHERED ASH.
LOOK, I TOLD YOU I WON'T HAVE SEX WITH YOU. SO JUST QUIT IT.
I WASH MY CAT IN THE BIRDBATH SOMETIMES. IT REALLY BOTHERS HIM. OF COURSE, I USE TURPENTINE.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



R.J.'s GUILT RELIEF! YEAR 2000 ABSOLUTIONS FOR BLOWN RESOLUTIONS
I RESOLVED TO RESPECT THE OPINIONS OF OTHERS
WHAT HAPPENED?
I DIDN'T KNOW THEY WERE ACTUALLY GOING TO SHARE THEM WITH ME!
YOU'RE ABSOLVED
MEAN... THE NERVE!

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

ARI, ANY SIGNIFICANCE TO THE PRESIDENT'S FAILURE TO PASSION NICKNAMES TO VISITING BLACK HAWK HERO OF CONGRESS?
HE CALLED THEM ALL "YELLAH."
THAT'S BECAUSE THOSE NICKNAMES HAVEN'T BEEN GENERATED YET...
IT'S STILL EARLY. THE PRESIDENT HAS BEEN FOCUSING ON MICHIGAN FOR THE LEADERSHIP RANK AND-FILE. NICKNAMING WILL COME LATER. ANY MORE QUESTIONS?
ARI!
YES, TOO FAT.
ARI!
"HAIR, BODY." YOU'RE NEXT.

Horoscopes

Aquarius: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) The nation is stunned by Amelia Earhart's miraculous return, especially when she knees you in the groin and shouts, "Thanks for nothing."

Pisces: (Feb. 19-March 20) Remember, the impressive thing is not how well the bear dances. It's how incredibly sexily the bear dances.

Aries: (March 21-April 19) Your admirable decision to lead a life of honesty and moral rectitude will bring your career in advertising to a sudden and drastic end.

Taurus: (April. 20-May 20) You will be pursued by millions of hungry, nutrition-conscious Americans when it is revealed that you are part of a complete breakfast.

Gemini: (May 21-June 21) – After six weeks, you still haven't figured out how Jonah got so much done from inside one of those things.

Cancer: (June 22-July 22) –Your habit of standing on your desk and flailing about with a fire ax will continue to be distracting and divisive at your office.

Leo: (July 23-Aug. 22) –Your striking resemblance to TV's Craig T. Nelson will somehow fail to get you laid for yet another week.

Virgo: (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) –You've always said that premature baldness never killed anybody, but the tragic events of next week will force you to eat those words.

Libra: (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) – After 12 years of living alone in the bush, you're beginning to think the damned snipe is never going to show.

Scorpio: (Oct. 24-Nov. 21) –You will go down in linguistic and polar history next week when it is discovered that the Eskimos have more than 600 words for what a big jerk you are.

Sagittarius: (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Next week's trials and tribulations will force you to stand tall and be a man, even though you were born short and female.

Capricorn: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Though you'll certainly be proud to have your own action figure, you would have rather had one that didn't feature realistic spastic-colon action.

Courtesy of TheOnion.com

Solid Custom Tattoo
450 West St.
Route 116
Amherst, MA
259-0029
free-est 1-9
sun apt. only
A Tattoo is for life
Know your artist

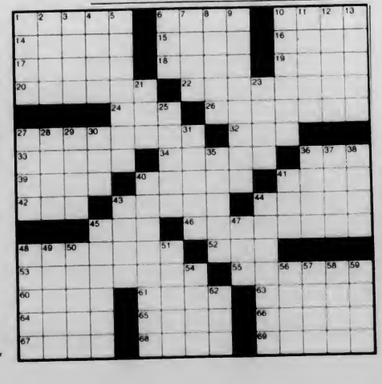
ACROSS
1 Ranch loop
6 "— Over Paradox"
10 Manage
14 Rubber City
15 Contest
16 "Jeopardy!" name
17 Kilt material
18 Goulash
19 Detective Hammer
20 Pale
22 Allergic-one's problem
24 Greek letter
25 Closest
27 Gershwin's "— in Blue"
32 — snail's pace
33 "— So Vain"
34 Darlings
36 Short-legged horse
39 Proficient
40 Senorita's coins
41 Look closely
42 Bend the head
43 Not as common
44 Craze
45 Impair
46 Firmly
48 Is corinthe
52 Rand of "The Fountainhead"
53 Innate aptitude
55 Naval officer
60 Pesky insect
61 Major periods
63 Maureen or Scarlett
64 Ship part
65 Garden tool
66 Vegas action
67 Duration
68 Guah
69 Gaudy

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

H	A	S	N	T		T	A	D	A		F	O	B	S
A	R	T	I	E		V	I	L	U	A	U
R	E	I	G	N		R	E	E	L		O	I	S	E
K	A	L	E		S	E	C	T	O	R	S
	L	A	P	S		T	U	S	S	L	E
	I	S	R	A	E	L		M	E	L	O	N
G	R	E	A	S	E		P	E	A		S	E	P	T
A	H	A		T	A	K	E	D		F	L	E	E	R
P	I	T	A		G	E		F	O	L	K	S
E	N	E	M	I	E	S		H	O	R	S	E
D	E	N	I	A	L		O	R	D	A	I	N
	A	A		R	A	D	I	O		O	B	O	E
S	L	O	B		V	I	I		W	A	D	E	R
K	A	T	H	A	R	I	N	E		H	A	I	R	E
Y	O	K	E		S	A	N	G		Y	E	A	S	T

12-12-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Catches forty winks
2 Sooner St.
3 Type of exam
4 Dirty
5 Sign the back of a check
6 Fem. title
7 Vow
8 Indian or Arctic
9 — Eve
10 Kodak product
11 Black or green fruit
12 Lap dogs
13 Put forth effort
21 Owl's question
23 Singer Domino
25 Weirder
27 Baseballer Nolan
28 Tramp
29 Word sung on 9 Down
30 "School" start
31 Positive answers
35 Blood vessel
36 Penny
37 Eye, in France
38 Donkey's sound
40 Spouses
41 Snow boot
43 Hindu princess
44 Small fish
45 Courage
47 Cereal grain
48 Accurate
49 Boredom
50 Hymn
51 Fragment
54 Grab
56 Persian king
57 Othello's foe
58 Got bigger
59 — is not any
62 Work as a tailor



Quote of the Day

"If you know a president between Lincoln and McKinley you need to get a life."

-Overhead

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 36 LOW: 18	HIGH: 37 LOW: 28	HIGH: 30 LOW: 12

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Steak& Cheese Sub (B)

Ravioli Alfredo (B, H, W)

African Vegetable Stew (vegan)

Meatball Grinder (F, H)

BBQ Chicken (W)

DINNER

Pinneapple Ham Steak (B, H, W)

Roast Turkey (B,F)

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Spicy Tofu & Vegetables (vegetarian)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Rob Schulze
Photo Technician — Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor — Matt Despres
Production Supervisor — Roberto Delgado
Production Staff — Elana Premock, Adi Huseinovic

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Friday, February 16, 2001 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

THROWING DOWN

Rivalries renewed in Atlantic 10 battle

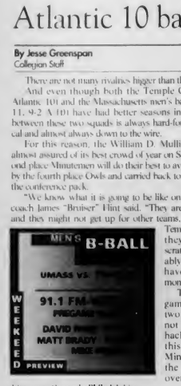
By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

There are not many rivalries bigger than this.

And even though both the Temple Owls (14-12, 8-4 Atlantic 10) and the Massachusetts men's basketball team (11-11, 9-2 A-10) have had better seasons in the past, a game between these two squads is always hard-fought, always physical and almost always down to the wire.

For this reason, the William D. Mullins Center will be almost assured of its best crowd of year on Saturday, as the second place Minutemen will do their best to avoid being swept up by the fourth place Owls and carried back toward the middle of the conference pack.

"We know what it is going to be like on Saturday," UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "They are struggling a little and they might not get up for other teams, but this is us. It's Temple vs. UMass, and they are going to scratch, claw and probably make shots they haven't made in a month."



To find a classic game between these two teams, one does not have to look far back. On Jan. 27 of this year, the Minutemen defeated the Owls, 65-64 in overtime at the Liacouras Center in Philadelphia.

It was a contest that contained everything usually found in games between the A-10 rivals and more. The play was hard-nosed and physical, the ending came down to the final seconds, and as has been the case more often than not, the game was marked by controversy that somehow managed to find its way into more than its share of UMass-Temple games.

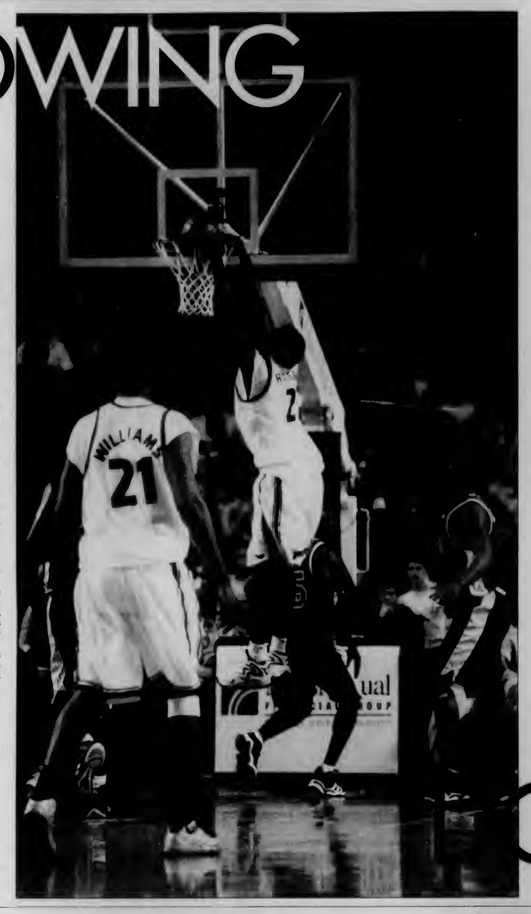
However, no one could deny the fact that the game was indeed fun to watch. With 26 seconds left in OT, Massachusetts center Ktiwana Rhymer (14 points, 11 rebounds) took a pass from Monty Mack (20 points) and laid the ball into the hoop. Temple's David Hawkins was then fouled with four ticks remaining on the subsequent possession, but he missed the second of two free throws to allow the Minutemen to escape with the one point win.

Controversy came, though, when Hawkins somehow managed to grab his own rebound off the missed free throw, and then attempted another game winning shot. It was blocked as time expired, but Owl's coach John Chaney then erupted, arguing that his player had been fouled on the final possession.

"It takes courage to make that call," Chaney said after the game. "The officials are lost out there, lost between what the rulebook says – call every foul – and cleaning up the game. My kids had courage; there were three people out there who didn't."

Nonetheless, UMass was able to escape the Liacouras Center with a win, setting up tomorrow's rematch. If the Maroon and White plan on picking up a regular season sweep of the

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 7



Of "mice" and men: Ref Wars, the sequel

See how they run.

Following Temple's 65-64 overtime loss to Massachusetts on Jan. 27, Owl coach John Chaney referred to officials Larry Lembo, John Moreau and David Day as "three blind mice." The ancient skipper blasted the zebras for their no-call on the game's final shot, accusing the three of not having the collective courage to put TU freshman David Hawkins on the free-throw line for a chance to win the game.

Needless to say, the Owls will have revenge on their minds when they take to the new hardwood in the William D. Mullins Center tomorrow. Chaney's profanity-laced tirade after the teams' showdown in Philadelphia left little question that the coach felt cheated by the officiating, something that could provide a dangerous fuel to an already formidable team in the rematch.

But there was more to the Hawkins incident than a question of contact. Just ask Mickey Crowley, Supervisor of Men's Basketball Officials for the Atlantic 10, and he'll tell you there are other factors that come into play in such a situation.

"What we try to say, coming down to the wire, is let the players determine who wins and who loses," Crowley said. "Don't let a Mickey Mouse foul put someone on the line."

That mentality is a time-honored tradition in organized basketball. In any game that comes down to the final possession, the whistle is only going to be blown if there is absolutely no question that a foul occurred "beyond any reasonable doubt," to borrow a legal phrase.

ADAM WHITE

Of course, Crowley had a duty to review the controversial final play from the OT thriller. He has a special video playback system at his disposal that can slow down a videotape to "as slow as you can get." He has studied the play in question, and as the refs from another sport might say, the ruling on the field stands.

"In my opinion, it looked like a good defensive play on the UMass player's part," Crowley said. "I never profess to be right or wrong, but at least I give an honest opinion."

That said, there was another factor at play in that game that probably had a lot to do with the lack of a call: precedent. All a coach or player ever asks for is consistency from the officials, and the crew at the Liacouras that afternoon was calling a fairly physical, free-flowing game. Owls Kevin Lyde and Ron Rollerson got away with a tremendous amount of rough stuff in the paint, and UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint suggested afterward that had a few more calls been made along the way in regulation, the extra set and its dynamite ending may have been avoided altogether.

The former point guard attributes the silent-whistle trend to the age and experience of the conference's refs; ironically, Flint thinks these officials have seen a little too much action.

"Why are all the guys I see on Classic Sports still

Turn to OFFICIALS, page 7

One last shot...

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Wednesday at the UMass Sports Luncheon, Massachusetts women's basketball coach Joanie O'Brien stepped to the podium with a smirk on her face.

"Our soap opera continues," O'Brien said.

Many would assume she was talking about the untimely injuries that have plagued the Maroon and White all season, and the on-court changes that have resulted.

But tonight's face-off with George Washington must have been lingering somewhere in the back of her mind – because that's where the real melodrama has already been staged.

On Jan. 20, about 45 minutes before his team was scheduled to face off with the Minutewomen, George Washington coach Joe McKeown was walking around the UMass Student Union.

"I'm just trying to keep warm," he said.

At the same time, O'Brien was at the William D. Mullins Center prepping her team for its Atlantic-10 conference match-up with the Colonials.

McKeown was trying to figure out why there weren't any students around. "Where th everybody?" he asked, turning his gaze around the empty building. The answer he was looking for could have been found on the university's academic schedule under "Winter Session."

The GW skipper arrived at the Mullins Center about ten minutes before tip-off and shared a customary pregame hand-shake with O'Brien moments before the ball went up.

Everything above suspicion ended at that point.

The actual game was a sidebar to the afternoon. The Minutewomen hit only four field goals in the first half and were subjected to an 18-2 run by the Colonials to end that stanza. A frustrated Minutewoman squad jogged into its locker room down 41-16 at the half.

With about eight minutes left in the second half, UMass' Kathy Coyner made a skip pass to Paige Harris, situated behind the three-point arc. In the process, the Colonials' Kristeena Alexander leapt to intercept the pass, but was brought down hard by Jennifer Butler's blind screen for the shooter. As Harris' three-point attempt kissed the net, Alexander ended her intimate meeting with the Mullins hardwood and began her dire relationship with the referee who made the no-call.

McKeown quickly joined in on the official's battering and was appropriately awarded with a technical foul, one the twelfth-year coach didn't find as warming as the Student Union.

Up almost 30 points, McKeown felt that it was necessary to keep his starters in until only three minutes were left on the clock. The end result was a 74-46 Minutewoman domination. But it wasn't really over.

McKeown (and his assistant coaches) refused to engage in the routine game-ending sign of sportsmanship – the same handshake he had delivered O'Brien 40 minutes earlier.

Instead, the two coaches met at half court in an animated angry masterpiece, one that didn't end there. The shouting match eve made its way "backstage" in the tunnels of the Amherst arena.

"I might need to bring my own police escort after what happened last game," O'Brien said.

It's safe to say the stage has been set for tonight's conference battle. And battle, of course, is a huge understatement. The Minutewomen come into the contest one game under .500 at 11-12 (6-6 A-10) looking for a big win to propel them into the A-10 tournament. But pulling out a victory against the 17-8 (11-2 A-10) Colonials at the Charles E. Smith Center in downtown Washington, D.C. won't be too easy, especially in the present context.

Ebony Pegues is gone for the season. Kristin Cannon's broken finger is still in the healing process, and Butler's tibia is still bothering her. Butler will play, but her teammates are going to have to step up and better the 13-for-52 shooting performance UMass put up last time.

"We've had our share of struggles," O'Brien said. "But it's all about preparation. We've been so up and down. We have good days and then we have bad days."

After GW, the Minutewomen travel North to Duquesne, who they beat last Sunday 55-47. And with Butler healthier than she was, UMass should escape with the win.

For the Minutewomen to have a good weekend the role players must factor positively into the outcome. Siiri Liivandi and Caroline Nehls need to execute the high-low post play they have hinted toward all season. Amber Sneed must hit early jumpers. Cleo Foster needs to take care of the basketball. And bench-clearing brawls need to be kept at a minimum.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Senior Kathy Coyner and the Massachusetts women's basketball team will take their best shot at George Washington and Duquesne this weekend.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 84 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, February 20, 2001

Want to win Dave Matthews latest CD? Check out our contest in today's Arts.

ARTS p. 5

Paige Harris and the UMass Minutewomen dropped two tough games over the weeked. Read about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 7

Two students stabbed in SW incident

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts students were stabbed on Saturday morning following a physical altercation that took place in the Southwest residential area.

According to Barbara Pitoniak, UMass news director, the incident occurred at 1:16 on Saturday morning.

"The call came in reporting that a stabbing had occurred," Pitoniak said. "The incident took place in the vicinity of lot 50."

A group of approximately 12 students and non-students became involved in a verbal altercation in the parking lot directly behind Melville Dormitory following a party. A verbal disagreement between two groups escalated into a physical encounter that left two students with knife wounds.

The Amherst Fire Department took one of the victims by ambulance to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield to be treated for a stab wound to the abdomen. He underwent exploratory surgery for his injury.

No additional information was available at press time about his current condition.

The other student was taken by ambulance to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton for his stab wound to the arm. He received 18 stitches and was released.

The names of the victims involved in the stabbing were not available at press time.

Detectives from the UMass Police Department are interviewing witnesses who may have information related to the altercation. The UMPD is currently looking for three or four other individuals who may have information relating to the incident.

Police are looking for a white or Hispanic individual of college age, wearing a yellow Nautica style jacket, a white or Hispanic college-aged male wearing a red waist length puffy jacket and a white or Hispanic female with blond hair. All of these individuals are of average height and weight and are sought for questioning about the incident.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos said in a statement to the press that the students involved in this altercation would be treated with "severity."

"The University has a no-tolerance policy for this kind of incident," he said.

This is the second stabbing that has occurred in the past month involving a UMass student. The first unrelated incident took place on Feb. 4 when a UMass student from Saugus was treated and released from Cooley Dickinson Hospital after receiving five stab wounds and requiring stitches. The incident took place at an off-campus party on Hobart Lane. The three individuals involved, none of who were UMass students, were arrested for assault with intent to murder and assault with a dangerous weapon as a result of that incident.

The UMass Police Department urges anyone who may have seen anything regarding Saturday's incident to call them at 545-2121 or at 577-TIPS.

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this article.

JANET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Broke into the old Mullins Center

It's been four days since Ed Robertson and the Barenaked Ladies called and Amherst answered with a sell-out crowd of impulsive, compulsive and insane fans throwing Kraft dinner and stomping on the floor just for fun. Was their stunt a rock spectacle, or was it too little too late? Can't understand what we mean? Well you soon will...Arts, page 5.

Garage looms for Amherst

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

A downtown parking garage was pushed to the brink of reality by the Amherst Town Meeting last Thursday night. However, opponents of the proposed garage have until next Friday to collect enough signatures to force a town-wide vote on the referendum.

A vote of 114-67 at the meeting approved an additional $1 million in funding for the parking garage to be built in Boltwood Walk. The remainder of the garage's cost was approved by a Town Meeting vote in Nov. of 1997.

Alan Root of the Ann Whalen House on Kellogg Ave. is among several petitioners seeking to put the garage referendum on an upcoming town ballot.

"I'm among those who are seeking a referendum so the people can decide if they want to approve another $1 million in local funding for the garage," said Root. "I think that the current addition of the garage is a bad idea for two reasons. First, it will result in a lot of lost jobs in the Boltwood Walk area. Secondly, up until last Thursday, the Town Meeting had never gone over the $4 million dollar limit."

According to Root, the cost of the proposed parking garage will come to at least $5.4 million, including costs to reconfigure Lessey and Main streets. Three million dollars of money for the garage has already been awarded by a state grant. An additional $90,000 has been made available from the town of Amherst – about $200,000 of that from the sewer and water funds and $200,000 more from the parking enterprise fund.

The Allied Project which includes the above-mentioned reconfiguration, will fall under a separate contract. About $40,000 for that contract will come locally; the other $150,000 will come from the state. This $150,000 must be put out by the town first, said Root, and then later reimbursed by the state.

Turn to park, page 3

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Pulling your weight

The Connecticut Valley Erg Sprints In Curry Hicks, hosted by the men's and women's crew team on Saturday morning.

Lil' Kim to headline Spring Concert

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Preparations for the 2001 Spring Concert, which will take place in May, are progressing poorly, according to University Productions and Concerts (UPC). The group, which puts on the show every year, claimed to be spending more time looking for money than for acts. UPC is also beginning to worry that the quality of the show may end up suffering as a result.

"The students are getting cheated," exclaimed UPC's production manager Amanda Paolella. "I don't care about saying it anymore, because I want students to know: I never wanted to get as involved as we are in the press and Student Government Association (SGA); I just wanted to do my job and that's it."

Paolella said that no acts have been signed yet because, as of right now, they do not have any money in their allotted account.

"Our advisor said that we have to have the money in our account by March 1," she said. "When we told the SGA that, they said that it wasn't on the top of their priority list."

Paolella accused the SGA of having the money, and "just not doing anything about it."

When they finally do get the cash, they will most likely be using it to pay for Lil' Kim to headline the show. Lil' Kim will bring Jr. Mafia along with her.

Although Paolella always wanted Lil' Kim to perform, she said that seven other acts (Green Day, Black Crows, Deftones, A Perfect Circle, Nelly, Outkast and Guster) were passed up in the process.

"We also wanted a comedian or someone fun like Andy Dick or Ron Jeremy to MC the show," she said, "but since we had trouble finding talent, we had to bring in Laser 99.3 to help, and will probably end up using their morning DJs because we can't afford another one."

UPC has constantly blamed money troubles for its struggles.

"We're spending the time we should be looking for acts fighting for money," Paolella said.

Her organization claimed that the SGA promised UPC that they would cover an $18,000 loss in ticket sales from last year's spring concert. In turn, they used the funds for this years show to pay for the tickets. Last year's concert was headlined by Method Man and Redman. She said that they made good on their promise, but they did this by using SGA funds normally allocated for UPC to do it.

"With that $18,000," Paolella proclaimed, "we could've gotten Guster. A lot of people would be happy with Guster."

Guster is a local pop-music band from Boston, MA. UPC was insistent that if it were given a bit more money, which it feels is owed to them anyway, it would be much less frustrated.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian commented about the lack of funding to UPC.

"There are hundreds of Registered Student Organizations (RSO) out there that need funding," he said. "There are a lot of important agencies that need to get funding and all of them are important." He added that the cost of the concert has almost doubled while he has been a student at the University. "They're now getting an additional $70,000 to $80,000 per year," he said.

Early preparations for the concert began even before the academic year started. UPC said that an early goal was to have the concert outside, as it had been in the past, before it was placed in the Mullins Center two years ago. Trustee Avakian also noted that this was a personal goal of SGA President Jeff Howe's.

"It's much cheaper to have it at the Mullins Center, but it's possible to put it outside," said Paolella. "You just have to work at it." She said that even when she explained to Howe that it would cost around $300,000 to get the concert outside, he told her that he would deal with it. "I haven't even heard from him," she said.

Avakian noted that having the show in the Mullins Center meant that weather would not be a concern.

As for the technical aspects of the show, it will be much different than last year. There will only be three acts, as opposed to the multiple bands from before, and there will only be one stage as opposed to two.

"We had to cut the second stage because we couldn't afford it," said Paolella.

Last year's show produced some difficulties as well. In particular, it produced accusations of lacking diversity. Paolella thinks that the 2001 Spring Concert will automatically address this issue, and is very happy with Lil' Kim as a possible headliner. "She's a female, and we never have females," she said. "We wanted Lil' Kim and Green Day together. We had the opportunity, but we lost it.

"All we needed was that extra $18,000. We wouldn't have to fight for it, and then we could get the better acts, but now we get second line acts, and spend more time fighting for money."

Paolella also suggested a future raise in student's fees to support more quality acts, proclaiming that the students would be willing to pay it.

Avakian responded to this proposal by saying, "I'm always against raising student's fees. But of course, if students gave more money, then more money would be given to UPC, and there would probably be better acts."

Paolella said that last year's sponsors such as Swapit.com were turned off of coming back, due to a lack of professionalism.

"Checks from last year sat on people's desks for months," she said. "We were expecting people like [Swapit.com] to re-sponsor [this year's] event, but who wants to re-sponsor an event if your check is never even going to get cashed."

There was also a problem with last year's Master of Ceremonies, Biz Markie. Paolella said that he was hired to perform hall hour sets on stage, and ignored that to instead spend two minutes simply introducing the bands. "He didn't care," she said.

One aspect that all parties seem to agree upon is the significance of the spring concert's attendance.

"When I see this campus unified with everyone together," Avakian said, "it's at convocation, graduation, basketball games and spring concert, and that's it."

Avakian also said that he has not had much of an opportunity to be a presence in the planning for the Spring Concert.

"I gave them a long list of bands that I would've like to see," he said. "I haven't seen any of them."

When asked about his reaction to Lil' Kim, Avakian said, "My personal tastes in music have nothing to do with the quality of the performance." UPC claimed that the event will be finalized within the next few months, and that several deals are being made to include many different campus organizations.

"It's good to dream," Paolella said. "You need people who are going to do that."

COURTESY: BAD BOY

Lil' Kim will bring her music stylings and large tattoo to the Mullins Center in May.

International Briefs

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Latin America

PERU – The manhunt is on for Peruvian fugitive Vladimiro Montesinos, the former Spy chief for former president Alberto K. Fujimori Fujimori's government collapsed last year after numerous scandals.
Montesinos was a top official in that government but fled Peru over four months ago. He left the country in an attempt to avoid charges of drug trafficking and gun-running. Allegedly he left behind videotapes that show him bribing judges, politicians and election officials in order to keep Fujimori in power. The prosecution also alleges that they have found up to $70 million in Swiss bank accounts from arms trafficking.
In the 1970's, Montesinos was jailed for a brief time after being caught stealing documents that described purchases of arms from the Soviet Union. He was also involved in the Peruvian National Intelligence agency, which was set up by the United States Central Intelligence Agency, in order to combat the drug trade.
Even though he faces corruption charges, the Peruvian government has said that they believe that the CIA may be trying to protect Mr. Montesinos. Justice Minister Diego Garcia Sayan has made a plea to U.S. President Bush to step up the search for the crooked former official.
Montesinos was last seen in Venezuela. He may have been looking for plastic surgery. The government denies that allegation.

BRAZIL – All the hostages have been released after a prison riot in Carandiru, Sao Paulo where inmates revolted, took guards hostage and kept almost 8,000 people inside since Sunday.
The revolt was one among 28 others that also occurred on Sunday. Many inmates in several prisons in the area began rebelling in protest to the movement of prisoners.
Government officials stated that as of Monday, most of the hostages had been released and all but two of the prisons were back in control of the state. At the end of the uprising, at least 12 inmates were dead and there have been reports of not only convict violence but police brutality as well.
The hostages were mostly visitors to the prison and family members of inmates that chose to stay at the prison voluntarily while the police made efforts to regain power over the building.
Officials site the proliferation of prison gangs as one of the catalysts for this rebellion. They also say that the gang members communicate by cell phones to mobilize revolts against prison guards.

Asia-Pacific

CHINA – A human rights activist named Ruhin Munro has published an article in the Columbia Journal of Asian Law in which he says that the government of China has been using the Soviet Union's model of putting suspected opponents of the government in psychiatric hospitals.
The Chinese government claims that they are using the hospitals as a way of treating the "mentally disturbed" members of the Falun Gong spiritual movement, which, according to the New York Times, they see as a "dangerous cult."
According to Munro's report, the Chinese government has systematically used forced psychiatric imprisonment and psychedelic drugs for years, beginning especially during the cultural revolution of Mao in the 1960's and 70's.
China has been trying to clean up their reputation for violating human rights in an effort to look appealing as a host site to the 2008 Olympics. President Bush has stated that he plans on condemning China for their psychiatric abuses during the next United Nations forum in Geneva.

THE PHILIPINES – At least 1,000 people are homeless and 16 dead after landslides and floods ravaged central and southern Philippines. Officials say that six people died after a giant landslide hit the village of Leyte.
Also, a ferry ran aground after high winds blew it into the Port of Bay-bay on Sunday. All but one of the 165 passengers were rescued.
Torrential rain has pounded the area, due to a tropical depression and flooded over 100 villages.

MYANMAR – for the first time in almost a decade, the fighting has stopped and there is the possibility of a peace as the military junta that has controlled the state since 1994 agreed to hold talks with pro-democracy leader Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi.
Though there are few details, reports have said that both sides are tentative to make any promises, but their war of words has been put aside until talks have taken place.
Critics have said that they doubt that the military government will give up any of its power for a democratic administration. Other critics believe this to be a ploy to get international aid, since the country is plagued by international sanctions. Some think that if the government seems to be more flexible, Japan will begin to give the country money again.
Both critics and proponents are waiting to see what happens and if there will be a positive outcome of the discussions.

MONGOLIA – the people of Mongolia are suffering the worst winter in over 50 years and as a consequence may lose 12 million heads of cattle by the time the snow melts. They have already lost up to 300,000 heads.
The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization has begun the effort to raise $8.7 million for relief funds for the farmers of the country, as well as health care.

SOUTH KOREA – Police put down a several day old protest at a Daewoo Motors factory Monday, crashing through a wall of protestors who had occupied the factory, for three days. They were protesting recent layoffs; 1,750 had been suddenly laid off last week when the factory was taken over by workers. No injuries were reported.

INDIA – India fired on Pakistani planes yesterday over the troubled state of Kashmir.
Pakistan claims to have heard nothing about the attack and would say nothing unless India filed an official complaint about border violations.
Kashmir has been the subject of intense and prolonged fighting between Pakistan and India over Kashmir, now divided nearly evenly between the two recently nuclear nations. Two of the nations three wars have been fought over Kashmir. At least 30,000 have died in fighting since 1990.
India said that it would be filing a complaint against Pakistan. They also will decide soon whether or not to continue their cease-fire against rebels in the embattled state. A cease-fire has been in place for three months.
The anti-aircraft fire may have damaged one of the planes, but there were no confirmed reports of damage. The last such incident to have taken place was in 1999 and featured a Pakistani plane being shot down. Pakistan denied any infringement at the time.

Africa

MALI – Members of the embattled World Bank and International Monetary Fund arrived in Bamako, Mali in an attempt to show African nations that both organizations are willing to do more than manage from afar.
Protestors called policies of both groups "economic circumcision."
World Bank President James Wolfen-sohn and International Monetary Fund Managing Director Horst Kochler arrived in Mali yesterday and plan to visit Nigeria, Tanzania and kenya.
Both the Work Bank and IMF have promised to try to do more for the struggling continent which has witnessed a sudden and steep social decline over the past few years, crushing any hopes for a serious rebound by Africa. Wars have broken out across the formerly colonized area, and disease, especially AIDS, run rampant, replacing hunger in the public's eye as Africa's biggest problem.
The World Bank has contributed $500 million to fight the incurable disease over a three year period, but some are wondering if that is simply too little, too late. Leaders from Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Gabon, Ghana, Madagascar, Mali, Niger, Senegal and Sierra Leone were present at the meetings, which some hope will be the first step in normalizing relations between the international monetary institutions and Africa.
Topics of discussion at the meeting beyond AIDS, include problems with governance, wars and widespread poverty.

ZIMBABWE – The government of Zimbabwe expelled two foreign journalists, one from the British Broadcasting Corporation and one from a South African weekly newspaper. The government accused British writer Joseph Winter for obtaining his work permit fraudulently.
Mr. Winter denies the charge. Both Mr. Winter and the other reporter have had work permits and worked within the country for several years. Critics of the government believe that the two were expelled for writing disparaging remarks about the government.
The British government has sent an ambassador to Zimbabwe to talk about why the journalists were expelled.

Information from Reuters News, New York Times and the BBC online was used in these reports.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1993 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Index Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Daily Collegian in 1914 and then the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a Massachusetts public service since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam Weber Editor-in-Chief
Sean Wilkinson Managing Editor
Andrew Bissell Business Manager
Jessica Bartlett Operations Manager
Adam Reposa Editorial Production Manager
Kelly Pelote Advertising Manager
Ryan Reynolds Advertising Production Manager
Tamara Monroe Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Features Editor
Maureen Manke Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager

Sarah Wroblewski Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majewski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pepper Classified Advertising Manager
Brent Sirakowski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargano Assistant Distribution Manager
Karla Bush, Assistant Diversity Editor

SEARS, A PEOPLE-FOCUSED FORTUNE 25 COMPANY, HAS BEEN REINVENTING RETAIL SINCE THE 1880S.

Our outstanding career development programs and our highly supportive culture can put you on the fast track while preparing you for long-term success. To learn about our Retail Executive Development Training Program, our career opportunities in Accounting, Asset Protection, Credit Services, Information Technology, Internal Audit and Logistics, visit us at www.sears.com or send your resume to:

Sears, Roebuck & Company
3333 Beverly Road D4-171A
Hoffman Estates, IL 60179

CAREERS WITH SEARS
www.sears.com

Think you know
Sears.
think again.

■ PARK

continued from page 1

To call a referendum on the additional $1 million of funding for the parking garage, five percent of Amherst's registered voters must sign a petition. That means 998 people of the 19,950 registered to vote in November's presidential election are needed to force the vote.
"This has been razor thin all the way through," said Root. "If 24 people had gone from the 'yes' to the 'no' column [at the Town Meeting], then this would have gone no further."
Vincent O'Connor of 179 Summer St., one of the people collecting signatures, did not express optimism for a potential referendum vote, but felt that the all people of Amherst should have a voice in the matter.
"I think 114 out of the population of Amherst is a very, very small percentage," O'Connor told the Daily Hampshire Gazette. "I don't think [the referendum] is going to change things frankly, but if it does, isn't that fair?"
Root used two different examples – that of the recent parking garage built at Smith College and the proposed parking facility at Fenway Park - to explain why the proposed Amherst facility would simply be too expensive for residents.
Currently, there are 190 parking spaces in the Boltwood Walk area. The parking garage would add 80 new spots underground, according to Root. However, in adding these spots, 20 existing spots would be eliminated for a net total of 60 new parking spots in downtown Amherst. Considering the $5.4 million cost, the spots average out to approximately $90,000 each.
Root said that Smith College recently constructed a 352-space parking garage for $5.7 million or $16,000 per space.
"That's a 600 percent difference per spot," Root said.
Root then made a comparison to a proposed parking facility in the Fenway Park area, in the heart of downtown Boston. The hypothetical cost for that facility would be $30,000 per spot.
"It [the Amherst parking garage] ain't worth the money," said Root. "That total will make each of those spaces the most expensive spaces at least in Western Massachusetts, and possibly in the history of Massachusetts."
If the signature drive is successful, the Select Board has ten days from the petition filing to call a special election on the parking garage issue, which then must be held within 14 days of the call. In this hypothetical special election, voters would face an almost identical question to that approved Thursday at the Town Meeting. The time frame and Amherst town law exclude attaching the parking garage referendum question to the annual April election ballot.
"I believe that the law requires it [the parking garage] to be a separate referendum," Root said, referring to the Representative Town Meeting Act.
Root expressed optimism that the petitioners would be able to collect enough signatures by Friday's deadline and force a referendum vote.
Long time proponents of the garage see the current petition drive as a further legal delay to an already overdue project.
"This is part of the on-going strategy to wear down the reasonable people who support the garage with endless votes and litigation," Carl Seppala, Select Board member, told the Gazette. Seppala warned that further delays would only result in increased costs for the town. "The town will have spent $1.3 million [including borrowing costs] and will only have obtained a land-locked dirt parking lot," said Seppala. "I would hope that reasonable people would not even sign the petition."
In Feb. of 1998, garage opponents did force a referendum on the issue. They needed 20 percent of registered voters or 3,156 people to overturn the 1997 Town Meeting vote, which approved the initial money. They received only 1,716 votes, while 1,811 people voted in favor of the parking garage. Root was quick to point out though, that the 1,716 votes represented 49 percent of those cast.

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this article.

News Meeting

There will be a mandatory news meeting today at 6 p.m. in the Collegian office. All new and current writers should attend. Any questions, call Adam at 545-4794

Getting to the point - literally

By Andre Vriesman
OSU Daily Barometer (Oregon State U.)

(U-WIRE) CORVALLIS, Ore. - David Kailin believes that the power to heal often lies in a very thin needle.
Kailin, acupuncturist at Oregon State University Student Health Services, delivered his lecture "Integration of Acupuncture in American Medicine" Wednesday in the Memorial Union.
Used for thousands of years in China, acupuncture is becoming an accepted method of treatment for ailments ranging from migraine headaches to back pain and the common cold, Kailin said.
Kailin, a licensed acupuncturist, has studied Chinese medicine for 32 years and practiced acupuncture since 1978. He has practiced in Corvallis for the past six years, and at Student Health Services for three years.
"Acupuncture is gradually being integrated into our culture. It doesn't happen overnight," Kailin said. "It is one tool among many tools."
Acupuncture is the insertion of thin, sterile steel needles under the skin, which helps to promote the flow of energy throughout the body. According to Kailin, acupuncture draws on the body's ability to heal itself.
"One seeks to balance the body, to make harmony so one might heal themself," Kailin said.
Kailin said that acupuncture has not always been accepted in Western medicine, but it has been growing in popularity since the 1970s. According to Kailin, 38 states currently allow non-medical doctors to practice acupuncture with a license.
And in the past, fewer people shared Kailin's views on healing.
"I would find people who were absolutely hostile toward me because I practiced Chinese medicine," Kailin said.
But scientific research has shown acupuncture to have significant medical effects. Both the National Institutes of Health and World Health Organization have recognized acupuncture as an effective method of treatment for many disorders, including chronic pain, headache, arthritis and asthma.
"Acupuncture can indeed be used to stimulate the immune system," Kailin said.
Kailin practices many forms of acupuncture, including electro-acupuncture - the use of electrical current to stimulate healing, and acupressure.
"You feel a very light needle prick, and then a very tired muscle feeling," Kailin said. "That's what you're going for."
Kailin also practices the techniques of "coining" (gua-sha) and "cupping." Coining is a dermal friction technique used to move blood. Cupping, the application of suction cups to acupuncture loci, serves a similar purpose. Both are used to deliver stagnant blood in muscle meridians, stimulating energy. Kailin also recommends dietary therapy and occasionally, herbal medicines to his patients.
"My practice at student health is limited to students," Kailin said. "I see some very dedicated athletes and ordinary students with very ordinary problems."
Kailin offers acupuncture treatments at SHS for $40 per treatment.

X's daughter remembers father at Columbia

By Shira Schoenberg
Columbia Daily Spectator (Columbia U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK - In a speech delivered Sunday to a packed audience in Barnard College's Lehrak Gymnasium, Attallah Shabazz demonstrated that she is more than the oldest of African-American civil rights activist Malcolm X's six daughters.
Shabazz is also a film producer, director, writer, lecturer, motivational speaker, co-founder of a motivational theater group called Nucleus, and president of Prism International, an organization dedicated to building understanding between cultural groups.
Her speech commemorated Malcolm X's last public address, which also took place in the Lehrak Gymnasium, exactly 36 years ago, only three days before the civil rights leader was assassinated.
After introductions by Ebony Burnside, BC '01, Barnard College President Judith Shapiro, Professor Thulani Davis, BC '70, Director of the Institute for Research in African American Studies Manning Marable, and movie and audio clips of Malcolm X's speeches, Shabazz spoke to the 950 audience members in the gymnasium and to the 300 people viewing a simulcast in an upstairs room of Barnard Hall.
Shabazz spoke confidently to the large crowd, often stopping to ask the audience if it understood her points. Her rapport with the audience was obvious through her joking and through the standing ovation she received after her speech concluded.
Shabazz presented a more personal side of Malcolm X, calling him her "first buddy," a free-thinking father who treated her to ice cream to celebrate high test scores and who treated her with dignity, even when she was a child.
She also spoke of her father's passion, emphasizing that it was "love that put him in the forefront, not hate." She knew him as the father who spent his "everyday life being dedicated to people" and refusing to alter his lifestyle out of fear.
Shabazz stressed that her father's philosophy came not only from him, but also from those around him. Like her father, Shabazz said, she is the product of a long lineage of ancestors with distinguished histories.
She told the audience that her father had taught her that "we are all descendants of a continuum" and therefore should not judge each other based on lineage.
To illustrate her point, Shabazz told audience members to introduce themselves to the people whom they were sitting next to.
"By the power invested in me, I now pronounce you all brothers and sisters," she said afterwards.
Shabazz also challenged listeners to embrace their ethnic backgrounds fully. "Find that bounty (of cultural heritage) and claim it because it's already yours. Whoever you want to be, dare to be it," she said. "If you descend from different groups, you are not one-quarter this and one-quarter that; you are 100 percent of each."
Attendees cited a variety of reasons for attending the lecture.
Sheila Garden, a member of the Marxist-humanist organization News and Letters, said she attended Shabazz's lecture because she regards Malcolm X as a "crucial freedom fighter." Jamie Ford, a first-year GSAS student, said she admires Malcolm X because of "his courage to say what he thought and not to filter his perspectives in fear of what other people thought of him."

THINGS TO DO:
• GO TO CLASS
• PLAY VIDEO GAMES
• WORKOUT
• SEE A MOVIE

WHAT COULD YOU DO...
IF YOU WERE DONE WITH WORK BY 9AM ??

THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR STUDENTS TO DELIVER NEWSPAPERS MONDAY THRU FRIDAY
INTERESTED: CALL SHAWN @ 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT
Applicants Must Have Own Car

University Productions and Concerts
Attention!
Freshman&Sophmores
Help Organize the Spring Concert!
Positions Available
Join UPC
Graphic Designers needed
Bring the concerts to UMASS!

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Dale Earnhardt: remembering a hero

He was possibly the most intense man in sports. He was dominant, cocky and passionate. Most of all, he was one hundred percent race car driver.

From Dale Earnhardt's early upbringing in Kannapolis, N.C. to his untimely death at Daytona International Speedway on Sunday, he ate, slept and breathed racing.

He burst on to the NASCAR scene in 1979, quickly earning a reputation as a guy who would do anything to win. This reputation followed him throughout his career, bringing him seven Winston Cup points championships, a tie with Richard Petty for the most of all time.

He was "Ironhead," "The Intimidator" and "The Dominator," three nicknames which personified his characteristics on the race track. Earnhardt was tremendously opposed to restrictor plate racing, saying it was "for sissies."

But his hard-driving tactics drove many fans to hate him, as he would often use those tactics to snatch victory away from a fan's favorite driver. Despite the hatred, all fans loved to watch him and most respected him as one of the greatest racers they would ever see.

NASCAR has had its share of tragedies over the last year, but the circuit had not suffered a death in a race in quite some time, let alone anyone as famous.

Earnhardt was the most dominant driver in the association, and has been likened to Michael Jordan and Tiger Woods, not only due to his skill level, but also because of his role as an icon.

Many moments exemplify Earnhardt – his pass of Cale Yarborough on the grass, his bump of Terry Labonte at Bristol – but he will be remembered most for beating his tough luck by winning his first Daytona 500 in 1998. He had lost the race in every way, from blown tires to accidents, and when it seemed he would never win the "Great American Race," he finally beat the monster. Upon the conclusion, every pit crew and driver came out to congratulate the formerly snake-bitten champion.

It looked like he was in position to win his second race on Sunday, but one last time, the race would get the best of him. As he careened toward the wall at approximately 180 mph, Earnhardt went out protecting his own, allowing two men who drove for his race team to duke it out for the win.

This selflessness showed a different side of Dale Earnhardt. The man who many said "would drive his mother into the wall if it meant winning" for once was being unselfish, essentially setting a pick for the two racers in front of him – his son Dale Jr. and a man who was like a brother to him, Michael Waltrip. It was at that moment that most racing fans made their peace with Dale Earnhardt, only to find that he would die a few seconds later.

The most important aspect of Earnhardt is that he was a symbol, the hero that NASCAR needed as Richard Petty's career was coming to a close. He turned the sport into a major business, and without him, NASCAR would not have caught on as a major fan attraction.

He gave the sport an attitude, a personality that people could relate to. Earnhardt paved the way for those who followed him, and he brought the sport national attention.

Whether fans loved him or hated him, they will certainly miss Dale Earnhardt.

No more Napster? Stop whining.

DAVID TROUPES

We are – and I say this will full awareness of my own implication in the problem – a generation of moochers. Of slackers. Every last Pearl Jam-listening, suburb-dwelling, car-access-having, irony-toting one of us has grown up in a state of prolonged childhood by which we have been sheltered from much of the colder truths of life. (I trust that my generalization here will be forgiven – those of you who feel yourselves free of such economic privilege may count yourself free of my accusations, for what that is worth.) We are the (largely) white bourgeoisie, and we have been raised in an environment of gratification. This is not to say immediate gratification: sometimes we have to wait a year and a half until graduation for our first used car, and sometimes we have to work at after-school jobs to make available the sort of disposable income we so love to drop in the pockets of the local movie theater or Newbury Comics. The very disposability of that income, however, illustrates this privilege.

On what do we blame this? General American prosperity? Bottomless toy chests are an excellent formula for producing spoiled children; or, to appease those defensive readers who might narrow their eyes with an indignant "not me," nearly bottomless toy chests produce mostly spoiled children. And you can continue to dilute that by degrees if you choose, but the underlying accusation remains the same: we have grown up in a land of plenty, and plenty is what we expect. If not now, then soon.

Mix, now, if you will, this materialistic status quo with our generational roots. I don't know about you all, but my parents are what I lovingly refer to as reformed hippies; and I don't mean to say that they sold out to the system, or anything so nauseatingly Gen-X, but that, at some point during their mid-twenties they encountered real life, got jobs, and had to leave the task of filling the world with love to someone else.

That culture, however, lives on in various aspects of our society. "Free love, man. Free love. Groovy." It's only a cliche because of its universality (within the sphere of recent American history, anyway), and even if the hippies were but a small, if noisy (and smelly) demographic, their legacy has created a very real foundation of truth for that recent past we seem so eager to dismiss with a self-conscious giggle. We're a generation of wanters raised by a generation of givers (somewhere in there are the yuppies, the generation of takers), and what does your average teen spend more time wanting than anything else? ...Besides that?

Music.

And so I reach my point. Here we have an age bracket used to having its desires fulfilled with a minimum of personal expenditure, acting under the influence of a society flavored heavily with ideals of personal freedom and community, and yet which lives (as can only be expected in such a proudly capitalist nation) in a land of extreme commercialization. And nowhere else has this conflict been so illustrated as in the issues raised by Napster.

I'm sorry for having to make you read that word again – I know I'm sick of it. I'll make my point quickly: Napster is the perfect consummation of one half of our society's composition – the "Free Love" half – and the perfect antagonist to the other half – the capitalist, commercialized half.

Some kid wants a song, so he fires up Napster and gets himself that song. Groovy, man. Free music. You can swap whole albums, live bootlegs and rarities and that disc of pop ditties you'd never plunk down actual cash for; it's like one nation-wide passing of the hash pipe. Far out. The internet was, before the advent of banner ads and bankruptcy-bound dot-coms, something of a newborn utopia, a bustling marketplace where shop owners maintained their booths out of their own pocket and everything was about the free trade of information, and that image has largely stuck around, despite the internet's rapid commercialization.

So what could be more expressive of that freedom and sense of community than a nation-wide network of music appreciators sharing their collections, sticking it to the Strawberries and Sam Goodies out there?

The problem, of course, and this cannot be stressed enough, is that they're also sticking it to the artists that produce the music. I hear people say things like "People should have access to free music" as if this music were mined in pure form out of the ground, and therefore we could claim some sort of natural right to its collective ownership. They speak as if music always were meant to be free, and that Napster is somehow righting an old wrong.

Back in the real world, however, an album is an enormous undertaking, and anyone dreamt and selfish enough to believe that they have the right to enjoy the fruits of someone else's labor without due compensation has been raised with all the wrong inclinations about fairness and respect. No one would ever expect a movie company to produce a film and then hold free viewings for anyone interested, and no one would expect a writer to produce a novel and then hand the manuscript off, free of charge, to be photocopied for anyone interested.

So why, then, do we expect music companies and the artists that represent them to tolerate the free distribution of the music to which they have the rights? The answer is simple: convenience. It's an easy crime to get away with. It's hard to feel guilty over the click of a few buttons. The simplicity of using Napster, however, is no reflection on the gravity of its misuse.

We've heard the argument that the contracts that bands have to sign in order to get a record deal are massively exploitative, and that, until a band has proven itself commercially viable and can renegotiate, the record company stands to make much more than the band through its sales. This is certainly true, and it's unfortunate that so many upstart bands are abused in this fashion, but bypassing both the record company and the band through Napster does nothing to help the band; if anything the threat of this music-swapping only makes the record companies guard their interests even more jealously.

We've also heard the argument that Napster helps otherwise unheard-of bands get exposure in a manner charmingly similar to more traditional underground tape-swapping systems. This is also certainly true, and I think that the potential of the sort of technology that Napster represents is enormous, and could revolutionize the music industry, pushing it towards a more egalitarian state. In its current misguided application, however, this technology takes the choice of distribution out of the hands of those with a legal right to the music, and puts it in the hands of any kid with a CD-to-mp3 ripping program.

So what's to be done, then? Unfortunately, the issue is and will be, dictated by the technology, which is still emerging bit by bit. We cannot return distribution control to the artists and their labels until some way to prevent the translation of CD's into mp3's is developed, of course; it will be only be a matter of months until that system is circumvented by a new technology. And so on.

Likewise, the recent court decision against Napster is hardly reason for record companies to relax; other programs have already sprung up to take its place, and more will follow those, and any hope of a permanent solution to the issue of emerging technology seems patently foolish.

The larger issue to be resolved, then, and I must admit not to harboring much hope of its resolution in the at-all near future, is one of our own selfishness and hypocrisy. We claim to be the land of the free, and yet we bypass other people's freedoms in order to save ourselves money. We claim to belong to a community of music appreciators, and yet we act without thought for those who form the foundation of that community: the artists who toil away at their craft, driven not, we hope, solely by material desire, but deserving all the same everything to which the success of their art entitles them.

David Troupes is a Collegian staff member.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBEJ
www.monkey-box.net
"GOD, IF YOU'RE UP THERE, PLEASE MAKE ME FATTER. ALL I WANT IS TO BE A SUMO WRESTLER. PLEASE, GOD, HELP ME." © 2001

Write for Ed/Op!

Dropping a bomb

SETH KOENIG

Time was becoming of the essence. I had been assigned every other Monday to write columns for the Collegian, and I – being out of practice – hadn't thought of anything to write about just a half a week away from deadline.

"Every other Monday," you ponder for a moment. "But it's Tuesday."

"Don't interrupt my genius with details," I snap in return. "I'm trying to put together a column here!"

So there I sat, in the parking lot of Wolfie's Restaurant in South Deerfield, waiting for my pal "Ace" to show up (yes, that's really his name) and low and behold, some informative radio personality's co-host responded in step with my own. "We bombed Iraq? Why?"

Egads! What perfect timing! I'll write about that! ...although I still didn't know why we did it.

Out of what seemed to be absolutely nowhere, the United States government figured that we should abruptly begin attacking another country – granted, it was a country that we had taken great pains to vilify in the past decade, but still. On the surface, our lashing out seemed to be unprovoked.

My first thought was that it was a hereditary thing, like penis size or hair color. In addition to looking like a stupid version of his father, current President George W. X. Y. Z. Bush had received the "bombing Iraq" gene from his dad, former President George Herbert Walker Bush.

Unlike when daddy bombed Iraq, though, we didn't see this most recent attack coming from a mile away. Right or wrong, the whole Gulf War thing could be followed by the average joe: Bad Iraqi dictator guy tries to occupy Kuwait, which happens to have a lot to do with our American gas prices, and so we went to fight.

On a side note, I seem to recall gas prices being much cheaper when Saddam Hussein was trying to take over Kuwait – maybe we should just let him have it. Then we might be able to fill up our cars for less than a 20-spot.

Anyway, I digress. I obviously know very little about foreign affairs and realize that there were very likely some extremely good reasons for bombing Iraq back in 1991, when I was in middle school.

At the time, my main concern was whether or not Dawn Allard liked me-liked me or just liked me, and if our military left like bombing the bejesus out of somebody, then that was fine by me.

This time around, I'm pretty confident that Dawn Allard and the rest of the female gender are completely uninterested in me, and therefore I have more time to devote to figuring out why we decided to bomb Iraq.

From what I've been able to gather in about four minutes of intense, detailed research, the reason we released the proverbial hounds is because the Iraqi jets were in airspace they shouldn't have been flying around in.

I have to assume we told them several times to move, but by paragraph three of my Boston Globe article on the subject, my attention had turned to a delicious Bruegger's bagel and cream cheese.

So after asking them to fly somewhere else extremely politely, we probably had no other option but to attack ruthlessly. Hey, who am I to make difficult "American security" type decisions? Obviously our way of life was severely threatened and the only way we could protect it was a bombing – one that cleared out a good handful of civilians, it turns out.

Despite my lack of expertise in foreign affairs, I will make this important observation: Did you ever notice that television advertisements and model TV's in furniture displays always have hot air balloons on them? Who watches hot air balloons all day on television? Am I missing some pop culture development, here?

If I'm not mistaken, this is the part of the column wherein you, the ever-so-informed Collegian reader becomes incensed. Why, exactly, you have become incensed is debatable. Perhaps you think I have made light of an extremely serious issue and light-heartedness is a crime punishable by death in your eyes. Perhaps you have read every word of this column literally because you are an absolute moron, and you don't think I know that the reason hot air balloons are featured on television advertisements is to display the vivid color translation in the product in question.

Of course, you could just be incensed that we're bombing Iraq for what seems to be a shaky reasoning, or you could be incensed that the Iraqi planes had the nerve to fly where they weren't supposed to.

If none of these reasons incenses you, then you'll think of something on your own time, because it's your duty as a Collegian reader to have a very fragile temper and take everything the wrong way. In any case, send your angry letter about how much of a horrible creep I am to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, with "Seth is a horrible creep" as the subject line.

I need a bagel after that exhausting effort of not making any real point and insulting an entire readership...

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

Shaggy LP delivers

By Kurt Pilecky
Collegian Staff

SHAGGY
Hotshot
MCA Records

After watching Shaggy in his new video "It Wasn't Me," all decked out in his ping-like purple smoking jacket, surrounded by well-endowed women, it's easy to tell he is the man. But it's not all image. Much like Popov Vodka and Orange Juice, his new album Hotshot is a classic mix. Is this case, the mix is reggae, R&B and pop, and the result is the perfect musical drink: neither too watered down nor too strong.

The album – the Jamaican born Shaggy's fourth – actually isn't all that new. It was released late last summer, but didn't attract all that much mainstream attention until a radio DJ in Hawaii downloaded "It Wasn't Me" off Napster and gave it radio play before it was even released as a single. The song caught fire there before it was released to radio nationwide, where it immediately blew up. Shaggy's tribute to adultery – the track features the vocals of Caribbean singer RikRok – and provides some serious reggae bump along with its comical lyrics. While "It Wasn't Me" has deservedly reached a high level in the pop music stratosphere, Hotshot is by no means a one song album.

It takes some tact to be able to give a topic like adultery a humorous vibe. But Shaggy's got it. His easy going and carefree persona is hard not to like. And it comes across well in tracks like "Hope," an uplifting track with a rapid-fire reggae pop beat, in which Shaggy tells his life story and pays tribute "Dear Mama" style to his childhood and mother. The motivational speaker section of Hotshot continues into the next track, "Keep'n It Real." Although the lyrics may be a bit trite: "Even if you're blue, there's always someone who has it worse than you; Not everything you want is everything you need, the standard of society is motivated by greed." The song still works both lyrically, with fun, inviting lyrics that are sometimes hard to understand with Shaggy's accent) and musically, with a pleasant and funky beat. The same is true for the entire album.

Shaggy has always been known for his best content being remixes and remakes of old songs, ("Bombastic" which sampled Marvin Gay's "What's Goin On", and "Piece of My Heart," a remake of the Janis Joplin song of the same title) and collaborations with other artists ("That Girl" with Maxi Priest). The same holds true with his latest effort. A Jackson 5 sample is featured in the Terry Lewis and Jimmy Jam produced "Dance and Shout", the album's most popish moment. "Angel" samples "The Joker" from The Steve Miller Band, and is a perfect representation of the album: an infectious, inviting sample, combined with original and skillful wordplay. "Luv Me Luv Me," a remix of Shaggy's radio hit of the same name, features Shaggy collaborating with the Mariah Carey-like Samantha Cole, and samples Candyman's "Knockin Boots." With all of the sampling, it's obvious Shaggy isn't begging for credibility, but he is begging to provide some funky grooves, and he does that oh so well.

From start to finish each song on Hot Shot has its own feel and purpose. From the lyrically driven, space-age sounding title track "Hot Shot," to the old school R&B flavored "Lonely Lover," to the Latin vibe in "China Bonita," this album is packed with a variety of sounds that prevents it from ever coming close to becoming stale. Couple that with the pop classics "It Wasn't Me" and "Angel," and Hotshot hits on so many levels. It is a truly original, and just plain fun album that will undoubtedly appeal to a vast array of musical tastes.

BNL: UMass' favorite Canadians

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Steven Page and Ed Robertson, entertaining the masses.

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

"I once knew a girl with ridiculous ass, she went to UMass and passed every class."

Do you have ridiculous ass? That's right, The Barenaked Ladies came to the Mullins Center on Friday to entertain a sold out audience and made that the question of the night. Despite the weakness of their most recent CD Maroon (2000), BNL came to Amherst with best intentions to warm up a cold night in February.

The Canadian band stepped onto the stage around 8:30 p.m. The opening song, "Too Little Too Late," was selected off their newest CD. In prelude to "Alcohol" from their breakthrough album Stunt (1998). The song was never released as a single to radio stations, but was nonetheless popular among the crowd of college students and locals in attendance.

Lead singers Ed Robertson and Steven Page chatted up with each other between songs. After Ed Robertson free-styled about UMass, as previously quoted, Steven Page continued to dance around the stage and pop out from different props. The stage was decorated with blow-up animals that cover their new album, which were similar to that of circus. With boxes in random spots on the stage and balloons floating above, BNL took full opportunity to have fun while they worked. Ed Robertson even took the time to step into the audience and perform a guitar solo with the fans.

When the Barenaked Ladies put on a show, they do a lot more than just sing to the audience; they play with the audience. Keyboardist Kevin Hearn performed a small solo between songs, playing the theme song of Darth Vader and singing about the Star Wars nemesis. In the beginning notes of the tune, the crowd went nuts for the cover. Later, as the Canucks went for a water and smoke break as seen from the screens, drummer Tyler Stewart performed a solo with the strict caveat that it was NOT A DRUM SOLO.

The band continued to play popular songs from Stunt and Live Rock Spectacle (1997) throughout the night. During the performance of "Pinch Me," a fan felt the need to give the band a pair of silver panties in response to the lyric, "I just made you say underwear." Robertson responded by hanging the panties off the end of his guitar. Songs such as "Brian Wilson," "Jane," "The Old Apartment" and "Life in a Nutshell" kept the crowd dancing and singing along. Toward the end of the hour and a half show, Page and Robertson pulled out their acoustic guitars and opened notes to perhaps their most famous song, "If I Had a Million Dollars." The crowd was over the top with excitement and the usual handfuls of macaroni went flying through the crowd. BNL encouraged their fans to sing along to the song that's played at every single show.

The band started the close of the show with a medley of songs by such artists as Britney Spears, DMX and Biz Markie. Their covers of "Oops, I did it again," "Up in here" and "Just a friend" had everyone nuts. The final song was "Call and Answer," the last single released from Stunt. The band waved to the crowd and exited the stage, but after chants for worship BNL returned to the stage for an encore. The last two songs they performed at Mullins were "Light Up My Room" a beautiful track from Stunt and the appropriate "Go Home" off Maroon.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

A Crooning Steven Page.

Strength, grace, beauty intertwine under Garth Fagan

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Sharon Skepple and Steve Humphrey perform "Nkanyit."

By Rebecca Bromberg
Collegian Correspondent

GARTH FAGAN DANCE
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
February 15

Last Thursday, the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall was host to a performance by the renowned company, Garth Fagan Dance. The show displayed the immense talent of twelve dancers, four of who are Bessie Award winners (New York Performance Awards), in addition to a fifth Bessie winner, Garth Fagan himself. Mr. Fagan, the company's founder and artistic director, is best known for his choreography for the musical "The Lion King," which received both critical acclaim and heaps of awards, including the 1998 Tony Award for Best Choreography. Mr. Fagan has trained his dancers in Fagan Technique, complete with its own dance vocabulary.

The incorporation of many dance genres into Mr. Fagan's choreography, namely Afro-Caribbean, ballet technique, and modern dance, along with the use of a wide variety of music, including jazz and African, resulted in an original, diverse performance. This was made all the more impressive by the beautifully strong company members.

The first piece of the performance, titled "Prelude: Discipline is Freedom," began in a dance class setting, with motifs of movement common to a modern warm-up, set to jazz music. Immediately striking were the sustained balances in difficult poses, often with legs extended amazingly high, as well as the precision of the dancers in executing sharp, rapid arm movements. The second section yielded freer movement to Afro-Caribbean music, with beautiful transitions between low, to the ground African dance and elevated ballet technique. These difficult transitions seemed remarkably second nature to the dancers.

"Easter Freeway Processional" was next, with dancers costumed as individuals from different time periods. The considerable ability of the dancers was again displayed through static moments of bold postures, as well as in a series of leaps across the stage, each more impossibly high than the previous one. Also noteworthy was a sequence in which the dancers posed together in the back center stage, and changed their configurations with each other, creating the effect of a morphing image.

"Trips and Taste" followed, with lively jazz by Wynton Marsalis. There were once again controlled, slow moments, transitioning quickly into free and loose-jointed, arm, leg and head-wagging movement. The latter of these two styles was much more expressive of the brilliant accompaniment. In contrast, the sustained movement bordered on ignoring the music altogether, and seemed to interfere with the momentum and fluidity of the piece. The ending, however, was spectacularly dynamic and finished in a flash of music, light, and a great composition of poses by the dancers.

Closing the performance was "Wozu" (Zulu for "come"), which began with a solo section, "Come...Prepared." While the woman performing was impressively limber as well as controlled, there was little expression of the music. Next was duet titled "Come...Together," in which a couple starting in an intertwined pose conveyed the different aspects of a relationship, among them joy, tension, and comfort. "Come...Forced Voyage" created a jungle atmosphere with its intense music and mottled lighting. Here, intertwined pairs of dancers created interesting shapes by taking advantage of their exceptional strength. The moving finale, "Come...Celebration," received an overwhelming response from the packed house. The African-influenced movement, music and costumes brought a refreshing brightness to the stage. The music was expressed well through the choreography in this section, with groups of dancers weaving through others as the vocals swirled around the beat of the drums.

While the Garth Fagan Dance concert had a handful of weak moments, the members of the company are undisputedly accomplished. The opening and closing works in the performance by Mr. Fagan displayed the best incorporation of his meticulously trained dancers into his choreography. It was in these pieces that either the static moments of held poses had purpose, or the dancers were allowed to move with a fluidity only their strength could articulate.

Hampden Gallery

space relativity explored

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

If you could see all of your memories, all at once, what would it look like? What is the color of psychological space? Sarah Walker envisions what this inner landscape of the mind might look like in her new body of paintings entitled "Descending Order." The display, called "Intertwined/ Ever Collapsing," was at the Hampden Gallery, located in Southwest.

Walker, a Boston-based artist and a teacher at Worcester's Clark University, is a painter of abstractions. This particular body of work has been ongoing for a decade. It stems from her childhood memories of a close relative who had an obsessive-compulsive hoarding disorder. "Objects can be information, and she didn't have the mental space for all this information," Walker remembered. So this relative kept all of the many objects with memories attached to them in the house, in complex organizational systems.

"I used to get a real thrill out of it," said the artist, "because I would go there and see the memories of the past summer, on a shelf behind this summer's memories." It is this memory stacked upon memory that Walker captures in her art. Each work carries layer upon layer of acrylic paint, but all layers can be seen at once, "seeing everything simultaneously, the way memory works."

This new "Descending Order" series tries to reconcile Walker's work with psychological space and the emergent territory of cyberspace. The normally disparate worlds of the natural and the synthetic come together. But, can these worlds combine in a harmonious way? "Absolutely," said the artist, "especially for people 20-something and younger, who probably aren't aware that they live in a world of screens, television and especially computer. But, I'm on the cusp, I can see in."

In this marriage of the actual and the virtual, Walker's acrylic paint is without brushstrokes, which are the telltale mark of a human hand. This way, it looks as if either nature or technology created it, she explained. Her earlier work on the landscape of memory feeds this body of work. An individual's memory is much like the "collective unconscious of cyberspace." Both contain what Walker described as "maximum information density," where all information is packed in, but individual pieces can also be seen.

There are references to science here, too. For instance, many of the paintings look like snapshots of the solar system. This is not coincidence. Pictures of the solar system also have this maximum information density. You can stand back and take it all in at once, or you can zoom in and focus in one particular piece. But, taker a look closer, and you will inevitably find that that small piece contains an innumerable amount of information as well.

Walker's work is the same way. You can spend hours examining one spot, picking out and looking at the tiny pieces of information, each fighting for your attention. But, step back, and there is a larger work to take in. Your attention is pulled from the miniscule and into the big picture, and then back again. The information is overwhelming, but you can also absorb it all at once. Along with references to the vastness of nature that is represented by space, Walker alluded to the minutiae of nature. There are large objects, dominating many of the paintings by virtue of their size, which look to be cells. Spiraling strands of a DNA-like figure also loom large in the foreground. Again, Walker pictures the duality of our existence. She shows that the measureless expanse and the microscopic can coexist in the same time and space of our collective past, present and future reality.

Currently, Walker is developing new work with some help from her students at Clark. She wants to capture the explosion screen images from certain video games, and use them in her work. It will be another use of virtual territory, to connect with the human. Her "Descending Order" series will be traveling to Boston next, and will be on display at the Lillian Immig Gallery, at Emmanuel College, from Feb. 8 to April 5.

6 Gig leads local metal acts into The Skybox

The Skybox gets loud again tonight when 6 Gig headline a show of stellar regional hard rock.

Hailing from Portland, Maine, 6 Gig have had great success with their debut album, Tincan Experiment. A solid hard-rock sound with overtones of nu-metal, the band's live shows and fantastic single "Hit The Ground" have propelled them from the underground of northern New England to headlining gigs in clubs all over the Northeast. For the five-dollar admission fee, this is a band that's well worth seeing while they're still small.

Of course, they aren't the only band on the bill. C-60 out of Boston has been tearing up a rampage in the big city and everywhere else they play, and with good reason. Devastating live shows (singer Keith Smith was out of action for a while because he tore his abs on stage) and the manic intensity of their self-titled album earned the group an Indie deal, a rabid following and an almost incomprehensible 6 Boston Music Awards nominations this year.

C-60 is set to snag some awards in the categories of Debut Album (Indie Label), Single (Indie Label), Song (Indie Label), Male Vocalist (Indie Label), New Rock Band (Indie Label), and, a good reason to come to the Skybox as any, Club Band (Best Live Show). This is a band going places.

The opening act tonight probably wouldn't be on any show other than this. Seventeen are also up for their share of BMAs, for Album (Indie Label), Single (Indie Label), Rock Band (Indie Label), and Club Band (Best Live Show). Their album Bikini Pie Fight has been gaining in popularity, and their shameless, AC/DC-like lyrics and intense speedrock sound have only endeared them to the legions of those who like their music fast and filled with testosterone. This is their second Skybox appearance, and they wowed the crowd last time, and this show is shaping up to be little different.

The doors open at 7:30 p.m. and the show's on at 8:00. Get there early, and treat yourself to some of the best that the hard rock scene in New England has to offer.

– Rob Schulze

COURTESY BOBBY NEWMAN

6 Gig, headlining a night of regional metal at the Skybox.

DAVE MATTHEWS BAND CONTEST

New album Everyday in stores February 27, 2001

The first two people to email DMB_CD@hotmail.com with the correct answers to the two trivia questions will win a copy of Everyday. Please include your full name and mailing address in your email.

Trivia Questions:

What was the bar that Dave worked at?

Who is the unofficial sixth member of the Dave Matthews Band that did not play on this record?

Good Luck!!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS
Sports Editor • Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

WE ARE THE CHAMPIONS

COURTESY MEGA RELATIONS

UMass' Andrea Kazanjian was a key member of the winning 400 free relay team in last weekend's Atlantic 10 Championship.

Minutewomen win first A-10 title

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

It would be an utter injustice to describe the feeling of success and pride felt by the Massachusetts swimming and diving team after capturing the Atlantic 10 Championship. So instead of someone making a futile attempt, let the words and accomplishments of the Minutewomen speak for themselves.

"Our whole team is so excited," said Becky Hunnewell.

"It was the most exciting high I've ever experienced," said Lauren Rowell.

"It's really exciting," said Christen Dexter.

After a year of "firsts," UMass accomplished the "first" it had set its sights on from the outset of this campaign: the program's first A-10 title.

"The whole year that was our goal, beating GW and winning A-10's," said Rowell.

From the very first meet of the season, a home win over New Hampshire, to the final weekend in Buffalo, "t-e-a-m" has spelled success for the Minutewomen.

Individual success has never been an issue with this team; unity and depth have been the keys to regular season success and they were both present to unlock the door to a conference title.

"The key to the week was team," said head coach Bob Newcomb.

The Maroon and White won a school-record-tying 10 meets this year, every win coming through a team effort. The same formula for success was used in the A-10 championships.

"All 16 swimmers and five divers scored, that has never been done before," Newcomb said.

Newcomb also noted that George Washington had won more individual events than the Minutewomen, but UMass took four of five relays and captured valuable points in every event.

Once again the depth of this Minutewomen squad proved to be too much for the rest of the A-10, but it was not only the swimmers in the pool who helped capture the programs first ever title, it was the UMass cheering section that helped to inspire the competitors and spur them on to victory.

"Not only was it the team that was swimming, but the rest of the team was there as well," Newcomb said.

Due to NCAA regulations, only a certain amount of swimmers are allowed to go on the trip to Buffalo, N.Y. for the A-10's. However, the mighty hand of the NCAA could not stop many of the other Minutewomen from showing up to support their teammates.

The unity of the Maroon and White was evident both in and around the pool over the weekend, as UMass showed the rest of the conference what it means to win as a team.

Although the A-10 title was captured through the success of the team, there were a few standout performances in upstate New York.

Hunnewell shined for the Minutewomen, winning the 200 back in a school record time of 2:03.61 and the 100 free in 52.91. Not only did she take first in both the events, she won the races within 2/3 minutes of each other.

When asked how she accomplished such a feat of athleticism she responded, "It was all adrenaline."

For her accomplishments over the weekend Hunnewell received Most Outstanding Performer of the Meet honors.

"It was the biggest shock of my life," said Hunnewell. "It is the best thing that has ever happened to me."

The junior also participated in the victorious 400 free relay team, which also featured fellow juniors Anne Dettloff and Andrea Kazanjian, as well as Molli Buckley.

Dexter, a freshman sensation from Centerville placed second in the 200 breast with a time 2:22.45.

Even with the individual accomplishments, the Minutewomen never lost sight of the team concept.

As Hunnewell put it "everyone stepped up," and every member of the team knew that there own performance was an integral part of a successful whole.

The Minutewomen set a goal at the beginning of the year; they reached that goal through hard work and team work. They may not be the high profile team at this University, but no other squad is more successful.

The words of an outsider will never do justice to the gravity of this team's accomplishments. Only the expressions of one of its own will outline the significance of this feat. Said coach Newcomb, "this was an amazing experience and it happened to a team that deserves it."

2001 A-10 Swimming & Diving Championships

WOMEN'S DIVISION

1. UMass - 719
2. George Washington - 694
3. St. Bonaventure - 529

MEN'S DIVISION

1. UMass - 848
2. St. Bonaventure - 661
3. George Washington - 478

Minutemen break seven school records

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team ventured up to Buffalo, N.Y. this weekend with one objective in mind – win the Atlantic 10 Championship for just the fourth time ever and the first since 1998.

This is exactly what the Minutemen did as they jumped out to a big lead during the first day of the three-day competition and never looked back. UMass finished with 848 points, 187 more than second place St. Bonaventure. Senior Billy Brown picked up two individual titles and was named Most Outstanding Performer.

Heading into the meet confidence was on the mind of the entire UMass squad and it did not disappoint head coach Russ Yarworth.

"All year we've been working on taking a positive mental approach and I think they really showed that today," said Yarworth.

This confidence was evident on the first night of competition as the Minutemen won four of the six events to open up a 63-point lead. Senior Chris Arsenault set the pace for UMass by winning the 200 yard Individual Medley with a school-record time of 1:50.91. He was followed by sophomores Justin Houck and Ryan Zaucha who finished second and third, respectively, to complete the sweep for the Minutemen.

Arsenault was also instrumental for the Minutemen in the night's two relay events. He combined with fellow senior Mike Sabina, junior Ryan Fisher and sophomore Chad Arnold to take the 200 freestyle relay in a school record time of 1:21.49. Arsenault, Houck, Fisher and senior Billy Brown combined to finish second in the 400 medley relay with a time of 3:22.11, setting another school record in the process.

A pair of Minutemen picked up its first ever A-10 title to round out the first night winners. After setting a school and A-10 Championships record in his preliminary round with a time of 20.29, Ryan Fisher won the 50 freestyle with a time of 20.58.

Sophomore Tommy Keane picked up his first A-10 title by taking the 500 freestyle, finishing in 4:31.24.

"It was really important, it gave us the confidence for the next two nights," said Keane. "To have the big lead it was more relaxing for us to swim, especially the freshmen."

The Minutemen did not take their foot off the gas on Friday as they pushed their lead to 138 points. UMass continued its impressive form by winning four events and setting three more school records.

UMass dominated in the 100 butterfly claiming the top four spots. Arsenault won the event with an A-10 and school record time of 48.41. He was followed by fellow senior Joe Martin, Arnold and freshman Conner Townsend to round out the top four.

"That's what you hope for going into a meet," said Yarworth. "I expected them to swim fast, but not like that."

The only other individual winner for the Minutemen was Brown who set a school record of 3:56.48 in winning the 400 Individual Medley. Later in the day Brown placed second in the 100 breaststroke with a NCAA consideration time of 55.98.

The Minutemen picked up their other two wins on the night in a pair of relays. Senior Mike Sabina, Martin, Fisher and Zaucha took the 200 medley relay, finishing in a school record time of 1:32.08. While in the 800 freestyle relay Rob Bellamy, Keane, Arnold and Arsenault notched a time of 6:44.01 to take that event.

Despite an almost insurmountable lead heading into the last day of competition, the Maroon and White showed no signs of letting up on Saturday as it once again dominated the competition. The Minutemen won four events on the final day of competition to move their total up to twelve for the Championships.

Brown won his fourth and final A-10 individual title by taking the 200 breaststroke with a time of 1:58.66. Brown's time was good enough for a school and A-10 record and is the fourth fastest in the country this year.

"Billy always swims better at the end of the year so we knew he'd have it today," said Yarworth. "I was really impressed with the way he swam all weekend."

Arsenault was just as impressive in the 100 freestyle as he won his sixth A-10 individual title with a time of 45.09, good enough for tenth in the country.

Townsend won his first ever A-10 title by taking the 200 butterfly with a time of 1:53.42. Finishing out the UMass winners was the 400 freestyle relay team of Sabina, Arsenault, Arnold and Fisher who took the event with a time of 3:03.26.

"In my 22 years of coaching, that was easily the best performance that I have ever seen," said Yarworth. "It was a total team effort and they were doing the little things that it takes to win. We were confident going into the meet and the way we performed early on got us rolling and it was like a snowball going down a hill, we couldn't be stopped."

COURTESY MEGA RELATIONS

Chris Arsenault won the 200 yard Individual Medley at this year's Atlantic 10 Championship in a school-record breaking time.

Come celebrate Engineers Week!

"Notes from the White House"

Today! 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., Gunness Student Center, Marcus Hall. Mechanical engineering alum Patrick Quinlan, who has recently completed a fellowship with the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy, will speak on engineers, the environment, and alternative careers.
Today! 5 - 8 p.m., engineering majors only. "Engineering Futures Session." Please sign up at the Office of Student Affairs, 126 Marston Hall.
Tomorrow! 4 p.m., Gunness Student Center, engineering majors only. Come fly a plane, no pilot's license needed - our annual paper airplane contest. Prizes!
Tomorrow! 5:30 - 7 p.m., Gunness Student Center, engineering majors only. Reception hosted by CH2M Hill. Palm Pilot door prize!
Thursday! 10 a.m. - 3 p.m., Gunness Student Center. Civil and environmental engineering career fair.
Thursday! 5 p.m., Gunness Student Center. Open discussion on "Your First Job in Engineering" by CEE alums Tina Udden and Joe Lanzafame.
Friday! 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., Gunness Student Center. Faculty research showcase.

Sponsored by GE Plastics, Precision Tectonix, J & E Precision Tool, EMC² Corporation, i2 Technologies, Eric Thorgerson, Lee Pearlmutter, and JEOL USA.

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

Chinese Linguists Needed

The Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) is seeking U.S. citizens with a native/near-native level of proficiency in Chinese, and fluency in English. All positions are located in the Washington DC metropolitan area.

An academic degree of BA or higher is preferred.

All selected applicants must successfully complete a thorough medical examination, a polygraph interview, and an extensive background investigation.

To apply, send your resume to:
Recruitment Center
PO Box 3503
Dept. AUMS0201
Reston, VA 20195

Challenges For A Changing World

Please visit our Web site at www.cia.gov
An equal opportunity employer and a drug-free work force.

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6 Special Offer: $25 off

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

A great place to get contact lenses

FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions

Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases

Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office

FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

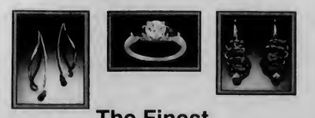
Frederick H. Bloom O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD

starting under $20.00



The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY

One King St., Northampton 584-3324 M-Wed 10-6, Th Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

DAN SAVITELLA/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Paige Harris and the Massachusetts women's basketball team lost two Atlantic 10 games this weekend which killed any chance they had at finishing fifth in the conference, a standing which would give them a first-round bye in the conference tourney.

UMass falling deeper into A-10 space

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In a highly touted rematch between two of the most intense rivals in the Atlantic 10, the Massachusetts women's basketball team headed south in search of an upset against George Washington University. With 5:22 left in the Friday night showdown, UMass was only down 10 points to the first place Colonials (18-8, 12-2 A-10), but those 10 points proved to be too much as the Minutewomen (11-13, 6-7 A-10) stumbled and lost, 58-41.

In a game that featured a stifling GW defense, including a tight full court press, and a self-destructive tendency by UMass to turn the ball over, the Minutewomen could never take control of the game. The Maroon and White gave up the ball 25 times, 11 of which were unforced, while shooting a mere 31.9 percent for the game.

George Washington's Kristeena Alexander posed the most problems for the Minutewomen. She spent the game covering Kathy Conner, and gave the UMass captain as tough of a time as she has had all season as Conner surrendered the ball six times. Alexander had seven steals on the game to go along with her team high 15 points.

When Alexander wasn't shooting or cutting from the perimeter, the ball was down in the post, where freshman standout Ugo Oha put up a quiet 12 points. But Oha's biggest contribution to the game came on the defensive end of the hardwood, where her presence was felt all game long. She finished with three blocks.

This wasn't your typical 17-point loss. The game wasn't a blowout by any means, and the Minutewomen still had a chance to pull out the "W" with five minutes left. But UMass was playing catch-up all game long, and the lack of consistent perimeter shooting combined with unforced turnovers spelled doom for the Minutewomen.

"Part of it is [GW], they do a good job," head coach Joanie O'Brien said. "[But for us] it's composure. We have to be able to handle ourselves. When things get chaotic, you have to have discipline. That's the one thing we're missing a little bit of."

A couple of quick jumpers from Elana Vishniakova and Oha put UMass down early, 6-2, but UMass would hang around. It was obvious from the onset of the encounter that the Minutewomen were immediately taken out of their game as the aggressive GW press flustered the Maroon and White. UMass caught up quickly at 7-6 until turnovers and solid execution by GW helped the Colonials to an 11-2 run to put the game at 18-8. UMass stuck around by hitting some timely shots and entered halftime down by six points, 29-23.

During the break, it was obvious what UMass had to do – keep its cool on offense and get some clean outside looks. The 'go to' players for the Minutewomen were already established.

Amber Sneed's hot hand and emotional play was instrumental in keeping the Maroon and White in the contest. Sneed was the only player for the game in double digits at the half with 10 points and she proved to be the only consistent outside shooter for the Maroon and White all game long, hitting 67 percent on four-for-six shooting while the team as a whole shot a solid 31.9 percent for the contest.

Post players Caroline Nehls and Jen Butler also played well on the block. The frontcourt duo combined for 15 rebounds in the first stanza while the whole GW team only had 12 boards in the half. Nehls had six easy points in the paint and the tandem combined for three blocks.

The second half was much like the first. Turnovers continued to plague the Minutewomen and an inability to shoot the outside shot combined with solid execution on both sides of the court by GW kept UMass from ever taking the lead. The two teams exchanged baskets until a Corrin Reid lay-up and a big trey by Alexander put GW up by 13. That lead fluctuated, with UMass coming within six points on a bucket by Butler with 6:05 left in the game. But GW pulled away with easy lay ups by Petra Dubovcova and Alexander, giving the Colonials the win.

"We had cut the lead to six, and we needed a defensive stop, and somebody broke down," O'Brien said. "They came back and made a play. We came back the next possession and turned it over. That's the bottom line. They made plays at critical times and we made mistakes at critical times. And that's why the score was what is was."

Despite the 17-point deficit, there were numerous positive avenues for the Minutewomen to build on.

"Amber played well and I thought Caroline did a solid job," O'Brien said. "I thought Kathy played a good basketball game. We did the things we needed to do. It was a night where if Paige Harris, instead of going one for nine goes four for nine, it's a whole different ball game. I'll take Paige Harris shooting three pointers from the wing all day long and she just couldn't throw it in the ocean."

Overall, the Minutewomen put together a team effort, and though they didn't exhibit the composure necessary to win, it's obvious that this team has come a long way since its first match-up with GW on Jan. 20. Add to the fact that Butler wasn't playing at full strength due to a leg injury and sophomore sharp shooter Kristin Cannon didn't play due to a finger injury, O'Brien had to be happy with her role players.

"We did what we needed to do against them, except make shots," O'Brien said. "That's what I said in the locker room. We had some good things go on, but when they needed a play, they got it, and when we needed a play, we didn't get it."

Dukes different in A-10 rematch

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

PITTSBURGH – It was a reversal of fortune for the Massachusetts women's basketball team.

In their first match-up against Duquesne University at the William D. Mullins Center, the Minutewomen got off to a quick lead and were able to keep that lead all game long for the win.

In the rematch at the Palumbo Center on the campus of Duquesne University, the home team got off to a quick lead and never let UMass take that advantage away to defeat the Minutewomen handily, 64-53.

Sophomore center Jen Butler got the ball rolling early for the Minutewomen by netting a lay-up for two to give UMass its only lead of the day. The Dukes immediately took control of the game back and went on a 13-3 run that forced the Minutewomen to play catch-up for the rest of the afternoon. The Dukes hit their open shots and played tough perimeter defense that forced UMass guards Kathy Coyner and Cleo Foster to make mistakes.

"[Coyner and Foster] tried to do things tonight, tried to force things rather than react to the situation that was there," O'Brien said. "They have to be responsible for that. You have to take care of the basketball. I think those two need to slow down a heartbeat and play just a hair more under control."

Thanks to solid shooting from the foul line, UMass cut the lead to six by halftime (28-22), and it appeared the Minutewomen would put up a much stronger battle in the second stanza.

Duquesne's premier players had already established themselves by halftime. Center Jaime Vander Zanden had six boards and her frontcourt counterpart, forward Beth Friday, had 10 points and six boards as well.

In order to take the game back and win it, it was obvious what UMass had to do – score points and stop turning the ball over.

But any changes that UMass planned to make were never successfully executed. The problems of the first half mounted, and answers were never found.

The biggest problem UMass was unable to overcome was the foul trouble its post players got themselves into.

With 1:13 gone in the second stanza, sophomore small forward Amber Sneed picked up her fourth foul. Sneed had proven herself recently as a dangerous outside shooter, but she was sentenced to the bench.

Less than four minutes later, sophomore center Jen Butler, the dominant post-player, received her fourth foul and that forced junior forward Caroline Nehls to step up and take Butler's spot in the paint. And it kept getting worse.

Forward Sirri Lilvandi picked up her fourth personal with 14:38 left in the contest while Nehls picked up her fourth a minute and a half later. Lilvandi proved to be the only UMass player to foul out, which happened with 3:14 left in the game.

Duquesne entered the second half with the confidence that it could win, and that confidence shined. After the two teams exchanged buckets, the Dukes brought their lead to double digits as a Beth Friday free throw made the score 35-25. That lead was extended to 15 as Tionda Jennings put a fast break lay-up in off the backboard for two with 8:18 left in regulation.

Coyner would respond singlehandedly, cutting through the lane and putting an up-and-under lay-up to the bottom of the net while getting hacked. Coyner, the Minutewomen's best free throw shooter, hit the foul shot and momentum timidly began to sway towards the Maroon and White bench.

As Duquesne went over the foul limit, foul shots helped UMass reenter the game. One from Butler, two from Sneed and two more from Coyner cut the Dukes lead to 47-40 with 6:11 left in the contest.

A comeback began to look feasible.

But seven points proved to be the closest that UMass would come, as both teams exchanged baskets for the remainder of the game. The contest would end as Duquesne's Shiri Sharon went on a personal 10-point run that ended the game in the Dukes favor, 64-53.

It was a tough game to call for head coach Joanie O'Brien. She was torn between things that she couldn't do. She couldn't rely on her post players to step up and make plays because four of them were in serious foul trouble. O'Brien also knew that she couldn't depend on outside shooting, as two of her top guns (Coyner and Paige Harris) were in shooting slumps and her other sharpshooter (Kristin Cannon) was at a disadvantage with a injury to her hand.

"When you can't score inside and you can't score outside, what are you going to do?" O'Brien said. "We got a lot of good looks, we got some good shots that we wanted. Sometimes it's a struggle for us to score."

Duquesne shot 36.4 percent while UMass shot a disappointing 27.7 percent from the field. UMass finished with 25 turnovers while Duquesne only notched 11 steals.

Once again, turnovers and poor shooting spelled doom for UMass. In the end, UMass didn't execute well enough to put itself in a position to win while allowing Duquesne to take a big step up on the heated A-10 ladder.

"I can't fault us for our effort," O'Brien said. "We played very hard. Part of our problem is that we tried too hard. Hopefully, another couple days of practice and watching video, our younger kids will learn from that. We obviously haven't played our best basketball yet."

With the loss, the Maroon and White fell to 6-8 in Atlantic 10 play and 11-14 overall.

DAN SAVITELLA/COLLEGIAN

Temple's David Hawkins goes up for a block on UMass' Shannon Crooks Saturday in Temple's 84-52 swat of the Minutemen.

THE RUDEST OF AWAKENINGS

Temple brings hoops back to Earth with 84-52 rout

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Had it been a Broadway production, you might have been able to chalk this performance up to stage fright.

Before the first sellout crowd in over two years at the William D. Mullins center and a nationwide television audience, the Massachusetts men's basketball team played the beast to Temple's b-ball beauty as the Owls ran away with an 84-52 victory on Saturday afternoon. The visitors used 61 percent field goal shooting to build a 17-point halftime lead and never looked back, riding four double-digit scorers to the lopsided final.

"This is the worst game we've played all season – by far," said UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint, who suffered the largest margin of defeat in his five-year span at the Maroon and White helm. "We've been on national TV before, so I don't think that had anything to do with it. Against Temple, you've just got to be ready to play."

The Minutemen (11-12, 9-3 Atlantic 10) fell behind for good a mere 3:27 into the game, as Kevin Lyde, Lynn Greer and Quincy Wadley combined to nail 12 of their first 18 shots for Temple (15-12, 9-4 A-10). Wadley and Greer would finish with 28 and 26 points, respectively, to outscore the entire UMass team by themselves.

Monty Mack led the Minutemen with 21 points on solid 7-of-10 shooting from the field, while teammate Jackie Rogers posted a double-double (13 points, 11 boards) in 30 minutes of play off the bench.

The starting UMass frontcourt of Winston Smith, Micah Brand and Kitwana Rhymer managed only six total field goal attempts in the first half.

The Maroon and White big men's ineptitude was all the more frustrating in the face of UMass' game plan, which was to attack the Temple front and get Lyde into early foul trouble (the Owls were without backup giant Ron Rollerson, and even Lyde was hobbled by a chronic Achilles' heel problem).

Lyde even set the stage by picking up his first foul less than two minutes into the game, but the Minutemen simply could not capitalize.

"We got the ball four feet from the basket and we missed every shot," Flint said. "The guys just wouldn't take it at [Lyde]. They'd either throw the ball back out or they'd throw it away."

Lyde's teammates, meanwhile, displayed otherworldly shooting accuracy from all over the court. TU junior Alex Wesby nailed a three from the left wing to give the Owls their first double-digit lead, 21-11, at the 12:17 mark.

The Minutemen clawed back behind a three-point play from Shannon Crooks, back-to-back baskets from Rogers and a Mack trifecta, only to have Temple regain the momentum with a 19-9 half-ending run.

Wesby keyed the decisive spurt when his right wing three at the 8:39 mark rolled home, and finished the run by burying another three-ball from almost the exact same spot for a 47-30 Owl edge.

The second half started much like the first one ended; the Owls strung together a 10-2 run behind inside pails by Lyde and Wesby and successive threes from Greer to pad their cushion to 27 at 54-32. Temple shot a jaw-dropping 55 percent (11-of-20) from international waters for the game, using a number of three point daggers to take the comeback fire out of the Minutemen.

"You try hard on defense, and someone drops a big three on you, it gets you down," Crooks said. "The energy just left us."

UMass also struggled mightily on the offensive end, where Mack had to overcome a complicated scheme masterminded by Temple's John Chaney. Though they are renowned for their zone, the Owls ran a matchup man-to-man defense, with point guard Greer constantly shading toward Mack's side.

The UMass shooting guard was particularly stifled in the second half, when he didn't score a point until the 7:19 mark.

"We had double coverage on [Mack] and he was still shooting 30-footers," Chaney said. "That box can flat-out shoot the basketball. But when they took him out we could go back to the zone that helped a lot."

UMass finished with a 32 percent field goal percentage, including 29 percent (8-of-21) from three-point range. Temple cooled off mildly in the second half, ending with a 55 percent showing from the field.

Flint's displeasure with his starting frontcourt did not subside down the stretch, as he left the trio on the bench for most of the second half. Rhymer played only 14 total minutes despite staying completely out of foul trouble, and Smith could only manage a one-dimensional game – one rebound, one assist, one foul and one turnover – in 15 minutes of floor time.

Aside from Mack and Rogers, UMass received very little firepower in the loss. Crooks (nine points, four assists) tried his best to pick up the team, but his efforts were offset by horrific games from Brand (2-of-7 from the field, three turnovers) and Jonathan DePina (0-for-3 from the field, four fouls, two turnovers).

The 32-point margin spells not only the worst loss in a Flint-led UMass squad, but also the most lopsided game ever between the Minutemen and the Owls. The setback was the first since January of 1996, when fans packed the Mullins to watch the Minutemen upset the Jayhawks of Kansas.

Minuteman prescription says 'Rhode Island'

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Rebounding from an 84-52 drubbing at the hands of your most hated rival can be a difficult task.

Luckily for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, Atlantic 10 doormat Rhode Island will be invading the William D. Mullins Center for a 9:30 p.m. contest tonight, making it that much easier for the Minutemen to get back on track going into the stretch run.

However, if UMass (11-12, 9-3 A-10) plays as badly as it did against Temple last Saturday, then the Rams could very well pick up their second conference win of the year, and improve their atrocious 5-21 (1-12 A-10) record.

"We just have to put [the Temple game] behind us," Minuteman guard Shannon Crooks said. "We can't dwell on it. I apologize for our performance because it wasn't us out there."

Everything that could go wrong, did go wrong for the Maroon and White against the Owls, and the game did more than blemish UMass' record. It also shattered its confidence. Before Saturday, the Minutemen were one of the hottest teams in the nation, winning nine of 11 games and moving up to second place in the conference standings, but all it took was one blow-out to bring back all of the doubts that surrounded the team at the beginning of the year.

"It is going to linger," coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "We've just got to get ready for Tuesday. That is what I told them."

From the onset, it appeared that UMass was unprepared to deal with the Owls, and the Maroon and White showed nothing but flat and uninspired play throughout the contest.

Flint attributed this to a poor effort in practice. "It started yesterday," the fifth year coach said. "The previous to you to perform, it is on you to prepare. We were awful in practice yesterday."

While Rhode Island does not have the weapons Temple does, it will not march into the Mullins Center completely defenseless. Tavoris Bell is leading the team in both scoring and rebounding, averaging 19.8 points to go along with 5.8 rebounds a game. In the previous meeting between the two teams, a 78-46 UMass win, Bell was out with an injury, and his presence should at least make the margin of victory that much closer.

Zach Marbury, the brother of New Jersey Nets star Stephon Marbury, is also a person to watch out for on the offensive end. He is averaging 17.5 point a game, and was the only offensive threat for the Rams last time his team played the Minutemen, netting almost half of his squad's points with 22.

Despite its record, Rhode Island has actually shown flashes of basketball ability on the year. On February 17 against Xavier, the Rams stayed with the Musketeers for over 30 minutes before eventually falling 79-65. However, the game was a lot closer than the score, and both teams even went into the locker room with the score knotted at 40.

All of this was accomplished despite the fact that Marbury was able to total only six points, and coach Jerry DeGregorio had just announced that he would not be returning next season.

One person that should be licking his lips at the site of URI will be UMass shooting guard Monty Mack. On January 30 of this year, Mack lit up the Rams for 29 points on 11 for 19 shooting, and he probably could have had more if the game didn't move into trash time midway through the second frame. In the first half of that game, the fifth year senior especially shined, totaling 21 points in comparison to the 22 that Rhode Island was able to net as a team.

Jackie Rogers and Shannon Crooks also had good games against the Rams, totaling 15 and 10 points respectively, while Eric Williams attacked the glass grabbing 10 rebounds.

Show him the popcorn; Chaney two-faced in win

BRYAN SMITH

Show me the popcorn!

After Temple's 84-52 dismantling of the Massachusetts men's basketball team Saturday, head coach John Chaney seemed nonchalant about his team's victory. He was a lot more concerned with the popcorn that is provided in the media room than his team's performance.

Two of his players, Lynn Greer and Quincy Wadley, had already sat down to field questions when the door opened - Chaney entered. The coach sat between his two stars and exclaimed, "Is there butter on that popcorn back there?"

A voice from the back said that there was too much butter.

Chaney replied, "I want it. It's bad for you, but I want the bad stuff."

The "bad stuff" was what the Owls did to the Minutemen on Saturday afternoon. UMass' archrival beat the hosts in every facet of the game. The only positive that can be extracted from the game is that there is still a fire that burns in the hearts of fans – faithful and fair-weather alike.

Despite his team's complete domination in front of ABC's premier broadcast duo of Brent Musberger and Dick Vitale as well as a nation full of television viewers, the 29-year head coach wanted more of the "bad stuff."

Midway through the second half Chaney was demanding that 6-foot-4 guard David Hawkins post up the diminutive Jonathan DePina, who stands only 5'9".

The exuberant Chaney tried to fuel Hawkins' fire by telling him, "He's only up to here on you," while pointing at the freshman's shoulder.

Wow, how times have changed in Amherst for Temple's coach.

The Mullins Center has been one of the places that has given Chaney some red marks on his resume. In the same room in which Chaney demanded to be brought some popcorn was also the sight of the famous "I'm gonna kill you," incident with former UMass head coach John Calipari. It was also the place in which he told the media that current NBA player Lari Ketner needed to be beaten with a stick in order to make him tougher.

What a difference a month makes.

Last month after a 65-64 loss at the Liacouras Center, Chaney exchanged unpleasantries with referees and his tirade did not stop there. He carried his distaste to the media room, where he bombarded reporters with as many f-bombs as memorable quotes.

Chaney was angry over a call that was not made. Trailing by two with 4.4 seconds remaining, Jameel Pugh fouled Hawkins to put him at the line with a chance to tie the game. Hawkins hit the first and missed the second. On the ensuing scramble Hawkins grabbed his own rebound and attempted a last second shot in traffic – the shot was blocked by Kitwana Rhymer.

But it was questionable, as Hawkins was harassed in his attempt to get the shot up. A whistle did sound, but not one that Chaney will remember as going his way. It sounded to signal the end of the game, which allowed UMass to escape with the victory.

"The worst foul of the game," Chaney said. "It takes courage to [not] make that call. They took his legs out from under him. They came right down on his arms with no ball at all.

"Police men don't beat a guy that bad."

Temple was in a bit of a slump when the Minutemen traveled to Philadelphia for that game. The Owls were also in a bit of a downward spiral when they came into Saturday's matchup.

The difference? The home loss kept Temple in a slump, while the road win could vault the Owls back into contention for the Atlantic 10 championship.

The difference was that the loss made Chaney irate and caused him to curse feverishly, while the win made the head coach somewhat of a comedian.

Being two-faced is often considered a bad thing. In this case the two faces of Chaney were a result of the "bad stuff" that his team did against the Maroon and White.

If only the Minutemen would give UMass head coach James "Bruiser" Flint more instances where he could show me the popcorn.

Bryan Smith is a Collegian columnist.

DAN SAVITELLA/COLLEGIAN

Winston Smith (left), Kitwana Rhymer (center), and Micah Brand combined for five points on 2-for-11 shooting in Saturday's devastating loss to Temple.

HAIR CUTS NOW WITH KATE
$20
(Weds. & Sat.)
ERIC SCOT
79 south pleasant street
Amherst
413.256.3440
Experience the art of hair for less.

Cellular Phone Sales
Part time and Full time positions available through Pro Staff, a leader in the staffing industry Sales of cell phones and accessories in a retail environment. Base plus commission. Flexible work schedule. Paid training provided. Excellent opportunity! Positions available in Northampton, Hadley, Westfield and Sturbridge Meet us at the Campus Center Concourse on Wednesday 2/21 from 10am-2pm! Or call us today at (508) 620-7600!
PRO STAFF
people you can count on

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
* See what you eat!
* See what you drink!
* See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS
See You There
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

Housing Services: Residence Life is now accepting applications for the Assistant Residence Director Position
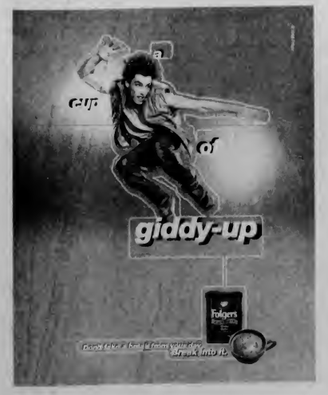
for the 2001 - 2002 academic year
Assistant Residence Directors (ARDs) are live-in graduate student staff members working in the Department of Housing Services: Residence Life. The ARD serves as an active and visible residence hall staff member and participates in student development, community development, leadership development, activity development, administration, policy enforcement, crisis management, and staff development. All ARDs are expected to participate in comprehensive pre-service orientation programs, as well as in ongoing in-service training. The ARD position is a 10-hour per week assistantship for the 38-week academic year (8/12/01 - 12/22/01, 1/16/02 - 5/28/02). Compensation for the position includes a stipend (approximately $12,500), tuition waiver, and a furnished apartment (valued at $4200.00).
For More Information: Attend the ARD Information Session Wednesday, February 21 7:00pm Campus Center 803 or Contact Dawn Briggs Residence Life Business Manager 413-545-6923
To Apply: Submit a Resume, Cover Letter, and Three Letters of Reference to: Assistant Residence Director Search Committee 207 Berkshire House University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
Priority Deadline is March 26, 2001

Choose the Avenue to Your Future
FASHION AV
Retail Career Fair '00
Open to all majors!
UMass Amherst
Campus Center Auditorium
Tuesday, February 22, 2000
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
For more information please call 545-5014
Sponsored by the Apparel Marketing Program UMASS Department of Consumer Studies
Companies attending include
Abercrombie & Fitch
American Eagle Outfitters
BJ's Wholesale Club
Casual Corner
Coach Leatherware
Filene's
JCPenney
Macy's
Nordstrom's
Polo Ralph Lauren
The Children's Place
TJX Companies
Wal-Mart
Yale Gemon
plus many others



North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
U-SAVE
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)

Unplanned Pregnancy?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
413-584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten years Adoption Experience
19 Main Street, Northampton, MA 01060
adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✓ Student Discount!
✓ Professional Bartending Training
✓ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✓ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✓ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Learn to bartend in a weekend!
Classes Begin Fri., March 2nd 6:00pm Valentine Hill, Amherst College
Call now! Space is limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Hampshire College Professor seeks native Trinidadians for language study. Must have grown up in Trinidad. Call Joanna Morris 559-5462

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

1 Bedroom Utilities Free Minutes from UMass. Available April 1 $700 a month 665-3521

AUTO FOR SALE

1993 Saturn SL2 Clean, well maintained. 100k miles $2700. 549-8000

1987 Nissan Maximaloaded 160,000 miles. $2500 413-323-5390

1991 Honda Civic SI low mileage. Great condition. Call Erica 253-6504

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained. $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

AUTO FOR SALE

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition, $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

1997 Pontiac Firebird. Green, 6cyl, AM/FM, cass, T-tops, newer tires, auto, A/C, 58,000 miles, excellent condition, airbag, tilt, Lo-Jack. Asking $11,900. Call 568-6038

CHILDCARE

Babysitter with references and own car. Needed for evenings. 256-3756

COMPUTERS

Mac G4, 400 MHZ 20 GBHD, 128 MB Ram, DVD/56k modem, zip drive, 17" studio display monitor, Epson Stylus 740 printer, games, DVD movies. (mint condition) Market price $2200, asking $2000. Mike 665-3572

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

PT Help Wanted Amherst Greenhouse growing pesticide free, hydroponic herbs. 549-3558

Interns Needed Music Producion Co. seeks PT interns for help w/ festivals, national tours & promotion. No pay but lots of perks (concert tix, CD's, Merch, etc.) 888-595-3122

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for : Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama, Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

Personal Care Attendant for disabled man $10. 413-253-0415

PCA for Male Quad. Mon-Fri. morning $10-$12 perhr. 546-0666

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Part-time baker needed. Early morning hours. No experience necessary. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee 17 Kellogg Ave, Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life

5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Printer HP560C Deskwriter (Mac) w/cable & adapter, $40, ask for Keith: 587-3757

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161 Call 253-2378

HOUSE FOR SALE

3 Bedroom House close to University. 549-6157

INSTRUCTION

Aerobics, Circut Training, cardio kickboxing. 4 week program only $20. Call 5-1962 for details.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Publish Your Work For $1,295 Textbooks, Novels, and More Call FirstPublish, Inc. at 888-707-7634 Or visit www.firstpublish.com

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

STEREO EQUIPMENT

JVC Stereo: 3-disc, dual tape deck, 240 total watts, mint condition and includes all packaging. Call Rob at 549-4275 for more info.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Still Available! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do it on the Web! Go to www.StudentCity.com or call 1-800-293-1443 for info.

Spring Break Airport Rides: Students want to save $5 Bucks on a ride to the airport? Call to reserve a roundtrip from Campus to Bradley Airport by February 28 to get your discount. Just mention this ad when making your reservation. Valley Transporter. 253-1350

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@gofliptrips.com

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $179 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 • HSCN Bulletin Board
3 • ESPN 2 (Instant)
4 • CBS 4 Boston
5 • ABC 40 Springfield
6 • PBS 57 Springfield
7 • HSCN Movie Channel
8 • UPN 20 Hartford
9 • HSCN Pay Movie Channel
10 • NBC 30 New Britain
11 • Fox 61 Hartford
12 • PBS 24 Hartford
13 • NBC 22 Springfield
14 • International Channel
15 • HMATV (Academic Channel)
16 • WB 59 New Haven
17 • ESPN
18 • ESPN2
19 • UVE TV (Student Channel)
20 • Weather Channel
21 • Good to Cover
22 • C-Span
23 • CNN
24 • CNN Headline News
25 • Lifetime
26 • USA
27 • TBS
28 • TNT
29 • A&E
30 • Discovery
31 • Nickelodeon
32 • Sci-Fi
33 • Country Music Television
34 • Nick at Nite
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BET
38 • Univision
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • College TV Network
41 • MTV
42 • MTV2
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 20, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Business Rpt.	Woman's College Basketball: West Virginia at Connecticut. (Live)			American Experience: Abraham and Mary Lincoln					Within Walls
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Iron Collin" (In Stereo)	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)	News		Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Iron Collin" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)	News		Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Mole (N) (In Stereo)		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	NYPD Blue "In-Laws, Outlaws"	News		Nightline
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina Witch	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Reprise" (In Stereo)		News	Friends		Sudden Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)	Fraser (N)	Three Sisters	Ed "Loyalties" (N) (In Stereo)	News		Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "Talk to Me"		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Reprise" (In Stereo)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Habit
WVIT	40	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Hollywood	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)		Fraser (N)	Three Sisters	Ed "Loyalties" (N) (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Start Smart	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	'70s Show	Titus (N)	Dark Angel (N) (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	3rd Rock-Sun	DAG (N)	Fraser (N)	Three Sisters	Ed "Loyalties" (N) (In Stereo)	News		Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Secrets of the Pharaohs		American Experience: Abraham and Mary Lincoln
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Mole (N) (In Stereo)		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	NYPD Blue "In-Laws, Outlaws"	News		Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fraser	"Epicenter" (2000, Action) Gary Daniels, Traci Lords. (In Stereo)				Fraser	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Biography "Pat LaBelle" (N)		City Confidential			Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order
ABE	43	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Monaylne
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour (N)	Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		Inside Politics		Sports	Monaylne
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Sren a Money	"Major League II" (1999, Comedy) Tom Berenger.				Battlebots	Battlebots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	52	Wild Discovery "Seasons		Wild Discovery "Deadly Bugs"		Prosecutors-Justice		New Detectives "Missing"		FBI Files "Deadly Business" (N)		Justice Files
ESPN	51	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Indiana at Michigan State. (Live)				College Basketball: Arkansas at South Carolina. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Rosa Parks"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"With a Vengeance" (1992, Suspense) Melissa Gilbert-Brinkman.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Sensaxxx	TRL (In Stereo)		Grammy Uncensored		Sports Illustrated Uncensored		Real World	Kathy-Rasitty	Undressed	Say What Kike
NICK	55	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company		All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	46	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Phoenix Rising"		Guiar Lumia "Mantle"		"Intercepter Force" (1999, Science Fiction) Olivier Gruner.				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	29	Trauma: Life in the ER		Casa Reopened "The Zodiac"		Trauma: Life in the ER		Maternity Ward: Cutting Cord		48 Hours "Painkillers"		Treuma: Life in the ER
TNT	26	ER "Luck of the Draw"		Pretender "The Dragon House"		Figure Skating: Japan Open -- Interpretive Program. (In Stereo)		★★½ "Father of the Bride Part II" (1995, Comedy) Steve Martin				Martin	Martin
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Impact" (In Stereo)		★★★ "Rob Roy" (1995, Drama) Liam Neeson, Jessica Lange. (In Stereo)						Martin
HBO	33	(5:15) "Erik the Viking" (1989)		★★½ "Forces of Nature" (1999, Romance) Sandra Bullock. PG-13		★★½ "The Whole Nine Yards" (2000) R				Mexican First	Gt. "Even the Score" (In Stereo)
MAX	35	4:45)		★★★ "The Brady Bunch Movie" (1995) PG-13		★★★ "The Target Shoots First" (2000) NR		Food-Thought		★★½ "3MM" (1999, Drama) Nicolas Cage. (In Stereo) R
SHOW	36	5:35) ★★ "At First Sight" (1999, Drama) Val Kimer. PG-13				★★ "Reindeer Games" (2000, Action) Ben Affleck. R				Beggars and Choosers		Queer as Folk

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

HE'LL TURN UP WHEN HE ALWAYS DOES.
BOSS?
WHAT'S SO, LOUIS?
WE GOT A PROBLEM.
ONE OF THE BUSBOYS WENT OUT BACK FOR A SMOKE. BURNS RAN HIS ROUND PLANTON A SNOWDRIFT.
MR. DUKE?
SO? IS HE BLOCKING THE SERVICE ALLEY?
NO, NO. I'M JUST SAYING HE HAS LAW SUIT.
I'M COMING, SIR!

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

PRESIDENT OF HARVARD? I'M AFRAID YOU'LL HAVE TO TAKE A NUMBER, SIR.
NO WAY! I'M A LOCK! BUT FIRST I GOTTA GET OUTTA HERE!
I DON'T THINK SO! SIR, YOU NEARLY DIED OUT IN THAT SNOWDRIFT!
OH, GIVE ME A BREAK, HONEY.
YOU KNOW WHAT HAPPENS WHEN THE BODY IS SUBJECT SO TO EXTREME COLD? THE BLOOD RETREATS TO THE HEART AND BRAINS! IT'S A RUSH LIKE NOME OTHER!
YOU MEAN, YOU WERE PARTYING?
WELL, OBVIOUSLY I DON'T DO IT EVERY DAY!

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

THE SNOW IS MELTING! THE SNOW IS MELTING!
WARM WEATHER MUST BE COMING! FINALLY! FINALLY! FINALLY! FINALLY!
YOU CAN ALWAYS TELL WHO PRAYS THE HARDEST IN CHURCH.
HEY!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HIYA, BUCKY! HOW'S IT EEW. WHAT IS THAT?
MY RABBITS FOOT. IT'S FOR GOOD LUCK. WELL, THAT AND THREATENING RABBITS, OBVIOUSLY.
OHHH. THAT MUST BE WHAT ROB IS TALKING ABOUT WHEN HE SAYS 'BUCKY AND ALL HIS FAUX PAWS'.
ACTUALLY, THERE'S JUST THE ONE.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

YOU SHOULD HAVE SEEN ME IN MATH CLASS TODAY, MOTHER!
I WAS ON! I MEAN, I WAS ON!
YOU DID WELL, EH?
NO ONE COULD BAT THEIR EYELASHES AS CUTELY AS I DID!
WE HAD A REALLY HUNKY SUBSTITUTE TEACHER.
MAYBE IF I WORE A WIG, I COULD PULL MY HAIR OUT WITHOUT CRYING.

The Masked Dropout By Robert Hewitt

Masked Dropout
THIS "SURVIVOR" SHOW IS UNREAL! I COULDN'T SURVIVE THAT TYPE OF TORTURE!
THEY LIVE WITHOUT RUNNING WATER, SCAVENGE FOR EVERY MEAL AND SLEEP WITH BUGS CRAWLING ALL OVER THEM!!
AT LEAST YOU'VE GOT CABLE!

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

SCIENTISTS NEVER MEANT FOR ANYONE TO TEST A REAL CAT—OR SQUIRREL—IN A BOX TO PROVE THAT QUANTUM STATES ARE UNPREDICTABLE UNTIL OBSERVED!
HE COULD BE DEAD.
SAMMY COULD BE ALIVE.
THE ONLY THING WE KNOW FOR SURE IS...
OOOOKLA-HOMA...
WHERE THE WIND DOES WHISTLIN' PAST MY KNEES...
HE'S IN THE BOX.
TOO MUCH KNOWLEDGE CAN BE A DANGEROUS THING.
SOMETIMES YOU MAKE SO MUCH SENSE, IT'S SCARY.
WHERE THE CORN DOGS GROW, 'NEATH THE YELLOW SNOW.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

IF THEY EVER MAKE A STATUE OF ME, I'M GONNA POSE LIKE THIS WON'T THAT JUST GIVE PIGEONS MORE PLACES TO SIT ON YOU?
HMM. YEAH, THAT'S NO GOOD
MAYBE YOU COULD TELL THEM YOU WANT A PLAQUE!

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I ASKED FOR MORE E-MAIL STORAGE SPACE AND YOU DELETED ALL OF MY FILES!
YOU COMPLAIN WHEN I IGNORE YOUR REQUESTS AND YOU COMPLAIN WHEN I DELETE YOUR FILES.
THOSE AREN'T YOUR ONLY CHOICES!!
I CAN'T PLEASE EVERYONE.
www.dilbert.com scottadams@aol.com
© 2000 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Try to include your family in any social events that arise. You need to create a closer bond with those you love. Your entertaining nature will win favors from those you deal with at work.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't let colleagues hold you back. Do your work promptly. Don't wait around for help. You can gain additional insight if you pick up some literature that deals with your chosen field. Keep up with the times, and you'll be the one to advance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Your friends or relatives will be able to give you some good advice if you confide in them. You need to get you and enjoy yourself more often. Look for inexpensive but entertaining activities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your life will stabilize if you restrict yourself to a tight budget. Take care not to be talked into donating to organizations that you believe in but really can't afford to help.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You have to put your energy to good use with competitive sports events, socializing with friends, or spending time with the one you love. Your passion will be hard to contain.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You can learn if you listen to others. You need to stand back and decide if you are really going in a direction that will satisfy your needs.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Take time to do things for yourself. You've been so busy caring for everyone else that you've forgotten what it's like to be pampered.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Arguments will lead to anxiety and frustration, not to mention loneliness and hurt. Don't overreact to your partner's lack of time or attention. Keep busy. Get involved in your own interests, and you won't be by yourself for long.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your quick wit will win you points. Voice your opinion, but don't be too pushy or opposition will arise. Physical activity will be rewarding. You will have the energy to get things finished.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Channel your efforts into fixing up your home, not arguing with those you live with. Don't let your stubborn nature lead to irreconcilable differences.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your emotional partner will be upset if you have been neglecting your duties. Someone you have become friends with has greater interest in you than you realize. Tread carefully.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Don't let yourself be dragged into a love triangle. Be sure that the person you date is free and clear of past involvements. Children will play an important role today.

Solid Custom Tattoo
450 West St.
Route 116
Amherst, MA
259-0003
tues-sat 1-9
sun appt. only
A Tattoo is for life
Know your artist

ACROSS
1 Boulevard liners
5 Workers' protection agcy
9 Frequent
14 Hull bottom
15 Read hastily
16 Occur subsequently
17 Mountain in Sicily
18 Lie in wait
19 Road
20 Yellow cheese
23 Makes lace
24 Vampire expert Bram —
27 Without thought
29 Hurled
30 Risk
32 Funny Foxx
33 French coin of yore
34 Kitchen tools
38 Colorado Indian
39 Like romantic nights
41 Bubby pug
42 Wonderful thing
44 Cape — cottage
45 Trevi Fountain coin
46 Property
48 Country minister
49 Ohio city
51 Bother
52 Hubby of Lucy
53 Piece
56 Clear, as a tape
58 Genuine
59 Author Ferber
63 Lopsided
64 Foyer
65 No. for Yeltsin
66 Rental contract
67 Gazes at 68 Sewing joint

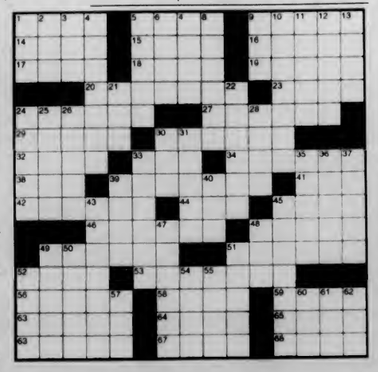
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-19-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 — out: make ends meet
2 Tennis call
3 Guys
4 — off: got lazy
5 Canadian doctor
6 Move swiftly, as clouds
7 Challenging
8 Capitol of Turkey
9 — Alda
10 A different one
11 Customary
12 Like a certain professor
13 Golf gadgets
21 Chop
22 Like inedible food
24 Play a guitar
25 Greek letter
26 Select from the menu
28 Kilt wearer
30 Bill and —
31 Quiets
33 Not liquids
35 Heroic tales
36 Nonurban
37 Bowling score
39 Pierre's mother
40 Building site
43 Hand luggage
45 Pays attention
47 "Faust" creator
48 Moving vehicle
49 Succinct
50 Japanese city
51 Foot parts
52 Bargain
54 Dingy
55 Stubborn animal
57 Woolly one
60 Pigment
61 Teachers' org.
62 After-hrs. bank



Quote of the Day

"Whoever said good guys always win, whoever said take it on the chin, has never seen the sorry state of me a victim of romanticide."

–Tal Bachman

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 45 LOW: 31	HIGH: 40 LOW: 11	HIGH: 29 LOW: 15

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Beef Burrito

Thai Seitan (B, H, W) (vegan)

Harvest Burger (vegan) (F)

Macaroni & Cheese (vegan) (H)

Golden Burger (vegan) (W)

DINNER

Roast Beef (B, F)

Lentil Chili (vegan)

Korean BBQ Tofu (vegan)

Beef Brisket (H, W)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam Mortignetti
Photo Technician — Maureen Maske
Copy Editor — David Troupes
Production Supervisor — Jess Grant
Production Staff — John Dicker, Chris Navarro

Rod Stewart proves that he will stay "Forever Young" with his latest release Human.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 85 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, February 21, 2001

Winston Smith and the UMass men's hoop team rebounded from its 32-point loss to Temple by dismantling URI, 82-67 last night at the Mullins Center.

SPORTS p. 14

Local businesses see parking garage as necessary

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

The proposed downtown parking garage has been heralded as a needed addition to Amherst by many local businesses, though some have expressed concern over the garage's location and construction.

Employees and managers alike believe that the parking garage is necessary to alleviate Amherst's current parking crunch. Lauren Sykes, an employee at Rao's Coffee shop, said that the garage would help not only visitors to the area, but employees as well.

"It [the parking garage] will help out the people who work around here. I can relate because I get hundreds of dollars worth of tickets every year," said Sykes. "I have to park my car out back because there is nowhere else to park. There is definitely a parking problem in downtown Amherst."

Matt Fillmore, manager of The Monkey Bar and Grill, has always seen the garage as a foregone conclusion for the town.

"Yeah we're in favor of it. I don't think there's any question that there's a definite a need for it," said Fillmore. "It's always been a matter of when and if politics will be put aside to build it."

Although local businesses seem to have a consensus on the need for downtown parking relief, there are mixed feelings on how the proposed garage will ultimately affect these businesses. Some people fear that the garage's construction might interfere with business, while others are unsure if the garage will directly benefit their business.

"I personally think it's going to be a good thing to have in downtown Amherst," Walter Pacheco, manager of Antonio's Pizza said. "I'm not up to date on all the finance and what people have to spend, but I think it's a good thing for businesses. It will bring more people to the area."

Chet Satienpoch, manager of the Thai Corner, said that the garage is a mixed bag for his restaurant. Thai Corner is located at the end of Boltwood Walkway, in the exact area where the garage construction is planned.

"It's going to help business if it's finished. It's going to hurt during construction," said Satienpoch. "The construction is going to affect us a lot I think, because I cannot get deliveries. I also don't know if the customer is going to want to walk back here during construction."

Marco Matarazzo, manger of Pasta y Pasta, was unsure of whether the construction would affect his Main St. property.

"I doubt we'd be affected during the construction unless we'd be forced to shut down," he said.

Fillmore expressed guarded optimism about the garage's construction and its potential to attract new customers.

"Initially during construction, it's going to hurt business. If it's done right, like Northhampton, with nice landscaping, it can definitely be a plus for business," he said. "I do, however, think the location is terrible."

There has been little consensus on how the Boltwood Walk garage construction will affect local restaurants, businesses and bars.

"Yes, the parking problem should be solved," said Satienpoch. "Instead of in this area though, it could be cheaper near the theater."

"It will depend on the business," said Sykes. "A lot of times people will want to go out to eat and just drive around. And if they don't find a spot then they'll just drive away."

There are currently 180 parking spots in the Boltwood Walk area. The proposed parking garage would add 60 new spots, all of which would be underground.

"I think the parking garage will help business. There's a lot of people who come in and complain about the parking," said Matarazzo. "At times, there's a parking problem in Amherst. When it's parent's week, there's definitely a problem."

Despite possible inconveniences, most remain optimistic about the new garage.

"I think it will have a positive benefit for all local business because it will give people a reason from other areas a reason to come to Amherst," said Fillmore. "With so many college students in the area, people know that parking is going to be tough. The garage will create a flow of traffic."

Last Thursday, an additional $1 million of funding for the garage was approved at the Town Meeting by the margin of 114-67. Garage opponents have until Friday to collect five percent of voters' signatures. If 988 people sign a petition, then the garage issue will become a referendum for a town wide election. Twenty percent of all registered voters would have to vote against the garage to overturn Thursday's decision.

Chancellor Scott reveals plan to President's office

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Chancellor David K. Scott outlined his 10-year business plan, which calls for a hike in tuition and fees in a memorandum to the President's office.

The memorandum, distributed at the Feb. 15 Faculty Senate meeting, also outlined several aspects of a plan to further the University's ambitions to become a member of the Association of American Universities.

The AAU is an organization of research universities. There are currently sixty-one universities in the AAU.

"Our overarching design for the campus remains the Integrative Land Grant Research University of the 21st century," Scott wrote. "We believe that the campus is poised to play a major role in a Commonwealth of Learning."

The plan relies on several assumptions about the State government allocation and that the Board of Trustees will change its stance on tuition and fee increases. The fees have remained frozen for the past six years while inflation has climbed to 16 percent.

"We assume that student fees must increase during this time frame," the memo states. "We assume that the State funding will increase by an average of 4.5 percent per year."

To some, a rise in fees may be a trade off to the educational value.

"Its not a straight forward issue. It may be appropriate to raise fees. Fees and tuition have been frozen for a long time," Josh Mason, an Economics graduate student and Bargaining Spokesperson for the Graduate Employee Organization, "Its not the fault of the state, but the fault of the trustees. We have a concern that this is a part of a program of shifting from a liberal arts education to a more business focus."

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance Paul Page explained that plan isn't policy yet.

"I wouldn't say it is set in concrete," Page said. Page explained that in order for the University to be accepted into the AAU, significant changes in monies have to be made.

"It shows frankly that there's a gap between what's needed to move this University forward and the resources we have to do it, given our aspirations," Page said. "It would require a serious additional amount of resources."

"The overall institutional budget has not been reduced and we do not anticipate reductions In the near future," Scott said in a presentation entitled Budget and Planning Update, given on Feb. 14. "While the state appropriation to the campus has increased on average 5.8 percent per year over the past five fiscal years, it is unlikely to do so in the immediate future."

The President's Office could not be reached for comment.

Chancellor Scott realizes that his vision is not reality just yet.

"Any ten year plan is subject to a great deal of uncertainty. The challenge before the nation and the Commonwealth is even greater today in an Age of Knowledge."

A makeshift cemetery shows the darker side of Chancellor David K. Scott's 10-year plan for the University.

SGA Senate elections today

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

With the Student Government Association [SGA] Senate elections beginning at 10 a.m. this morning, one word has been used to describe the day's events – "hope."

The overall concern of meeting the five percent student vote has continued to weigh on many SGA members shoulders and members have expressed the need to stay positive.

"We're thinking positive right now," Speaker Jim Eltringham said. "To go and say that were not going to get the five percent student vote, and to say what if we have to hold an election is just like saying that were going to fail."

Eltringham continued to explain that he felt that the elections should pass with the five percent student vote and that he felt that students would be taking an active interest in this elections ballot questions.

"When you have good candidates, you have a good election and that is what we have here," Eltringham said. "I also think that that ballot question regarding privatization will strike up many students interest. It's a problem that we have had in the past before and people viewed it very blandly."

Student Trustee Seth Avakian also expressed similar feelings about today's elections, and receiving the needed five percent student vote.

"Considering the privatization proposal on the ballot it should stir up a lot of people," Avakian said. "I'm just praying that we make the five percent."

As the SGA looks to move onward towards the future Senate, many issues still remain within the inner circle of the SGA office, as personal squabbles still linger in the air. Questions regarding individuals abilities to do ones job have been one topic of conversation as well as what is in store for those involved in the SGA.

The removal of the of the ALANA [African American, Latin, Asian American and Native American] referendum off the Senate election ballot ended yet another inner room controversy, but left another dent on members working relationships.

"The ALANA referendum should not have been on the ballot, and Jim [Eltringham] had to be told that," Avakian said. "I used to have respect for him, but the Republican Club took control of him."

Avakian continued to explain that he felt the SGA's ability to do their jobs have been affected by the removal of the previous Senate, as well as through inner room politics.

"It's hard to move forward when you're under fire," Avakian said. "I wish that things will change, but I just don't know."

Eltingham however disagreed with Avakians explaining that he felt that Avakian was inaccurate in his statement regarding his ability to do his job.

"Seth can sit there and say that the Republican Club took control of me, but I'm assuming that there is no personal problems between us right now, since he has not spoken to me in a while," Eltringham said. "I don't feel the need to bring internal personal problems up so that they can be printed in the campus media. I'm really happy that were all looking at a new SGA that can work together, hearing that just gives me a nice warm fuzzy feeling inside."

Eltingham further commented on the future of the SGA explaining that he felt that the new Senate was a resumption of the SGA's business, not a restart.

"Sam Blasiak, [Chancellor of Elections] has done his job and for his sake I hope that everything runs smoothly," Eltingham said.

Polling stations will be located in the Campus Center, Franklin, Worcester, Hampshire and Berkshire dinning halls, they will be open from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 4 a.m. to 7 p.m. today.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Almost Spring

Two students enjoy Tuesday's warm weather outside the Student Union

Alcohol related incidents sit atop weekend police reports

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Both alcohol related incidents and a motor vehicle accident were the central events that occupied the University of Massachusetts Police department's attention last week.

Officers discovered an individual slumped over on Governors Drive on Friday morning at approximately 3:41 a.m. Police attempted to speak to the individual who was conscious but remained unresponsive. Officers noted that the 19 year-old individual smelled of alcohol and that the temperature outside was 17 degrees so the officer concluded that the individual was incapacitated and was unable to care for himself.

"There is a special law that gives police the right to put people in protective custody who are incapacitated," Jim Lyons the spokesman for the UMPD said. "This is strictly for alcohol use and the individual is not arrested."

In another alcohol related crime, police encountered an individual who looked to be under the age of 21 carrying a 30-pack of beer. Upon asking for identification, 19-year old Jonathan Parrott of Westford produced an altered Maine driver's license and was arrested for possession of liquor by a person under 21 and for the use of a false license.

On Thursday, a student operating a vehicle outside of the Southwest mall backed into a light pole in the area at nearly 6 p.m. The pole received extensive damage and was knocked over; the driver was issued a citation.

"The vehicle was being operated on the sidewalk," Lyons said. "That is how there was damage to the pole."

Carl Lavin, 50 of Newton was arrested on University Drive on Saturday for driving with a suspended license and for operating a motor vehicle without a valid sticker. He was arrested at 11:00 a.m.

During the men's basketball game against Xavier on Wednesday a UMass student was spoken to by officers for displaying an inappropriate gesture towards a referee.

Lyons explained that the individual "stuck his hand with an extended middle finger in the face of the referee." The matter was referred to the Dean of Students for possible repercussions.

There was the report of a domestic disturbance at North Village Apartments on Sunday at approximately 9:00 p.m. Police received a report from an estranged husband explaining that his wife, from whom he was separated refused to leave his home. Police escorted the woman back to her home and distributed phone numbers in case the two were in need of further legal assistance.

Officers confiscated a pellet gun from a student in Butterfield dormitory on Monday. The police received a call from an individual who saw what appeared to be a gun in the dormitory room of another student. Officers checked the premises and questioned the individual involved. Further legal action will be sought regarding the incident.

Also arrested this week was 31-year-old Kenneth Lalland from Easthampton. Lalland was arrested on Thursday morning when officers apprehended him for an outstanding warrant.

Cultural Events Calendar

SOCIAL EVENTS
UMASS – "Spring Festival," an annual cultural event and dance sponsored by the Vietnamese Student Association, will take place in the Campus Center Auditorium on Saturday, February 19. Cultural performances will be presented from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., followed by a dance from 9:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. Admission is free.
UMASS – "Carnival" The English-Speaking Caribbean Association presents this taste of Carnival as it is celebrated in the islands of the Caribbean. The event will take place in the Student Union Ballroom from 6:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturday, February 19. Tickets are $10 general public, $8 students.

FILM/VIDEO SCREENINGS
UMASS – "Live Nude Girls Unite!" This documentary follows a group of San Francisco sex workers and strippers who organized the first union in the United States to represent exotic dancers. It will be followed by a lecture and discussion with the filmmaker, Julia Query. The event will take place in Mather Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, February 8. For more information, call the Everywoman's Center at (413) 586-3036.
SMITH COLLEGE – "Wedding in Galilee," filmed in Israel in Hebrew and Arabic (subtitled). The film is about a tradition of wedding in a Palestinian village won the 1987 Cannes Critics' Award. It will be shown in Seelye 106 on Monday, February 12 at 7 p.m. Admission is free.
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Born at Home: A documentary on indigenous childbirth practices and practitioners." This film documents traditional birth practices in India, and argues that modern institutions undermine the body knowledge of women served by indigenous midwives. A discussion will follow. The event will take place at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Tuesday, February 15 at 7:30 p.m. For more information, call (413) 538-2275. Admission is free.
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Playing the Peace: Killing the Children of Iraq." This documentary presents shocking images from Iraq. The film will be followed by a discussion. The film will be shown at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Thursday, February 15 at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free.

COMMUNITY
UMASS – The Community Service Fair is an opportunity for students, faculty, and staff to talk with representatives from over 60 social service and non-profit organizations from the area about community service learning, volunteering, internships, and independent study options. The fair will be held in the Student Union Ballroom from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Wednesday, February 7. For more information, call (413) 545-2015. Admission is free. Accessible.
UMASS – The ALANA Career Fair will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Tuesday, February 15. Students of all majors are invited to meet 60+ organizations offering internships, co-ops, and full-time jobs. For more information, call (413) 545-6252.

LECTURE/READING/DISCUSSION
SMITH COLLEGE – "Prelude to a Concert: Music from the Ashes." This symposium, which focuses on the music of Jewish musicians who were imprisoned in Theresienstadt and eventually murdered, is part of the Aviam-Scudder music director of the London Chamber Players. The event will take place in the Alumnae House Living Room on Wednesday, February 7 at 8 p.m. For more information, call Rene Haskew at (413) 585-4242. Admission is free.
HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Lessons in Organizing through a Nepali Perspective." Renu Sharma and Tara Upreti, organizers of the Women's Foundation of Nepal, will speak about how they initiate fundamental social change through women's community activism. The event will take place in Room 202 of Dwight Hall at 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday, February 7. For more information, call (413) 538-2275. Admission is free.
SMITH COLLEGE – "Effecting Fundamental Social Change: Women's Community Activism in Nepal." Two officers of the Women's Foundation of Nepal, Renu Sharma (Secretary General) and Tara Upreti (President) will discuss why the foundation was started, its current programs and goals, and the importance and challenges of community-level development. The event is sponsored by the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute, and will take place at 4:30 p.m. in Seelye 106 on Thursday, February 8. For more information, call Rene Haskew at (413) 585-4242.
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Negotiating Gender in Aboriginal Australia." Claire Smith of Flinders University, South Australia (Archaeology) will speak at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Monday, February 12 at 4:30 p.m. For more information, call (413) 538-2275. Admission is free.
AMHERST – Najwa Louis Younes, Palestinian poet and activist, will read her poetry and discuss her life in the Occupied Territories at 8 p.m. on Thursday, February 10 in Stirn Auditorium, Converse Hall. Younes was born in Haifa, Palestine in 1948 and began writing poetry at the age of 14. Younes' poetry has been published in Arabic literary magazines and newspapers throughout the Middle East. Admission is free. For more information, call (413) 253-9486 or email [illegible].
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Confronting Sexual Violence in Africa." Dr. Florence Mukasa, Director of Legal Services at the Uganda Women's Network, will speak at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Monday, February 28 at 7:30 p.m. For more information, call (413) 538-2275. Admission is free.
UMASS – "AHA! Afternoon Hip Hop Arts Showcase." Dance, poetry, and live music will be featured in this event, which will take place in the Student Union Ballroom at 4 p.m. on Saturday, February 19. Tickets are $5 for students and $8 for general public. For more information, call (413) 545-0801.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1993 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semesters. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the Lodge Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and became a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 on Fridays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

[illegible]
Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymaski Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirschner Promotions Manager
Sarah Wheelhouse Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Business Editor
Maureen Majewski Assistant Copy Editor
Manager
Assistant Manager
Brant Blakeman Assistant Production Manager
Amy Carpenter Assistant Business Manager
Katie Bulla Assistant Advertising Manager

THINGS TO DO:
• GO TO CLASS
• PLAY VIDEO GAMES
• WORKOUT
• SEE A MOVIE

WHAT COULD YOU DO...
IF YOU WERE DONE WITH WORK BY 9AM??

THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR STUDENTS TO DELIVER NEWSPAPERS
INTERESTED: CALL SHAWN @ 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT
Applicants Must Have Own Car

University Productions and Concerts
Attention!
Freshman & Sophmores
Help Organize
the Spring Concert!
Positions Available
Interested in ?
Join UPC
Graphic Designers needed
Bring the concerts to UMASS!

MUSIC PERFORMANCE
UMASS – "The Guitar Series" presents Stephen Harris, vibraphone, in a performance to mark African-American History Month on Thursday, February 8 at 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. For tickets, call the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).
SMITH COLLEGE – "A Touch of Class Featuring The Boys Choir of Harlem, Inc." This classical music event will kick off African-American History Month on Thursday, February 8 at 7 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall. Tickets are $15 general public, $5 seniors and Five College students. Admission is free for Smith College students. Tickets are available at Pulaski Records, or at the Northampton Box Office (586-8686).
SMITH COLLEGE – "Ernst Wallfisch Memorial Concert: Music from the Ashes." This concert will feature Adrian Sunshine, music director of the London Chamber Players, and Lori Wallfisch, professor of music emerita. The event will take place in Sweeney Concert Hall in Sage Hall at 8 p.m. on Friday, February 9. For more information, call Rene Haskew at (413) 585-4242. Admission is free.
NORTHAMPTON – "Ritmo y Candela/Rhythm and Fire." Fifteen Latino musicians will perform at the Academy of Music at 2 p.m. on Sunday, February 11. Tickets are $10 in advance (available at For the Record in Amherst) and $12 at the door.
HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – "Wally Cardona Quartet: Trance Technology." The Wally Cardona Quartet and a live DJ will unite ancient rites, modern technology, and rigorous structure in this performance. "Trance Technology" offers a window into the use of music and dance as a transcendent and spiritual experience for the 21st century. The significance of trance travels beyond both cultural and age barriers and has roots in many ancient religious ceremonies. The event will take place in the Main Dance Studio at 8 p.m. on Thursday, February 8. Tickets are $10 general public, $5 students. For more information, call the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS
UMASS – "DREAMING: Prophesies, Speculations, and Good Guesses" is part of a series of African-American History Month events. This group exhibition of works reflects a visionary gaze into the personal and social future of society. It will be shown at the Augusta Savage Gallery from February 12 to March 9, with an opening reception on Monday, February 12 from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. For more information, call (413) 545-3177.
SMITH COLLEGE – "Biblical Women." A reception and gallery talk will be held for this exhibit of story quilts by artist Lee Porter in the Alumnae House Gallery, from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Friday, February 23. Through March 3. For more information, call (413) 585-2043.

This calendar, which previews local events of interest to underrepresented groups on campus and in the community, runs on Wednesdays. Submit notices of events to Tanya Mannes, Diversity Editor. Standard entry forms are available in the Collegian office.

POLICE LOG

Annoying Behavior
Feb. 15
Paper clips were put into locks in several office doors in the Fine Arts Center.
Feb. 16
Snowballs were thrown at a building on Sunset Ave.
There were Individuals throwing bottles in Washington Dormitory.
Feb. 17
There were fireworks set off near a resident's door in Baker Dormitory.
Two Individuals were harassing residents on the 13th floor of John Adams Dormitory.
Feb. 18
There was a report of a fight in Melville Dormitory.
Feb. 19
Officers dispersed a large party in progress on the second floor of Emerson Dormitory.
There was a verbal between Individuals in the Fine Arts Center.
Fraud
Feb. 16
There were illegal charges made on a credit card stolen from Kennedy Dormitory.
Larceny
Feb. 14
A TV/VCR was stolen from McNamara Dormitory in the lounge area. It was valued at $120.
An Individual allegedly stole a sweatshirt from a vendor's table in the Mullins Center. Court action will be sought.
Feb. 15
A chair was stolen from the lobby of Berkshire Dining Hall that was valued at $130.
A change machine was removed from the wall in the Mullins Center.
Noise Complaint
Feb. 18
There was a complaint of loud individuals in Cance Dormitory.
Feb. 19
Loud individuals were issued a warning in Brooks Dormitory.
Feb. 20
There was a noise complaint in Brooks Dormitory.
Vandalism
Feb. 15
There was a rock thrown through a window in Patterson Dormitory.
Feb. 16
There was a window smashed on a vehicle near Van Meter Dormitory.
There were individuals writing graffiti on doors near a stairwell in Baker Dormitory.
Individuals spray painted walls and caused other vandalism in the bathroom.
A window was smashed on a vehicle in Lot 13.
Feb. 17
Housing was notified of a broken window in Lincoln Apartments.
Feb. 18
The side mirrors were smashed on a vehicle in Lot 13.

The headline in yesterday's Collegian that said, "Lil Kim to headline spring concert" was inaccurate. University Productions and Concerts at the University of Massachusetts is currently in negotiations with several agencies regarding many acts. As reported in yesterday's article, no acts have officially been signed yet.
However, confirmation was given to the Collegian on Monday Feb. 12, by Lil' Kim's record label, Atlantic Records, that she will be performing at the Mullins Center in May. The Collegian regrets the headline and any confusion it may have caused.

BARNES&NOBLE
Barnes & Noble College Bookstores, Inc.
will be on campus this Wednesday, February 21
for the UMass Retail Career Fair
We will be interviewing candidates for entry level opportunites in retail management nationwide, and summer internship opportunities in the Boston area.
As well as for the following positions in our New York office:
*Accounting *Help Desk *MIS *Audit
BNCB is a privately-held $1billion company, operating over 400 college and university bookstores nationwide. As part of the largest bookselling organization, we offer unlimited career paths in store management, merchandising and beyond.
Stop by our booth at the career fair to meet a representative.
BNCB is an equal opportunity employer

you know that little voice inside that says "I can't"?
this summer,
[crush it].
Bring your "can-do" attitude to Camp Challenge. Where you'll get paid to learn how to become a leader and acquire skills that'll help you meet the challenges you'll face in your career. Apply today at the Army ROTC department, with no obligation. Before that voice tells you to take a vacation.
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
Scholarship, Credits, No-Military Obligations
UMASS ARMY ROTC @ (413) 545-2321

COLLEGE OF FOOD AND NATURAL RESOURCES
A+ ...for the teacher.
OUTSTANDING TEACHER AWARD
OUTSTANDING ADVISOR AWARD
Students and faculty are invited to submit nominations for the 2000-2001 awards
Forms are available in 113 Stockbridge and Departmental offices and nominations are due March 1, 2001
Faculty in the following programs are eligible for nomination:
Animal Science • Building Materials and Wood Technology • Apparel Marketing
Entomology • Environmental Design • Environmental Sciences
Family and Consumer Sciences • Food Science • Forestry
Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration • Landscape Architecture
Microbiology • Natural Resource Studies • Plant and Soil Sciences
Resource Economics • Sport Management • Wildlife and Fisheries Conservation

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Student Protest: someone's watching

Many students coast through four or five years at the University of Massachusetts without ever really desiring to "fix" anything. But you would be hard pressed to find a student who did not have a gripe about this place.

Some students others complain about dining commons food or the lack of affordable, convenient parking. These are immediate concerns that deserve attention. But there are other, more abstract issues that need to be addressed. We can't call them "gripes" because they are more serious than whether d.c. food gives you diarrhea.

Here are a few: budget cuts are slated to affect many vulnerable programs at UMass, including the English as a Second Language (ESL) program. Financial aid has quietly been diminishing every year. The amount of UMass faculty has dropped 27 percent since 1990.

Low-income students will feel the effects of budget cuts because they are more likely to depend on financial aid and support programs, such as the Women of Color Network, the Bilingual Collegiate Project, and of course, ESL.

This one of those issues that deeply affects any UMass student who takes pride in being part of a diverse community.

It takes a brave organization to tackle trends this pervasive, but the new Student Coalition Against Racist and Classist Education (SCARCE) has a mission: to dissect what the bureaucratic mumbo jumbo actually means for programs at UMass.

Yesterday, on the Student Union lawn, SCARCE members set up seventy gravestones to protest what they term a "phasing-out" of low-income whites and people of color. A number of gravestones each had the first name of a person who had been unable to graduate from UMass, in SCARCE's words, "pushed out," because of the lack of academic support, inadequate financial aid, or even the inability to register for classes he or she needed to graduate.

Other gravestones named the Indigenous Studies Graduate Program, the Future Scholars of America Program, and the Women of Color Leadership Network, among others, which have been cut or threatened with budget cuts in the near future.

This simple, evocative protest spoke volumes about the student-eye view of UMass leadership by President William Bulger, who has overseen the budget cuts. We support this visual wake-up call to the UMass community.

Unfortunately, whether we stick our fingers into the plum pudding or not, things change around here without our go-ahead. More specifically, things disappear. Little by little, the budget at UMass gets smaller, and programs continue to be cut, one by one. We hope that SCARCE will continue to raise awareness of the human ramifications of the number-crunching going on in Boston.

Pawns and bishops

BILL LARKIN

If you can, imagine for a moment that the clock has been turned back thirty years. The year is 1970, and state regulations dictate the terms under which abortions can be performed in the United States. Imagine for a moment that you, your girlfriend, your wife, your sister, or your mother has been struck with the misfortune of an unintended pregnancy. Perhaps they were raped at the cruelly young age of thirteen. Perhaps they accidentally impregnated their wife, with whom they can't even afford to live a terribly impoverished life. It isn't all that relevant; regardless of the means, the end is the same, horrifying in any scenario.

I can't speak for the rest of you, but I pity this fictitious person. They will most likely seek the abortion services the government keeps locked away. Unfortunately, they will be denied help at a time they need it the most. Instead of the comforts of a sterilized hospital room, they will retreat to a darkly congested alleyway and attempt to perform the abortion themselves. And they will most likely die in the process, a once beautiful mother-to-be whose ravaged body now clogs a sewer.

Now you can fast forward to today, but remember the historical developments that have made such tragedies nearly extinct. In 1973, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Roe v. Wade that unduly restrictive state regulation of abortion was unconstitutional. In effect, this ruling legalized abortion on demand for women in the first three months of pregnancy. In the years that followed, the type of horrors I alluded to earlier became but a memory. In the United States, approximately 25 percent of women choose to end their pregnancies through abortion. But that safeguard is about to be threatened by the federal government, in a manner so subtly designed as to prevent opposition.

On the 28th anniversary of Roe v. Wade, George W. Bush began his presidency by issuing an executive order that cut off aid to any overseas family planning services that offer abortions or abortion counseling. Why, I ask you, was this Bush's first act in office? During his campaign, Bush pandered to the middle of America's political constituency, and he promised to push education and tax reform right from the beginning of his administration. Isn't abortion a more partisan issue to attack from the onset?

Bush's decision was no coincidence. In the weeks that followed his order, Bush continued to move his political pieces ever so slowly closer to checkmate. Two weeks into his administration, Bush established a White House office that will distribute billions of dollars to various religious groups over the next ten years to safeguard social welfare. By doing so, he destroyed the wall separating church and state, a wall that has stood as an ideological obelisk for two hundred years. If he has the audacity to challenge one of our most consistent political philosophies, what's to stop him from assaulting one with a much shorter establishment?

For the position of United States Attorney General, Bush nominated former senator John Ashcroft. The opposition to his selection was intensive; several Democratic congressmen, including Ted Kennedy, threatened to filibuster his approval hearings in the senate. Ashcroft's track record indicates an aversion to civil rights; he is staunchly anti-abortion. In addition to sponsoring a human life amendment to the constitution that would outlaw abortion even in cases of rape and incest, he also voted for the child custody protection act that would have made it a crime for family members to help teenagers cross state lines to have an abortion.

Ashcroft's nomination is the most visible threat to abortion's legal status. His approval signified a Democratic reluctance to challenge the Republican majority. After all, the Democrats have failed to reclaim Congress the past four elections. If the right can push Ashcroft through the Senate, then what is to stop them from putting pro-life justices on the Supreme Court? With Ashcroft as Attorney General, a consistent judiciary could pursue cases that challenge the constitutionality of Roe v. Wade, and abortion itself.

If you think this scenario is too far-fetched for contemporary American politics, then think again. No one seems to be challenging the Bush administration. Some criticize his intellect, claiming that he lacks the faculties to enact sweeping change. But I find that logic foolish. Bush is a highly skilled politician. After all, did he not prevail in Florida? The Republican influence persuaded the Florida Supreme Court and the Appeals circuit, is it too much to believe that it could do the same in Washington? Bush's Vice-President, Dick Cheney, recently told Tim Russert – the host of NBC's "Meet the Press" – that the policy of the administration "will be to try and find ways to reduce the incident of abortion." When asked by Russert if he would seek to overturn Roe v. Wade, Cheney refused to commit on an answer.

Bush is benefiting from both circumstance and strategy. Despite the appearance of his campaign, he is more of a conservative than is widely believed. A moderate wouldn't appoint John Ashcroft to the judiciary. A moderate wouldn't violate the separation of church and state. Even though he has the support of many well-organized conservative constituencies, he is still perceived as a bit of a lightweight, given his narrow victory at the polls in which he didn't receive the majority of the popular vote. The news media, still infatuated with the charisma of Ex-president Bill Clinton, refuses to pay Bush the attention he deserves. Since his departure, the press has followed Clinton's action with incredible deal; his every move makes headlines.

This past weekend, the United States and Britain launched an airborne offensive against the very same Iraq that Bush's father waged a war with a decade ago. The assault, which consisted of seven planes, was the largest attack against Iraq since 1998. But despite the importance of all this, the front page of most major newspapers was filled with details about Clinton's last minute pardon of financier Mark Rich. The TV networks talked about Clinton's decision to move into a Harlem office space directly above the legendary Apollo Theater. I realize these are news stories, but are they as prevalent as a military escalation?

Why aren't more people focusing on the actions of our president? Are we that apathetic to our futures? Don't dismiss Bush; he is shrewdly resolute. As the governor of Texas, he committed five of his six years of tenure towards passing legislation that requires parental notification before a minor daughter can have an abortion. If the various political factions don't watch him closely, than he may be able to enact change that is chaotically disruptive to the lives of so many Americans. College students, for the most part, seem to be allergic to political discussion. However, this is a matter of unrivaled importance, in their lives and the lives of others around them.

If the country were to change, I would hope that the majority of us support the new direction. You can ignore my theory at your peril; you can dismiss my every claim. But what if I'm right? If you consider yourself pro-choice and stay blind to Bush's tendencies and quiet to your representatives, then you might see how important politics can be. If that mother-to-be lying dead in an alleyway becomes a reality rather than a contrived imagination, will you care then?

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBSJ
www.monkey-box.net
THE PARTYGOERS WERE PERTURBED BY THE PRESENCE OF LYDIA, GODDESS OF REALLY TALL, SCARY EXTROVERTS © 2001

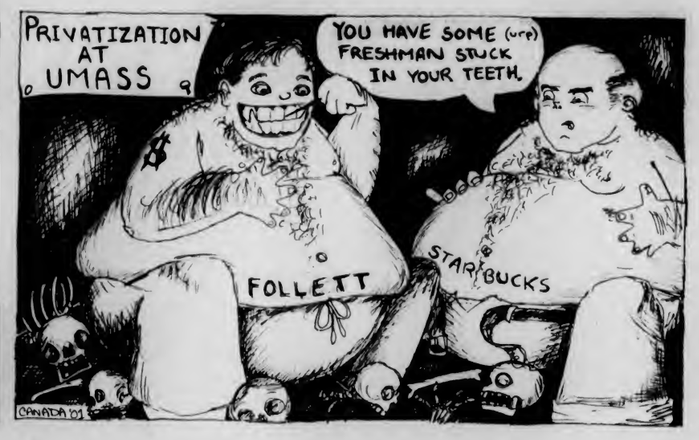
Write for Ed/Op!



Getting behind your University

BRYAN MCALLISTER

In the grand style of the French writer Rousseau or...other famous people. I'm going to make a confession. It's not an easy confession. In fact, it's downright sad, and I'm not proud of it.

Before this past Saturday, I had never been to a UMass basketball game.

Yeah, I know. pitiful. But I'm willing to bet my roommate's George Foreman grill that many of you haven't been to one either. Or if you have been to a basketball game, maybe you've never attended a hockey, baseball, or football game. To me, that's just plain pathetic and you don't deserve to live.

Cause hey. I've been to one football game and two hockey games. And I went to Midnight Madness once. Oh, the Madness!

I only bring all this up because last week, after UMass' crucial win over Xavier, the Boston Herald, the leader of journalism that it is, printed an editorial/opinion piece by Steve Buckley about UMass basketball and their fans. Buckley ripped apart UMass students for their lack of support, calling them uncaring, apathetic, and generally lazy.

Now, just because that's completely true (our school motto: "We don't know what our major is!") doesn't mean Steve Buckley gets to tell us about school spirit. Did he even go to UMass? Did he go to every basketball game when he was in college?

These are quotes from Buckley's article. See if they don't get you really, really pissed off, even if you've only attended one or two games.

"Let's begin by pointing out that UMass basketball fans have always been crybabies."

"Those students are a joke."

"Most of UMass' 17,000 students had somewhere else to go.... Yeah, maybe there was a cake sale going on at the Blue Wall, or a quilting bee at the Student Union."

What? Absolutely ridiculous. First of all, Buckley fails to remember something rather different about last Wednesday, when UMass played Xavier: It was Valentines Day, idiot. Now I'm not saying that excuses people for not going, but I think it certainly explains why the attendance was pretty low. People had dates. I didn't have one, but I'm told that other people did.

Not to mention that the game fell in the middle of the week – so the entire population of Northeast was studying, at least.

Now, I sincerely apologize to the UMass basketball players. They don't deserve this lack of support. But even if I'm not in the Mullins Center every week, that doesn't mean I have to be called "lazy" or a "crybaby". Buckley says we're all crybabies because of what happened with Marcus Camby. Stevie, if some idiotic athlete took away your claim to a proud trophy because he was too greedy and self-obsessed, you'd be a little frustrated and disillusioned, too.

Not to mention, either, that the media – the media good ole' Stevie works for – has been sensationalizing the lack of stability of the UMass team for as long as I can remember. Numerous articles have been printed about how Bruiser is a bad coach, how UMass has no good players, how "if only it was like the old days." Now you suddenly say we're crybabies?

Plus, I think school spirit can be shown in many different ways. We all have a love/hate relationship with this school, this home of four years for most of us. None of us can say we haven't supported it.

For that reason, I've made a list of all the ways I've contributed to school spirit over the past few years. Bring it on, Steve Buckley.

•On Oct. 10, 2000, I purchased a Cherry Coke from the Campus Center for $1.35. $1.35 for a frickin' bottle of Cherry Coke. If that's not UMass pride, I don't know what is.

•On Feb. 28, 1998, I went to the dining hall, and actually ate a whole meal that involved beef.

•On Sept. 12, 1997, or somewhere around that date, I attended my first UMass frat party, one of many to come that semester. There is nothing like a UMass frat party. Nothing. It is an experience up there with climbing Everest, bungee jumping, visiting a high-security jail or spending Christmas dinner with your drunken relatives. From the hours of 11 p.m. to 2 a.m. I waited in line with hundreds of sweaty people for one nasty-ass Miller Lite beer. I knew, then, what school spirit is all about.

•For my entire freshman year, I lived in Southwest. I slept through numerous Tower Wars, was stuck in an elevator for an hour once, and ate Antonio's every night. I puked in the hallway once, possibly on somebody's shoe.

•Since Sept. 1, 2000, I think I've paid at least $1000 to the UMass Visitor Parking Garage. Sure, most of this money was the result of pure laziness – I didn't want to take the bus or park in yellow lot. But still – I could buy that stupid parking garage. I know it like the back of my hand. Speaking of which, who designed this thing? Why did they make the exit above the entrance, so no one can get around? Why was the garage designed for a school the size of Mt. Holyoke? Was anyone thinking here?

•On Jan. 30, 2001, I enrolled in a class that meets just once a week, but is 4 hours long. I have to listen to people make idiotic comments about movies they know nothing about for my what seems like my entire Tuesday night. And I'm paying for this class. I don't even care if my professor reads this. Shoot me now.

•On Feb. 1, 1998, when changing dorms, Housing Services politely moved me to the Sylvan Residence Hall for two weeks until a new space opened up. It was the most excruciating two weeks of my life, kind of like when you're playing Monopoly and you go to jail for a couple turns, and you don't get to pass Go for a while, and no one lands on your hotels.

There's a lot more to that list, but space restricts it being included. In my four years here at UMass, I've supported the dining halls, the residence halls, the classroom halls, Haggis Hoopla, Orchard Hill Bowl Day, three stupid Career Fairs, the Collegian, the Theatre Guild, the Poster Sales, UVC television, the Student Government, the frats, and my favorite UMass activity of all, Chicken Tender Night. So has everyone else here. So stop your crying, Steve Buckley. By the way, attendance at Saturday's game versus Temple was 9,943 – the largest in two years.

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian Columnist.

LIFE IN HELL
©1985 BY MATT GROENING
DEAR GOD, COULD YOU PLEASE MAKE TOMORROW A NICE DAY? I THINK YOU'RE GOING FOR SOME INSIGHT AND PARABLES.
DEAR GOD, COULD YOU PLEASE MAKE TOMORROW A NICE DAY? I THINK YOU'RE GOING FOR SOME INSIGHT AND PARABLES.

Letters to the Editor

UMass addresses Global Warming

To the editor:

On Monday, February 19th, 2001, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (part of the United Nations) released a report detailing the potentially devastating effects of Global Warming. Among the most troublesome effects of Global Warming listed in the report was that of an estimated temperature increase of nearly 10.5 degrees Fahrenheit over the next century. With climate changes like these, New England can expect an increase in the severity of its storms and might lose hundreds of square miles of its coastline to rising sea levels. However, the most disturbing part of the report came when it singled out the United States as a country that has not taken any steps to reduce air pollution, the main cause of Global Warming.

As a student of UMass-Amherst, I am concerned with the effects of Global Warming on my future and future generations, and am glad that there is an immediate and local solution to global climate change. As a member of MassPIRG, I am working with students from all across the state to implement more energy efficient ways of using our natural resources. BY being energy efficient, Massachusetts could cut down greatly on the amount of pollutants put into the air and thus help slow the warming process. In fact, the Division of Energy Resources estimates that 220,000 tons of carbon dioxide emissions were avoided due to energy efficient measures installed in 1998 alone.

Although this is a good start, MassPIRG is working on this campus and across the state to raise support for a newer bill, Senate Bill #360, sponsored by senator Cynthia Creem, which would increase energy efficiency. By supporting this bill on a local and state level, the citizens of Massachusetts can help set an example for other states in our attempt to slow Global Warming.

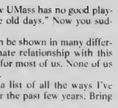
Bill Powers
Orchard Hill

To the Editor:

In the February 16th, 2001 edition of the Collegian, there was an article entitled SGA Coordinating Council fumbles financial allocations in which the University of Massachusetts Juggling Club is mentioned for receiving only $600 of the $1000 that we requested. Chair of Ways and Means Mike Taugher was quoted as saying, "To start out an active RSO group we normally allocate funding of at the maximum. $750, however they [the Juggling Club] only have eight members rather than the ten members needed to form an active RSO." I'm afraid that Mike misunderstood us at the meeting. The Juggling Club is not a new RSO. It was created in the 1970's; however, it had pretty much faded away until the fall semester of 1999 when Jake Abernethy reinstated it. Since then we have been in a constant struggle to keep things running smoothly. This is due mainly to the fact that we have a great deal of difficulty finding a room to juggle in when it is cold outside. We also lack equipment, since most of what we used to juggle was from Jake's personal collection, and he has since transferred to MIT. The money we requested was to go towards purchasing more equipment for our members. On that note, we have many more than eight members in our club. As we explained during this meeting, we do not have a set number of members; some come for only a few meetings, while others come regularly. At our last meeting, we had eight people come to juggle. Our low turnout is mainly due to the fact that we do not have a regular place to juggle. Mike seemed to confuse the attendance at this meeting with the number of members in our club. Although we did not receive the full $1000 that we requested, we understand the SGA's financial situation, and are thankful for the $600 we did receive, but it is not helping us to get started, but rather simply helping to lessen our struggle.

Kate Ryan
Vice President/UMass Juggling Club

Birth of the Empire: a closer look at our own



SIMON PONGRATZ

Empires usually have interesting stories of creation. I've heard it argued that both the Romans and the British acquired theirs quite by accident. I don't know how much credence to lend these claims (the evidence was rather sketchy), but I do know that ours was vitalized deliberately and with the simple stroke of a pen. Some would date the creation to 1865, or maybe 1919, but I think 1947 is more appropriate. 1947 was the year in which president Harry Truman signed the now-declassified National Security Act (NSC-68), which created the CIA, merged the three services into the Department of Defense (it sounds better than "Department of War" doesn't it?), and created, or at least, morphed the empire into something unique to the American experience.

NSC-68 finished the job that World War II had begun – namely, it restructured the economy onto a permanent wartime footing. The document states that the United States must "Develop a level of military readiness which can be maintained as long as necessary as a deterrent to Soviet aggression." This would be achieved by stimulating the economy, in a sort of Keynesian way, by military spending, which would always be forthcoming, thanks to threats both real and imagined that pop up every once in a while to challenge American dominance.

The necessary economic changes are clearly defined. "The analysis shows that this will be costly and will involve significant domestic financial and economic adjustments." These 'adjustments' have totally reshaped the nation so that war is now the most profitable venture we can imagine – of course, it must be war with a weaker, non-nuclear nation that cannot possibly defend itself against the rain of fire from unseen aircraft. Witness the bombing of Iraq, only a few days ago. For those who question why this act happened, the answer is given by Noam Chomsky: "...it is important for subject peoples to understand that they dare not raise their heads in the presence of the master."

Speaking of the bombing of Iraq, the next day the headlines of the New York Post read "Terror Alert. City on Edge as Saddam Vows Revenge." A tiny headline mentions the fact that most of the world leaders condemned the attack as "unnecessary," the understatement of the week. Have not the citizens of Baghdad been living 'on edge' for almost ten years now? Have we not proven that we are capable of unleashing incredible amounts of firepower onto that and other cities without even the slightest provocation or threat to ourselves? Are the sanctions not working fast enough to kill the people of Iraq?

As NSC-68 points out, the public must and has been made a more or less willing contributor to the imperial designs; for the document states that the government must "Keep the U.S. public fully informed and cognizant of the threats to our national security so that it will be prepared to support the measures which we must accordingly adopt." With the media owned by the same companies who build the weapons that terrorize the globe, the public has certainly been made "informed and cognizant" by practices of disinformation and, when necessary, outright lying. During and after the U.S. invasion of Panama, the media carefully ignored the mass graves of thousands of Panamanians, who had been shot execution style – their hands tied behind their backs and a single bullet to the back of the head – a feat of efficiency that would humble Hitler's dreaded Einsatzgruppen. The entire United Nations assembly (minus a few dissenters) condemned the invasion, another fact ignored by the media.

The CIA, one of the 'secret services' created by NSC-68, has no obligation to ever report to the Congress its expenditures, a blatant violation of the Constitution. Stephen Ambrose, one of those whom Gore Vidal refers to as "the Pentagon historians," presents an interesting and laughable description of what the CIA actually does. He says its job is to "gather information and to correlate and evaluate intelligence activities around the world." Perhaps he can escape by saying that by 'intelligence activities' he means assassination, subversion of legal governments everywhere and blatant terrorism.

The new service (CIA) was of much use to the presidents in its early years, especially President Kennedy, who enthusiastically used the CIA on many occasions in Latin America and South East Asia. By 1960, it had been decided that "hitherto acceptable norms of human conduct do not apply" in the quest for empire, and that "We must...learn to subvert, sabotage, and destroy our enemies..." by any means possible. In a great historical irony, Kennedy constantly used the CIA in attempts to assassinate foreign leaders with whom we did not get along, one of the orders even being issued on the day he himself was killed in Dallas. History does have a sense of humor.

Another goal of NSC-68 was to "Strengthen the orientation toward the United States of the non-Soviet nations; and help such of those nations as are able and willing to make an important contribution to U.S. security, to increase their economic and political stability and their military capability." As Chomsky points out, military aid is the best way to subvert legal, civilian governments.

President Eisenhower spoke in his farewell address that "In the councils of government, we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex." The warning was in vain, for the 'unwarranted influence' has been actively sought out, acquired, and now works like a well oiled machine. Truman's acceptance of NSC-68 hangs over the heads of all the people of the United States in the same way that the mushroom clouds that heralded the coming of the American imperium hang over the heads of everyone in the world.

Information from Gore Vidal's United States, Noam Chomsky's Year 501, Stephen Ambrose's Rise to Globalism was used in this article.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist.

No more SGA

SAM WILKINSON

Anybody who's ever attended UMass ever, hell, even had a flat tire near campus knows that the SGA is the biggest waste of time around.

Today is the day, perhaps the most important day ever, in fact, for University of Massachusetts electoral politics. It's time for a brand new Student Government Association election.

"Woo woo," you're saying to yourself, truly excited that you, yes you, will get to be one of the almost two percent of students that will vote in today's important election. As the Collegian's resident SGA expert, I'm here to handicap a few of the, shall we say, bigger, perhaps more important, races you'll have to decide on today.

First, coming out the Commuter Area, this student's own personal district, I'll have to think long and hard before I can choose which of the 15 Senators running should be put into any of the 28 available seats. After all, do I want Andrew Spagnoli, who nobody knows, or Michael Stevenson, who nobody knows, to get the most votes? Do I want Jenn Teixeira (she of much controversy) or fellow old-school-SGA-ite Aaron Saunders to take seats three and four? Whatever shall I do? With choices like this, I might as well vote for all 13 since the last time I checked, 13 is 15 less than the 28 seats available, thus making the Commuter election a close one.

Gilts as it might be, there's nothing funny about today's battle, all-out-war if you will, in Orchard Hill, as Courtney Horrocks fights a nasty Jacquelyn Leahy for the domination of Field. That's right, Field has only one SGA Senate seat! Who's going to get it? I'd give the edge to Leahy, simply because she has the last name of a ranking Senator down in Washington DC. Horrocks is tough though. I'll score it too close to call.

In Northeast, things don't get any easier for us political analysts, as four well prepared candidates are going to run for five available seats. Think that won't bring out the absolute worst in the generally congenial Ed Kammerer? Think again. Look for back-stabbing, crotch-kicking and general nastiness as Thao Tran attempts to fight off Ed. My pick? William Allen, who's almost sure to get elected, as Kammerer and Tran split their vote.

In Southwest, it'll be a Civil War when Jeremy Laubinger looks deep into Thomas Murphy's eyes and declares that it'll be he that wins one of the two available seats in John Quincy Adams. Don't look for Murphy to back down, especially with another seat up for grabs.

Which leaves Cance. In a Battle of the Bulge like scenario, no, more a Waterloo or Gettysburg, Alex Laytin squares off against himself in an attempt to win the one available seat in that soon to be destroyed dormitory. There will be plenty of victims in this one.

Of course, dear lord, Coolidge. Who will win? Who will lose? Who will run?

Nobody.

Nobody's running in these stupid elections because nobody cares. Nobody cares because the SGA is a complete and utter waste of time. Everyone reading this knows that. Anyone who's ever read the Collegian knows that. Anybody who's ever attended UMass ever, hell, even had a flat tire near campus knows that the SGA is the biggest waste of time around.

Start with a Senate that's half full of students that are voted in by, maybe, 18 of their closest friends. Once in their office, they don't give a flying rat's patoot about those 18 people, much less the rest of the students that they actually represent. Then, after stopping the part of their body that cares anymore, Senators allow themselves to become embroiled in interoffice politics. Who likes who? Who's a Republican and who's a Democrat? Whose idea is more stupid? Which is less like to happen? And on and on and on.

To answer those tough questions, Senators take sides. Then they spar, then fight, then pass on one another, then decide that they won't piss on the opposition, even if the opposition is on fire. Then they get really, really drunk, pass out, nothing gets done, another year's gone by and it's time for an election.

This year, we already had an election, but the cycle took a much shorter amount of time, so we have to have another one. And here we are. Election time.

Which guarantees a Senate that is missing, at the bare minimum, fifteen Senators who won't be elected from the commuter area, plus those unfilled seats on campus, leading to a Senate that might represent two or three tenths of a percentage of students on campus that will waste all of our time with their constant cycle of pettiness.

But we don't have to let them. Knowing what I do, that there are few of you who actually give said rat's patoot about our Senate, take the extra few minutes of time today you have available and avoid the voting booth. There's really no good point in voting, as nothing's going to get done anyway. After all, we have new elections coming up in less than a month (a month!) anyway, so why not vote in those?

Can they really be all that different than today's election? Or any election for that matter? Let's face it: democracy is a great big failure here at UMass, so take the best way out – don't participate. If enough of you heed the call, if enough of you smoke that cigarette instead of voting, we'll have to have more and more and more elections until nobody's going to vote at all. Then we won't have an SGA.

Yay! Yay! No more stupid politics. No more backbiting. No more waste of student time! No more SGA! Yay! Yay!

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

The Collegian is always interested in student editorials. Please bring submissions to the Collegian office, in the Campus Center basement, and leave it with Rob or Matt.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING

Arts Editor •
David Toupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Rod Stewart brings new life to Human

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

ROD STEWART Human
WEA/Atlantic

Rod Stewart's latest studio album, Human, is not what you would first expect from one of the greatest rock and rollers of all time. Initial reactions, though, can be misleading. After a spin or two of Human on your CD player, you may think otherwise.

Instead of the usual out-and-out rock n' roll that propelled him to fame with hits like "Maggie May" and "Forever Young," Human is full of shifty R&B tunes that may give just as lasting a memory on your frontal lobe.

Among the radio-ready songs found on Human is the Macy Gray-penned "Smitten." While in Europe, Stewart's manager saw Gray perform and said that she "sounded like the love-child" of Stewart and Billie Holiday. The former Yardbird was immediately intrigued and interested in working with the budding talent. "Smitten" is the memorable result.

Stewart also performs a duet with U.K. music sensation Helicopter Girl on the Motown-flavored "Don't Come Around Here." Her sound is so incontestably infectious in this recording that you'll be scouring Napster for more tunes by this sure-fire up-and-comer.

Other guest stars on the album include Slash, of Guns N' Roses fame, on the title track, and Dire Straits' Mark Knopfler adding his electric sound to "If I Had You," a steady, pulsating reggae rhythm brought to life by Stewart's vocal stylings. With such great talents as these two gentleman working with Stewart, it seems nearly unfeasible to go wrong, but the former song is too bland and gloomy to open the CD with, while the latter is hokey and trite, a misuse of Knopfler's immense guitar-playing talent.

Stewart's cover of the song, "To Be With You," originally performed by country band The Mavericks, seems out of place on the Human album. Stewart's goal with Human, most likely, is to ingratiate himself with a younger crowd, hence the smooth, urban sound that is familiar with current popular performers like the aforementioned Gray. Why, then, is a song by a near-extinct country band included on an album aimed for a younger crowd? One might say it's Stewart's way to maintain his adult following, but I'd argue that no fan of Rod Stewart's British pop-rock would also be a fan of The Mavericks.

The album is again resuscitated, with the insertion of Stewart's favorite song on the CD, "It Was Love That We Needed," made famous by the late, great Curtis Mayfield, of whom Stewart has always been a fan. The powerful, tuneful melody is an appropriate tribute to Mayfield and his band The Impressions.

While that may be his favorite track, there's no denying the fortitude of the CD's first single, "I Can't Deny It," a cheery, pop-rock song that Stewart sums up as making you feel "extremely jolly." Jolly, indeed. Crank up this song and you'll be air-guitaring all over your room (or, if it suits you better, drumming your hands on your steering wheel like a madman.)

It's fitting that Human is Stewart's first album for Atlantic Records, where he now joins the company of such rhythm and blues greats like Aretha Franklin and Otis Redding – musicians who Stewart grew up listening to on the Atlantic label. In choosing the album's title, Stewart jokes that he was disappointed he couldn't use Atlantic Crossing, as it was the name of one of his previous albums.

Human illustrates that this archetypal rock star isn't aging, but rather, maturing musically. For a guy who made a lasting impression with the youth of the disco generation with "Do You Think I'm Sexy?" Rod Stewart is once again trying to tap the pulse of our cohorts with Human, a heartfelt effort from a man with soul.

The ageless songster himself.

COURTESY TONY DURAN

Ben Swift Band at The ABC

By Dan Paladino
Collegian Correspondent

BEN SWIFT BAND
Amherst Brewing Company
February 17

More often than not, a band is easily defined by a specific genre of music, pigeon-holing them into a confined spectrum; on February 17, the Ben Swift Band, in opposition to traditional definition, entertained a mixed crowd at the Amherst Brewing Company with an eclectic and funky blend of influences spanning the musical gamut.

College students, adults, and an insanely cute dancing toddler cheered on the three-piece ensemble, which played in front of a window overlooking the busy sounds of Amherst Center at 10 p.m. The BSB treated the dining crowd with a unique sound transcending the classification of any one genre. The band's creative selection of instruments and rapid alterations in tempo created a mellow mix of hard-hitting rock beats often entrenched in jazz-influenced trombone solos, bluesy vocals, and even the atmospheric sounds of the Caribbean.

The Boston-based BSB, which consists of Ben Swift (lead vocals, conch shell), Dan Fox (bass, trombone, conch shell) and Scott Kessel (drums), played a near two-hour set that combined fast-paced melodies with the occasional soft ballad. The first song began with wooden spoons that emanated a certain western charm, soon leading to a frenzied array of drum and trombone solos. Many of the songs began with Swift's delivery of blues-influenced vocals, and transitioned into long trombone or conch shell solos. Fox's stellar trombone play, often heightened by spacy pedal effects, often stole the show, as did his unique conch shell playing. The conch shell proved a singular and moody instrument in creating a tone that merged amazingly well with Kessel's congo playing (the musical idea of conch shells emerged when Dan Fox returned from the Bahamas and came home honking on his new souvenir).

Ben Swift's vocals, though often overshadowed by the strength behind the percussion and bass, particularly shine through the softer songs, where his clear and throaty voice delivers the lyrics in a matter-of-fact way. Always with a motion of invigoration, Swift sings steadily until breaking into a jam session with his band mates. The lyrics themselves delve into metaphorical imagery of sound and emotion, while rarely becoming overbearing or monotonous.

Swift's short syncopated guitar riffs compliment the mood of a particular song, resembling the influence of blues guitar. Despite occasional technical difficulties, Swift marveled the crowd with slide guitar solos right out of the heart of old-school blues. Lightning quick playing proved Swift's ability as a guitarist and innovator of original melodies.

Long solos wrap up the melody with the improvised use of wooden spoons, a shaker, and bells, further adding to the eclectic sound. Through these extensions, Dan Fox's talent as a trombone player took center stage, as his dynamic rhythms bounced off the walls and meshed well with Swift's impressive electric guitar solos and Kessel's dynamic percussion.

The conch shell seemed to impress the crowd the most as it created ominous sounds akin to much of music from the Islands. With an attached amplifier, Swift and Fox delivered such an impressive shell solo, a small toddler held by an audience member seemed to have as much fun as the band themselves. Smiles and eye contact all around, it quickly became obvious that every BSB show is unique, in that Fox, Kessel, and Swift communicate well with one another and improvise on whim using a variety of percussive instruments.

With a truly innovative blend that needs no classification, the Ben Swift Band's refined sound proves why they are one of the most recently impressive bands to come out of Boston, definitely flinting of praise for their effort and original music sense.

The Midway Show, round two

Consisting of the second half of graduate students half way through the Master of Fine Arts Program, the second Midway Show housed more sophisticated and considered work. This is not to say, however, that all of the work in the show is deserving of this praise.

Annie Asebrook's untitled piece, a hanging mat of burrs, held together solely by their own properties, is an extension of process-oriented sculpture, pioneered by such artists as Hesse, Serra, Smithson, Morris, and others. As these burrs exist individually in nature, scattered across the forest ground, their random order system lacks intent. Asebrook has imposed a pattern upon them, affixing them, some in reverse, to form a diamond shaped design that is repeated like wallpaper. Referencing the affinity for the absolutism of mathematics in nature, this piece attempts to discuss such naturally occurring phenomena as the Fibbonaci sequence. The system of burrs created is not a system that occurs naturally, per se, but harks to the complex mathematical patterning ever present in nature, that goes unnoticed by the untrained eye. Another point of interest is that the form the piece takes is that of a floor mat. While it looks uncannily like a welcome mat it actually takes the form of a physically threatening object. Like Mona Hatoum's pin rug, a rug comprised of thousand of pins glued together, to form a seemingly soft and welcome rug. Annie Asebrook's rug simultaneously invites and forbids.

Sean Langlais' untitled log also references nature but in a different context. The interior of this hollowed out log is equipped with an amplifier and then sealed up so as to look no different from any old log, with the exception of a small cork inserted on one side. This log neither rolls down stairs, alone or in pairs, or over your neighbor's dog; however, it does emit an unending sound, maybe that of running water or a vacuum cleaner. When the unassuming cork is pulled, the sound instantly intensifies, producing an abrasive version of the once soothing sound – on the whole a startling effect. The sculptural use of a log as a sound-producing machine places this piece somewhere between postminimalism and absurdist sculpture. The viewer, unable to capitalize upon the function of this log of sound, is left with a sense of existential confusion. In essence, this work is brilliant, wickedly humorous, and our only regret is that it had to fraternize with the other inferior works. Even the best works do not compare. The log, to quote, "is better than bad, it's good."

Bruce Fowler's Artist Healer is a well-constructed vitrine-like showcase housing a tower of wooden loom components that resemble some kind of imagined primitive musical instrument. This tower is assembled with a vertical stacking of these green and blue tubes in a cylindrical formation. The object created is both formal and intriguing, creating a response in the viewer likened to, "I don't know what this is, but I like it." Conceptually, however, the process of taking a ready-made object and removing its function in order to elevate its "innate" qualities is something that has currently been explored to the point of exhaustion (or so we thought). This piece also lacks the Dadaist sense of humor that characterized work of that genre, which at the time was revolutionary. The act of "putting something where it doesn't belong" in order to force the viewer to consider it in a new way is a concept hinted at by Fowler, but unsuccessful in its rigor. A stunning example of this idea, which is also laden with more conceptual depth, is Agnes Denes' wheat field. In that piece, Denes planted and harvested an entire wheat field in the financial district of Manhattan. Speaking not only to the neo-nature of the city, Denes also created a sense of dislocation by inserting a wheat field into an otherwise concrete labyrinth. This kind of confrontation and imposition maintains the ambition and integrity that Fowler's piece fails to engage in. The viewer is able to consume Fowler's work as a "beautiful object," without the consequences of in depth contemplation.

"Explorations of not Being Seen," by Robyn West O'Reilly, is a series of nine small painted facial studies. The title of this work seems to imply that she has intended to create a sense of mystery in what she has chosen to leave out, however it is equally probable that she was merely making "explorations of being too lazy to deal with the implications of painting a whole person." These facial studies are a rather elementary display of using an object, in this case part of a face, as a mere environment in which to house systematic paint application rather than making any relevant comment on the object of figure itself. We are also left questioning whether or not this work was conceived as a result of an assignment, due to its lack of creativity or inability to make any new or uncharted exploration into the way in which the figure is represented. In other words, why reinvent the wheel, much less a boring one?

Capitalizing on people's vulnerability towards optic excitement might be enough to satisfy the average Joe, but we have to say that our intelligence has been truly insulted and undermined this time. Sukey Lawler's twelve glitter boxes – constructed wooden windows filled to excess with colorful glitter – can only hope to one day reside in the prestigious art collection of some nameless pop superstar. Although these boxes are well constructed, and appear to reference color theory (although in a rudimentary fashion), they fail to be anything more than boxes full of glitter. Lawler is not making any insightful elaboration or commentary upon color theory. Mastering the art of slickness, a common theme played out by artists upon innocent and unsuspecting viewers, is an insignificant factor in producing successful art, and is never a substitute for content.

In the same vein, the two sets of photographs, one by Kelly Welburn and the other set by Jill Markovitz, utilized cheap photographic effects to distract the viewer from their lack of content. Markovitz' series, titled "Reflections: Late Autumn," captures a sparkle of light as it travels across the wall of a room through the course of what appears to be one day. Pretentiously titled, this work is a most watery attempt at elevating time lapse photography, generally residing in the domain of documentary work, nature specifically, into the realm of high art. A one-liner type concept, this work could have been conceived, shot on film, printed, and framed, in the same day. Lacking evidence of planning and design, these conceptually flat photos are completely expendable. Kelly Welburn's photographic series, portraits shot with a pinhole camera, printed in black and white on large format, are poorly constructed and conceptually recycled. A blurred image of a figure moving across a room, so as to suggest the transient nature of identity, is at this point an exhausted theme. The use of camera tricks to make sure the viewer is satiated enough by optical distraction, so as to avoid any attempt at critical inquiry, is essentially a shallow feat at best.

All in all, this show did its part in the effort to redeem the work of the first Midway Show. However, without the efforts of Asebrook, Langlais, and Fowler, the remaining work might as well have been part of the first group's mediocre display. The fact that only three or four of the graduate students' work was intriguing is troubling, especially when the other 25 percent was somewhat of a let down.

Collegian Staff.

Saving Silverman is far beyond salvation

By Tim Letteney
Collegian Staff

Saving Silverman
Directed by Dennis Dugan
with Jason Biggs, Jack Black, and Steve Zahn

I find myself in open fields soaked with sweat and rainwater maniacally shouting to the gods about the poor movies I review far too often. And what is the latest theory of metaphysics that is slowly driving me insane you might ask? Simply stated, Saving Silverman.

Jason Biggs in the throws of his latest flop.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

The plot goes like this: Darren Silverman, Wayne Le Fessier and J.D. McNugent have been best friends since the fifth grade. Enter Judith, a great-looking but cold-hearted and manipulative bitch. (Question: was her name chosen to reference the Old English poem, "Judith," in which Judith decapitates the Assyrian general Holofernes when he is in a drunken stupor? Answer: No not at all, but it is such an absurd suggestion it's funny). J.D. and Wayne attempt to save Darren from this hellish relationship by reuniting him with his high school love, Sandy. I am not going to say anymore about the plot. It is inconsequential. I would rather be locked in a Southwest bathroom early Saturday morning and be forced to read the Advocate's movie reviews than ever see this film again. B.F. Skinner would pity me. Some might say "Tim, it can't be that bad can it? I mean, at least it has Jack Black from High Fidelity in it." I would agree; that is exactly what I thought. I was wrong. Black was misused talent in this film. It was definitely a poor career choice for him to sign onto this movie. He will survive. I doubt Jason Biggs will, though.

I can't really comment on the direction. This was a campy comedy, the direction is always soap opera like. It is to be expected. It is not like I am holding this film up to high standards. I knew it wasn't going to be part of the Criterion Collection. Saving Silverman is just another example of a studio buying a descent screenplay finding great success with it and creating a slew of sub par imitators, this being one of them.

The very definition of entertainment.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Oddly enough the people who set the standard, or at least stole it from 80's camp films are the Farrelly brothers. They are the only reason that this film was ever made. Are their movies so much better? No, but they came first. So what comes first is better? No, not really. This is what we call "the organic fallacy." What comes first isn't necessarily better. So why do I constantly compare recent films to the films of the past? Because I am a hypocrite and I get confused when I learn new concepts that contradict my theology. I have failed you Professor Harris, forgive me.

But hey, who knows, maybe you will enjoy this movie. I imagine you will if you liked Scary Movie. Does that make you less of a person? No, not at all, it just means that you have poor taste in films.

Mt. Holyoke dazzled by Day
Quirky singer amuses crowd

Justin Cormier
Collegian Correspondent

HOWIE DAY
Mt. Holyoke College
February 15

Quirky humor and emotional songwriting combined to form an imperfect, yet entertaining presentation this past Thursday, as singer Howie Day played a free show at Mt. Holyoke College in South Hadley. The young performer has earned a great reputation in his short time as a professional musician. Although obvious flaws existed during the hour-long set, Day clearly has an enormous amount of potential.

Howie started off with the first song off of his recent debut album, Australia. The semi-slow "Sorry So Sorry" was a great introduction to his music for any new listeners. His voice, at times powerful and at times high and sweet, was surrounded by the varying sounds of his acoustic guitar and the electrical effects devices that he creatively used to add complexity to his solo show. Unfortunately, throughout the show Howie battled with the bad acoustics of the venue (a cafeteria similar to the Blue Wall).

Next was "Bunnies," which was briefly described as "a real artsy one." The sampler that he used extensively throughout the show again highlighted this tune. He beat on his guitar with the palm of his hand, and then replayed the beats with the sampler to produce percussion throughout the song. He also recorded his first chorus, and then played it back during successive instances so as to give himself backing vocals. This unique production was closed by some on the spot mixing of his vocals, making them skip and scratch as if worked by a DJ, followed by the individual fading of each element of the song. Musically, this piece was easily the best of the show, and illustrated Day's creativity and promise.

After the two-song warm up, Howie began to release the other half of his signature performance. He introduced himself, and laid a claim to being from Melbourne, Australia. Laughter resulted from half of the crowd, as he is known to declare origination from several countries during the course of any given show. Launching into "Buzzing," he took the upbeat number a step further, freestyling lines about being from Australia and riding in minivans with kangaroos. The song ended with a tease of Toto's "Africa".

The emotional "She Says" began a string of slower numbers that unfortunately may have all sounded the same to the first time listener. "Secret" hit the higher end of Day's vocal spectrum, while "Disco" made additional use of the effects of his electronic gadgets. He gave his vocals a dose of echo and used the sampler to replay the chords of the song while he picked out individual high notes to lie on top. The ballad-like "Ghost" followed, with a relaxing up and down bassline and soothing lyrics.

More peculiar humor followed, as Day said that he liked horses, and somehow ended up telling the crowd that "you know it's gonna be a bad day when you wake up next to a horse." After a few hesitant laughs from the crowd, he added a southern twang to his voice and mocked himself with "what a crazy bastard, talking about horses and shit." He continued with the theme by throwing made-up lines about horses into the next song, "Morning After." Although eccentrically funny, he may have alienated some of the audience with perhaps a bit too much of his strange sense of humor.

For his second-to-last number, Howie covered the 1980's hit, "Africa," of which he did a quick verse earlier in the set. This familiar, upbeat number clearly pleased the crowd and got any sleepers back into the show. Unfortunately, for the last chorus, he sang the well-known lines in a sluggish, up-and-down pitch that made the end of the song less than enjoyable. Hopefully he will remove that particular nuance from future shows.

To close the show, Day threw down the powerful "More You Understand." This song featured an excellent combination of elements of his show, including a commanding vocal chorus and the use of his gadgets. One strong vocal note was extended with a dramatic pause in instrumentation that garnered immediate applause. The conclusion of this superb cluster contained emotional screaming that sounded strikingly similar to Dave Matthews' "Halloween". The song extended into a one-man jam of repetitive chords provided by the sampler, while Howie added layers upon layers of different notes. The instrumental may have been too long, but nonetheless flowed with the talent and creativity that was present during the entire show.

UMass' Nadine Shank, piano, and Lynn Klock, soprano, alto & baritone saxophone, will present a due recital on Sunday, February 25, at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall on the UMass campus.

COURTESY DEPT. OF MUSIC AND DANCE

Smith College Theatre will present Giving Up the Ghost by Cherrie Moraga, directed by Maniza Baker, on a double bill with Antigona Furiosa by Griselda Gambaro, on Thursday – Saturday, February 22-24, and Wednesday – Saturday, February 28-March 3 at 8 p.m. in Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, Smith College. For tickets, call 585-ARTS.

Intelligent music from Tim Easton

By Chandler Carriker
The Technician (North Carolina State U.)

TIM EASTON
The Truth About Us
New West

(U-WIRE) RALEIGH, N.C. The sign of an incredibly good album is if one line of the album just keeps eating away at you hours after listening to it. It's hard to tell exactly what it is about the line, but the moment it first hits it sends shivers down your spine. The lyrics, vocal delivery and music all seem to hit a chord that is so powerful, but at the same time indescribable and you find yourself waiting for that moment with real excitement. Sure, the rest of the album needs to be pretty good, but if the artist is good enough to create that kind of moment then the rest of their work isn't be half-bad. Tim Easton's The Truth About Us has just that kind of moment.

In "Get Some Lonesome," a track whose mood matches up to its title, Easton sings, "He was two arms full of noise," a line whose meaning is much beyond me, but still makes me excited to listen to this album every time I put it on. The song is pretty typical of the album's slow, folksy feel but it has a subtlety to it that goes beyond your normal acoustic ballad, and the vocals are double tracked, giving Easton's voice a creepy echo effect. All of these elements are pretty typical, but put together and delivered correctly they create a moment that alone is worth buying the album for.

The rest of the album does well to support this one moment of rapture, so maybe I should bring this back down to earth. Tim Easton could easily be passed over as another in a long line of folksy singer-songwriters, but on The Truth About Us he backs up his own songwriting talents with the guys from Wilco and production from Joe Chicarelli, who has worked with U2 and Beck. Despite the famous friends involved the album is Easton's through and through.

During the album, Easton proves to be a very literate songwriter, telling stories about escaping bad relationships ("Stepped on the pedal like it was his heart"), and fights outside of a tattoo parlor ("The tattoo parlor man is having a terrible fight/ It's not with one of his customers, it's his wife"). Even though this album is steeped in lines like "I would have married you," and "When you gave your heart back to me/ I didn't know what to do," that would break anyone's heart, the beautifully fragile music that frames Easton's lyrics make this album a joy to listen to.

Easton does pick up the pace on a pair of songs, lifting up an album that teeters on being too monochromatic. "Happy Now" is a perfect little pop song that the likes of Elvis Costello would be proud of, with dark brass setting off the bouncy tune and "When The Lights Went Out" remind one of the Wallflowers, if they were blessed with Easton's pen.

Tim Easton on his own would be a powerful experience, but on this album he is blessed with incredible production. Subtlety is the key for these musicians on this album (most coming from the band Wilco), with perfect touches of piano and guitar floating in and out of the mix and a rhythm section that knows exactly when to be dedicated and when to be dangerous. Chicarelli's production brings together incredible elements of many modern music and more traditional sounds to make a seamless tapestry of sound. If U2's Achtung Baby met up with Tom Petty's Wildflowers on a cold mid-night, this might be the album they'd produce.

The great thing about Tim Easton is there seems to be a lot of room to grow and The Truth About Us is far from his swan song. His voice, sometimes smooth and sometimes rasp, but always right on the money, seems to have so many more great songs behind it. Maybe it's himself that Easton sings about when he sings, "Two arms full of noise."

Choose the Avenue to Your Future
FASHION AV
RETAIL CAREER FAIR '01
OPEN TO ALL MAJORS!
UMass Amherst
Campus Center Auditorium
Wednesday, February 21, 2001
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
For more information please call 545-5014
Sponsored by the Apparel Marketing Program, Department of Consumer Studies
Companies attending include:
Casual Corner
Crate & Barrel
Dean Allen
Filene's
JC Penney
L.L. Bean
Nordstrom
Osh Kosh B'Gosh
Reebok
Sears
TJX Companies
Wal-Mart
Yale Genton
...plus many others

Atlantis
Behind Antonio's Pizza in Amherst
NO COVER $2 COVER AFTER 11 PM
TUES: Ben Taylor's Underground Lounge
WED: B-Ski's Bins "The best in disco & funk."
FREE Nachos 10-11 pm
THURS: "Under the blue" with DJ Big Phil
-hip hop and r&b
FRI: Grouvroom Records presents:
DJs Simi & Caseroc of Boston
SAT: Ladies Night with DJ Trendz
-hip hop, r&b, & reggae -ladies no cover charge
"Ladies Night" - Ladies get in FREE
SUN: Drunk Monks open turntable night

A Passion for Leadership
AT HEBREW COLLEGE, LEADERSHIP ISN'T A BUZZWORD.
Our faculty and graduates are among the world's top Jewish educators — LEADERS committed to strengthening Jewish life through learning.
If you share our passion, find out how you can advance professionally or start a new career by calling 800-866-4814 or 617-278-4948.
HEBREW COLLEGE
מכללת העברית
43 HAWES STREET • BROOKLINE, MA 02446
www.hebrewcollege.edu • admissions@hebrewcollege.edu

Some thoughts on the upcoming Grammys

Predictions for the big ones

What's new about last year's eye-popping Jennifer Lopez/Ricky Martin peek-a-boo getup? The 43rd annual Grammy telecast promises to be more unpredictable and controversial than the MTV Video Music Awards, which already beaten the tawdriest of all award shows at not even airing. From the looks of it, we [illegible] a Ricky Martin-sized [illegible] this year to keep us awake [illegible] full show.

[illegible]'s Grammys got off to a [illegible] start when the National [illegible] Arts and Sciences announced the 43rd annual nominations. Right out of the shock rapper [illegible] work on his anti-gay [illegible] platinum The [illegible] LP, including a nod [illegible] Well that wasn't [illegible] later announced [illegible] to attending the presti[illegible] Dead Ken) it was reported [illegible] rapper was also [illegible]. Finally, news leaked [illegible] artist will perform [illegible] pop star Sir Elton [illegible] the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation, already appalled and will stage a protest on the [illegible] Grammy.

Elton John, to appear on stage with Eminem.

Contributing to Eminem and John, the list of performers for the 43rd Grammys reads like a who's who in the music biz. Madonna has the honor of opening the show and in a commercial plugging [illegible] Grammy's film Material Mom [illegible] reprise [illegible] CBS that [illegible] should debate myself when I perform [illegible] at the Grammys. Yeah, right!"

Other performers include Christina Aguilera, Blue Man Group, Lil Bow Wow, Destiny's Child, Sheryl Crow, Macy Gray, Faith Hill, 'N Sync, Stevie Wonder, Shelby Lynne, Moby, Brad Paisley, Dolly Parton, Jill Scott, Paul Simon, Jakob Dylan and U2.

Most Rock 'n' Roll Diehards declined to [illegible] the show for the third consecutive year. NARAS had a tough time finding a replacement host last week when it was announced that Daily Show comedian Jon Stewart was [illegible] the Grammys giving him just one week to prepare.

Speculation of all the controversy and impending drama we almost forgot to mention the actual awards. The major categories are wide open this year and it seems as if each fan came to almost any one nominee. Unlike the past two years, where Eminem and Britney walked away with a boatload of awards, a supernatural victory doesn't seem plausible this year. The crowds went to Destiny's Child and Dr. Dre, and rightly so, upon Seventeen. I am being brave by predicting the winners in the four major categories.

ALBUM OF THE YEAR
Midnight Vultures, Beck. The Marshall Mathers LP, Eminem; Kid A, Radiohead; You're the One, Paul Simon; Two Against Nature, Steely Dan

It's been years since we've seen such lackluster nominees in this otherwise interesting category. Considering the mediocre slate at hand, Eminem's controversial The Marshall Mathers LP may surprisingly wrap up the gold. The album, despite enraging some listeners, is the only one in the category to command both critical and commercial success, which will give it the upper hand. But if he does win, will the man who declared that he didn't "give a damn about a Grammy" on "The Real Slim Shady" praise the academy?

RECORD OF THE YEAR
"Say My Name," Destiny's Child; "I Try," Macy Gray; "Music," Madonna; "Bye Bye Bye," 'N Sync; "Beautiful Day," U2

Destiny's Child, 'N Sync, and Macy Gray are too young and hip for the conservative voting academy. "Beautiful Day," although critically acclaimed, never cracked the top 20 Billboard Hot 100 chart and will probably have a negative effect on its otherwise strong chances of winning. Therefore, Madonna's "Music," being the most innovative tune of last year, will hit the right notes in this determinedly competitive category.

Madonna, up for Record of the Year for "Music."

SONG OF THE YEAR
"Say My Name," Destiny's Child; "I Try," Macy Gray; "Breathe," Faith Hill; "Beautiful Day," U2; "I Hope You Dance," Lee Ann Womack

The category is characterized by four major songs, as most people don't even know who Lee Ann Womack is. Destiny's Child is most likely to garner a Grammy for Best R&B song. As mentioned earlier, "Beautiful Day" never elicited the type of success it should have. All of which leaves Macy Gray's "I Try" and Faith Hill's "Breathe" as the main competitors. Hill's "Breathe" has the support of both mainstream and Nashville voters. The song will probably slight the now year old "I Try."

BEST NEW ARTIST
Shelby Lynne, Brad Paisley, Papa Roach, Jill Scott, Sisqo

Last year, Christina Aguilera left Britney Spears dangling from her thong after her upset win. Who will it be this year? Shelby Lynne seems to have the right amount of critical acclaim, but commercial success is sorely lacking. Papa Roach won't appeal to the conservative Grammy voters. Sadly, Sisqo, with his gargantuan summer hit "Dong Song," is the only one left standing.

Nikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian Staff member.

Which Eminem will take the stage?

Up until three months ago the question which music people were asking each other was if Eminem would even be nominated after his loud and public bashing of the Grammy award show and the press in his song "The Real Slim Shady." Oooh the Shimmeister. "You think I give a damn about a grammy/ball of you critics can't even stomach me/let alone stand me." Would the Music Academy head the word of Marshall?

We knew the answer quickly, as Eminem was nominated for a number of Grammy's in the Rap category. After the smoke cleared and the initial group of protestors dispersed the next question was will he even be there. He told us how he felt about such an award that was given from a group of people who really didn't even appreciate his music. His actions spoke louder in words when he failed to attend both the Billboard Awards and the American Music Awards. But we would learn that not only would he be at the Grammy's to hopefully receive another gold record player (last year he won for his first single "My Name Is") but he would be performing his hit (and prophetic) song "Stan." But instead of Dido doing her sample from the song, as she did on "Saturday Night Live" and the opening performance of last falls Anger Management Tour, pop-rock legend, icon, and artist Elton John will be performing the duet with Eminem.

Beck, whose Midnight Vultures is up for Album of the Year.

Now for those of you who have lived in a cave for the last twenty years, or who haven't watched "VH1's Behind the Music," Elton John is not only one of the most recognized and celebrated singer/songwriter/performer, he has been openly gay for a number of years. So imagined how surprised this correspondent was when he heard that Elton and Eminem would be performing together. I wouldn't say I was appalled, just surprised. I was even more surprised to hear a quote from Elton John concerning Eminem. I was expecting to hear him say something that might insult Em, but instead what he said blew my mind. According to MTV news twe hear it first!, Sir Elton likes Eminem's album; Elton said that he doesn't think Eminem is anti-gay but he is anti-establishment.

Radiohead's Kid A received an Album of the Year nod.

Wow. I have decided that Elton John is the bravest person in the music industry. Not only does he agree to do a duet with the most protested man in music today but he also goes as far as to say that he thinks Eminem is a genius, a comment that he knows will obviously bring criticism from not only his fans but Eminem's enemies in the gay community. And this brings the obvious question: what does this all mean, besides that it is the second to last sign of the Apocalypse (cats and dogs living together in harmony is the final sign)?

Will it mean that Eminem will soften his attitude? Probably not. On more than one occasion has Eminem defended his lyrics against both critics and fans, saying that his words are just those words, that they don't necessarily reflect his opinions. Despite the attacks from anti-Em fans he hasn't stopped practicing what he has been preaching and doesn't show any sign of stopping.

But will it mean that the animosity toward Eminem will be toned down? Elton John's honest opinion of Eminem's Marshall Mathers LP may be the start of an avalanche to his acceptance (albeit a small one) in a community that discourages his album sales and his lyrics, despite his claims that they are just words. Some music fans think that Elton is doing the duet to do just this to create acceptance between both parties. These same people hope that Eminem will not exploit this opportunity and use it as a reason to say, "Hey look, I like gay people, I did do a duet with Elton John."

This brings another question: which Eminem will show up to the award show? Will it be the lyrical genius Marshall Mathers, whose songs like "Drug Ballad," "The Real Slim Shady," "The Way I Am" and "Stan" speak to not only Eminem fans but also all people with problems? Very few songwriters are able to create the realism and sense of understanding the Eminem has in songs from his latest effort. Although the album is covered with material that is not only disgusting to listen to and offensive to basically every group of people out there, these four songs show his understanding of young men, women, and addicts out on the streets of every town USA. "The Real Slim Shady," with its pop music sound and easy to repeat lyrics, is actually a song stating why people shouldn't be him. Although he likes fans and encourages them to like him, there is a limit that fan should go to. This message is taken to another level in the song "Stan." Stan, a demented fan who feels that he and Eminem are soul mates, copies him and his life. Marshall answers him not as Eminem but as himself, and when he does he tells him to seek help for his behavior. Marshall Mathers without a doubt has the ability to look deep within him to give a message to the world.

But then what if Marshall Mathers shows up at the Grammys as Eminem, the bad boy rapper who carries around unloaded guns in attempts to intimidate anyone? The Eminem who won so many MTV Video Music Awards last fall, and whose acceptance speech was him pulling out pills representing drugs from his pocket? The character who really doesn't care about what you say about him, he'll keep on doing things just to annoy you? If this character shows up to perform with Elton John it could be not only a hostile environment, but also a sad day in music.

Nick Pizzolato is a Collegian staff member.

Information from an Mtv News brief was used in this article.

Come celebrate Engineers Week!

Low-flying planes allowed (and even encouraged)

Today! 4 p.m., Gunness Student Center, Marcus Hall. Engineering majors only. Come fly a plane, no pilot's license needed - our annual paper airplane contest. Make your own plane or cheer on friends. Entry must resemble an airplane. Students, don't let the faculty steal the crown! Prizes!
Today! 5:30 - 7 p.m., Gunness Student Center, engineering majors only. Reception hosted by CH2M Hill. Palm Pilot door prize!
Tomorrow! 10 a.m. - 3 p.m., Gunness Student Center. Civil and environmental engineering career fair.
Tomorrow! 5 p.m., Gunness Student Center. Open discussion on "Your First Job in Engineering" by CEE alums Tina Udden and Joe Lanzafame.
Friday! 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., Gunness Student Center. Faculty research showcase. What do your profs DO when they're not in the classroom? Come find out!

Sponsored by GE Plastics, Precision Tectonix, J & E Precision Tool, EMC² Corporation, i2 Technologies, Eric Thorgerson, Lee Pearlmutter, and JEOL USA.

When someone asks you What you did in College,

The Amherst Fire Department is recruiting members for its Student Force.
Stop by the Campus Center, Feb. 26- Feb. 28 for more information.
The North Fire Station will host an Open House on March 2 from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

The Station is located at 603 East Pleasant St., up the road from Sylvan.
Call for more information 549-5419

Choose the Avenue to Your Future

FASHION AV

RETAIL CAREER FAIR '01
OPEN TO ALL MAJORS!

UMass Amherst
Campus Center Auditorium

Wednesday, February 21, 2001
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

For more information please call 545-5014.

Sponsored by the Apparel Marketing Program, Department of Consumer Studies
UMASS

Companies attending include:
Casual Corner
Foot Locker
Filene's
JCPenney
L.L. Bean
Nordstrom
Old Navy
Old Town Canoe
Polaris
Reebok
Talbots
TJX Companies
Timberland
Vans
...plus many others

T.G.I.M-F

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

Imagine looking forward to the week as much as you look forward to the weekend. Imagine spending each minute with unlimited opportunity and continuous options. At Ernst & Young we provide access to the most sophisticated and effective tools in the industry. See you Monday.

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

©2001 Ernst & Young LLP

Minutewomen capture pair of wins over weekend

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Injuries are a universal part of the sports world, but when an injury sidelines a star player, the effects can be that much more damaging to a team. Imagine the Boston Red Sox having to play a six-game set with the Yankees without Nomar Garciaparra. Imagine the Indianapolis Colts having to play a critical divisional matchup without Peyton Manning.

Now, imagine the Massachusetts women's tennis team being forced to engage in an important weekend of matches without star hitter Francesca Mancini.

The final scenario was all too real Friday and Saturday for the Minutewomen, yet they managed to stay strong, take their play up to the next level, and persevered with an impressive 2-1 record on the weekend series at the Cornell Invitational in Ithaca, N.Y.

Even before the tennis began, Mancini was already hobbled with a pulled muscle in her leg, caused by a screwy accident in which she strained her muscle climbing into the team van. Attempting to play through the pain, Mancini gave it the old college try and even won her doubles match with teammate Jafra Deporites, but it was clear to head coach Judy Dixon that Mancini was not going to be able to continue.

"It was just a freak kind of thing," Dixon said. "The trainers told her she could play, but it was clear to me she couldn't move. So to not risk further injury, I decided to pull her out."

Even with Mancini's absence, the Minutewomen still pulled out a 4-3 victory against Maryland-Baltimore County. The Maroon and White were able to capture three singles matches as well as the doubles point behind the tandems of Mancini/Deportes and Susan Hyams/Helena Horak to send the Lady Retrievers away with a loss.

The second match of the weekend pitted the Maroon and White against Binghamton College. This time around, Mancini's services were unavailable for both singles and doubles, yet the team again was able to persevere with a 5-2 victory. The Minutewomen swept the doubles matches and picked up singles triumphs from Deportes, Horak, Hyams, and Annie Hamilton to snatch victory from the jaws of the Lady Bearcats.

The final matchup of the weekend on Saturday afternoon featured the Minutewomen against the host Big Red, a tough team that sported a 4-0 record entering the showdown. While the Minutewomen came up on the short end of a 7-0 loss, Dixon felt that the team played its best tennis of the weekend, even in defeat.

"Even though we lost, I felt we played remarkably well," Dixon said. "The intensity and spark we showed were very similar to the levels we had in the fall."

The Minutewomen had opportunities to take several points against Cornell, but couldn't capitalize on the opportunities that arose. The pairing of Horak/Hyams had match point in doubles, but failed to close out the match. Deportes was up 5-0 in the third set but could not finish her opponent off.

Still, Dixon was extremely pleased with her overall team's overall performance, citing Hyams as one of the players who really stepped it up this weekend.

Verizon Wireless

Introducing Mobile Messenger℠

Now you can chat without talking.

Loud concert? No problem. Quiet libraries? A cinch. Now you can send and receive text messages right from your wireless phone without losing your voice or disturbing a soul. You can exchange messages one on one, or to a group of friends—whether they're across the room or across the country. So now nothing can keep you from staying connected.

Simple. Affordable. National.

Join in.

Drive responsibly. Call with care. Verizon Wireless.

I FOUND AN XLNT SEAT :-)

verizonwireless

verizonwireless.com 1.800.2 JOIN IN

COMMUNICATIONS STORES

BOSTON, MA — BURLINGTON, MA — CAMBRIDGE, MA — CHESTNUT HILL, MA — MARLBOROUGH, MA — NORTH ATTLEBORO, MA — SAUGUS, MA — SHREWSBURY, MA

Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Price Plans. Credit approval required. $175 early termination fee. CDMA Web Enabled phone required. All calls subject to taxes, tolls and other charges. Available where compatible digital service is provided. Two-way messaging requires a two-way capable wireless phone. Phone must be purchased separately. ©2001 Verizon Wireless

Will a real team please stand up, UNC or Duke?

Is it just me, or is there no dominant team in college basketball this year than can stand out from the rest? Let's think about it -- to me, North Carolina is the dominant team, but they just suffered a startling setback against Clemson. Now the question for the Tar Heels is whether this loss may be the best thing that could have happened to the team or whether they spiral downward as a result. The aura of invincibility is gone after winning 18 in a row, how will they respond.

DAVID ROSE

A lot of people might go for Duke's Shane Battier for Player of the Year thing, which is a good choice. But as of right now, Joseph Forte is my choice for the award. Twenty-four points and 16 rebounds is a great game for anybody, but imagine doing that as a shooting guard at Cameron Indoor Stadium against archrival Duke -- that's all I need to see. However, for Forte and the Heels to reach their ultimate goal the team needs more consistent performances from Brendan Haywood and Kris Lang.

These two are supposed to be what sets the Carolina apart from everybody, two post players that can combine with the majestic Forte and the solid Jason Capel to form a team that matches the fiery attitude of first year coach Matt Dougherty.

While the Heels are 21-3 on the season, these two have had some sour performances this season. Lang has not played well lately and Haywood had a two game stretch against the College of Charleston and Georgia Tech where he scored four points, COMBINED!

On some nights, Haywood plays like he is the best center in the country, but there are other nights when he plays like the most overrated. They need to step up their game for UNC to be the complete team.

Obviously, Duke is a team that is always up there. They, just like North Carolina, have lost just three times all season and have a starting five in Battier, Jason Williams, Mike Dunleavy, Jr., Carlos Boozer and Nate James that all average in double figures scoring per night.

While the Blue Devils can score points like it is their job, they rebound like the ball is a hot potato. The three teams that they have lost to all have one thing in common, size. Stanford, UNC and Virginia all had their way down low against Duke and exposed another problem for Duke come tournament time. If the Blue Devils run into a deep bench like they did against Florida last year, can they run with them? Hopefully for Mike Krzyzewski and his team, they won't find that out.

Stanford is a team that, at least to me, is a mystery. They are the number one team in the nation right now, but how many people in America feel that when it is all set and done in Minnesota in April that the Cardinal will be cutting down the nets? I do not think many people feel that way.

Casey Jacobsen has been outstanding this year for that team averaging 17.5 points per game and the Collins twins – Jarron and Jason are combining for 26 points and 15 rebounds a game.

They have lost just one game all year, but the question that a lot of people are asking is whether Stanford is a team that will be there at the end? Considering everybody east of California is overlooking them, probably.

Switching to another subject, I talked about the job Daugherty has done at North Carolina, but has anybody done a better job with a team than Al Skinner has done with Boston College?

You would be hard pressed to find someone who has. Skinner's team was picked to finish dead last in the Big East Eastern Division. All BC has done is go 19-3 overall and 10-2 in the Big East.

The combination of Troy Bell (20.9 ppg) and Xavier Singletary have led BC to the top of the conference, a Top 10 ranking and a possibility of a number two or three seed in the NCAA tournament. Skinner, who without question, will be the Big East Coach of the Year and has a chance at national honors.

Speaking of coaches, apparently, the disturbing trend of win or you're out in college basketball looks like it will continue at Louisville. Denny Crum, a legend at the school for 29 years has apparently been told by the University that he has two choices – quit or be fired.

Yah, good job by Louisville. If you really want to thank him, why don't you burn him at the stake. What's next, Coach K's sendoff at Duke will be the Cameron Crazies trampling him?

This is ludicrous. He is a legend and this is his send off? I think after everything that Crum has done for that university, he deserves a couple of bad years. He has brought two national championships to the school and let's be honest for a second, did you know anything else about Louisville other than basketball? Thank you Louisville and congratulations for doing an injustice to an all-time great.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

Kuzara passes Evans as all-time winningest coach

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team successfully hosted a quad-meet on Saturday, as head coach Dave Kuzara became the all-time winningest coach in the history of UMass women's gymnastics. The meet, which brought top competitors from M.I.T., Yale and Alaska-Anchorage, leave the Minutewomen ranked 57th in the nation as they surpass their competitors with a total score of 190.675.

The afternoon meet had all four teams in full gear at Boyden Gymnasium. First place finishes among the Minutewomen made their rounds to the second year gymnasts. Sophomores Jen Gendron and Katie Teft both earned first place honors for their routines with Gendron on the floor exercise and Teft on the uneven bars.

"The sophomores are awesome. They're like everyone else on the team; they're just as strong as every part of the team," said Senior Mary Moore.

Senior Kyla Palombini set her mark on Saturday among the team during her floor exercise, second to Gendron scoring 9.775. Team veteran Tracey Chew also came on top with at first place on the vault at 9.725.

"I thought we would do really well. We stayed together," Palombini said.

Over the weekend UMass was able to pull out a close finish over the Yale Bulldogs, the only team ranked over them going into Saturday's meet. The Blue and White are not in the A10 Conference but by passing them in national standings the Minutewomen will be able to pull ahead for the regional championship in the latter half of the season.

"We did what we had to do [this weekend]. We could've done better. I'd like to see the season continue as it's going, and I think we'll get better," Moore said.

"Later in the season when we see Yale, I think we can beat them again," Palombini said.

Despite the sunshine that the Maroon and White brought to the weekend, head coach Dave Kuzara stepped ahead of former coach Virginia Evans as the top coach in the history of women's gymnastics at UMass. Kuzara, who's in his eighth season coaching the Minutewomen, has passed many milestones in his time here. Kuzara has led his teams to breaking every event record held by the school, and brought home back to back Atlantic 10 Championships in 1996 and 1997. The former Michigan Wolverine has earned A10 honors as coach of the year in 1996. Before his reign at UMass, only one gymnast had qualified for the national championship. In the years that Kuzara has led the team, three gymnasts have gone to the NCAA Championships.

Kuzara has been described as more than a coach to the eleven women who make up the 2000-2001 Roster of gymnasts. Through new methods and personal attention for each gymnast's qualities, Kuzara has been available for his athletes that help them to grow as athletes and as students.

"He really works with everyone individually. He's helped our team a lot, and his new techniques have made us a better team. He's just a great person," said Palombini on her coach for four seasons.

Moore also had praise for Kuzara during her last year at UMass.

"He cares a lot. He goes above and beyond with his roles as a coach. Not just in gymnastics, but in life."

The Minutewomen gymnasts will look to continue their climb up the rankings this weekend as they travel to State College, PA to take on the Nittany Lions of Penn State.

Men's gym falls to nation's best at tri-meet in Mich.

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's gymnastics team flew out to Michigan last weekend for one of the tougher meets of its season. The tri meet, hosted by the University of Michigan with Oklahoma also competing, brings the Minutemen a loss and drops them to 10th in the national standings.

The men's gymnastics team went into Sunday's meet with full knowledge that they were competing against some of the best in the nation. The Wolverines came into the contest as the second best team in the country behind the only the Sooners who are sitting at the top.

"It was tough. They're awesome, and we didn't have our best performance," head coach Roy Johnson said.

The 13-year coach was happy to see such competition early in the season. By catching those teams early, the Minutemen were able to catch a glimpse on how some of the best in the nation compete.

"Now the guys now what the best look like," Johnson said.

As the gymnasts spent the holiday weekend in Ann Arbor, the best among the best showed their skills, but the Maroon and White lacked the power to surpass such greatness. With several falls during the meet by upperclassmen, the team was hurt for points in the final combined score. The athletes left the auto state in third place only scoring 202.350 team points.

Freshman Patrick McNulty led UMass at the meet, placing highest on the day with an all around score of at 50.8. McNulty's finish was only enough for him to walk out of the meet in sixth place. McFarlin was noted by the head coach has having trouble on the pommel horse, with several falls during one of his strongest rotations.

Second-season gymnast Justin Hammar also competed on Sunday as the highest finisher in an individual rotation. Hammar placed third on the pommel horse with a score of 9.10. Hammar, along with the rest of the Minutemen, knew that the weekend would be a difficult one.

"It was a tough loss. We went in knowing how good they would be, and we took it all in stride," said the sophomore.

The team will look to improve as the season progresses as the Minutemen continue to face challenges. Needing more points to climb the ladder of the national men's gymnastics standings, the team is looking for more solid rotations from each competitor.

"Our team is looking to get extra points. The majority of our team needs to hit and be consistent," Hammar said.

The Minutemen will be taking on the Southern Connecticut gymnasts today in New Haven. The meet was originally scheduled of Tuesday but was postponed. Although the Blue Demons has not posted a great threat after the Minutemen downed them last season, but UMass will not take the meet lightly. SCSU is coming off a weekend meet with a team score over 200 points. Although the Owls are noted as 200-point team, the Minutemen are favored in this meet by 10 points.

"It's not a meet to take lightly," Hammar said.

This meet will not see the work of McFarlin as he will take a break from the hard performances that he has been putting out this season. Freshmen and alternates will be stepping up to show what they can do to help UMass for their 2000-2001 campaign.

Resurgence of a program

Men's lax heads into 2001 campaign with experience and depth

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

In the words of All-American Matt McFarland, "It's about time to turn it around and get the program back."

That statement made by UMass' towering defenseman sums up what has been a silent battle cry for the Minutemen throughout the preseason. After a quarterfinal run in the 1997 NCAA tournament, the Massachusetts program has been a couple steps behind the elite of Division I lacrosse.

The Minutemen are a combined 10-16 in the last two seasons, but there is renewed optimism entering the 2001 campaign.

"We can accomplish as much as we want to," senior co-captain Jeremy Guski said. "Guys want to achieve greatness."

UMass is No. 19 in the preseason Div. I lacrosse poll and with 12 seniors and a very deep squad the Minutemen will look to challenge for a conference title and an NCAA tournament berth.

The Conference

The Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference schedule is college lacrosse's version of murderer's row. Inaugural champion Georgetown joins Navy, Penn State, Maryland-Baltimore County and the Minutemen as preseason Top 25 teams.

"Top to bottom it's the best conference in the United States," head coach Greg Canella said.

Guski along with fellow senior Chris Gabrielli will serve as captains for this year's campaign. "Their leadership is outstanding," Canella said of his captains.

Although Guski and Gabrielli are the official captains, 10 other seniors who are eager to take on a leadership role will join them.

"We have a lot of help from other seniors," Gabrielli said. "We just try to do things like keeping the team motivated."

Attack

The Maroon and White will be a very deep team up front as the majority of the Minutemen's top scorers are returning and improvement is expected from the underclassmen.

Headlining the UMass attack squad will be last years leading scorer Rich Kunkel. The senior notched 28 goals and 45 points during his junior season and this year he will have plenty of back up from classmates and a good core of rising stars.

Two converted midfielders, Chris Fiore and Marc Morley, will join the attack this season. Fiore is only a sophomore but at 6-foot-4 he has the size to be a force in the trenches while Morley is a lefty who knows how to finish.

"He's a goal-scorer, he's good around the cage," Canella said of his southpaw sniper.

Near the end of last year the Minutemen showed an improved ability to fill the net, including and 18 goal outburst against Georgetown. The offense should continue that improvement with the freshmen coming in and the development of the younger players.

"I think we've got guys who can really step in and score goals," Guski said of the Marlboro and White's bolstered attack.

Midfield

"Offensive middies are the strength of our team," Canella said.

It is a problem that any coach would love to have, a problem that Canella will have to face as he says, "we have eight players who could play anywhere in the country."

Co-captain Guski will take the lead role as his band of maroon clad middies goes into battle with the nations best. Joining the captain will be 22-goal scorer Alex Racioppi and faceoff ace Jeff Seals.

Converted attack man John Madigan as Canella describes has "great lacrosse skills and lacrosse savvy."

One player who is expected to have a breakout season is Kevin Leveille. The sophomore had flashes of brilliance at the end of last year and he will be expected to make an impact at the outset of the 2001 campaign.

Junior Don Flittle, who Canella says is "a strong physical lacrosse player who shoots the ball out of the ball" is a threat from anywhere in the offensive zone.

With its depth and talent from the midfield to the front line UMass will be able to employ an offensive strategy that began to rack up goals near the end of last year.

"It's a lot more run and gun," Guski said.

If the Minutemen do decide to run their opponents may not be able to keep up.

Defense/Goaltending

Defense may have been the most consistent unit for the Minutemen last year. With junior All-America candidate Matt McFarland leading a fast and physical UMass "D" this year's squad may be even stingier than its predecessor.

Co-captain Gabrielli provides leadership while sophomore Tom Fallon will preside the muscle. Assistant coach Andy Shay describes McFarland and Gabrielli as "two very versatile defen-emen while he said Fallon is "easily the strongest on the team and a good athlete who strengthens the defense down low."

Senior Chris Campolemano and junior transfer Rob Schneider have been in heated but healthy competition for the starting goalie spot.

"We have two very good goalies out there," Canella said.

Whoever ends up being the starter will have a very capable backup waiting in the wings.

Outlook

The Minutemen will not settle for anything less than a return to the NCAA tournament for the first time since 1997.

"We have extremely high expectations, the potential of this team is limitless," Guski said.

The Minutemen have all the tools to compete with the top teams in the country. This squad has experience, depth, talent and leadership the only missing ingredient is wins. On the proving grounds of Garber Field against the elite of college lacrosse this team will have its chance to resurrect the former glory of UMass lacrosse.

All-American Matt MacFarland and the UMass men's lacrosse teambegin their 2001 season on Saturday in Hempstead, N.Y. with a non-league contest with Holstra.

Cellular Phone Sales

Part time and Full time positions available through Pro Staff, a leader in the staffing industry. Sales of cell phones and accessories in a retail environment. Base plus commission. Flexible work schedule. Paid training provided. Excellent opportunity! Positions available in Northampton, Hadley, Westfield and Sturbridge. Meet us at the Campus Center Concourse on Wednesday 2/21 from 10am-2pm! Or call us today at (508) 620-7600!

PRO STAFF
people you can count on•

SOMA
COLLECTIC COMBINATION of ROCK, JAZZ, & FUNK
LIVE AT THE PUB
18+ WELCOME — 21+ TO DRINK fun food spirits THE PUB on hotel

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

STUDENT TRAVEL
London.....$211
Paris.....$286
Amsterdam.....$273
Tokyo.....$609
student airfares
STUDENT AIRFARES, DATE CHANGES, HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS, bus passes, ISIC & GO25 cards, car rentals
BEDS ON A BUDGET
adventure travel, hostel cards rail passes
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Learn to bartend in a weekend!
Classes Begin Fri., March 2nd 6:00pm Valentine Hill, Amherst College
Call now! Space is limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Sisters of Sigma Delta Tau would like to welcome their newest members: Meredith Cohen, Rachel Gilles, Sarah Hefter, Katie Higgins, Cassie Horowitz, Erin Lef, Ashleigh Reisher, Jenny Schrean, Jen Stoné, Lauren Sulo, Lindsey Taub. CONGRATULATIONS!

Hampshire College Professor seeks native Trinidadians for language study. Must have grown up in Trinidad. Call Joanna Morris 559-5462

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Center
1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos
3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

AUTO FOR SALE

Pocket Rocket. VW Golf GTI 1996 VR6. Green, leather seats, alloy wheels, sunroof. Perfect condition. Call Ellie (413) 527-4627

1993 Saturn SL2 Clean, well maintained. 100k miles $2700. 549-8000

1991 Honda Civic SI low mileage. Great condition. Call Erica 253-6504

AUTO FOR SALE

1990 Geo Prizm LSI Hatchback 80,000 miles, auto, air, 1 owner, well maintained. $3200 Call between 9am-9pm 549-0876

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition. $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

COMPUTERS

Mac G4, 400 MHZ 20 GBHD, 128 MB Ram, DVD/56k modem, zip drive, 17" studio display monitor, Epson Stylus 740 printer, games, DVD movies. (mint condition) Market price $2200, asking $2000. Mike 665-3572

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers
Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.50 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

PT Help Wanted
Amherst Greenhouse growing pesticide free, hydroponic herbs. 549-3558

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP CANADENSIS, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours form New York and Philadelphia), Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, gymnastics, fishing, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20-8/17. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for : Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama, Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

Interns Needed Music Producion Co. seeks PT interns for help w/ festivals, national tours & promotion. No pay but lots of perks (concert tix, CD's, Merch, etc.) 888-595-3122

Personal Care Attendant for disabled man $10. 413-253-0415

EMPLOYMENT

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life
5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Printer HP560C Deskwriter (Mac) w/cable & adapter, $40, ask for Keith: 587-3757

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161 Call 253-2378

HOUSE FOR SALE

3 Bedroom House close to University. 549-6157

INSTRUCTION

Aerobics, Circut Training, cardio kickboxing. 4 week program only $20. Call 5-1962 for details.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

PERSONALS

Megan, Happy Anniversary. I love your so much. Lets make this the first of many. Love, Dave

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

STEREO EQUIPMENT

JVC Stereo: 3-disc, dual tape deck, 240 total watts, mint condition and includes all packaging. Call Rob at 549-4275 for more info.

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Last Minute Deals! Cancun, Bahamas, Florida, Jamaica & Mazatlan. Join MTV and Baywatch for Spring Break! Call for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-800-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoasttvacations.com

Spring Break Airport Rides: Students want to save $5 Bucks on a ride to the airport? Call to reserve a roundtrip from Campus to Bradley Airport by February 28 to get your discount. Just mention this ad when making your reservation. Valley Transporter. 253-1350

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $179 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@gofliptrips.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.springbreakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

Classified Clerk Needed

Apply at The Collegian

Hours Available

Mon 12:00-1:20
Tue 1:00-4:00
Wed 10:00-12:00
Fri 8:30-12:00

Contact Marty

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Buttercup Festival
20	CW-8 Stagecoast
4	UPN-1 Boston
5	ABC 40 Springfield
6	UPN 20 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	UPN 38 Hartford
12	HSCN Movie Showcase Channel
13	CW-56 Providence
14	WB 30 Springfield
15	HSCN Sports Channel
16	CBS TV Cooperative Channel 3
17	UPN 58 Hartford
18	HSCN Movie Showcase Channel
19	WB 27 Providence
20	CBS TV Cooperative Channel 5
21	UPN 64 New Haven
22	WB 61 Hartford
23	UPN TV Cooperative Channel 12
24	HSCN Movie Channel
25	Comedy Central
26	Showtime
27	CNN
28	CNN Headline News
29	Discovery
30	A&E
31	TBS
32	Nickelodeon
33	Nick at Nite
34	TNT
35	ESPN
36	ESPN 2
37	Sci-Fi
38	USA
39	Bloomberg Financial Network
40	College TV Network
41	MTV
42	VH-1
43	VH1
44	The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 21, 2001

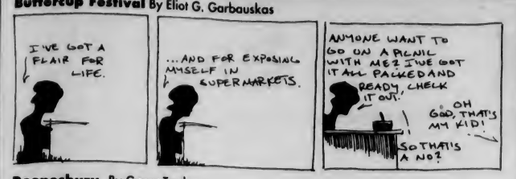
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℞		Wisdsworth Atheneum		American Experience: Abraham and Mary Lincoln				In the Life ℞
WFSB 3	3	News ℞	CBS News	Inside Edition	Entertainment Tonight	Grammy Awards (In Stereo Live) ℞						News ℞	Late Show ℞
WBZ 4	4	News ℞	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Grammy Awards (In Stereo Live) ℞						News ℞	Late Show ℞
WCVB 5	5	News ℞	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ℞	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey ℞	Spn City ℞	Whose Line Is It Anyway? ℞		News ℞	Nightline ℞
WLVI 56		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends ℞	Nanny ℞	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) ℞		Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) ℞		News ℞		Friends ℞	Sudden Susan
WHDH 7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℞	Ed "Loyalties" (In Stereo) ℞		West Wing "Ellie" (In Stereo) ℞		Law & Order "A Losing Season"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "Lan Lost" ℞		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) ℞		Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) ℞		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra ℞	Hollywood	Ed "Loyalties" (In Stereo) ℞		West Wing "Ellie" (In Stereo) ℞		Law & Order "A Losing Season"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC 61	11	Simpsons ℞	Frasier ℞	Seinfeld ℞	Friends ℞	70s Show	Grounded-Life	Temptation Island (In Stereo)		News		Friends ℞	Frasier ℞
WWLP 22	22	News ℞	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℞	Ed "Loyalties" (In Stereo) ℞		West Wing "Ellie" (In Stereo) ℞		Law & Order "A Losing Season"		News ℞	Tonight Show
WGBY 57	6	World News	Business Rpt.	NewsHour With Jim Lehrer ℞		National Geographic		American Experience: Abraham and Mary Lincoln				News ℞	Rosie (In Stereo) ℞
WGGB 40	29	News ℞	ABC News	Seinfeld ℞	Frasier ℞	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey ℞	Spn City ℞	Whose Line Is It Anyway? ℞		News ℞	Nightline ℞
WSBK 38		Judge Judy ℞	Judge Judy ℞	Seinfeld ℞	Frasier ℞	7 Days "Revelation" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager "Workforce"	NHL Hockey: Boston Bruins at Colorado Avalanche (Live)
WTBS 72		Roseanne ℞	Roseanne ℞	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E 45		Night Court	Newsradio ℞	Law & Order "Out of Control" ℞		Biography: David Crosby		American Justice (N) ℞		Investigative Reports ℞		Law & Order "Competence" ℞
CNN 60	23	Worldview ℞	Moneyline Newshour (N) ℞		Crossfire ℞	Wolf Blitzer	The Point ℞	Larry King Live ℞		CNN Tonight	Spin Room ℞	Sports	Moneyline
COM 63	39	Saturday Night Live ℞		Daily Show ℞	Stein's Money	Pulp Comics V ★★ "Still Smokin'" (1983) Tommy Chong				South Park ℞	TV Funhouse	Daily Show ℞	Stein's Money
DISC 62		Wild Discovery Rat's		Giants, Lizards and Snakes		Egypt Uncovered		Wax Museum (N)		Deadline Discovery (N)		Justice Files	Love and Death ℞
ESPN 33		Sportscenter ℞		College Basketball: Georgia Tech at Duke (Live) ℞				College Basketball: Georgetown at St. John's (Live) ℞				Sportscenter ℞
LIFE 31		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Celine Dion		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"In the Shadow of Evil" (1995, Suspense) Treat Williams ℞				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV 53		Sports Illustrated Uncensored		Backstage at the Grammys (N)		Hips, Lips and Genderbenders		MTV's History of Sex		Fear (In Stereo)		Sports Illustrated Uncensored
NICK 55		Pinky & Brain	Cs/dog	Hey Arnold! ℞	Rugrats ℞	Thomberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons ℞
SCIFI 59		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "The New Breed"		★★ "The Darwin Conspiracy" (1999) Jason Brooks. (In Stereo) ℞				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC 97	28	Trauma: Life in the ER		Cake Reopened		Super Structures of the World						Super Structures of the World
TNT 54		ER "Long Day's Journey" ℞		Pretender (In Stereo) ℞		NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at San Antonio Spurs. (In Stereo Live) ℞				NBA		★★★ "Freedom Song" (2000) ℞
USA 52		Walker, Texas Ranger ℞		JAG: Pedinos Rabbi ℞		Nash Bridges "Lost and Found"		★★½ "Missing in Action" (1984, Adventure) Chuck Norris ℞				Martin ℞	Martin ℞
HBO 43		(5:30) ★★½ "The Right Stuff" (1983, Drama) Sam Shepard, Scott Glenn. (In Stereo) PG ℞				Sex and City		Arliss ℞		Oz "Even the Score" (In Stereo)		On the Record (N) ℞
MAX 65		(4:30) "Taps" ★★ "Judas Kiss" (1998, Mystery) Simon Baker-Denny. R ℞				★½ "The Suburbans" (1999) Craig Bierko. R ℞		★½ "House on Haunted Hill" (1999, Horror) R ℞				Passion Cove
SHOW 95		★½ "Once Upon a Crime" (1992, Comedy) John Candy. PG ℞				★ "One Tough Cop" (1998) Stephen Baldwin. R ℞		Filmmaker		Soul Food (N) (In Stereo) ℞		Resurrection	"I'm Gonna Git"

Buttercup Festival By Eliot G. Garbauskas



I'VE GOT A FLAIR FOR LIFE.
...AND FOR EXPOSING MYSELF IN SUPERMARKETS.
ANYONE WANT TO GO ON A PICNIC WITH ME? I'VE GOT IT ALL PACKED AND READY. CHECK IT OUT!
OH GOD, THAT'S MY KID!
SO THAT'S A NO?

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

OKAY, HERE'S THE DILEMMA AS I SEE IT— BUSH WON TECHNICALLY, BUT GORE WON LITERALLY IT'S LIKE A GAME WITH MISCONFIGURATIONS WITH THE OUTCOME HINGING ON A DISPUTED CALL...
BUSH RUNS IF THE RECOUNTS DO FINAL, BUT WHAT IF AN INSTANT REPLAY SHOWS GORE WON IT UNDER STANDARD DO AND DON'T ANY THOUGHTS?
UM, EXCUSE ME, DUDE, DIDN'T THE DRAW BAN SPORTS ANALOGIES?
NO, ONLY IN THE BIG LECTURE COURSES.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

I'LL CHOP CARROTS FOR THE SALAD.
AAAA! I CUT OFF MY FINGER! CALL 9-1-1!
I REALIZE IT'D BE MORE CONVINCING WITH KETCHUP, BUT I'M SAVING THAT FOR WHEN I GRATE THE CHEESE.
HOW COME I ALWAYS HAVE TO GO SET THE TABLE?

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

I REALLY REALLY LIKE YOU!
YOU BORE ME.
OH REALLY?! WELL I WAS ONLY SAYING THAT TO GET YOU IN BED!!
I ACTUALLY HATE SPENDING TIME WITH YOU!!
THAT'S BETTER.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

PRESIDENT OF HARVARD? I'M AFRAID YOU'LL HAVE TO TAKE A MINOR, SIR.
NO WAY— I'M A LOCK! BUT FIRST I GOTTA GET 20,000 HERE!
I DON'T THINK SO, SIR. YOU NEARLY DIED OUT IN THAT BLIZZARD!
OH GIVE ME A BREAK, HONEY.
YOU KNOW WHAT HAPPENS WHEN THE BODY IS SUBJECT TO EXTREME COLD? THE BLOOD RETREATS TO THE HEART AND BRAINS! IT'S A RUSH LIKE NONE OTHER!
YOU MEAN, YOU NEVER SMOKED?
WELL, OBVIOUSLY DON'T YOU EVER LEARN?

Horoscopes

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): You need to find time to do some reading. The knowledge you pick up will be important in the future. Look into new philosophies that appear to be more suited to your needs.

Aries (March 21-April 19): You may feel limited due to your responsibilities. Don't spend more than you can afford on entertainment or luxury items. You must stick to your budget.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): You need to spend time with your partner. Trips, social events, or just an evening alone would be appropriate. Look into joining organizations that will bring you in contact with prestigious people.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): You can accomplish a lot if you present your ideas to superiors. You need to feel confident about yourself and your work. Don't let anyone criticize you unwarrantably. Stick up for your beliefs and your ideals.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): You will finally be able to get your hobbies off the ground. Get children involved if they show an interest. You need to do more together as a family. You can make favorable changes to your residence. Consider a games room.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): You will have problems with the women in your household. Try to be patient and don't be insensitive to their moods. Avoid creating melodramas.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Relatives will give you some sound advice if you are willing to share your troubles with them. Things will not be so bad as you first thought.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You will be taken advantage of if you don't pay close attention to your investments. Don't let anyone talk you into lending money or your belongings.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You will be emotional, which could lead to problems in dealing with your mate. Don't reveal your secrets, and you won't have any reason to worry. You will have problems with authority figures if you bend the rules.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You need to get out and mingle. You must look to those you trust for sound advice about your personal situation. You will have trouble justifying spending money.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Don't let someone lead you down the garden path. You must dig deep if you want to find out the whole truth. You can accomplish the most if you concentrate on your career.

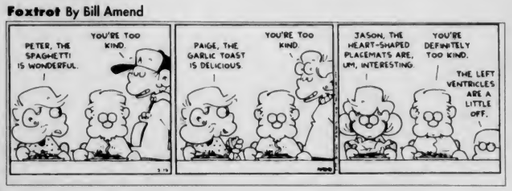
Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

SIR, IT WAS ONLY A POLITICAL CAMPAIGN LOSING THAT THE END OF THE WORLD. JUST LOOK AT BUSH!
IT BREAKS MY HEART TO SEE YOU PLUNGE HEADLONG INTO AN ABYSS OF CRUDITY!
BEFORE WHAT? YOU TALK BIG ABOUT?
IT JUST SO HAPPENS THAT I'M UNDER CONSIDERATION FOR A VERY PRESTIGIOUS AND LUCRATIVE NEW POST. IN D.C.!
PRESIDENT OF HARVARD? RIGHT?
SHORT LIST, MAN! DO YOU KNOW?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

OH, SO YOU'RE INSISTING THAT IT WASN'T YOU THAT RIPPED OPEN THE CHRISTMAS SALMON. FUNNY, 'CAUSE SATCHEL IS THE ONLY OTHER PERSON IN THE HOUSE.
YOU THINK IT WAS HIM TOO, EH?
SEE, IT'S REALLY MORE THE KIND OF THING YOU WOULD DO.
OH, YOU KNOW HIM. HE'S INTO WHATEVER I'M INTO.
WHAT ARE YOU GUYS DOING? EEW, RAW FISH. YUK.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



PETER, THE SPAGHETTI IS WONDERFUL.
YOU'RE TOO KIND.
PAIGE, THE GARLIC TOAST IS DELICIOUS.
YOU'RE TOO KIND.
JASON, THE HEART-SHAPED PLACEMATS ARE, UM, INTERESTING.
YOU'RE DEFINITELY TOO KIND.
THE LEFT VENTRICLES ARE A LITTLE OFF.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

RJ'S GUILT RELIEF YEAR 3000 ABSOLUTIONS FOR BLOWN RESOLUTIONS
I RESOLVED TO THINK ONLY THE BEST ABOUT OTHERS...
FIVE MINUTES INTO THE NEW YEAR, VERNE ASKED ME IF I THOUGHT THE LOCKED SEWER IN BOXERS OR BRIEFS
SO, I FORGOT. I DON'T HAVE A WAIST!
YOU'RE ABSOLVED.
THANK YOU.
IT COULD HAPPEN TO ANYONE!!
WWW.HEDGEWEB.COM

Quote of the Day

"The Troll will be your wingman!"

–Kobo

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Jamaican 3-Beans (vegan)

Grilled Cheese on Multigrain Bread (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Tavern Batter Fish (F, W)

Captain's Catch Sandwich (H)

DINNER

Chicken Pot Pie

Vegetable Pot Pie (vegetarian)

Louisiana Beans & Rice (vegan)

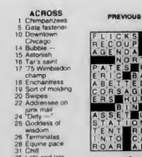
Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 38 LOW: 2	HIGH: 24 LOW: 18	HIGH: 37 LOW: 13

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
★
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thurs. Davinci & the Wrong Crowd funk $3 cover
Sat. Alan Marcus Blues Project blues $3 cover
Sun. 7th Street Jazz Band jazz no Cover
36 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst 413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS
1 Chimpanzees
5 Gasp fastener
10 Downtown Chicago
14 Bubbe —
15 Astonish
16 Tai's saint
17 '75 Wimbledon champ
18 Enchantress
19 Sort of molding
20 Swipes
22 Addressee on junk mail
24 "Dirty —"
25 Goddess of wisdom
26 Terminates
28 Equine pace
31 Chill
35 Lots and lots
37 — Bella
38 Milk and cookies, e.g.
40 Don Ho's neckwear
41 Comment
44 Presenter's ads
47 Achy
48 Phoenician port
49 Type of rouser
52 Fusses
53 Radio green
60 Belled bull
61 Horse color
62 Of ships
64 Tiberius' garb
65 Air-breather's organ
66 Correct (text)
67 Another name for Ireland
68 Ultimatum conclusion
69 River-mouth formation
70 Moms partners

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



DOWN
1 Make brush
2 Spaghetti
3 Eerily
4 — sneshshoc
5 Work the fleece off
6 Young lady
7 "How — doing?"
8 Fortunetelling card
9 Prague native
10 As a result
11 Spotted cat
12 Gymnast Korbut
13 Precursor
14 Writer of verse
21 Singer Loretta —
23 "Do — others"
25 Org.
27 Classroom furniture
29 Mexican pot
30 Swarm (with)
31 Jam ingredient?
32 Cheers for a matador
33 VIP's wheels
34 Crestfallen
35 Agencies
36 "— boom bah!"
39 Make a footnote
42 Map out
43 Raise
45 Degree holder
46 Described
50 Filleted
51 Point the finger at 52 Flair
54 Greek market
55 Not flexible
56 Audible sighs
57 Dashiell's contemporary 58 Spirit
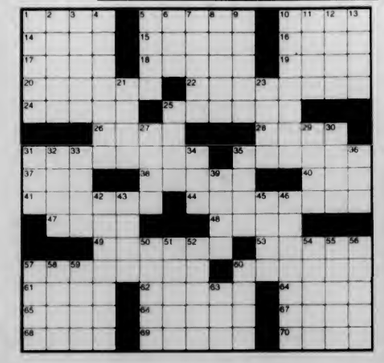
59 Pantry items
60 TV's Hawkeye
63 Crumb toter



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Kara Stokes Augusto

Minutemen turn the corner

Rhymer, team bounce back with romp over Rhode Island

UMass tri-captain Winston Smith

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It was just what the doctor ordered.

After getting sauteed by Temple Saturday at the William D. Mullins Center, the Massachusetts men's basketball team needed a squad like Rhode Island to come into Amherst almost as bad as a person with a cold needs a bowl of hot chicken noodle soup.

After all, the Rams had only one conference win to their credit, an absurdly low RPI ranking of 229 and were a meager 5-21 on the year.

Well, make that 5-22 on the season, after URI fell to the Minutemen, 82-67 last night at the Mullins Center. With the victory, UMass improved its record to 12-12 (10-3 Atlantic 10) going into the stretch run of the regular season.

The main scorers for the Maroon and White were all found on the low blocks. Center Kitwana Rhymer absolutely exploded, finishing with a career-high 30 points, to go along with six rebounds and five blocks. Rhymer was not the only threat down low for the Minutemen, however, as Jackie Rogers also notched a career-high in points, totaling 18 on the game to go along with a solid eight boards. Overall, the Minutemen outscored Rhode Island 65-32 in the paint, and just overpowered the opposition on both ends of the floor.

"It makes us a much better team [when our big guys are playing well]," UMass head coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "They stepped out on Monty [Mack] today and you have to make them pay for that. Kit did a good job of doing that."

"I thought we competed and played hard," URI head coach Jerry DeGregorio added. "But they were too physical and too strong for us."

Last time the two teams met, back on Jan. 30, the pace was slow and methodical, which did not turn out good for a Rams squad that would only muster 46 points. This time, however, they tried to come out running, and the strategy worked at first, as Rhode Island got off to a 10-6 lead behind back-to-back threes from Zach Marbury and Dinno Daniels.

"We have fits trying to score against UMass," DeGregorio said. "So we tried to push the ball and make it an up-tempo game."

The Minutemen kept hring the ball inside, though, and a Rogers up-and-under move gave his team the 12-10 lead with 14:38 remaining. Rogers would score again on the next possession, and would then cap off a 9-0 run a few minutes later by taking an alley-oop pass from Shannon Crooks and slamming it home to put his team up by nine.

"[Rogers] knows that he going to get the ball when he comes into the game," Flint said. "And he does a great job of scoring off the bench for us."

Rhode Island would later close to within three, at 26-23, but that is where Rhymer began to dominate, using a wide array of inside moves to total 13 of his team's next 16 points. By the time halftime rolled around, the Minutemen would be up 44-31, and from that point on the Rams would be unable to cut the lead into single digits.

"In the last five minutes of the first half I thought we did a good job of getting stops and moving the lead into double figures," Flint said.

Halftime heroes were plentiful for the Maroon and White. Rhymer already had 17 at the break and Rogers had eight of his own, but it was Shannon Crooks who contributed to his team's lead more than just about anybody, directing the offense flawlessly and dishing out a season-high seven assists in just one half. Although he would not have a single assist in the second frame, the junior point guard would still post a solid stat line of seven points, five rebounds and seven helpers by the time the final buzzer sounded.

The second half began in similar fashion to the way the first ended; with Rhymer dominating the Rams in all aspects of the game. His layup and the foul extended UMass' lead to 52-35 with 16:40 left, and a few minutes later he scored another basket to push the lead up to 19. With 9:43 remaining, Rogers once again joined in the inside fun, hitting a layup on one possession and then following it up with a jump hook less than a minute later.

"What killed us was their four and five men," DeGregorio said. "Rhymer was incredible. Whatever defense we tried, he was too strong and too physical."

From that point on, the only thing that remained a mystery was the final score, and the Maroon and White spent the last eight minutes of the game on cruise control, allowing Rhode Island to close the gap to 15 by the game's end.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kitwana Rhymer

One cloud on an otherwise sunny performance for the Minutemen, was the fact that Mack failed to score his customary 20 points for the first time in nine games. The senior shooting guard still managed to get 14 on 5-for-14 shooting, though, and he was also able to contribute to the cause in other ways, hauling down four rebounds and picking up four assists.

For URI, Marbury once again led the way with 21 points, while Tavorris Bell chipped in with 11. Andre Scott and Andrew Wafula also had decent offensive games, hitting a few jump shots and finishing with eight points each.

The tale of the sleeping giant

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

With the help of an animated crowd of hoop fanatics, UMass center Kitwana Rhymer (below) dropped a career-high 30 points on defenseless Rhode Island last night.

Once upon a time, in a far-off land, there was a village that was constantly invaded by monsters. The villagers would scream and yell at the monsters, but often it did no good. On one horrible day, huge Owls swooped in and just about destroyed the village.

But the next time the monsters came, the time in the form of massive Rams, the villagers smartened up. They woke up a giant who had come to live with them from another far-off land, a giant who often slept through the invasions.

But this time, the giant woke up. And boy, did he seem pissed.

Oh, so this tale may not seem all that familiar. But for those on hand to witness the Massachusetts basketball team's 82-67 thumping of visiting Rhode Island last night, it's a story that is known well. The fans, particularly in the student section behind the southern basket, played the part of the villagers. UMass center Kitwana Rhymer played the giant, awakened from a slumber of poor production to thwart the invading Rams.

And did he ever.

The 6-foot-10 senior scored his first points of the night on a short hook over URI - Marcus Evans, a trend that would continue through practically the entire game. The two teams sparred back and forth for the next six minutes until Rhymer again powered inside, twisting between Rams Evans and Andre Scott and popping a short shot to push UMass' lead to four.

"I started off kind of slowly in the early part of the first half," Rhymer said. "But pretty soon, I started beating up and hitting some shots."

Those in attendance recognized Rhymer's gradual awakening, and began a steady chant.

"LET'S GO KIT! LET'S GO KIT!"

Rhymer's next basket was one of many highlight-reel quality plays, a flying two-handed tip-in off a Shannon Crooks missed three that staked the Minutemen to a 28-23 lead. The Maroon and White pivot then sprinted across the hardwood in time to catch up to a UMass transition, where he was promptly leveled by Evans. Rhymer missed the second of his two free throws, but made instant amends with a monstrous block on URI's Zach Marbury on the ensuing Ram possession.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

"My job is to run the floor and block shots," Rhymer said. "And I'm happy to do just that. Blocks get not only me but everybody on our team fired up."

The fans also appreciated Rhymer's block party, as another chant began to rise from beneath the UMass hoop.

"KIT! KIT! KIT!"

The Virgin Islands original was nowhere near done, however. A mere three trips later he was at it again, spinning past Evans for an easy layup that brought the student section to its feet. The very next UMass trip saw Crooks fire a transition pass to Rhymer, whose dunk attempt somehow stayed down despite another back by Marbury. The play gave Crooks a season-high-tying six assists, and brought Rhymer into double digits with 11 points.

It also incited a hoom of applause from the almost 4,000 fans on hand.

"I really didn't expect the crowd to come out, but I'm glad they did and I'm glad they were into it," Rhymer said. "To tell you the truth, I was so locked in that I couldn't even hear them."

But Marbury couldn't help but hear the howls from beneath the southern basket, a chorus of chants that attacked the brother of NBA star Stephon Marbury in every conceivable way.

"STEPHON'S BETTER! STEPHON'S BETTER!"

"YOUR MOM IS BETTER!"

"DePINA'S BETTER!"

The junior guard smiled and shook his head at the crowd, but insisted later he had tuned the heckling out completely.

"You just lock into your game," Marbury said. "You don't even worry about the crowd."

Rhymer saw it otherwise.

"They were getting to Zach, badly," Rhymer said. "You could tell they had gotten inside his head."

While Marbury and company struggled with the crowd's sonic assault, Rhymer continued his own frontal attack. He swatted away another errant Ram shot with just over two minutes to go in the half, then rattled off five straight points to help UMass build a 44-31 lead at the break.

The early goings of the second half were like episode two of the Kit Show; a transition layup (and one, good) and an airborne putback jam from No. 33 pushed the Minutemen up by 16, and another three-point play underneath got the crowd back into its name game.

"KIT! KIT! KIT!"

Rhymer was now completely in a zone, finishing off fast breaks and muscling inside seemingly at will. He snatched a Mack breakaway pass from the air and hi a nearly impossible traffic layup (and one, no good) to give the Minutemen a 19-point edge with 13:25 to go. His final points came from the free throw line, and prompted an entirely new chant.

"THIRTY! THIRTY!"

The giant's last crack at the Rams came on a weak Marbury upfake, when Rhymer notched his fifth blocked shot of the night. The grateful villagers didn't need a final chant – they simply rang out a farewell chorus for URI with the only object the Rams could use to save themselves from the giant.

Car keys.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

Men's tennis falls to Ivy League foe Colgate, 5-2

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

Things definitely could have turned out differently for the Massachusetts men's tennis team on Saturday when it faced Colgate University at Hampshire College.

The 5-2 loss the Maroon and White suffered to the Red Raiders by no means tells the entire tale of this hard fought match. Led by No.1 player Steve Prisco and his doubles partner Brent Davis, the Minutemen looked strong after this tandem succeeded in annihilating the pairing of John Cohn and Eric Saccullo 8-2.

However, after the duo of Evan Paushter and Owen Fileti defeated the UMass team of Will Shaw and Todd Champeau all eyes looked to the experience of senior captain Bill Greener and the youthful energy of freshman Rory Theis to capture the much needed point. Unfortunately, the duo came up short in a long, arduous match against the tandem of Andrew Davis and Jon Bedard, 9-7.

"It was depressing how we lost the doubles point," Prisco said. "It's similar to the way we lost to UConn last semester."

"The doubles point was big," Greener said. "Rory and I thought we were in a position to win. We just didn't get it done."

The loss of momentum affected the singles play that followed as No.1 Prisco and No.2 Davis won the sole matches for the Minutemen 6-4, 1-6, 6-3 and 4-6, 6-2, 6-2 respectively. The strong win by Prisco answers a lot of questions about his shoulder problems, which were impairing his serve and volley play.

"All week my shoulder got gradually better," said Prisco. "I changed my service motion a little to take the pressure off."

Freshman standout Aron Gortman has also been a question mark for the UMass squad due to back spasms. After retiring in the second set of play to Red Raider Davis, it appears that the sensation from California will not be seeing game action any time soon.

"This is the worst health I've experienced since I've been here," said Gortman." I can't even move my back. I get a stim treatment everyday. It's not really helping. I need a break."

"I took a chance on him," said head coach Judy Dixon. But I learned a lesson. Aron won't be in again until he's healthy."

Aside from health problems, the Minutemen also faced some difficulty with Colgate's unexpected line-up changes. Dixon and crew believed that Paushter, a long time rival of Prisco's, would be at the No.1 or No. 2 spot, but due to health problems he played at the four.

"Their best player [Paushter] was playing at the four spot," Dixon said. "So our No.4, Will Shaw, had a tough match. Their line-up was a little skewey."

Yet, overall Dixon sees this first test of the season as a positive learning experience for the more vital Atlantic 10 matches to come.

"The top of our line-up played extremely well," Dixon said. "It was the first match of the year, their line-up wasn't expected and Aron isn't healthy. Overall, I'm pleased with their effort. I see this match as ninety-five percent positive."

The next challenge for the UMass squad will take place Saturday as the Minutemen face conference rival Duquense in Burlington, Vt.

"It's an important conference match," Greener said. "As a senior captain I need to step up. I have to have that in mind. I need to get match tough against Duquense."

Turn to GARAGE, page 3

Everyone's not up for garage

By Mark Ramirez
Collegian Staff

Amherst residents opposed to the construction of a downtown parking garage are fighting it two ways: by collecting signatures, and by suing the town. -

A special Town Meeting held Feb. 15 approved spending an additional $1 million on the parking garage by a vote of 114-67. The original cost was $4 million, with $3 million coming from the state and the rest from the town.

Alan Root is one of several people gathering signatures in the hopes of forcing a referendum. Those against the garage need to collect about a thousand signatures by Feb. 23 to force a town-wide vote on the issue. The number is 5 percent of the town's registered voters, as of the last presidential election.

If enough signatures are gathered, the Select Board has to set a date for the referendum in late March. A majority of people voting against the question posed to Town Meeting — spending an additional $1 million —would stop the parking garage project in its current form.

The additional $1 million would be taken out of the town's enterprise funds, such as transportation and water and sewer funds. Mary Wentworth said that taking the money from these funds was a strategic move, as putting to Town Meeting a proposal to borrow money would require approval from two-thirds of the vote instead of a simple majority.

Vincent O'Connor, a garage opponent also collecting signatures, said the town has never before taken money out of the water and sewer fund for a project unrelated to what the fund is for — not even for schools or the police station.

Molly Turner, a member of Amherst's transportation committee, said that the transportation fund, which is less than a year old, was created with the purpose of funding the parking garage. The fund was created by the town's finance director, Nancy Maglione, and is the money from town parking permits, fees and fines — money which once went into the general fund. Turner said the enforcement of parking regulations seems to have intensified as of late.

O'Connor believed most of the money in the fund comes from UMass students. He said that the transportation fund could be better spent. "If you're a UMass student this is your money," he said. "And the only thing that makes sense is to spend it on the bus system." Especially, he added, on bus service at night and between the campus and downtown. "Sixty additional spaces isn't going to do students any good."

The amount of students attracted to restaurants around the garage site because of the Off Campus Meal Plan, according to Root, is more than anything the project hopes to address. He says that with a current cost of $5.4 million, the town will have paid $90,000 for each added parking space.

"Are you kidding?" he said. "My car is only worth three. You have to maintain a sense of humor about this but it's not funny to people who might lose their jobs."

"It's important to give the entire community a voice." The gathering of signatures, he said, "has been a very spontaneous response." O'Connor is confident that they will be able to get the required signatures by Friday.

Meanwhile, a group

Turn to GARAGE, page 3

ALANA protests continuing

Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Students of color spoke out against the falling numbers in Asian, Latino, African, and Native American [ALANA] student enrollment at the University of Massachusetts yesterday at noon during the Black History Month Rally held on the steps of the Student Union Building.

Sponsored by the newly formed, independent alliance among students of color, Student Coalition Against Racist and Classist Education [SCARCE], the half hour rally was a compliment event which coincided with the "ALANA graveyard" that was assembled on Tuesday, Feb. 20 on the lawn on the side of the Student Union Building.

Each of the cardboard "headstones" in the "graveyard" had a real name of a student who was forced to leave UMass due to unjust treatment of the ALANA people, ranging from the lack of financial aid to racist attacks, printed on it. More "graves" will be added to the "cemetery" each day until the end of the month.

As noon approached, students began to gather on the steps, listening to the recorded words of various speakers from the Civil Rights Movement.

The recordings addressed topics such as the difference between the "field slave" and the "house slave" and how these stereotypes still feed into modern American society, about the hypocrisy of America, and how black people have become the victims of democracy.

Just past noon, political science senior Salwa Shamapande stepped up to the podium, forcefully announcing that the rally's theme would be Beating the Odds. "We beat the odds to come here," he solemnly said. "and we beat the odds to leave here."

He then invited senior Rene Gonzalez to come and be the first to officially address the audience.

"During Black History Month, we celebrate our African heritage," Gonzalez began. "However, Mrican heritage is something we should celebrate every day, every month, and every second of the year. For me, my heritage was one of resistance."

Gonzalez commented on his belief that ALANA students have forgotten how to fight, adding that organizations such as the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students were formed back in the day when people were willing to fight.

"I remember when Latino students use to wave their national flags with pride and walking into class was not simpls walking into a class; it was a statement," he called out to the transfixed crowd.

Grimly remarking how the spirij of revolution of 1960's is dying, he demanded, "We have forgotten what it was like to drink from a colored water fountain!"

Asking his fellow students to once again recapture the spirit of those before them, Gonzalez added with pride, "I'll always be a revolutionary, and I'd like to leave you with one last thought from Fidel Castro: 'We shall be revolutionaries or we shall not be.'"

The next speaker, senior Chris Rue, questioned the crowd, "Are you proud to be black?" Cheers erupted from the audience in response.

He asked, "Are you proud to be you?" The cheers echoed through the wind even louder.

"Because if you're black, you're beautiful!" he continued. "And if you're a woman, you're even more beautiful!" The applause thundered once again.

As things quieted down once more, he invited the audience to turn to the person next to them and say hello, adding that the biggest problem he sees in the black community is the fact

Turn to PROTEST page 3

RYAN BENHARRIS/COLLEGIAN STAFF

John Hanley at the front desk of his shop on Rt. 9

Marking up Amherst

"...for the first piece, you watch out for them, make sure they don't get something they'll regret."

-Ben Hartman tattoo artist

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

Tom Donohue wants a claddagh charm at the base of the shoulder.

"Where the triceps meet the deltoids, you know? Right at the bottom there. And I want the arms to be just like in the picture, but to come around my arm instead. You know?"

John Hanley, the tattoo artist at Solid Custom Tattoo in Amherst, nods slowly while staring at Donohue's muscular shoulder, and then breaks into a slow smile. He knows.

"How do you visualize it? How do you see it?"

Hanley and Donohue talk a little more until the visions in each of their heads align. As Hanley then goes to work on another customer, Donohue, a senior plant and soil science major at the University of Massachusetts, talks about some of his motivations for getting his ink.

"People try to get in touch with their heritage, where they're from. I'm obviously Irish, and it's never going to change. I'll be Irish until I die," Donohue explained. "I've always wanted to do it, I was just too lazy to go to Connecticut."

Now he doesn't have to.

Effective the first of February, tattooing became legal in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the first time in 38 years. Several parlors in the Amherst area have sprung up since then to fill the gap that an almost half-century ban had created.

It was amid the hepatitis scare in the '60s that the ban on tattooing was first passed and, despite the fact that hepatitis as a deterrent faded away soon thereafter, the law remained in the books, a remnant of Puritan restraint in a colony long since given over to sin.

Just last year, however, Massachusetts Superior Court Justice Barbara Rouse overturned the ban on the grounds that tattooing was a protected form of self-expression.

And so the pilgrimages of the young, the old, and all those in between to adjoining states such as Connecticut and Rhode Island came to an end, and anyone of legal age can get ink in Massachusetts.

The two closest parlors to the UMass campus are Solid Custom Tattoo and Piercing on Route 116 in Amherst and Loonar Tattoo and Piercing on Route 9 in Hadley.

Solid is a totally new establishment, which just opened its doors this past month. Hanley is the proprietor and sole artist on the premises, with an assistant who performs the piercing aspects of the business. It's a small establishment, with a couch, a foosball table, and some funky old-school Primus coming out of the stereo. Hanley himself is a laid-back, calm man who obviously takes pride in the running of his job.

Loonar is the established parlor in the area. Formerly known simply as Loonar Piercing, the business moved a couple doors down in their strip mall into a new, totally remodeled home to accommodate their expansion into the realm of tattooing. It's extremely large, with a big waiting area and several booths for the work to be done in. A TV shows cartoons and flip charts of work line the walls. Al Valenta and Mark Bode are the two artists for Loonar, while Ben Hartman still operates the business and performs the piercing duties.

And how do the two businesses feel about the presence of each other in such a short area?

"I'd rather be friendly with the competition. All the people in the [area] shops, they're all good. I wouldn't not send anyone to any of them," said Hanley.

"We're not really worried about [competition]," said Hartman. "There's definitely room for other people in the industry."

If competition is good for the consumer, then it is the aspiring inked person who wins in this contest, with two extremely qualified establishments so close together.

Both Valenta and Bode at Loonar have in the area of 10 years experience in the tattoo field. They were both previously employed for quite some time at a parlor called The Edge in Enfield, Connecticut, and were more than happy to relocate to the renovated Loonar.

Hanley at Solid got his start in the wrong way ("You can fuck up your friends until you figure out what you're doing, or you can get an apprenticeship, I fucked up my friends."), but recovered from his hesitant beginnings to become a professional at The Edge in South Windsor, Connecticut, for a year, followed by three years at The Edge in Pawtucket, Rhode Island, before packing up and moving to Amherst to open up his own place.

The reason why someone would move from successful, established shops in other states to new territory in the Five College area is blatantly obvious to anyone who steps into any of the local parlors: business is booming.

Turn to TATTOO, page 2

DAN SANTELLA-COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hanley inking a serious Grateful Dead fan.

tattoo

continued from page 1

It is 6 p.m. on a Tuesday night, and it's almost impossible to wedge oneself through the door at Loonar. Both Valenta and Bode are working in their booths, the waiting area is packed, and the frantic people behind the counter are struggling to serve all the people waiting to sign up for a tat or a piercing.

Solid opens at 1 p.m. most days. At 1 CVP.m. on that same Tuesday, there are no fewer then three people waiting for tattoos. Before 2 p.m. rolls around seven people will have come in to make an appointment, wait for a job right then, or just ask a question.

"Business has been pretty good," said Hanley. "There's definitely been a good response."

"The business is just frickin' crazy. I couldn't even tell if it's been tripled or quadrupled," said Hartman bluntly.

A large part of that frickin' crazy business comes careening out of this very campus.

"I get a lot of UMass kids," said Hanley, while Hartman echoes the same sentiment saying, "Most of the clientele is a lot of the college students."

It is just this popularity, this widespread enthusiasm for tattooing, that has some in government worried. When the ban ended it left the state in a lurch in that it had no backup plan, no regulation at all. For the time being, the regulation of the industry has been passed down to the local Boards of Health.

Are the local Health Boards cracking down on the parlors?

"We've had no problems [with the Hadley Board of Health]," said Hartman. "We're working hand-in-hand with them. Whatever needs to be done, we've already done it. We've gone above and beyond."

As for Hanley at Solid, "The Board of Health, I think, likes me. I didn't expect them to be very co-operative, but they were."

It is obvious as to why both these establishments have had no problems with health inspectors or government officials. They are both spotless. The tattooing areas are literally separated from the public areas, and the piercing areas are concealed altogether. All professionals wear rubber gloves at all times when performing their work (Hanley, on one tattoo, changed his gloves six times) and the autoclaves and other sterilization equipment are in full view and obviously used frequently. Sheets with the risks involved in the procedure and detailed care instructions are given to every client.

Risks? They exist.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN STAFF

The work is done, so it's time to check it out.

"A lot of people don't realize that the things are permanent. The one thing about being in this industry is that you have to watch out for people," Hartman said.

As such, Loonar policy is that, for a person receiving their first tattoo, they will not put it on such areas as the neck or the hand – places where it could have a negative impact on a person's life in the future, such as prohibiting them from certain types of employment.

According to Hartman, "For someone who's heavily tattooed it's different. But for the first piece, you watch out for them, make sure they don't get something they'll regret."

Hanley stresses the physical risks involved in actually getting a tattoo.

"Your nerves get all built up, then when your body realizes that it isn't that bad, all the energy has to go somewhere," he said while applying a wet cloth to the back of the neck of a client who got woozy in the middle of a job. "One time, I had one kid throw up on the floor right in my place when I was working in Rhode Island." He pantomimes the vomiting motion then laughs, and says that all the kid got was a tiny little star.

Hanley then gets the spaced-out boy in the chair a Coke to build up his blood-sugar, and when he's fully recovered finishes the art flawlessly.

The bottom line?

"I can sleep at night knowing that what I've done that night was completely safe," says Hartman. He's sitting alone in the Loonar waiting room, taking time out to give an interview, a break from mopping and cleaning before the store opens. It's going to be nuts tonight. It always is. He doesn't seem to mind in the least.

"It's like a free buzz," says Hanley, his own arms covered with tattoos of flowers and various other things. He squints slightly facing the light, then turns to his machine, makes it hum as he dips it in the ink, and goes back to work.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Five Weekly Collegians in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Sharon Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Farrenkopf Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Monks Photography Editor
Chris Bradeen Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager

Sarah Weaselboer Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Mulvaney Assistant Copy Editor
Many People Classified Assistants
Brent Brownell Assistant Business Manager
Anna Sullivan Assistant Production Manager
Katie Smith Assistant Advertising Manager

GODSMACK
www.godsmack.com
STAIND
www.staind.com
with special guests COLD and SYSTEMATIC
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
TICKETS ON SALE NOW!
MARCH 4
7PM SHOW • ALL AGES
get tickets at sfx.com
TICKETS AVAILABLE AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE AND ALL ticketmaster LOCATIONS. CHARGE BY CALLING (413) 733-2500 OR (617) 931-2000.

Life Sciences Career Fair

(in lieu of the biotech fair)

co-ops, internships AND permanent positions for sophomores, juniors, AND seniors

FEBRUARY 28, 2001
10 A.M. TO 3 P.M.
CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM

Industries represented include pharmaceuticals, environmental, government, biotechnology

Check "Events" on the Career Network web site for a list of participating organizations: www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Campus Career Network

Presented by: The Careers Offices for the Colleges of Food & Natural Resources and Natural Sciences & Math, and the BioSci Club protest

continued from page 1

that not enough people get to know each other.

Rue continued with his thoughts on low ALANA enrollment at UMASS. "You are paying them [the university] to teach you," he said, "I've heard it said that the university can't find enough qualified [ALANA] students to come here. That's not an excuse! There's no such thing as an excuse!"

He recalled how in the 1960's black students were often beaten, raped, or murdered during the race integration of schools.

"Once they got in, they [black students] still struggled!" he energetically pointed out, acknowledging the irony of the situation that the same struggle still continues today.

"Do you deserve to be here? Is this your school?" his voice boomed over the crowd. "Are you willing to fight for what you believe in? Are you willing to die for what you believe in?"

The crowd returned with hopeful cheers, suggesting that yes indeed, they were ready to fight back.

Finally, Shamapande once again stood before the crowd, ready to make his message heard.

"I've been here since the fall of 1996," he began. "People died for us to be here, and not in some far away place – right here in America – and down the street in Amherst. But why are we here [in college] now?"

He explained how he came to college to escape a broken home, just like many of his fellow ALANA students.

"A lot of us come from broken homes and broken communities, and we came running away from these homes to be here," Shamapande shouted. "We beat the odds to come here, but we've been running so hard, we've almost run past the point of college."

Explaining how UMass is a social institution, he told everyone that while they all have a responsibility to society as college students, as black students, they have a responsibility to overcome the injustices of that society.

He told of the numbers of ALANA students that had to leave the school due to injustices in the system and the affect it has on others.

"What am I saying to my little brother if I was to quit school and go home? [If I was to quit] what is the purpose of college then?" he asked, remarking on how he was almost one the black students forced out of the school to due program cuts.

"Please be willing to fight to stay at UMass," he implored the crowd. "Not everyone's name on the 'tombstones' fought to stay here. Some of them just gave up the first time they were told 'no.' Don't allow yourself to go home!" he persisted.

Shamapande presented the statistics "In 1997, 214 black students enrolled in the freshmen class. In 2000, only 119 black students enrolled, and in 1996, 218 Latino students enrolled in the freshmen class. However, in 2000, only 132 Latino students enrolled," as food for thought.

"What do you think that says?" he questioned. "This year, we're looking at budget cuts in ALANA student programs [programs that make sure ALANA students come to this university], even though the school's overall budget actually went up this year."

He remarked how it disgusts him to see the numbers of students of color decrease every year when UMass was a school built during the time of slavery with the purpose in mind to educate more black people.

"Let's talk about black graduate students," he insisted. "Where are they? The community of undergraduate black students could learn a lot from black graduate students, but we can't seem to find each other."

A female voice from the crowd determinately answered, "That's because there aren't many of us here!"

Shamapande agreed wholeheartedly, acknowledging that it is a big part of the problem. "Racism is not passive," he added. "We have to fight it everyday."

At the rally's conclusion, he employed everyone to sign the a poster which stated, "Education is more than a classroom; It is an environment. Keep diversity alive at UMass."

The poster would then be sent to President William Bulger as a sign that ALANA students will not stand by passively and watch their numbers dwindle into nonexistence.

On the flip side of the poster, the words "I couldn't stop the integration of schools in the 70's, but I can stop it at UMass," were printed, a sentence which SCARCE considers to be President Bulger's attitude towards UMass ALANA enrollment.

Shamapande's final thought, "You change the environment you live in," rang through the air as students began to disperse.

However, not everyone was as optimistic for the future as Shamapande.

Exercise science major senior Marcus Belsoe believes, "The only way I think anything is going to change is if we start reaching our hands into the university's pockets, the way the university dips into ours."

Belsoe responded to the rally with doubt, worrying that it was not as affective as he would have hoped.

"It's because a rally is just people talking [that makes it ineffective]," he said. "When students take over buildings and once people actually slow down the productivity of the university, that's when they [the university] start listening to you."

Commenting that unless action is taken on a regular basis, the University will not take ALANA issues seriously, he added, "Shit needs to be thrown every single day, and that's why they [the rallies] don't work."

Wanting to articulate that the issue of low ALANA enrollment is much more than just a bunch of numbers in a statistics report, Belsoe declared, "Remember my face and the anger in my voice."

Shamapande believes that the rally is at least a good start towards change. "I think it [the rally] was very affective because we're fighting an atmosphere of complacency."

He explained how his goal is to keep ALANA issues in the forefront of everyone's minds through various programs, such as tonight's SCARCE meeting at 6 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge and holding another rally, scheduled for next Thursday.

"We pretty much try to have an event every day," he remarked. "We're even thinking about going to Boston before spring break to speak with some of the University's trustees and to talk to President Bulger and tell him just what is going on at UMass Amherst."

Gettin' Ready

Students gathered last night preparing for this semester's MASSPIRG.

garage

continued from page 1

opposed to the garage has filed a lawsuit against the town of Amherst. Wentworth, one of the plaintiffs, says the town has not demonstrated a need for a new parking garage. She adds that the proposed site is the wrong location because building there will disrupt all of downtown for 14 months or longer.

"There will be a negative impact on businesses," she said. "Especially the small ones that don't have enough capital to pull them through that time."

Wentworth said the garage would also encourage people to bring cars downtown and cause congestion.

"It's the wrong way to go," she said. "We should be looking for ways to help people not use cars as much."

In the long run, according to Wentworth, the garage will "change the unique character of Amherst. [The garage project] is driven by developers who want to make money."

Critics also object to the cost of the project. "People have come to see that it is ridiculously expensive, even those who want more spaces," said Wentworth. She added that a net gain of 60 parking spaces isn't enough, especially with some allocated to monthly rentals.

According to Michael Pill, lawyer for the plaintiffs, the main complaint of the lawsuit involves safety and traffic issues, as well as some questionable waivers of zoning bylaws, such as the narrowing of parking spaces. Cost-effectiveness has also become an issue at this point, he said.

The lawsuit, according to Wentworth, is funded by donations. The case will be argued in Boston Land Court on March 2.

Write for News!

Your Ticket To CHINA
Internship Program in Shenzhen, China

Spend a year teaching English conversation in a school in Shenzhen, China's fast-growing economic miracle adjacent to Hong Kong. This bustling city of four million offers modern housing, a warm climate, beaches, and is only a half-hour train ride to Hong Kong.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PROGRAM
Teach English speaking and listening skills in a Shenzhen school, and learn Mandarin Chinese. Each semester you earn 6 credits from the University of Memphis (transferable to other universities). 3 credits in teaching English as a Foreign Language and 3 credits in Chinese. August 23, 2001 to June 30, 2002

COMPENSATIVE
- One round-trip ticket
- Free Faculty housing and some meals. Apartments have air-conditioning and TV. Married couples can be accommodated.
- Stipend 3,000 Yuan per month (approx. $360)
- Paid 3-week vacation at Chinese New Year in January/February
- Vacation travel bonus 4,000 Yuan (approx. $480) at the end of the program

For Detailed Information -
Please contact: Professor William O'Donnell, Univ of Memphis
Phone: 901-678-4584 • Fax: 901-624-3198 or 678-2226
Email: chinapgm@cc.memphis.edu or visit our website at: http://www.people.memphis.edu/~chinapgm/

sponsored by The University of Memphis An Affirmative Action / Equal Opportunity University

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration – 11am in the Jones Library Conference Room
(43 Amity St – downtown Amherst)
MERCYhouse It's a church! www.knowmercy.org

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
2 5 3 - 7 8 7 9
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

IT'S YOUR BODY
If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

Trip-On: Amsterdam Barcelona Berlin Brussels Dublin London Madrid Paris Rome
PACKAGES INCLUDE: • Roundtrip airfare • 2 nights accommodation • Airport transfers† • Travel Card† • Camera, document organizer, discounts, guidebooks, maps and more.
STARTING AT London $444*
Madrid $502*
Amsterdam $509*
Rome $499*
44 Main Street
413-256-1261
counciltravel.com
Council Travel
America's Leader in Student Travel
†Select cities only.
*Prices are per person, double occupancy, based on departures from Hartford Bradley and minimum 2-night stay. U.S. departure taxes and airport fees are additional. Departures from other major cities are available. Prices are subject to change.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, February 22, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com
4
The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Help Amherst out
Build the garage

In the debate that has been recently raised about the eventual building of a parking garage in downtown Amherst, the pros of the argument have far outnumbered the arguments against. It is obvious that the garage is a perfect solution to many problems.

These are the reasons that we feel that the proposed garage in downtown Amherst should be built:

- It can only help the downtown business community. How many times have you felt like going downtown to Antonio's or Rao's and realized that you'd rather just stay in your room because there was no possible way you'd ever find a place to park? How many UMass students have given up the search for a space and simply returned to campus in a haze of frustration?

Downtown Northampton is a rough facsimile of downtown Amherst with one exception – it has plentiful parking. There are public lots upon public lots, and even, yes, a parking garage. Part of the reason that downtown Northampton thrives so much is that people have access to it – access that is lacking in much of Amherst.

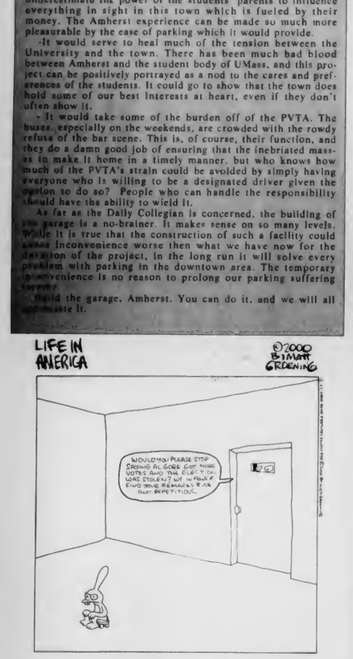
- It will increase the appeal of Amherst to parents. Never underestimate the power of the students' parents to influence everything in sight in this town which is fueled by their money. The Amherst experience can be made so much more pleasurable by the ease of parking which it would provide.

-It would serve to heal much of the tension between the University and the town. There has been much bad blood between Amherst and the student body of UMass, and this project can be positively portrayed as a nod to the cares and preferences of the students. It could go to show that the town does hold some of our best interests at heart, even if they don't often show it.

- It would take some of the burden off of the PVTA. The buses, especially on the weekends, are crowded with the rowdy refuse of the bar scene. This is, of course, their function, and they do a damn good job of ensuring that the inebriated masses in make it home in a timely manner, but who knows how much of the PVTA's strain could be avoided by simply having everyone who is willing to be a designated driver given the option to do so? People who can handle the responsibility should have the ability to wield it.

As far as the Daily Collegian is concerned, the building of the garage is a no-brainer. It makes sense on so many levels. While it is true that the construction of such a facility could cause inconvenience worse then what we have now for the duration of the project, in the long run it will solve every problem with parking in the downtown area. The temporary inconvenience is no reason to prolong our parking suffering forever.

Build the garage, Amherst. You can do it, and we will all appreciate it.



LIFE IN AMERICA
©2000 BERNARD GREENING
WOULD YOU PLEASE STOP DRAWING ALL OVER EVERYTHING? AND THAT'S NOT MY LUNCH YOU'RE EATING!

A liberal taxation

ROB SCHULZE

Oh, the bitter irony of the liberal required to pay taxes.

Yeah, that's right. I owe the IRS three hundred and fifty smackers. Trey and a half clams. I, Rob Schulze, for the very first time in my life, will be giving money to the government in tax form.

It comes as quite a shock. I've been working ever since I turned sixteen and Mr. Deluca gave me a job as a baghoy at Stop & Shop. In the almost five year interval since then, tax time has been a welcome boon to my checking account, as Uncle Sam has cut me a decently fat check with alarming regularity.

This year, however, it is my auspicious fate to have crossed whatever invisible barrier separates the boys from the men and entered into the realm of the responsible, tax-paying citizen. They want my money, and they are damn well going to get it.

It serves me right.

All these years of being a bleeding-heart flaming liberal hippie bastard are finally catching up to me. Who wants to extend welfare? I do! Who wants socialized health care? Me! Who wants to spend massive amounts of money on everything from public schools to environmental conservation to affirmative action? Rob! Rob! Rob!

I'm the one who wants the government to suck up as much money as possible from the populace because, quite frankly, the populace doesn't know what to do with it. The populace uses its cash to buy Twinkies, 'N Sync posters, and Jar-Jar Binks memorabilia. The government, in my view, could use that same money to make sure that single moms have the capability to lead a productive and healthy life for themselves and their children. And, to do this, the government must get the money from the people, usually by taxing the living bejeesus out of them.

Sure, I definitely support the whole movement for taxing the rich until they scream for mercy, but I also think that, since everyone would conceivably benefit, that everyone should give, and that definitely includes middle-class slobs such as myself.

It was so great in theory. Now I have to actually live up to it.

And so I've been bitching and whining as though I were some sort of Republican or something. I've put sad, sarcastic away messages on my IM about the cruelty of it all. I cried to anyone who would listen. I have bemoaned the loss of $350 to the Internal Revenue Service far more than I ever regretted the loss of, say, my innocence, or my hair. Well, not my hair. But I still hitched about taxes.

Then I stopped.

I realized that this is the great test of the liberal. Any person must someday be called upon to put their belief to the test – the patriotic soldier when war breaks out, the religious person upon their deathbed, the pro-choicer with the pregnant girlfriend, the gay-rights activist who's son comes out of the closet. These are the times when people are put to the test, when they have to, once and for all, face the hypocrisy test and practice what they preach.

The Democrat at tax time faces no situation near as serious as the ones I've pointed out above, but the parallel is the same. There is no choice, of course, regarding paying taxes, unless you want to experience a federal penitentiary from the inside. There is the choice, however, of becoming bitter. Of saying 'Why me? Why should I pay for other people's misfortunes? Can't these people just get a job and let me keep my hard-earned cash?' This is the test – to resist saying these things, to keep the ideals, to keep the greater good in mind. I passed.

> "I'll realize that my minor sacrifice can, when combined with the sacrifices of those around me, make a huge difference in lives. This is the core of liberalism, which I've always verbally embraced, and now do also in actuality."

When April 15th does roll around, I am going to sign my check with pride. I am going to picture what my $350 is going to do within the great big-governmental scheme that dominates us all. I'll picture chalk in an inner-city classroom somewhere. I'll see the single waitress in a dead-end town buying food for her two children. I'll realize that my minor sacrifice can, when combined with the sacrifices of those around me, make a huge difference in lives. This is the core of liberalism, which I've always verbally embraced, and now do also in actuality.

Of course, no one else in the universe feels this way besides me, which is why taxes are mandatory and not on a volunteer basis. So keep on bitching about the hit your wallets take on tax day, but take comfort, if you can, that at least Teddy Kennedy and I are happy.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Write for Ed/Op !

Last call:
Gate 83

SHARON STIMPFLE

Pushing my way through the revolving doors, with my book-bag loosely swinging from one arm, I make my way into the most dreadful of places. No, not the Textbook Annex (the last time I pulled that maneuver they nearly called the swat team after I forgot to check in my bag). I am speaking of a far scarier place: the New York City Port Authority Bus Terminal. With a sack full of Bounty scented clothes weighing down my right arm and a grocery bag nestled in my left, I trudge my way to the elevators in a comatose-like state. It's 6 a.m. I haven't been up this early since last semester's eight o'clock Consumer Studies final, and even then I had to "consume" five cups of coffee just to keep my eyelids from clamping at the scene.

It seems like only minutes ago that I had been stuffing my "one more day and I'll be naked" laundry bag into my sister's car, anticipating an extended weekend in my small hometown. In reality, however, it had only been five minutes since my father's Ford Taurus jerked to a stop in front of this ghastly building and I was sent on my way with a mere apologetic dismissal.

It's a funny thing about going home. This past week, in the heat of classes and roommate tiffs, I had found myself feeling a bit like Dorothy in search of her ruby shoes. I was in pursuit to escape wicked Western Massachusetts, a fersey girl longing for her Garden State. Of course, once home, it occurred to me that even Kansas cannot go on without its' own insanity. I have always prided the fact that a man who chooses to graffiti "No Dogs on Grass" around the perimeter of his sidewalk, so as to keep the state of his property in a "respectable" condition (naturally) lives just houses away. And though the majority may think so, it is not an uncommon sight to catch Mr. Johnson poking through the neighborhood trash in search of some unfurnished wounder to feature in his upcoming garage sale. I suppose, however, I had never fully realized the infectious nature of these abnormalities until this past weekend, as I'm now left to wonder if this epidemic has slipped through the cracks of our picketed fence and spread into my own home.

Why just this morning my mother had been pushing breakfast on me until, finally, her last attempt was left chasing after our car with rollers in hair and banana in hand; ranting and raving about the long trip ahead of me, as if I didn't know. And then it had been no more than five minutes on the Palisades Parkway with dad before the war of the radio stations would begin, at last settling on Q104.3, leaving just enough quality time to learn that my parents' favorite show has since become "Temptation Island." I had always known that my absence would prove detrimental to the 'rents, for the youngest of four falters to leave the nest with these worrisome thoughts, but I had never imagined such grave effects.

So here I am – a small coffee and a raspberry filled Krispy Kreme donut later – standing on line at the Peter Pan ticket gate. In moments I would discover that the 7:30 had gotten cancelled, though an 8:30 was well on its way, or so the nasal-toned ticket agent who could have walked away with a Golden Globe nomination for the most vicious of deliveries informed me. And so it is that, once again, Peter has let me down, for there's been tension in our relationship since that wintry afternoon last March when the ride back to Amherst went far beyond its' five hour limit.

Trekking my way to Gate 83, I notice that my book-bag is now dangling by the elbow in despair and my Bounty scented clothes seeming heavier (perhaps from the added burden placed upon them to perfume the polluted air around me). And, after placing my grocery bag (since signatured by a tired hand) on the floor, I slump down beside the nearest wall and join my fellow wanderers in the waiting. There are those who will carry only the clothes on their back to their destination, and then there are those who trail bags of luggage behind them. Regardless of what the occasion, the when one finds himself in this no-man's land, in my case between my birthplace and my rightful place (both plagued with insanity, but both to which I belong), when feelings of loneliness are apt to sneak upon you. Reaching into my bag of clothes in search of a sweater for the wait ahead, I find a breakfast bar that my mother had somehow managed to pack, and secretly smile within.

Oh what measures a mother will take to prevent a child's empty stomach, and oh what a trip a UMasser will endure to return to the Minutemen battleground – for stops in Hartford and Springfield are yet to be made.

Sharon Stimpfle is a Collegian Columnist.

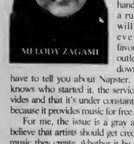
The day the music died: The Napster saga continues...



MELODY ZAGAMI

A little over one week ago, your music was taken from you. A United States District Court Judge handed down a ruling that will force everyone's favorite music outlet to shut down. I don't have to tell you about Napster. Everyone knows who started it, the services it provides and that it's under constant jeopardy because it provides music for free.

For me, the issue is a gray area. I do believe that artists should get credit for the music they create, whether it be monetary or a copyright. However, I believe that the whole purpose of music is that it be enjoyed in an open forum, like the one Napster has created. Napster allows you to share the music you love with others.

Music makes a good time even better, and it helps you forget about life for awhile. We've been fortunate enough to have Napster for most of our college careers. In the days before Napster, party music wasn't half as easy to plan and record companies could trick us in to paying seventeen bucks for a CD. What college student can afford to pay seventeen dollars for a CD? I don't know about you, but I'm not and I've begun to consider putting everything in my apartment up for bid on eBay. Who really needs a bathroom sink anyways? It just takes up space.

Artists, most notably Dr. Dre and Metallica, have championed against Napster. Last May, Metallica sued Napster for copyright infringement and racketeering. Dr. Dre's suit followed. These artists claim that Napster and its clients (ie. their fans) steal from them and threaten their livelihood. This is the best part of the whole issue, because I've seen Dr. Dre's abode on MTV's Cribs. I'm sure you've seen Cribs, and if you haven't, you're missing an exclusive look into the world of stars. Dr. Dre's "crib" is a fully loaded, rapper/producer/chronic lovers pad. He's got more gold in his house than O.D.B's got in his teeth. And the cars, oh God, the cars. The man's got a Mercedes dealership in his garage. I hardly see how song kid downloading "Forgot about Dre" in his dorm room is taking from the good doctor's wealth. Metallica actually brought a list to court. This list contained the names of all their fans who "illegally" enjoy their music.

I'm sorry, but isn't the sole purpose of the unknown little band that plays in the basement to create music that others can enjoy? I've seen plenty. Behind the Musics to know that, yes they do it for the chicks, the fame and the guaranteed substance abuse. It seems that in the beginning, though, it's about the music, it's about people getting together and singing and having a good time.

To say that the open forum which Napster has created is thievery is ridiculous. Market studies have shown that CD sales haven't lowered since the onset of Napster and that most artists get their primary income from concerts and promotion, not CD sales.

Napster executives say that they have been trying to devise a service that will provide music without infringing copyright laws and artist's rights. The new service will cost a monthly fee, just like an internet service, and likely charge somewhere between 10 or 20 bucks a month. This is a start. It seems fair and will, thankfully, allow Dre to maintain his Benz fetish (and I thought shoes were costly). If you're a frequent user of Napster, than it will be worth the fee. If you are only a dabbler in the world of downloadable music exchange, than you will be forced to go to Newbury comics where you will pay at least $11.99 for some CD that you really only want for a couple of tunes. Then, as you head for the register, you're sidetracked by all those great little toys they have on display. Cause hey, you might need a "Fat Bastard" poseable doll and some of those clever "while you were stoned" message cubes. So now you've spent twenty-five bucks. That twenty-five bucks was supposed to be for the course packet you needed last week.

For true music fans, Napster is wonderful for the sheer fact that some of the music that's available cannot be found anywhere else. Napster also allows the smaller bands to be recognized. If an artist isn't on "TRL," Top 40 radio or playing on the "Late Show" you have to find them yourself or be introduced to them through another outlet. For the past three or so years, Napster has changed that. What if they don't reach an agreement with the courts? If they can't agree on a set price, or the recording industry doesn't accept it, then Napster could be a thing of the past.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

THAT'LL BE $159.27.
WHAT?!
YOU'VE GOT NINE CDs HERE, KID.
I KNOW, BUT I FIGURE WITH THE COURTS PUTTING THE SCREWS TO NAPSTER, YOU HAVE A GREAT OPPORTUNITY TO WIN BACK FORMER CUSTOMERS LIKE ME.
BY DOING WHAT?
LETTING ME HAVE THESE FOR FREE.
SOME PEOPLE HAVE NO BUSINESS SMARTS.

"CAN YOU TAKE THE ORANGE LINE TO CRETE?" ASKED AN ANGRY MINOTAUR. "I'M GONNA BE LATE FOR WORK..." © 2001

ARTS & LIVING
Thursday, February 22, 2001 The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Design by Mike Kulak

WHO DID WIN

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

The 43rd annual Grammy Awards were presented last night by the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences at the Staples Center in Los Angeles. NARAs didn't allow any one artist or group to walk away with a sweeping victory this year. This was the Year of the Toss-up, in stark contrast to the 1999 and 2000 shows where Lauryn Hill and Carlos Santana racked up a heap of trophies. Fourteen performances provided musical entertainment to the prestigious award show where the actual awards took a backseat to the surrounding hullabaloo of this year's nominees.

EMINEM CONTROVERSY

The show, hosted by The Daily Show comedian Jon Stewart, was surrounded by a hubbub of debate due to a bizarre duet between controversial homophobic rapper Eminem and openly gay pop icon Sir Elton John. Onstage, Slim Shady performed his nominated song, "Stan" – about an imaginary fan's lethal obsession with him – in a duet with John. The blond bomb thrower performed behind a huge video screen in a morose background sitting on a bed opposite John who played the piano.

Despite the odd coupling, the hauntingly beautiful ballad was performed without any noticeable tension between the two opposite musicians. At the end the two hugged and amicably joined hands. Opponents who accused him of homophobia (Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation) and misogyny (National Organization for Women) demonstrated outside the show in a "Rally Against Hate" protest.

Nevertheless, Eminem, who won two Grammys last year, racked up three awards last night. He garnered awards for Best Rap Solo Performance (for "The Real Slim Shady") and Best Rap Performance by a Duo or Group (for his work on Dr. Dre's "Forgot About Dre"), and Best Rap Album (for The Marshall Mathers LP). While accepting the latter, the man who asked "you think I give a damn about a Grammy" on record said "What should I say first?" when he appeared awestruck at his win. "I guess first of all I want to thank everybody who looked past the controversy to see the album for what it was and what it wasn't," quipped the rapper. The wins will surely create fiery debates between NARAS and gay and women's organizations for at least the next week.

Michael Greene, President of the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, addressed the issues that have created stormy arguments in entertainment recently. Greene stated the "music has always been the voice of rebellion." The NARAS chief also spoke out against censorship: "We can't edit out the art that makes us uncomfortable."

Eminem's mentor, Dr. Dre, in addition to sharing the Best Rap Performance By a Duo or Group award with Eminem, the rapper also grabbed Producer of the Year, Non-Classical.

Steely Dan's Two Against Nature won Album of the Year honors, an award most industry insiders thought was going to Eminem's The Marshall Mathers LP. The Best Pop Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal and Best Pop Vocal Album awards also went to Steely Dan.

U2, DESTINY'S CHILD, HILL SEE 'BEAUTIFUL DAY'

U2 performed "Beautiful Day," one of the most memorable acts of the night. The group was unable to earn any nominations for its latest album, All That You Can't Leave Behind, since it was released after the eligibility period. Despite the hampering eligibility rules, the 80's rock band earned some of the biggest awards of the night.

The group snatched the Best Rock Performance by a Duo or Group. They also garnered two of the biggest honors of the night – Record of the Year and Song of the Year awards for the smash hit "Beautiful Day," which was released before the eligibility dead-line. (To clarify the differ-ence: The

Turn to PREDICTION, page

WHO SHOULD HAVE WON

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Staff

By the time you read this, the 43rd annual Grammy Awards will have come and gone. As I sit at my computer on Tuesday night, with my time machine broken yet again, I can only speculate who will win. But why is it that the pundits, in all their infantine wisdom, spend so much time and energy speculating who will win. What they should be speculating is who should win. As any Grammy watcher knows, those who do win, and those who should win are two entirely different situations.

The standards for the Grammy's are difficult too determine. Are they based on artistic merit? Popularity? A combination of both? The answer seems to be the latter. Even though some (morons) have questioned my musical tastes, I written this column to pay tribute to the artists that I feel are deserving of one of those little gold things. The fact is the academy" (whoever they are) is too conservative to recognize musical genius like I do. What the academy needs is someone hip, someone with an ear to the streets like me. Therefore, regardless of how they actually did go down, here are the ways things should have gone down last night at the Grammy's.

Record of The Year: The Nominees: "Say My Name"-Destiny's Child, "Bye Bye Bye"- N'Sytic, "Beautiful Day"- U2, "Music"; Madonna, "I Try" Macy Gray: Most of these songs were actually at their popularity peck around Grammy time last year. Still, these are apparently the best group of "records" the academy could come up with. Right off the bat, I'll throw out "Beautiful Day". It's not that it's poor song, it's just that it made little impact and had no amount of inventiveness. The winner of this category should be able to meet two criteria: 1. It should have some artistic merit. 2. It should have been a song that helped to define music over the past twelve months. ie. a song that is simultaneously identifiable with the past year in music. In that case the winner should be 'Bye Bye Bye". True, it wasn't written by the performers, but that is criteria for the "Best Song" category, not this one. Love it or hate it. "Bye Bye Bye" is a song that will go down as a pop classic. In some ways it pains me to pick "Bye Bye Bye" because of the boy band stigma, but it's not as if the category Is full of great songs. "I Try" and 'Music" stick out as well crafted creative songs. But they aren't artistically good enough to overcome the mass appeal of "Bye Bye Bye".

Album of The Year: The Nominees: Midnight Vultures- Beck, The Marshall Mathers LP"- Eminem, Kid A- Radiohead, You're the One– Paul Simon, Two Against Nature- Steely Dan: For providing originality, controversy, humor, and musical brilliance all in one, Eminem is my pick. In the ultra-repetitive world of hip-hop music, Eminem managed to make a truly unique record that played well in the both the hood and the burbs. The others were all excellent albums, but none of them had the impact of The Marshall Mathers LP.

Song of the Year: The Nominees: "Beautiful Day"- U2, "I Try" Macy Gray, "I Hope You Dance"- Lee Ann Womack, "Say My Name"-Destiny's Child. "Breath" Faith Hill: Since this is a songwriters award, the song with the most lyrical substance should win. Its production, and voice altering that carry "Say My Name", not it's lyrics. The only song that stands out from the mundane pack is "I Try", hence it's my pick.

Best New Artist: The Nominees: Shelby Lynne, Brad Paisley, Papa Roach, Sisqo, Jill Scott: The Best New Artist category has managed to lose some of it's stigma that gave it the reputation that made it - at least in terms of hick - the musical equivalent of walking under a ladder, with the likes of Sheryl Crow, and Leann Rhymes receiving the award over the past few years. First off, is Sisqo really a "new" artist? I guess he is if you don't count the fact that it's been almost three years since he made his recording debut with Dru Hill. Brad Paisley? Give me a damn break. Country should stick to their own awards show. Jill Scott is a decent non-popish R&B singer, but isn't "Best New Artist" material in my book. (A book which is not on the New York Times Best Seller List by the way) I have no clue who Shelby Lynne is. The Collegian's Music Editor, the esteemed Michael Delano, told me she is better than Papa Roach, but since I've never heard her, I can't in good conscious pick her. Therefore, I'll take Papa Roach since he's the only one left. In all seriousness P-Roach is deserving of this award. He had two hit singles and videos that really rocked, which is more than the others can say.

Best Rap Album: The Nominees: And Then There Was X- DMX. The Marshall Matthers LP- Eminem, Life and Times of Shawn Carter: Vol 3- Jay-Z, Country Grammar- Nelly. Dr. Dre-2001. For once, a category with multiple strong candidates! Me being a huge Nelly fan and honorary member of the St. Lunatics, I would love to see my boy Nelly win....for sure. However, DMX, Dre, and Eminem are clearly the most deserving as each of their albums was an inarguable classic. But since I have to settle on one, I'll go with Eminem since I also picked him for "Album of the Year". Outcast's Stankonia would have been a welcome addition to the field, but it just missed the Academy's inane cutoff date (October 1, 2000). Oh well, maybe next year.

Best Rock Album: The Nominees: Crush- Bon Jovi, Mad Season Matchbox 20, There is Nothing Left To Lose-Foo Fighters, The Return of Saturn- No Doubt, The Battle For Los Angeles- Rage Against The Machine. Rage clearly stands out from the pack here. Political Activism and vicious guitar riffs defined this album from one of the most fiery and talented rock bands of all time. I wonder how and why Bon Jovi was nominated in this category. Then I remembered that this is the Grammy's.

The group snatched the Best Rock Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal award given to the artist, the song to the songwriter.)

Destiny's Child performed a medley of their mega-hits "Independent Woman Part I" and "Say My Name" in front of a large backdrop of the two videos. Despite suffering several lineup changes over the past year, the group garnered two out of their four nominations – Best R&B Song and Best R&B Performance by a Duo or Group With Vocal for "Say My Name."

Sexy Nashville crooner Faith Hill, another triple winner for the evening, performed her ubiquitous hit "Breathe" behind a montage backdrop of digital paintings and a full piece orchestra. Hill earned Best Female Country Vocal Performance for "Breathe," and Best Country Album of the same name, and Best Country Collaboration With Vocals for "Let's Make Love," which she recorded with her husband Tim McGraw.

MADONNA SNUBBED?

A rumored duet by mutual admirers, Britney Spears and Madonna, apparently failed to consummate. In fact, Britney wasn't even in attendance for the big night.

Instead, Madonna opened the telecast with a show-stopping performance of her infectious hit "Music," complete with five giant video screens, introducing the pop goddess by way of a small clip from her upcoming "What It Feels Like For A Girl" video, to a fast-flicker montage that covered images from her kitschy "Like a Virgin" days on through to her raved-up "Beautiful Stranger" guise. The Material Mom rolled onto the stage in a huge classic Cadillac driven by pint-sized, 13 year-old rapper Lil' Bow Wow, that was detailed with the reflective finish of a disco mirror ball. Madonna emerged from the back seat of the car looking glamorous in a full-length fur coat and a fancy hat, but quickly peeled those off to reveal a tight leather jacket and a pair of baggy, bell-bottomed jeans. Below the jacket the words "Material Girl" were emblazoned on a tight white t-shirt. The Maternal Girl, however, only earned one win (Best Recording Package for Music) out of her four nominations.

Macy Gray won Best Female Pop Vocal Performance for "I Try." The gruff-voiced singer also performed the song on stage, decked in a long purple gown complete with pink knee-high boots.

Shelby Lynne won the Best New Artist award, surprising the industry whose bets had been placed on "Thong Song" crooner Sisqo. Lynne appeared a bit peeved for her win after being in the business for thirteen years and releasing countless albums.

Moby was joined in performing a spectacular, psychedelic rendition of his "Natural Blues" by Jill Scott and, fittingly, the Blue Man Group. Moby played guitar, Scott kept the vocals in check, and the Blue Men played their signature instruments – tube pipes and then switched over to drums – all of which earned the trio a standing ovation. Jon Stewart later cracked, "I saw the Blue Man Group without their make-up backstage...it's the guys from Kiss!"

GAINING CREDIBILITY

It was a year that gave even more credibility to the oft-absurd Grammy's. Having reached it's peak of ridiculousness in 1990 the year dreadlocked lip-syncers Milli Vanilli won best new artist, the Grammys have been inch-

Turn to WINNERS, page 7

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

COURTESY PHOTO

William Parker and the Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra will perform Thursday, February 22 at 8:00 pm at Bezanzin Recital Hall as part of the 2001 Magic Triangle Concert series. For tickets call (800) 999-UMAS.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – "Christopher Wilmarth: living inside" presents a selection of sculptures, drawings, and prints by an artist best known for a sparely sensuous style that marries formal elements with mysterious reverie. "Brenda Zlamany/ Figure Ground: Color Studies of Chuck Close, Evander Holyfield, and John Yau" features this artist's most recent paintings series, which marks a further step in her ongoing investigation of color and light as they are translated into psychological content. Both exhibitions will have an opening reception on Friday evening, February 2 from 5 to 7 p.m. "Christopher Wilmarth" will be on view from February 3 through March 16 and then April 1 through May 18. "Figure Ground" will be on view from February 3 through March 16.

UMASS – "Dreaming: Prophecies, Speculations, and Good Guesses." A collection of works created to reflect a visionary gaze into the personal and social future of society. "Dreaming" will run from February 12 to March 9 in the Augusta Savage Gallery, with an opening reception on Monday, February 12 from 5 to 7 p.m.

UMASS – "The Jesus Show." Photographer James Gehrt has traveled the U.S., and collected pictures of religious icons, from the modest to the grand. Central Gallery, March 1 through 25, with a gallery talk at 2pm and an opening reception at 5 p.m. on March 11, Central Gallery.

SMITH COLLEGE – "The Refugees." Two life sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck depicting refugees carrying a child and all their worldly possessions. Part of the Khan Institute's "Anatomy of Exile" project. Through May 28. For more information, call (413) 585-4292. Third floor, Neilson Library.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Biblical Women." Story quilts by artist Lee Porter, depicting several scenes women from the Bible. Through March 30. Reception and gallery talk 5 to 7 p.m., Friday, February 23. For more information, call (413) 585-2043. Alumnae House Gallery, 33 Elm St.

NORTHAMPTON – "Gardens Large and Small." A collection of eighteen impressionistic watercolor paintings reflecting the artist's love of landscape. February 1-28 at the Forbes Library.

NORTHAMPTON – "Exposed Surfaces: Architectural and Other Moments." Black and white photography by Michael Shally-Jensen centered around the surfaces and textures of architecture. February 3-March 1 at the Forbes Library.

WILLIAMSTOWN – "Photography EXPOSED." Includes 45 examples of portraiture as part of the Williams College Museum of Art's 75th anniversary celebration. The exhibit will continue until September 3, 2001. The Museum is open Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 a.m., and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – "Slanguage." Universes, an ensemble of five performers, will present this fusion of poetry, theater, jazz, Hip-Hop, politics, down-home blues and Spanish boleros to challenge the conventions of theater. Shows will be on February 21 and 22 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

UMASS – "The Crucible." This Arthur Miller classic depicts the Salem Witch Trials, and is based on actual events. Performances will be on March 1-3, and 8-10 at 8 p.m. in the Rand Theater. Tickets are $7, $4 for students.

UMASS – "Native American Hoop Dancing." Cliff Matias will present hoop dancing that tells a story to the beat of a traditional song. Matias has traveled throughout Indian Country, gathering dances, songs, and stories for his performances. The show will take place on March 6 at 7 p.m. at the Augusta Savage Gallery.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Antigona Furiosa." A contemporary version of Antigone, the play explores a furious woman defying authority in Argentina, in the 70s. On a double bill with "Giving Up the Ghost." The show is at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, February 22 through the 24, and February 28 through March 3, all shows at 8 p.m. Call (413) 585- ARTS for more information.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Giving Up the Ghost." A poetic journey about growing up in transcultural America, and the struggles and triumphs of being a woman. The show is at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, February 22 through the 24, and February 28 through March 3, all shows at 8 p.m. Call (413) 585- ARTS for more information.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "The Bedbug." This is a satirical play about a Russian revolutionary frozen in ice, and resurrected 50 years later, where he finds himself and outcast in a Soviet world. Performances will take place at the Rooke Theatre on March 2 and 3, at 8 p.m., and on March 4 at 2pm.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "Infusion with Fire." This historic production is told through the voices of artists on the Federal Theatre Projects, and reconstructs the dynamic of the New Deal era and The House Un-American Activities Committee. February 23 and 24 at 8 p.m. and February 25 at 2 p.m., at the Rook Theatre. Admission is free, though reservations are strongly recommended. Call the box office at (413) 538-2406.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The UMass Opera Workshop will perform to benefit the Fine Arts Center from 7 to 8 p.m. at the book fair at the Barnes & Noble Bookstore, in Holyoke. February 22.

UMASS – "William Parker and the Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra." Parker, as bassist and composer, has established himself on the international music scene through his improvisational music. He will perform on February 22 in Bezanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m.

UMASS – The University Orchestra, Chamber Choir and Chorale will perform the Faure Requiem, Cantus In Memory of Benjamin Britten by Part, and "Four Sea Interludes" from Britten's Peter Grimes. February 23, at 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall.

UMASS – Faculty Saxophonist Lynn Klock will perform with Professor Nadine Shank, pianist on February 28 at 8 p.m. at Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $8 for the general public, $4 for students, elders, and children under 18. Tickets can be purchased in advance at the Fine Arts Center (545-2511) or at Bezanson Recital Hall on the evening of the concert.

UMASS – The Grieg Trio, featuring violin, cello, and piano, will perform in the Bezanson Recital Hall on Thursday, March 1 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $20 for general public, $10 for children age 17 and under, and $7 for Five College students. For tickets and information, call the Fine Arts Center Box office (535-2511).

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – The Concordia College Choir of Minnesota will perform a concert of sacred a cappella music at Abbey Memorial Chapel on March 1, 7:30 pm. Tickets may be purchased in advance by calling (413) 538-2306, and are available at the door.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS- Ben Marcus. A reading by Ben Marcus, author of The Age of Wire and String, the award-winning writer and professor at Columbia University will read from his fiction on March 1 at 7 p.m. in the Augusta Savage Gallery. Admission is free and the lecture is open to the public.

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

A great place to get contact lenses

FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions

Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases

Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office

FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

Special Offer: $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient

www.springbreak.sopadre.com

Atlantis
Behind Antonio's Pizza in Amherst

TUES: Ben Taylor's Underground Lounge
WED: B-Ski's Bins "The best in disco & funk."
FREE Nachos 10-11 pm
THURS: "Under the blue" with DJ Big Phil
·hip hop and r&b
FRI: Grooveroom Records presents:
DJs Simi & Caseroc of Boston
SAT: Ladies Night with DJ Trendz
·hip hop, r&b, & reggae –ladies no cover charge
"Ladies Night" – Ladies get in FREE
SUN: Drunk Monks open turntable night
NO COVER $2 COVER AFTER 11 pm

When someone asks you What you did in College,

What will you say?

The Amherst Fire Department is recruiting members for its Student Force.
Stop by the Campus Center, Feb. 26- Feb. 28 for more information.
The North Fire Station will host an Open House on
March 2 from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.
The Station is located at 603 East Pleasant St., up the road from Sylvan.
Call for more information 549-5419

KOALA-TY SELECTION & AUSSIE-OME SALES THAT WON'T LEAVE YOUR WALLET DOWN UNDER!
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive
EVERYDAY PRICING
$44.99 $45.99 $37.99 $88.99
LITE & LITE ICE 30 PACK $16.49
MILWAUKEE'S BEST 30 PACK $9.99
HEINEKEN CASE $19.99
KILLARNEY'S RED LAGER 6 PACK $5.49
BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT CASE $9.99
SUBLIME HARD LEMONADE 6 PACK $4.99
G'DAY FOR A SALE, MATE! Australian Wine Sale
20% OFF ALL AUSTRALIAN WINES
Penfolds $6.99
GEORGES DUBOEUF $7.99
MERIDIAN WINES $15.99
STONE CREEK MERLOT $6.99
Arbor Mist $5.99
EMERALD SPRINGS VODKA $8.99
JAMESON IRISH WHISKEY $15.99
BURNETT'S GIN $10.99
BAILEY'S IRISH CREAM $16.99
INVERHOUSE SCOTCH $12.99
HADLEY 253-9344
NORTHAMPTON 586-3007
HOLYOKE 534-4555
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
The Holyoke store WILL REMAIN OPEN during renovation of the Stop & Shop Plaza
SALE PRICES THURS. 2/22/01 THRU WEDS. 2/28/01

FOX special uncovers their own stupidity

with Nick Pizzolato

If you were to ask me who killed John Fitzgerald Kennedy, I would say I'm not sure, but it was a conspiracy. When it comes to the assassinations of world leaders I don't think that the person they always arrest can possibly be working alone. These are healthy conspiracies, problems which make sense when you incorporate more than one person planning the undoing of a global network of power. The evil conspiracies are the ones in which crazy trekkies [illegible] out there take the [illegible] laws of science and [illegible] the countries [illegible] greatest heroes and [illegible] destroy [illegible] them...only on [illegible] FOX.

Last Thursday, [illegible] battling NBC's [illegible] second hour of [illegible] Must See TV, FOX [illegible] aired "Conspiracy [illegible] Theory: Did We [illegible] Really Land on the [illegible] Moon?" It didn't really surprise me that they would air such a show, after all, these are the people that brought us "Alien Autopsy" and "Finding the Pharoh's Treasure." It's their recent installment of desecrating beliefs and artifacts all in the name of sweeps.

"Conspiracy" dealt with the theory that Buzz Aldrin, Neil Armstrong, and other astronauts never went to the moon, and that it was instead an elaborate hoax that the US Government and Hollywood put together (a la Wag the Dog) to convince the world that we were better than the Russians. I can't believe some people want to convince not only themselves but also the rest of the world that the bravest men of all time, pioneers in the great unknown, actually never went. Well, you know what that means America: we don't actually have moon rocks in the Smithsonian, and oh, by the way, the little thing where three astronauts almost died in the Apollo 13 mission, that never happened either.

Not ones to admit that their argument wasn't justified, these nut jobs went through a lot of tape to try and find excuses for the right to be on TV. For instance, they showed tape inside the spacecraft as the lunar module was heading toward earth and asked why there wasn't any sound from the engine as it was landing on the moon. Let's think about this. To have sound you need a catalyst, which would be the engine firing off. You need people to hear the engine. But most importantly, you need air. Sound travels because it vibrates air, so if there is no air, there is no sound. In conclusion, if there is no air in space (and just for the record, there isn't) there is no sound. If these so called "experts" in the conspiracy field are such scientists then they should probably know this. Oh wait, I forgot – they are out of their minds.

They spend all their time watching "Star Trek," imagining themselves with the queen of Margeen Colony IV from episode 143 A that they forget that it is a show and not science. That despite the fact that you can hear the Enterprise blow up a Klingon war ship doesn't mean that you can really hear anything in space.

So if we didn't land on the moon, where did we land, Jack? Well, according to these morons, the actual lunar landing took place at Area 51 in New Mexico. That's right folks, all the rumors you have heard that it is actually the lab for extra-terrestrial technology were inaccurate. It is, in actuality, place where Neil Armstrong picked up [illegible]ion rocks. I [illegible]uess you can't [illegible]have more [illegible]than one conspiracy at the same place; it must break some kind of bylaw. Then to back up their claim they play [illegible]tapes of Neil [illegible]describing the quality of ground on the moon, comparing it to Earths deserts. According to conspiracy buffs this was a private joke between him and the guys at mission control. You would think that if he were just in the desert he would be a little more original then saying, "Duh...It looks like a desert." And can you believe that this program was an hour long?

It went on like this, claiming the moon walk was just taped footage of astronauts walking slowed down to make them look like they were moving slower. To prove this they speed the tape up to twice the original speed and sure enough they were moving faster. But then again the losers SPED THE TAPE UP! Of course it's going to look faster if you speed the tape up.

The footage of astronauts standing up the flag and fighting it to make it look patriotic – well according to an ex-NASA employee that was really just wind blowing into the studio. Do you really think that they would be that dumb? "Well, we have a four billion dollar budget and we've recreated a working landing system, what the heck leave that window open over there and put that fan on high. The American people won't know the difference."

For every slight thing that happened on that mission, they had undeniable proof that it was a hoax. The sad thing is that they try their hardest to find new material, so they can get on TV and share their findings with the world via Sweeps week. All they do is sit in their living room thinking of different ways to destroy the concept of patriotism in the United States. To all of you skeptics out there, I believe that Area 51 is the place for alien research more than I believe that it was the actual place of the lunar landing. So unless, you can give me proof that Neil Armstrong pre-recorded his poetic, "One small step for man, one giant leap for mankind" speech, I say to you find a better conspiracy to look into. A conspiracy people can believe in...let's say, the election of George W. Bush.

Theron energizes Sweet November

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

SWEET NOVEMBER
Directed by Pat O'Connor with Keanu Reeves and Charlize Theron
playing at AMC Mountain Farms 4

Usually right after I see a movie I have already formed a solid opinion of it in my head, whether it is love, hate, or something close to either end. It's customarily only a matter of minutes before I have typed up my review and sent it off to print. Yet with the new film Sweet November, a remake of the 1968 film of the same title, I can honestly say it is the first movie in recent memory which has left me perturbed and thoughtful days after its viewing. The film falls somewhere in that vague, hazy area that is a daunting place for critics to go. I neither loved it nor abhorred it, but thought it was an intriguing movie with potential — although disrupted by several flaws throughout.

Sometimes expectations that are too high (or low, for that matter) are to blame for the critique of a film, yet with Sweet November, I had no expectations at all. My reasoning was because it again placed Keanu Reeves in a dramatic, leading role, an area where he's been before with very little success (A Walk In the Clouds and the black comedy Feeling Minnesota). I was convinced that Reeves could never effectively tackle a love story as well as he does action films (Speed and, of course, The Matrix).

I wasn't far from wrong, except that in Sweet November, his chemistry with co-star Charlize Theron (The Cider House Rules) sizzles just as it did in the duo's first onscreen collaboration, The Devil's Advocate. In Sweet November, Reeves is moving in the right direction by letting Theron take the reins, and upstage him when they share the screen together. She is a beauty to watch, no matter what film she's in, and here she is no exception. Her innocence and energy are brilliant to watch, playing the romantic female lead with flying colors. Reeves' best scenes, however, are not the lovey-dovey ones, which seem awkward and out of place for him, but the times where he is seen as a crass and crude advertising exec, reminiscent of his role as a self-aggrandizing attorney in the aforementioned The Devil's Advocate. Reeves is best when being bad, and he certainly brings that to the role of Nelson Moss. It's when he tries to shed his hard-boiled edge that he comes off as gauche and ordinary.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Theron and Reeves: a beauty and her beast.

A workaholic who has an appetite for the finer things in life, Moss meets the quirky Sara Deaver (Theron) who is first seen as an obnoxious, trouble-making twenty-something – stalking him at work, visiting his apartment at all hours of the night, and involving him in a small-time crime. I wanted to stand up at shout at the screen, "Get it through your thick skull! Leave the man alone!" But Moss does it for me, instead. Although when he does it, Theron's baby blue eyes mist over, changing our opinions of her immediately with a pouty, puppy-dog frown. We are spun 180 degrees, finding ourselves now drawn to the character.

Deaver propositions Moss to live with her for a month, "long enough to be meaningful, and short enough to stay out of trouble." The goal of the arrangement is to teach Moss what life's all about and all that jazz, but Deaver's innocent motivation for the kindly Samaritan act remain dormant for far too long. The audience is left upset and distracted by this, until three-quarters of the way in when we finally understand why she wants to serve as Moss' therapist and lover for the month of November. You don't have to be a brain surgeon, though, to have figured out that Deaver is dying from an incurable ailment. By the time Moss learns of her infirmity, he has fallen in love with her, and she with him, and we are presented with a cinematic theme that has popped up a lot recently (such as last year's mind-numbing Autumn In New York).

The theme of love being everlasting, even in death, is usually so straightforward and morose, but the artful direction by Pat O'Connor (Circle of Friends) gives Sweet November a different approach to the inevitable. Initially, Sara doesn't want a lover, but rather someone to exercise power and control over as she is powerless against the cancer wreaking havoc on her own body. She wants to do something beneficial with the remainder of her natural life, but her "plan" is thrown off course when she develops feelings of love for her lab rat Moss. The centerpiece of the film is not how the disease brings the lovers together, but how it ultimately could drive them apart.

The intriguing plot has great potential, but gets off to a bumpy start. For instance, the chance meeting between Deaver and Moss, who cheat off each other for a DMV road test, seems highly unlikely, as is the stiff dialogue surrounding the preparatory incident. It Moss dislikes Deaver so much to begin with, then the first kiss comes far too soon and without just cause. One may also wonder how it is that Moss can share the same bed as Deaver, but is not the least bit curious what the locked cabinet over the bathroom sink holds (We come to find out that it is jam-packed with medicine bottles). Herman Raucher, who wrote this update of his original 1968 screenplay, brings together a captivating, guilty-pleasure of a movie. Flawed in some aspects, but overall a decent venture.

Sweet November still remains as much a mystery to me as it ever did. Likewise, I cannot accurately put into words my feelings for the film. At times it's a guilty pleasure, while at other moments an ambitious flop. In comparison, though, to other movies circulating out there, trying to pass themselves off as romances, Sweet November is a whole greater than the sum of its parts.

■ predictions

continued from page 5

sts phat and all that!" Britney can immediately be thrown out because her album, for the most part, was absolute garbage. Madonna's album was mediocre at best. Even though it was far more mature than N'Sync's, that didn't necessarily translate to better pop music. N'Sync's album had the pop songs that were the true pop hits of the past year. Although prepackaged, and formulaic, the album isn't nearly as bubble flavored as most critics like to pretend it is. Therefore N'Sync wins by process of deduction.

Well there it is. The way The Grammy's should have gone down last night. And I'm sure that all of the losers will take solace in the fact that some writer from a college newspaper thought that they were the rightful winners.

■ winners

continued from page 5

toward credibility. In a year that saw a hodgepodge of different genres of music on the music charts, the Grammy nominations captured the eclecticism of the music industry surprisingly well. Unfortunately, NARAS also fell one step back as the old-time voters also helped aged rocker Steely Dan pick up the Album of the Year honor, the most coveted award of the night. Voters passed up giving the award to trendsetters such as Eminem, Beck, and Radiohead.

Jon Stewart, although looking remarkably relaxed, was unfunny. Perhaps his flat jokes were partly due to the paltry week's worth of preparation he was given.

18+ welcome 21+ to drink

fun food. spirits.
THE PUB
amherst

Thursday - DJ DK
▸ Spinning House, Hip Hop, Rap, R&B
Friday - Guest DJ
▸ Playing your request all night
Saturday - DJ Skeptical
▸ Spinning Reggae, House, Hip Hop,
18+ admittance with with license and college ID, 21+ with positive ID

RUTGERS
NEW BRUNSWICK
SUMMER SESSION 2001
REGISTER NOW
Three six-week sessions:
MAY 29-JULY 5
JUNE 25-AUGUST 2
JULY 9-AUGUST 15
Over 1,000 courses. Undergraduate/Graduate courses Day, Evening and Saturday A.M. classes available
For a 2001 Summer Session Catalog, including registration procedures and form, phone (732) 932-7565. Outside the 732 area code call 1-800-HI-RUTGERS or 1-888-4RU-SUMMER, or e-mail your request to: catalog@rci.rutgers.edu
THE STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW JERSEY
RUTGERS
Division of Summer Session
191 College Ave. · New Brunswick, NJ 08901-8546 web site: http://summersession.rutgers.edu

THE STANK LOVE TOUR
OUTKAST
with special guest LUDACRIS
Tuesday March 6 8pm
HIPPODROME
1700 Main St Springfield, MA
MTV2

Shimmery halter top

Assorted patterns...$28
ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
liquor, beer, wine, lottery, phonecards

Bolla 1.5	$10.99
Concho y Torpo 1.5	$8.99
Becks/Amstel 12 pack	$10.99 + dep.
Michael Sheas 12 pack	$8.99 + dep.
Stoli Strawberry 750	$16.99
Rubinoff Vodka 1.75	$9.99
Malibu 750	$12.99

register for weekly prizes!
visit our international beer section
549-5758

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
* See what you eat!
* See what you drink!
* See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS
See You There
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

■ strange sports

continued from page 12

tournament.

"We have very organized games. We have people who play different types of characters. There are special skills and things, magic and all this other neat stuff that you have," Doherty said. "The way the system works is that, if I have a weapon and you have a weapon, and you hit my arm, the arm is gone and I can't use it. You hit me on the head or the chest or the back, I'm dead."

The combat itself involved quick thrusts and parries, as warriors tried to defeat their opponents in a flurry of PVC and sweat. The action got a little intense, as one young lighter, angry at an earlier head strike which sent him to the back of the line, tried to back stab his assailant while the latter was involved in another match.

This brief display of dishonor was quickly forgotten as the best pit style fighting continued on. As the Third and 48 crew returned to Third and 48 headquarters to stare at lewd photos of Margaret Thatcher, the sound of blade thwacking blade, the cheer of victory and the groan of defeat echoed through the bowels of the Campus Center.

Frog Jumping

It ain't easy being green. Roberta Flack said so on Sesame Street.

It is, however, pretty easy to win the Calaveras County Jumping Frog Jubilee. Three-year old Cody Shilts of Sacramento, CA did it in 1994. (We tried to get a hold of him, but our directory lists no "Shilts" in the Sacramento area. Apparently, fame drove him to an unlisted phone number).

The Calaveras County Fair and Jumping Frog Jubilee dates back over 100 years when Mark Twain, author of Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, started the event with the publication of his famous short story titled The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County.

The fair is held annually the third weekend in May in Frogtown. Yes, Frogtown. This year's extravaganza will be held from May 17-20. We could not find it on our map, but "they" say that it is located on Highway 49 two miles south of Angels Camp, approximately 85 miles from Sacramento, and 130 miles from San Francisco. Boo yeah.

So how exactly is this Jubilee organized?

"You start with a frog," a Calaveras County Fairgrounds employee said. "Then you place them in The Pad."

The Pad is the green lily-pad shaped starting point where the frogs begin their quest. Once the frog has been placed, it has 30 seconds to make three jumps. The length is measured from The Pad to the point of the last jump.

Ribbit.

We here at Third and 48 feel that the best way to train your frog is to sit it down in front of the television and throw "Muppets take Manhattan" in the VCR. But the "experts" have other ideas.

"Frogs jump their best when they're kept close to the wild and not too close to people," the fairgrounds worker said. "But there's a group of about 75 people who come every year that are really serious about it. They bring about 200-300 frogs. And for some reason they know how to train them and prepare them for the competition. They keep them at the right temperature and get them to jump really high."

Ribbit.

Third and 48 talked to a highly credible source in the frog-jumping industry, but this former member of the Sandisfield, MA 4-H Club was reluctant to give his name because he felt amphibian aviation specialists from around the globe would be angry with him for releasing this secret: "It's not always the biggest frogs that jump the farthest. That's a popular misconception. In actuality, it's sometimes some of the smallest frogs that possess the most raw athleticism. I don't like to give away the secret to frog-jumping – it's like an industry secret – but it's all about the length of the frog's legs. If you can find a frog whose legs are disproportionately long to it's body, you have found the frog-jumping champion."

Not only was our source a 4-H Club Member, he was also the Sandisfield Country Fair Frog Jumping judge and the biggest Frog-Renter in Sandisfield. And frog-renting, as you may know, is a tough racket.

"Frog rental prices went up every year, but people don't really understand why," he said. "At first we only charged a quarter because it was so easy to catch the frogs. But every year you'd go back to the same spot and catch the same frogs. Frogs aren't dumb; each year they get harder and harder to catch. So we had to adjust the rental-price to compensate for our increased hard-work."

The Frog-Renter had this final statement: "People have a general misconception that the frog does all the work. Just like in equestrian, there has to be a special bond between man and animal. You need to know your frog, you need to know what motivates your frog and you need to know how to unlock your frog's inner desire to jump."

Make sure you set aside a few minutes today to take that in for all it's worth.

The world record Frog Jump was set in May, 1986 by "Rosie the Ribbiter," jockeyed by Lee Giudici of Santa Clara, CA. "Rosie the Ribbiter" jumped an impressive 21' 5.75", beating the old world record by 4.75 inches.

International Celebration and Alcohol Consumption Event

The world will unite tomorrow night in the only way it knows how: piss drunk and for no good reason! The fine people at Guinness, who nicely tell us who holds the record for "most drinks after the longest trip who has married their dog the most amount of times, spend one minute of every year breaking the most important record in the world: the largest number of people toasting the same alcoholic beverage at one time. (The second largest is at a Kennedy family wedding.)

For you dorm residents who plan on toasting it up in the hallway, you'd better watch out! An anonymous Resident Assistant at UMass is ready to catch you. "I'll unleash the wrath and you don't want that," he said. "I would enforce my spanking policy in which I pull them over my knee and give them one spank for every sip of Guinness they took."

He continued, "Actually, what I would really do is steal the beer from my residents, call Ryan Benharris, tell him to come over and drink until we pass out." (Editor's Note: Ryan Benharris would never ever drink until he passes out, cries or throws up.)

Local businesses are preparing for the challenge, one in particular. "We're ready to go," said Harold, the owner of The Hangar in Amherst. (Harold wanted us to know that he didn't want to be quoted, and was actually talking for his partner, Pat). "We'll be buying a lot of Guinness and planning how we will effectively distribute that much to that many people in an orderly fashion."

The Hangar is best known for selling boned and boneless buffalo wings in a variety of flavors. Ryan Koutsgiannis, a junior Marketing major was asked if he would eat a lot of chicken before drinking a lot of Guinness. "That's not a very good question to ask a vegetarian," he said.

The Hanger will be offering Guinness at $2 a pint. (That's 45 cents cheaper than a 40 oz. of King Cobra). When asked how many people they plan on packing into the bar, he said, "It's kind of shady. The fire code says there will be 80." When asked what he anticipates happening to a person who has toasted too much Guinness, some person in the background yelled, "Grab some waitresses ass." To this, Harold replied, "Everyone here is now grabbing his ass."

XFL

The Third and 48 staff is always hard at work trying to find sports that beg for coverage, attention or at the very least, pocket change. The XFL falls into the last category. Vince McMahon's latest venture to separate rednecks from their money has been lowering the IQ of the nation's general population. That being said, WOO HOOOOOOO!!!!

We have come to the conclusion that the XFL fills a much-needed gap in the buckteeth of the television sports jewelry robbed. Everybody wants to watch sports, that's a given, but there's a lot of us out there who want watch football without all the talent obeying up the screen.

We'd rather trade the pithy rapid fire exchange between Dennis Miller and all those people who don't get his jokes for a simpler, more intimidating commentary from such football legends as the honorable Jesse "The Body" Ventura (Editor's note: We were not sure whether to put the quotes around the body or honorable) and WWF fixture Jim Ross.

But we watch Girls Gone Wild.

It is still football. It is not good football. There are only eight teams, and the XFL is trying very hard to build a fan base: 50 yard line seats are only $25, there are scantily clad women dancing just feet from the front row, and there is a strict no Lyon Renharris policy.

Still, there are many people out there who have still yet to see an XFL game in all its "Darwin was wrong" splendor. As a service to you, the valued Third and 48 reader, here are some brief sketches of the eight squads of burly men all thinking the same thing: "This is much better than that temp job as a staple."

EASTERN XFL

Orlando Rage

Surprisingly, the Orlando Rage is a pretty tame team. None of the players have chosen a nickname, unlike Memphis' Rafael "Super Coop" Cooper or the Outlaws' Chrys "Chuckwagon" Chukwuma. Perhaps the Rage has hit the nail on the head, as they are currently the top team in the division. However, their choice of name fails to evoke that feeling. Orlando does not conjure up images of rage: it brings to mind images of Mickey Mouse and Shamu. Now, unless Mickey catches Shamu in bed with Minnie, there ain't no rage going on.

Birmingham Thunderbolts

Who doesn't think football when you think, Birmingham, Alabama? Of course Thunderbolts might not be the best name, but it did beat out the proposed name of "Racist 60's era Sheriffs."

Chicago Enforcers

This team just plain sucks.

New York/New Jersey Hitmen

It is finally nice to see a sport which recognizes that New York City football is played in New Jersey. Other than that, it's a New York team, and our Massachusetts chromosomes, we would immediately go into cancer mode if we said anything good about a team from the Big Crapple. Fortunately, the Hitmen suck like a Shop Vac, giving us Bay Staters the opportunity to make jokes like "suck like a Shop Vac."

WESTERN XFL

Memphis Maniax

We don't trust any team that can't spell it's own name properly, let alone flaunt their spelling mistakes on their helmets. Hey Memphis, pack your backpas, throw them in the trunks of your Pontias, and try and find one or two quarterbax.

San Francisco Demons

Ah yes, nothing says family values like a satanic football team. Also, the Demons supposedly have the rowdiest fans in the whole league. It all goes to show you: San Francisco hasn't been the same since they canceled Full House. Ah, Uncle Jessie, where art thou?

Los Angeles Xtreme

Our eagle-eyed staff noticed a distinct similarity between the Xtreme's logo and a certain symbol of the Third Reich. And you thought Marge Schott had retired...

Las Vegas Outlaws

The Outlaws have a lot of things going for them right now. True, they just dropped a game to Der Xtreme, but with stars like Rod "He Hate Me (and he ain't too fond o' grammar)" Smart and UMass' own Kory Blackwell, the Outlaws are off to a good start. Plus, they don't have a dopey name or logo.

Third and 48 will continue to keep an eye on this burgeoning league. In the meantime, we look forward to an expansion, so that Massachusetts may share its own wannabes and washed up stars for the braying delight of the rest of the nation. Surely this team will be named after a proud XFL tradition of picking a town and then picking a word that relates to the town, but in such a way that only Vince McMahon and his immediate family know the true meaning.

So who knows? You may just see recruiting signs for the Fall River Battleships, and the Plymouth Rocks. Perhaps the New Bedford Ave-walkers, or the terrifying Amherst Hippies.

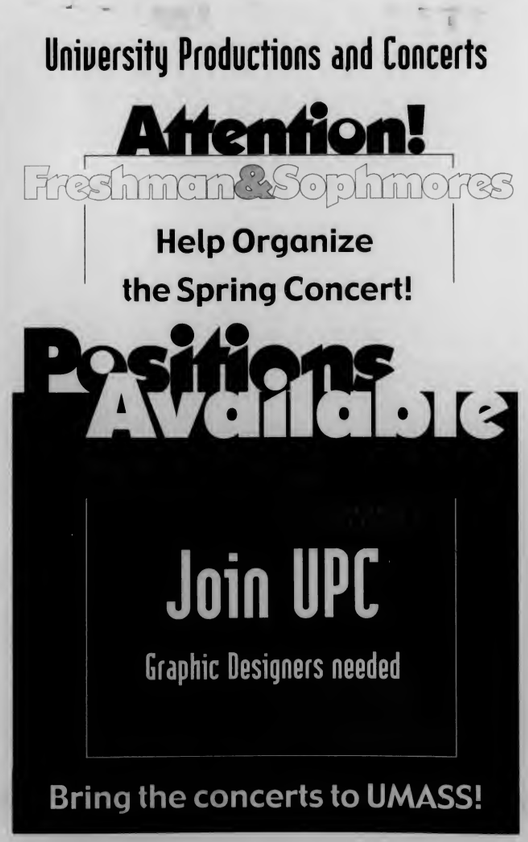
Whatever the future, you can be sure that we will continue to update you with further information as soon as we receive it. And come up with some jokes about it. Maybe have a cup of coffee or two. Perhaps a danish. You never know.

Now, some of you may say that Third and 48 shouldn't be covering the XFL. It's a real sport, some may say. Well, in the words of Third and 48 fearless leader Eric Soderstrom, "SHUT UP!"

The XFL is not a real sport. The XFL doesn't stand for anything. That's not to say the league doesn't have ideals; it does. The letters XFL don't mean any more than the letters AKLPSD or KDSNKLDS or CIA. All of them are meaningless. The X doesn't stand for Xtreme. The F certainly doesn't stand for football. And the L, well, the L stands for something. It stands for something sweet and good and almost holy. It stands for Guinness.

Ryan Benharris and Eric Soderstrom are Collegian Columnists and Third and 48 Co-Editors. We want to thank all of you who emailed us at Thirdand48@yahoo.com. There once was a day when people thought we wouldn't break through the boundaries placed on us by this paper. But we hit the back page this week, and we're in color. Ken Campbell, I know how much you want to be an "official" part of this. You deserve it. You are officially the only Third and 48 staff member who is not an editor.

THINGS TO DO:
• GO TO CLASS
• PLAY VIDEO GAMES
• WORKOUT
• SEE A MOVIE
WHAT COULD YOU DO...
IF YOU WERE DONE WITH WORK BY 9AM??
THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR STUDENTS TO DELIVER NEWSPAPERS MONDAY THRU FRIDAY
INTERESTED: CALL SHAWN @ 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT
Applicants Must Have Own Car



Whiners keep March exciting

Anybody who thinks that the Major League Baseball season is limited to the months between April and October is sorely mistaken.

With all of the monster trades, free agent signings and ego inflating contracts going on, the off-season is consistently more exciting than a Twins-Devil Rays day game.

So if you're not up to date on who's bitching and moaning around the league, then tune in. Keep your morality in check, your wits about you and set aside all beliefs you have about the world you live in. Prepare to enter another dimension, prepare yourself for the "Ego Zone."

It is hard to keep track of all the griping millionaires out there so I figured, why not see what kind of lineup we could put together for the major league moaners?

I pondered a few names for this squad: the diaper posse, the potty trained all-stars and the teething rings to name a few, but I figured we would keep it main stream and call them the All-Whine Squad.

Pitcher: We had a few options for this position, but in the end Mike Hampton takes the cake. It wasn't good enough for this so-called ace to be on a division-winning Astro team, nor did it please the southpaw to take the mound in the greatest city in the world in the biggest game of the year – Game 2 of the World Series.

Instead, the square faced Hampton chose to sign a contract so big it will be matched only by his pulsating 2001 ERA. Well Mike, have fun in Colorado; maybe that thin air will help keep your mouth shut. If not, I'm sure that rock jaw will protect you from say…flying batteries.

Catcher: O.K., the Collegian statistics bureau couldn't really come up with a whining catcher, but Eli Marrero sure should be moaning about his .225 career batting average.

First Base: Did anybody happen to see a Padres game last year? Well if you did then you probably noticed Ryan Klesko arguing over a call. I know it's tough to be traded from the perennial playoff pitfall of the Braves to the cellar dwelling Padres, but really.

Being traded is part of the business, especially when you are an overpaid, out of shape, free swinger and there's a Big Cat waiting to chase you out of the backyard.

Second Base: Extra! Extra! Mark McLemore wants out of Seattle. Hey Mac, join the club. With a brand new pitchers ballpark and a very shallow checkbook, the Mariners are in the midst of an offensive talent exodus. But who does McLemore think he is, A-Rod?

Shortstop: Hey couldn't we all use a private jet. I know I could. But the question remains, what is Alex Rodriguez going to do with $200 million dollars? The king baby of them all should use that inflated paycheck to buy some modesty. But then again he'll probably end up purchasing a throne to sit on in the Rangers clubhouse, because A-Rod can't sit in the same seat as regular players.

Third Base: Ken Caminiti: "Oh, my knees."

Outfield: Somehow the outfield positions seem to produce the league's biggest mouths, pockets and egos.

First we have Manny Ramirez. He finally gets what he wants, the big bucks, the World Series contender and the fans that are anticipating his arrival, yet he still mails complaints back to Cleveland. The Red Sox got a great deal. Not only can Manny go yard, he can say, "show me the money" in two different languages.

Gary Sheffield will join his hot air blowing counterpart in the outfield. Sheffield has reportedly demanded a trade from the Dodgers. Good idea Gary, leave the richest franchise in the National League and a team that would love to build around you because your pride was injured. Give me a break, I am sure your paycheck and the six zeroes that follow the first digit will heal any emotional scars you may have received.

Lastly, we have the surprise of this years diaper posse, Barry Bonds. I lost a lot of respect for Barry this week – not that he cares; he doesn't value the opinion of guys in my tax bracket.

Barry says that because of what he has done for the organization, he deserves a new contract before the season starts. Now Barry is an amazing player, but how many rings has he brought San Francisco? If Barry would stop his grumbling, then I am sure the Giants will treat him with the respect he deserves.

So there's the 2001 All-Whiner team. By the way, if anybody is looking for a good front office to compliment this devastating lineup, call the Blue Jays – they're having a good spring training.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

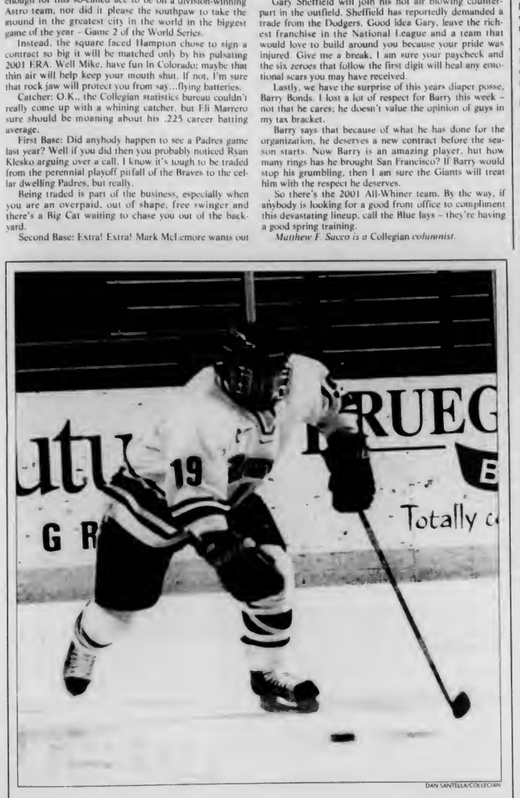
Hit and Run with Matthew Sacco



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

After a weekend off, Martin Miljko the Minutemen will skate into action in a crucial home-and-home series Saturday and Sunday against Boston College.

UMass set for UVM

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

One word puts into perspective the upcoming weekend for the Massachusetts men's tennis team: critical. After a tough loss to regionally ranked Colgate, the Minutemen are looking to regroup this weekend as they journey to Burlington, Vermont for matches against UVM and Duquesne.

Considering that the Maroon and White dominated the Catamounts last year 7-0, it's safe to call Friday's match a warm-up for the real challenge, the Dukes of Duquesne.

"This is a critical weekend for us," coach Judy Dixon said. "UVM isn't in our league and we're stronger than they are. We're going to Burlington to play Duquesne."

The UMass squad lost to the Dukes last year and desperately need to post a victory, not only for seeding in the Atlantic 10 Tournament, but also an East regional ranking, which would get them an invitation to the ECAC tournament next year.

"The way the A-10 tournament works, they invite everyone," said Dixon. "You don't have to come in a certain place and you don't have to play everyone in your conference. But you do need play well in the conference to get a good seeding."

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, they will travel to Vermont without freshman sensation Arun Gortman, who continues to battle back spasms that he struggled with last year.

"Aron adds a lot of depth to the line-up," said Will Shaw. "It's a big blow to the team because everyone has to move up a spot."

Rory Theis, a fiery freshman from the Midwest, will move up to the No. 5 spot to compensate for the loss of Gortman. After his gutsy, emotional doubles' play against Colgate last weekend, he will be more than ready to step up to the task.

"Rory is playing a lot better," said Gortman. He's definitely improved a lot since last year. He just needs to learn to finish off a match."

In terms of the rest of the lineup, No. 1 Steve Prisco, whose serve and volley game has been hindered by a sore shoulder, appears to be in good health and will suit up for the all-important match Saturday.

In fact, Dixon has few question marks about the top and bottom of her lineup, which have looked strong throughout the young season.

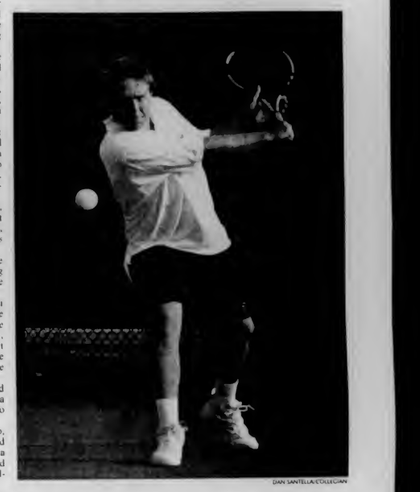
"We need better play out of the middle of our lineup, Will Shaw and Todd Champeau," said Dixon. "Ms fingers are crossed for our number three and four spots."

Despite injuries and inconsistent play in the middle of the line-up, the Minutemen are an improved team since last year and expect this to be a fairly even sided challenge.

"We played them once last year and they beat us handily," Shaw said. "But our team is better this year. They might have a slight edge, but I'd say we're about even."

On the Dukes' side, they play an emotional, confident brand of tennis, as they feel they will bring a win home to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania Saturday.

"They're a scrappy, emotional team," Dixon said. "They're a little like Colgate since they are tough and they come at you. They don't lay back and wait for something to happen and they expect to beat us. I expect it to be an intense, dramatic match. But we're going up there prepared to play them and I'm really looking forward to it. It's exciting."



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The men's tennis team will try to improve their record to 7-2 this season when they head to Burlington, Vt. on Friday.

Chinese Film Festival: The Urban Generation And a Roundtable Discussion with Chinese Filmmakers, Ah Nian and Wang Quanan

Sponsored by:
The Five College East Language Program
The Five College Lecture Fund
Five College Center for East Asian studies
Dept. of Asian Languages and Civilizations, Amherst College
Dept of East Asian languages and Literatures, Smith College
East Studies Program, Smith College
Dept. of Asian Languages and Literatures, University of MA

This festival of contemporary Chinese cinema offers a rare opportunity to see some of the representative films by the so-called sixth generation of Chinese filmmakers, as well as works by an even younger wave of directors. On February 26, Ah Nian, director of Call Me, and Wang Quanan, director of Lunar Eclipse, will participate in a roundtable discussion at UMass.

Call Me (Hu wo)
Feb. 22 (Thursday) 6pm Thompson 102 UMass - Directed by Ah Nian
An intricate tapestry of parrellel narratives that unfolds over the course of seven days. Call Me concerns the quest for human contact in the city

Lunar Eclipse (Yue shi)
Feb 22 (Thursday) 8pm Thompson 102 UMass. Directed by Wang Quanan
This elegant film about love, desire, and betrayal is mixed with a touch of mystery and told in a cinematic language rarely seen in Chinese films.

The Postman (You chai)
Feb 23 (Friday) 6pm Thompson 102 UMass. Directed by He Jianjun
A fascinating Study of a mailman who cannot resist the urge to open and read the letters he is entrusted to deliver

In Expectation (Wushuan yanyu)
Feb 26 (Monday) 7pm Herter 227 UMass. Directed by Zhang Ming
This episodic tale explores the expectations for life, love, and happiness among three average Chinese thirty-something characters who exist mostly on only emptiness and unfulfilled wishes.

On The Beat (Minjing Gushi)
Feb 26 (Monday) 9pm Herter 227 UMass. Directed by Ning Ying
The award-winning third feature by Ning Ying, china's premiere woman director, is a subtly subversive portrayal of modern Beijing

A Roundtable Discussion with Ah Nian and Jin Yan
Feb. 26 (Monday) 5pm Machmer W-23 UMass.
Panelist: Hua Lan (Amherst), Ying Wang (Mt. Holyoke), Anne Cieko (UMass), Hongchu Fu (Smith);
Moderator: Yaohua Shi (UMass)

THANK YOU
students, faculty and staff for making the 18th Annual Co-op and Summer Job Fair the MOST SUCCESSFUL EVER!

Missed the Fair? Don't worry!

Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session - there's one EVERYDAY!

Mondays	3 p.m.	103 South College
	3:30	3 Bartlett Hall
Tuesdays	2 p.m.	8 Isenberg SOM
	4 p.m.	202 Paige Lab
Wednesdays	2 p.m.	1332 Lederle GRT
	3 p.m.	8 Isenberg SOM
	3:30	106 Herter Hall
Thursdays	3 p.m.	103 South College
Fridays	1:30	114 Stockbridge

Check out these HOT opportunities!

Boston Globe: 6 month co-op, seeking JOURNALISM and ENGLISH majors (deadline 4/1)
United Technologies: Summer and 6 month co-ops, seeking ENGINEERING majors
General Electric: Summer co-op, seeking ENGINEERING majors
US Army Corp. of Engineers: Summer co-op, seeking ENV SCI, FOREST, WILDLIFE and NATURAL RESOURCE majors
MA Dept of Environmental Management: Summer co-op, seeking ENV SCI, FOREST, WILDLIFE and NATURAL RESOURCE majors
Court TV: Summer co-op, seeking ART, BDIC, COMM, ENGLISH, JOURN, MKTG and SOC majors
JC Penney: Summer co-op, seeking APPL, MGMT and MKTG majors

For more information about internships/co-ops, call the Field Experience Office at 545-6265 OR check out the Campus Career Network web site at www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Hampshire College Professor seeks native Trinidadians for language study. Must have grown up in Trinidad. Call Joanna Morris 559-5462

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

AUTO FOR SALE

Pocket Rocket. VW Golf GTI 1996 VR6. Green, leather seats, alloy wheels, sunroof. Perfect condition. Call Ellie (413) 527-4627

1993 Saturn SL2 Clean, well maintained. 100k miles $2700. 549-8000

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition. $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

2 Summer Jobs on Nantucket Island, MA. Office Assistant, Mothers & Household Helper. B. Auction Gallery Assistant, Furniture Porter, Display, Deliveries. Salary plus housing. Drivers license required. 508-228-3942 or send resume, P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584

French & or German Speaking cadidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or e-mail diane@remi.com

Earn extra money! Become a spare-time travel agent. At www.sparetimetravelagent.com

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME

Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.50 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

EMPLOYMENT

Join our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life 5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, water-skiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com, or call 1(800) 544-5448

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for : Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama, Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

EMPLOYMENT

PT Help Wanted Amherst Greenhouse growing pesticide free, hydroponic herbs. 549-3558

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life 5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

FOR SALE

Printer HP560C Deskwriter (Mac) w/cable & adapter, $40, ask for Keith: 587-3757

Books For Sale Cheap Comm 240, 260, 341, 493E, Hist 161 Call 253-2378

HOUSE FOR SALE

3 Bedroom House close to University. 549-6157

INSTRUCTION

Kickboxing Instruction and General Personal Training. All levels and abilities. Joe 548-8979

Aerobics, Circut Training, cardio kickboxing. 4 week program only $20. Call 5-1962 for details.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

ROOM FOR RENT

One Bedroom in two bedroom. 3/15-6/15 (flexible). Laundry, furnishings, near bus route. $375/month. Inc. HEAT 584-4664

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

To Take Over Lease Boulders Apartments Call Rob or Jackson 256-0386

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

STEREO EQUIPMENT

JVC Stereo: 3-disc, dual tape deck, 240 total watts, mint condition and includes all packaging. Call Rob at 549-4275 for more info.

TO SUBLET

1 Bedroom & Study in 4 bedroom apt. Avail 3/4 $375/month. Call Julie 413-364-1430

TRAVEL

Spring Break Airport Rides: Students want to save $5 Bucks on a ride to the airport? Call to reserve a roundtrip from Campus to Bradley Airport by February 28 to get your discount. Just mention this ad when making your reservation. Valley Transporter. 253-1350

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $179 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplash-tours.com 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.spring-breakdirect.com

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

Classified Clerk Needed

Apply at The Collegian

Hours Available

Mon 12:00-1:20
Tue 1:00-4:00
Wed 10:00-12:00
Fri 8:30-12:00

Contact Marty

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
8 - CBS/8 Hartford
11 - CBS 3 Boston
6 - ABC40 Springfield
22 - PBS57 Springfield
23 - HSCN Movie Channel
30 - UPN 20 Hartford
38 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
13 - Fox 61 Hartford
18 - UPN 24 Hartford
28 - NBC 22 Springfield
11 - International Channel
15 - UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 - WB 59 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - ESPN2
19 - UVC TV (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Days of Our Lives
02 - C-Span
03 - CNN
04 - CNN Headline News
05 - Lifetime
06 - USA
07 - TBS
08 - TNT
09 - MTV
10 - Nick
33 - Discovery
32 - A&E
36 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 22, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Mystery!	The Last Horse	Mystery!	The Memorial Day	(N) (In Stereo)		Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Survivor-Aust. Outback	CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor-Aust. Outback	CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)	News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Charmed "Just Harried" (N)		News	Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Cheaters" (N)	Just Shoot Me	ER "Golden Hour" (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven "Love Stinks"		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Charmed "Just Harried" (N)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date
WVIT		19	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Cheaters" (N)	Just Shoot Me	ER "Golden Hour" (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	★★★ "The Nutty Professor" (1996, Comedy) Eddie Murphy					News	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Cheaters" (N)	Just Shoot Me	ER "Golden Hour" (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	61	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	This Old Hse.	Dra. on Cbll	Mystery!	The Memorial Day	(N) (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose	(In Stereo)
WGGB	22	29	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Frasier	Med Abt. You	Spin City
WTBS	49		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★½ "Fatal Beauty" (1987, Comedy) Eddie Murphy, Dan Aykroyd						★½
A&E	51		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Act of God"		Biography: Ted Nugent		Behind Closed Doors		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Discord"
CNN	42	23	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour (N)	Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	53	38	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Shein's Money	Sinbad: Afros and Bellbottoms		Battleboots		Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show	Tum Ben
DISC	52		Wild Discovery	Frogs	Wild Discovery	Hippo Talk	Humans -- Who Are We?		Humans -- Who Are We?		Into the Unknown		Justice Files	Hard Evidence
ESPN	41		Sportscenter		College Basketball	Illinois at Ohio State (Live)			College Basketball	DePaul at Marquette (Live)			Sportscenter
LIFE	43		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait	Laura Dern	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Stranger in My Bed" (1996, Drama) Lindsay Wagner			Undressed	Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	45		Direct Effect	Diary	TRL (In Stereo)		Sports Illustrated Uncensored		Real World	Real World	Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Undressed	Say What Kra
NICK	46		Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	47		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "The Ragged Edge"		Crypt Tales		★★★ "Back to the Future Part III" (1990, Adventure) Michael J. Fox, (In Stereo)				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	50	28	Trauma: Life in the ER		Unmasked! Exposing Secrets		Secrets of Forensic Science		Pyramid of Doom		Final Day: Marilyn Monroe (N)		Secrets of Forensic Science
TNT	48		ER "Fechuary 5, 1995"		Pretender "Scott Free"		NBA Basketball: Utah Jazz at Portland Trail Blazers. (In Stereo Live)					NBA	★★ "American Ninja" (1985)
USA	40		Welker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Deterrence" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Payback"		★★ "Major Payne" (1995, Comedy) Damon Wayans, (In Stereo)				Merlin	Merlin
HBO	3		(5:15) "Honey, Shrunk"		★★½ "You've Got Mail" (1998, Comedy) Tom Hanks. "PG"		★½ "What Planet Are You From?" (2000) Gerry Shandling. "R"						Shock Video 2000 (In Stereo)
MAX	44		(4:30) "Tv You"	★½ "Run" (1991, Drama) Patrick Dempsey. "R"			★½ "Chill Factor" (1999, Action) Cuba Gooding Jr.. "R"						★★★ "Miami Blues" (1990) Alec Baldwin. "R"	"Clean-Narrow"
SHOW	55		★★★ "A Merry War" (1997, Satire) Richard E. Grant. "PG-13"				★★ "Angela's Ashes" (1999, Drama) Emily Watson. (In Stereo) "R"					Frank McCourt	★★ "Silver Bullet" (1985) "R"

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

TIME, WHAT MADE YOU THINK ABOUT MARRIAGE AFTER ALL THIS TIME?
I WAS TIRED OF LIVING ON THE KOUMIS'S BOOB, MAN.
WHEN YOU LIVE TOGETHER, EVERYTHING'S UNCERTAIN. BUT WITH MARRIAGE, YOU'D HAVE MY BACK. I COULD SCREW UP ROYALLY AND YOU'D STILL BE THERE.
UH, SCREW UP?
YOU KNOW, IF I HAD A PLUNG OR SOMETHING.
WHAT?
ONE NIGHT! ONE! I'M SURE SHE WOULDN'T MEAN A THING TO ME!

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

YOU KNOW, ZEKE, IF WE DO GET MARRIED THIS TIME I'D WANT TO DO IT RIGHT.
MIKE AND I JUST HAD THIS HUGE, DIRTY WEDDING OUT ON THE BACK PORCH WITH WHOEVER WAS AROUND.
THIS TIME I'D LIKE TO HAVE A BIG FORMAL WEDDING AND SEND EMBOSSED INVITATIONS TO ALL OUR PEOPLE.
YOU'RE ON.
"THE FUTURE MRS. STUPID-HEAD CORPORATE LYWHITES..."
BUT WE DON'T GET TO BE HITCHED, OKAY?

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

MOM AND DAD SAY THEY'RE HUNGRY ENOUGH TO EAT A HORSE.
OK, OK, HERE'S THE SPAGHETTI.
I THOUGHT YOU WEREN'T PUTTING MUSHROOMS IN THE SAUCE.
I DIDN'T. THEY JUST KINDA BREW ON THEIR OWN.
MAYBE WE OUGHT TO FIND A HORSE.
CALM DOWN. THERE'S A CHANCE I'M KIDDING.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY, WE CAN'T PUT THE HEAT UP ANY HIGHER - APART FROM THE COST OF HEATING OIL, YOU HAVE TO CONSIDER THE ENVIRONMENT! YOU KNOW? GLOBAL WARMING.
GLOBAL WARMING. GLOBAL SCHMARMING! I'D SETTLE FOR A LITTLE APARTMENT WARMING RIGHT ABOUT NOW.
WHERE IS "GLOBAL"? YOU SAY IT'S WARM THERE? MAYBE WE SHOULD GO THERE.

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Discipline and patience are your best friends today, as you play the "waiting game" while someone else gives you the best possible environment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – It's time to get better, more up-to-date information today. You've been working with outmoded and less effective tools. It's time to upgrade!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – The time for jokes has passes, and you must be willing to bear current responsibilities with the seriousness others know you have.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You are waiting for news of someone else's success or failure today before you set the wheels of your own new project in motion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may come face to face with one of your greatest fears before the day is out – and you can conquer it once and for all with the right attitude.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You'll find yourself engaged in a fight to the finish before the day is out. Take care, however, that you're not tempted to cheat!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You'll have cause to remember an important lesson from your youth today – and now, today, you'll benefit from it at last!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – It may be up to you today to keep someone else in line – but do so in a way that demonstrates sympathetic support, not aggressive control.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Money matters are at the forefront, but you may discover that an indirect approach serves you best at this time. Take the long way 'round!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – No more unpleasant surprises for you today. You can expect things to go very much your way – at least for the time being.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Share your thoughts freely with those who want to listen. Those who do not, however, are perhaps better off going without.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take the time to do something good for yourself today – for no reason at all except that you deserve it. You know what you really want!

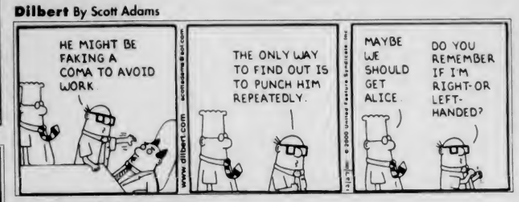
The Masked Dropout By Robert Hewitt

I'D HAD A GREAT TIME TONIGHT!
ME TOO!
I FEEL THAT WAY.
I THINK THIS RELATIONSHIP HAS A LOT OF POTENTIAL!
WHAT DO YOU SAY WE QUIT WHILE WE'RE AHEAD?

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

SOMETHING'S MISSING.
YEAH... BUT WHAT?
I KNOW... FOLLOW ME.
WE FORGOT TO GO TO CHURCH!
SHUSH. THIS IS MY FAVORITE PART.
I'LL TELL YOU WHAT CHRISTMAS IS ALL ABOUT, CHARLIE BROWN...

Dilbert By Scott Adams



HE MIGHT BE FAKING A COMA TO AVOID WORK
THE ONLY WAY TO FIND OUT IS TO PUNCH HIM REPEATEDLY.
MAYBE WE SHOULD GET ALICE
DO YOU REMEMBER IF I'M RIGHT- OR LEFT-HANDED?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

AHH. THE LAST NUT. LONELY LITTLE FOOD. YOUR LONG JOURNEY IS NEAR AN END.
YOU SPENT MANY MONTHS GROWING ON A SUNNY HILLSIDE IN A FAR OFF LAND. THEN, ONE DAY, YOU WERE AT LAST PICKED AND SENT MILES AND MILES HERE, WHERE YOU ARE NOW THE LAST OF YOUR NUT BRETHREN.
ALL THIS JUST SO I CAN... UM
CRUNCH CRUNCH CRUNCH

Quote of the Day

"There are only a few evil things that I do that make me feel good as a person."

–Overheard

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 26 LOW: 18	HIGH: 34 LOW: 18	HIGH: 34 LOW: 20

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

ALL AMERICAN LUNCH

Crab Cakes

Spiral Ham

Eggplant Zucchini Casserole (vegan)

Harvest Stuffed Acorn Squash (vegetarian)

DINNER

Roast Pork (B)

Greek Style Tofu (vegan) (B, H, W)

Black Eyed Peas (vegan) (B, H, W)

Beef Fajita (F, W)

Ginger Black Beans (vegan) (F)

Veal Cordon Bleu (H)

Solid Custom Tattoo
460 West St. Rte. 116 Amherst, MA 259-0003
tues-sat 1-9
sun appt. only
A Tattoo is for life Know your artist

ACROSS

1 Movies
7 Country addr.
10 Catch a fly
14 Win back (losses)
15 Brewery product
16 Select carefully
17 Schedule
18 Foot part
19 Pierre's girlfriend
20 Canada's place
23 Liver spreads
25 Soak, as flax
27 Encumbered
28 — the Red
29 Exclude
30 Umbrella part
31 Helped a hood
33 Actor Harrison
34 Lawyer's thing
37 Prom-goer's decoration
38 Perfect example
40 Oral pauses
41 Barn —
42 Large stork
43 Crib
44 Bliss
45 Young foxes
46 In-the-black entry
49 Above, in verse
50 Dige for one
51 Minivan predecessor
54 Nomad's shelter
55 Female sandpiper
56 Deadlock
60 Division word
61 Shortstop Ripken
62 Bright-colored bird
63 Waterfall sound
64 Yankovic and Molinaro
65 — tiger

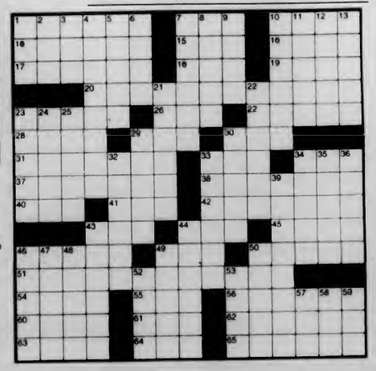
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

R	O	O	S	T		S	W	A	P		G	A	V	E
A	N	W	A	R		M	A	Y	A		O	B	I	S
J	U	N	T	A		F	E	E	L		D	E	C	O
A	S	S	E	M	B	L	E		C	A	N	D	L	E
					A	S	S	E	S	S	E	D
N	A	M	E	D		P	I	N	E		R	A	C	K
R	A	I	N	E	E		E	S		S	O	R	A	N
I	N	N	O	C	E	N	C	E		S	L	I	M	E
N	O	D	E		N	O	D	E	N		I	D	E	W
I	S	T		U	P	S		I	O	N
S	T	I	G	M	A		S	T	A	G	G	E	R	S
L	O	B	E		B	R	I	C	E		L	I	M	I
A	V	E	R		D	R	A	M		E	L	I	T	E
M	E	T	A		T	A	M	E		S	A	L	E	M

12-14-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN

1 Angelico's title
2 Limb
3 Cube material
4 Joins
5 Praise
6 Practice boxing
7 Instead
8 Ice cream treat
9 Judge
10 Pharaoh's charm
11 Damp
12 "— in Wonderland"
13 Collect bit by bit
21 Merchant
22 Panacea
23 Harmony
24 Shady spot
25 Strata
29 Already started
30 Give back the money
32 Papeete's island
33 Fish that hitches a ride
34 Batman's pal
35 Overact
36 "Green Eggs and Ham" writer
39 Absorbing
43 Gamble
44 Sapphires, e.g.
46 Up and about
47 Office worker
48 — Fe Trail
49 Basketballer Shaquille
50 "The Lone Ranger" star
52 "Free Willy" whale
53 Serving of mashed potatoes
57 Trot
58 In the style of
59 Hall-of-Famer Ott



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Shalini Mark
Copy Editor	Bryan McCallister
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	John Zawislak, James Gibson

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, February 22, 2001 | 12

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Floating up the ranks

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

The upcoming weekend will be a pivotal one for the Massachusetts women's water polo team. The squad, ranked 13th in the nation, visits the New England Invitational in Providence, R.I. It will open up the weekend with a game against Brown University on Friday. Saturday, they play Queens, and Sunday they take on Harvard.

"We're really looking forward to it," said junior goalie, Dana Sinkwich. "We hope we win all three games. Brown's been playing really well, and will be our biggest competition."

On paper, Friday night's game against Brown certainly looks like the most challenging. Brown is ranked one spot higher than UMass in the USA Collegiate Water Polo Rankings, at number 12, and brings a record of 3-1.

Both Brown and UMass participated in the Princeton Invitational from Saturday, Feb. 10 to Sunday Feb. 11. The competition was the start of both team's spring 2001 season. At the event, UMass suffered a thrashing at the hands of Michigan before winning their next two games against Villanova and California-Santa Cruz respectively.

Brown also beat UC-SC, as well as Princeton and Michigan St. Its only loss was a significant eight point beating, handed to them by Hawaii.

Breaking up Brown's offense seems to be the focus of the Minutewomen's strategy. The offense should easily be considered a legitimate concern since they racked up 34 goals in four games at the Princeton Invitational.

"Brown does a lot of driving," said UMass tri-captain, Sarah Newell. "We're preparing by hyping up on defense."

Newell said that goal prevention by UMass will be the key to a probable low-scoring game. "If we play tight defense," she explained, "The score won't be too high."

Brown's defense will be led by a duo of goalkeepers, freshman Keira Heggie and sophomore Alexia LaFaunce, who did not allow more than seven goals in any of their three wins.

According to Newell, UMass's offensive strategy will take advantage of its strong and finally healthy hold sets, and with that, it will attempt to score. If sophomore Kelly Chassy can repeat the performance she had at the last Invitational, where she scored nine goals in two games, attaining points should be a much easier task.

If easing the task of securing wins this weekend was a question, then a possible solution would be the abundance of players they have in comparison to last week.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Dana Sinkwich will lead the Minutewomen into battle this weekend as they go head to head with three teams in the New England Invitational.

The healthy recovery of five swimmers will certainly add to their lineup.

"That was a major part in that tournament's play," said Sinkwich. "We were all worn out, and we still won, so I'm sure this weekend we will be even better."

As for the other two teams it will play this weekend, the Maroon and White do not seem overly worried. "Queens won't be good," Newell said. "We'll just use that game to work on things." She did say that Harvard could put up a credible fight.

If nothing else, the team seems prepared. "We're in tip-top shape and we're really looking to dominate this weekend," Newell said. "Even though we've moved up in the polls, I still think we're underestimated."

UMass seeks to justify ranking

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

In the sports film, Rudy, an undersized and unathletic college student works diligently to achieve the unlikely – he becomes a member of the famed and nationally ranked Notre Dame football team. Many could say that the Massachusetts softball team has achieved the unlikely through hard work as well. Following their impressive 3-2 record in Arizona last weekend, this week's USA Today/NFCA softball poll ranks the Minutewomen 24th in the nation.

This weekend the team gets to test the validity of that ranking as it heads down to Columbus, Ga. to play four games in the National Fast-pitch Coaches Association Leadoff Classic. The tournament consists of the 24 teams that made the NCAA tournament last year. It is a round-robin style tourney with elimination action starting late Saturday and Sunday.

"Every team there is going to be very good," said assistant coach Danielle Henderson. "We have our work cut out for us." Only three opponents have been scheduled for UMass as of yesterday. Friday, the squad will play a double-header – first against Kansas (6-5) and then against No. 6 Arizona State (10-2).

The Jayhawks have gotten off to an inauspicious start this season as they just snapped a four-game losing streak with a tight win over Southern Utah, 7-6.

However, according to Henderson her team will not be taking any other team lightly.

The Sun Devils come into the Leadoff Classic on a high note. They swept a double-header against Illinois State to win the Louisville Slugger Championship in Tempe, Ariz. on Feb. 17.

Saturday, the Maroon and White will play what will probably be its toughest opponent all season long. The Minutewomen will duel with one of last year's College World Series teams, undefeated and fourth-ranked Alabama (10-0).

"They are very good and well-coached," said Henderson, the former UMass standout.

After being embarrassed by No. 8 LSU last week at the Fiesta Bowl Tournament, 9-0, the women want to prove that they can contend with the Top-10 squads in the country.

"We are ready to bounce back and show how good we can be," Henderson said.

Henderson attested the poor showing to a lack of practice time before last week's trip to Phoenix. This time the team is more prepared.

"Our pitchers did really well and they keep getting better," she said. "Kaila [Holtz] and Carrie [Jeffries] have been great."

Jeffries, the California native, was named WHMP/UMass Athlete of the Week after her impressive showing in Phoenix this week. She went 2-0 with three runs and nine hits allowed. She recorded a complete-game shutout in the 6-0 win over UNLV.

According to Henderson, the biggest problem for the Maroon and White has been the clutch hitting, or rather the lack thereof. There have been too many women left on base.

"The coaching staff would like to see the hitting improve at key moments in the game," Henderson said. "We are getting runners on base, but people need to start driving the runners home."

If the Minutewomen continue to pitch well and improve on their timely hitting in Georgia this weekend, it will sure leave the players and coaching staff feeling peachy.

Ski teams secure spots in NCAA regional tourney

By Benjamin Hall
Collegian Correspondent

Coach Bill MacConnell does not like to participate in fundraisers, as past experience has proved that they waste valuable practice time and fail to bring exciting returns. As a result, the Massachusetts ski team may be one of the least well-equipped teams in the league.

"It's hard," co-captain Lauren Brodey said. "The school just gave us G.S. suits this year."

Those of us who compete in the USCSA Nationals in Idaho might have to pay our own way," men's downhiller Peter Glawischnig commented.

"We've just been able to get by this entire season."

Under the shadow of revenue generating sports such as football, basketball and hockey, it is easy for less noticed teams to suffer from a lack of financial and/or fan support. But this past weekend, while students cheered their men's hoops team through a lackluster performance at the Mullins Center, the unspoiled skiiers delivered some much-needed honor to this campus.

The Smith College Carnival took place at Berkshire East Ski Area in Charlemont, MA. The men's team turned in an outstanding third place finish in both the slalom and giant slalom. This, the men's best overall finish so far this year, helped secure an invitation to the NCAA Regional competition to be held in Middlebury, Vermont Feb. 23 and 24.

Ken Thoman finished in eighth place in the slalom (1:25.49). Rick Granger earned a 12th place spot the next day in the giant slalom. Both racers have their sights set on placing high at Middlebury.

While the men held the luxury of confidence coming into the race, the women were faced with the fact that anything less than a fifth place finish would prevent them from joining the men in the Regionals.

"We were under a lot of pressure and we had some trouble with our top girls," co-captain Kristy Centrelli said.

The girls, however, could not stand the thought of letting the postseason slip through their fingers. Rising to the challenge, the trio of Centrelli, Mary Siller and Lauren Brodey salvaged the team's hopes and brought home enough points to secure a lead over Smith College. Brodey finished in fourth place overall in the giant slalom with a time of 1:42.21.

The Minutewomen will travel to Vermont this weekend. If they are hoping to make an impression they will need to return to the consistency that has benefited them up until this point.

Inconsistency, however, seemed to be a relative theme over the two days of skiing. The official handling of the race drew speculation from participants as to whether Smith College will decide to once again host next year's event at the mountain. According to Glawischnig, the officials did not provide a back up timing system. Also, one skier fell several times at the top of the course and was not penalized.

"Something just didn't seem right about the whole deal," Glawischnig observed.

No matter the results of the NCAA Regionals, nobody can deny the fact that the Massachusetts ski team deserves some long overdue respect. Their coaching staff also deserves credit for a memorable regular season performance.

"Mike LeBlanc, our assistant coach, has just been great this year," Kristin Centrelli said. "As a former racer, he brings a special perspective to the practices. He really made us focus on the mental aspect of skiing."

When asked how she felt about MacConnell, Centrelli remarked, "He's the glue that holds together. He makes it all work."

This past season, the ECSC division title was changed to the honor the coaching legend. What was once the Osborne Division is now officially recognized as the MacConnell Division.

Sci-Fi club lightly touch each other

For those of you who whined that last week's Third and 48 sucked, we only exist to shut you up. This week we come fully prepared with more stories, pictures and real quotes from some of the most important people alive. Oh, and by the way, have you checked out the column that's winning the web poll at www.dailycollegian.com? Third and 48 destroys the competition, even if the competition is our own writers. Log on and vote for us so we can stop stuffing the ballots.. well we probably won't stop stuffing the ballots, but vote for us anyway.

Lightest Touch Combat

The Third and 48 crew usually has to search far and wide from the icy shores of Sweden for wife carrying, to the icy shores of Uummannaq, Greenland for ice golf, bringing you the most fascinating and riveting sports coverage from around the globe. We found the exhilarating sport of kings known as lightest touch combat in our own backyard. Literally.

Just past the Third and 48 herb and vegetable garden on the loading dock of the campus center, eight men, heavily armed with maces, battle axes, swords and daggers pitted their skills in a life or death struggle to prove who was the eternal master of the bear pit.

"Now bear pit, which is my personal favorite – the way bear pit works is we have one person who starts. All the fights are one on one," Brendan Doherty, a storyteller for the Tales of Valor games explained.

I'm a storyteller for one of the games called Tales of Valor. We're going to be running around the Campus Center with these weapons. In closed rooms, because well, it's not really cool to walk around the Campus Center carrying weapons."

The fearsome arsenal arrayed along the loading dock quashed any and all thoughts that this was nothing more than overgrown children playing with sticks.

"The weapons are made of PVC piping and PVC foam and squishy foam."

Doherty continued, explaining the tactical advantages and disadvantages of each weapon. Stopping at the edge of the loading dock in front of the pit, Doherty grabbed a long red and black weapon from the stack.

"This is a 6 foot double handed sword – meaning that you cannot take either hand off of it. You have a huge advantage when using this weapon because it is so long. If you are forced to use it one-handed, you can only thrust."

Other fighters were not in agreement over the issue of size. Hank Jackson, a.k.a. Sir Ezekiel, a "bad-ass healer", had a different opinion.

"I prefer the shorter weapons because you can move quicker," Jackson said. "With the longer weapons, you have to move slower, but you can keep them further away from you."

Jackson's girlfriend, Courtney O'Connor from Mt. Holyoke, had no frame of reference for comment in the length debate.

"I've never done it before," Courtney said. "I'm just watching. It looks like fun; I want to try it."

The practice, a warm up for an upcoming game, had all the seriousness of a pin the tail on the donkey

Turn to STRANGE SPORTS, page 8

RYAN BENHARRIS/COLLEGIAN

The Doherty brothers, identical twins and members of the UMass Science Fiction Club beat the absolute crap out of each other in the bat cave last week.

Friday in Arts brings a report from Skybox and upcoming shows for Club d'Elf and The Alan Marcus Blues Project.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The Men's hoop team fights another A-10 foe this weekend. Read about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 87 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, February 23, 2001

CRC wants you to know your rights

Students discuss police policies

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Do you know your rights?

Members of the Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC) sought to inform students of their legal rights surrounding search and seizure yesterday in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts.

"We have been here for about 10 years now and we try to focus on educating students about their rights," CRC President Angela Panaccione explained about the reason behind the event. "It is nice for students to have a forum to ask questions."

Aaron Wilson, one of the original founders of the CRC and a candidate for the Amherst select board, explained to the mixed audience of students and town members that everyone had rights and that the law offered protection from unlawful search and seizures.

"Don't let anyone talk you into believing that the constitution doesn't apply to you just because you are young," Wilson told students. "Whether in your car, in your dorm, or just walking around campus, students have the same rights and expectations of fair treatment as all American citizens."

The '94 UMass graduate explained that in the event of a traffic stop, an individual always has the right to refuse to be searched by the police.

"If you are pulled over there is a lower expectation of privacy," Wilson said. "What ends up happening is this dance-the police officer is trying to get you to consent. You can firmly and politely say 'No.'"

In addition, Wilson explained that often times the police can present an attitude that is threatening and suggest alternative methods such as drug sniffing dogs, to locate substances.

"If there is no dope in the car then by all means let them [the police] use the dog to search the car," Wilson said. "Nine times out of 10 the dogs will be out doing something else and they will let you go."

It was also explained that often times the UMass Police Department was not always favorable to student rights, resulting in past incidents of cases of illegal search and seizure.

"There has been a regular ongoing problem with the UMass Police Department doing illegal search and seizures, confiscating the drugs, and then keeping them for themselves," Wilson said, explaining that in many police departments students were coerced into admitting that they possessed drugs. "The drug war has made the police become more dishonest."

Stressed during the discussion was the need to be firm yet polite and for an individual to know his or her rights in a variety of search and seizure situations.

"I would stay in the vehicle unless you are asked to get out, and keep your hands on the wheel," Wilson said, going on to stress that although an individual can be cooperative he or she can still refuse to be searched. "There is a difference between asserting your rights and being uncooperative."

Also addressed was the issue of rights if an officer suspects drug use and tries to search a dormitory room or a private residence. Wilson explained that in situations like house parties, the police have the ability to enter the house with greater ease.

"If the door is open and people are coming and going the cops can just breeze in," Wilson said urging listeners not to prevent them with force from entering. "If you try to get physical with them or try to hide anything in any way they will stomp on you."

CRC treasurer Peter Amstutz explained that there is a necessity for these types of programs to occur in order to properly inform students of their legal rights.

"We try to do these type of events as often as possible," Amstutz said. "I think that we need to do more of these."

Closing out the discussion Wilson urged participants once again to be aware that they had the legal right to ask for a lawyer and not to be unlawfully searched.

"Don't admit guilt, don't give them permission so when it goes to court at least you have a chance of getting the case thrown out," Wilson said. "You have the right to remain silent: use it."

Wilson received a Bachelor's Degree in History and Legal Studies before moving to New York City from 1994-1999 and attending Columbia University. He earned a Master's Degree from the school in Educational and Organizational Psychology. In addition, he was also the Associate Director of the Partnership for Responsible Drug Information (PRDI), a non-profit organization that acts as a national clearinghouse for non-partisan information on drugs, crime and government policy. He moved to Amherst to settle down and is currently running for Amherst Select Board on a pro-student ticket.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM COLLEGIAN

Aaron Wilson is a candidate for the Amherst Select Board.

"Don't let anyone talk you into believing that the constitution doesn't apply to you just because you are young," Wilson told students. "Whether in your car, in your dorm, or just walking around campus, students have the same rights and expectations of fair treatment as all American citizens."

AIDS Slam Jam

By Jennifer Pesonen
Collegian Correspondent

With the promise of a night filled with music, dancing and AIDS/HIV awareness, the Central Community of Baker, Greenough and Chadbourne will play host to Slam Jam Fest February 24th from 6 p.m. till 1 a.m.

Taking place in the basement of Greenough, Slam Jam Fest will not only provide a venue for vocal groups and musical acts to showcase their talents, the concept of AIDS/HIV awareness and education is what truly spawned the event.

"Our community doesn't know enough about it [HIV/AIDS] and our RD, Erica Piedade suggested that since we did a community project dealing with AIDS/HIV last year that we do one again this year," said Mala Panday, Resident Assistant in Baker and the Community Leader for Baker, Greenough and Chadbourne.

This year's event couples live musical performances with important educational information pertaining to AIDS and HIV.

"It's our second annual Slam Jam Fest. Our first one last year was held around AIDS Awareness Day, but we felt that events shouldn't necessarily be held around AIDS Awareness Day because AIDS and HIV is something that people should be aware of all the time," said Piedade.

Along with performances by groups such as Six Minutes, Younger Than Yesterday, Flava Unit and Run Over Time, the Springfield-based grassroots community organization, Between Family and Friends will be sending their Outreach Coordinator, David McKinney, to the Slam Jam Fest, where he will talk and field questions about AIDS and HIV.

Between Family and Friends is an organization dedicated to the support of those individuals living with AIDS or HIV and their families. While the event is free of admission donations are welcome and all those received will go to Between Family and Friends.

Piedade stressed the importance of the role this organization plays in people's lives by providing many different services.

"The more support the individual and the individual's family gets, the less stress they feel and the greater chance they have for living healthier lives," said Piedade.

Support given by Between Family and Friends includes housing, food, and medical care, however outside help is always gratefully accepted.

"They always welcome individual volunteers and contributors as well [as large groups]," said Panday.

Piedade outlined two of the major goals that the Slam Jam fest would like to accomplish. One being the student's education pertaining to protection from and the prevention of AIDS and HIV and the second concerning the view of people living with these diseases.

"We want people to learn about those people living with AIDS. We want to dispel the rumors. We want them to realize that people with AIDS look no different from anyone else and that they live real lives," said Piedade.

Anyone who is interested in performing at Slam Jam Fest can contact Toby at 546-0878.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM COLLEGIAN

Do Re Mi Fa
The UMass Chamber Choir and Orchestra will perform tonight at the Fine Arts Center.

Microsoft donates to student group

For students who are interested in the newest Microsoft operating systems line, there will be a chance to learn more about it, and receive free merchandise, at Microsoft's Install-A-Thon on Saturday.

At the same event, the National Society of Black Engineers (NSBE) will receive an oversized check for 4,000 dollars from Microsoft, to pay for a trip to their national conference.

Presenter Lawrence Lazilli, a consultant at Microsoft, expects to have a large group of mainly Computer Science and Engineering majors at the event on Saturday, where he will discuss such things as the advantages, disadvantages, and differences between Windows 2000 and Millenium.

"I'm going to try not to get too technical till afterwards," he said, explaining that there might be Business or Management majors in the audience who would not be familiar with advanced computer terminology. He said that after a slide show and presentation, he would answer more in depth questions.

Approximately twenty faculty and two hundred students are expected to attend the event. Students who register on the website www.studentdevs.org as part of the University of Massachusetts group have the opportunity to receive free technology, namely the latest Microsoft operating system, at the event.

Asked why Microsoft will be distributing the freebies, Lazilli said, "We want our technology to be familiar among the best and brightest of the industry."

– Tanya Mannes

Nothingness plagues SGA; Meetings are meaningless

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

With elections over and the needed 6.4 percent of the student body acquired, the Student Government Association [SGA] has elected a new Senate.

Last night's Coordinating Council meeting was left to deal with two issues, one of which was what was hoped to be the ratification of the Senate Elections. However, they were named dilatory due to the fact that they had yet to receive an official report from the Elections Commission. The other item on the table were the allocation of funding to two campus groups.

The Brown House Council, located in the Sylvan living area, requested the allocation of $750 for funding of activities. However, due to financial difficulties within the SGA, only an allocation of $550 was granted.

"We've been dealing with funding problems, and right now we're $10,000 short due to Spring Concert," Coordinating Council member Aaron Saunders said. "We would be happy to give you all the money, but honestly if we weren't in such dire circumstances things would be different."

After a forty-minute recess due to a lack of quorum, the Coordinating Council reconvened to finish out the evening's allocations of funds. Once again they were faced with financial restraints as funding was also cut short to SPIRATS [Student Paganism Integrated Religion In The Spiritually], who came before the Coordinating Council requesting $500 to help send six members to Rights of Spring, a paganism workshop in May. They were, however, only allotted $260 for the event.

"Normally we wouldn't fund an event off-campus at all, but the fact that you're making contacts through this event makes us willing to allocate funding to cover at least one other person's fees for the event," Chair of Ways and Means Mike Taugher said.

Saunders also agreed with Taugher in explaining that he felt that the group would benefit from the $260 allotted to them, and again emphasized the SGA's financial restraints.

"I thought that the overall meeting went good. We showed a bit more financial restraint than we have in the past meetings," Speaker Jim Eltringham said. "It's tough when you're not used to dealing with finances and having to tell someone 'no,' that you can't get all the money requested. I was proud of the group tonight."

Eltringham continued to explain that he felt that the Coordinating Council's overall decisions were strong and that now it would be up to the Senate and the Financial Committee to take over any financial allocations.

"Last semester was great and it seems like we have a good group of new Senators, some from last semester," Eltringham said. "It's unfortunate that things had to go the way they did, but everyone seems ready to get down to business."

The Coordinating Council will hold their final meeting on Sun. Feb 25th at 7 p.m. in hopes of ratifying the elections. The first Senate meeting is tentatively set for Wed. Feb. 28th at 7 p.m.

Correction:

The pictures of the tattoo parlor in Thursday's paper were taken by Jaret Barr, not by Ryan Benharris. Also, Ben Hartman is a body piercer, not a tattoo artist.

Amherst home to legendary writer: Dickinson Homestead opens doors

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Staff

Amherst, Massachusetts is home to many great writers of the past. For example, one of the notorious muckrakers, a journalist by the name of Baker, resided at 21 Sunset Boulevard, 280 Main Street, though, is perhaps the most reknowned address in Amherst. This address is where Emily Dickinson called home. It still stands and is now open for tours.

The Dickinson Homestead housed Emily from 1830-1886. The birthplace of the poet will be open to the public for the first time this year beginning on Saturday, March 3rd. The Homestead, a National Historic Landmark, is owned by the Trustees of Amherst College

Tours will take place Wednesdays and Saturdays from 1:00 to 4 p.m. Tours run on the hour during the designated times throughout the Homestead's open season. The only exception to this is a period from June through the end of August, when they run every half-hour.

Available at the Homestead will be the informative booklet, The Poet at Home. This booklet is designed to acquaint readers with the life and works of Dickinson. Also included in its contents are a map of Amherst and several essays.

There is also a new exhibit "in progress" designed for those who have already taken the tour and are searching for a reason to revisit. The newest addon to the tour is that of Ms. Dickinson's bedroom. It was recently the object of research in a historic furnishing report, which investigated the room's appearance during the great American poet's lifetime.

Many future events are planned in conjunction with the Homestead opening. These include the annual Emily Dickinson Poetry Walk on Saturday, May 12, at 1 p.m. with an Open House from 1-5 p.m.; Living History Day on Saturday, Sept. 8; and the Birthday Open House on Saturday, Dec. 8, from 1-5 p.m. Also, later in the year, there will be an opening of the new Tour Center and orientation exhibit.

Homestead tours do vary in the upcoming months. During April and May, tours will occur Wednesdays through Saturdays. However, between June and August, tours on Saturdays only take place at 10:30 a.m. and 11:30 a.m.

In addition, Sunday tours will begin in June and discontinue at the end of August. However, there will be tours on Sunday, Oct. 7. The Homestead will then close again from Dec. 9, 2001 to March 1, 2001 for the off-season.

The Homestead recommends reservations, especially for tours on Saturdays. Reservations may be made by calling 413-542-8161. Admission for Five College students is free of charge. There is a $5 charge for adults and $4 for seniors or other students. Children 6-18 are charged $3 and those under 6 are free.

MassPIRG on the prowl: spring initiatives kick off

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Staff

Last Wednesday, the University of Massachusetts chapter of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, or MassPIRG, hosted their general interest meeting for the spring semester in room 163 of the Campus Center.

UMass Chapter chair, Jesse DeAngelis, a second year History major, explained the objective of the meeting. "Tonight is our big semester kickoff," he said. "The goal is to let people know about our campaign and get people involved. We're trying to reach as many people as we can."

According to DeAngelis, the biggest focus campaign is MassPIRG's plan to protect the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge from oil drilling. The refuge is a habitat for many species of endangered wildlife. "There's 30,000 caribou," explained DeAngelis. "and also musk oxen live there. There's an Eskimo population that lives off the endangered species."

MassPIRG hopes to stop big oil companies, specifically British Petroleum, from considering the refuge for drilling. "Tomorrow is calling day," said DeAngelis. "We're going to call British Petroleum and get them to not drill. Hopefully, tonight will help raise support for the calling day. It's part of a nation-wide movement this week. People are having these calling days all across the country."

Another intended campaign for the spring, a walk-a-thon against hunger and homelessness, is scheduled for April 7th. "It's like a fund-raising walk-a-thon," explained DeAngelis. "Except that people will get pledges for community service instead of money."

The ongoing MassPIRG "Water Watch" is an attempt to educate the public about water quality in Massachusetts. "The water in Massachusetts is the second dirtiest in the nation," said DeAngelis. "60% of lakes and streams you can't fish or swim in."

The MassPIRG spring agenda also includes a student book swap, intended to spare students the extra fees placed on store-bought textbooks, and an energy efficiency campaign.

Megan Sherburne, a second year Nutrition Major, came to the general interest meeting to learn more about the proposed campaigns. "I was curious about the Hunger Study," she said. "I heard about it in class. I'm here to find out more."

Camiko Preciado, a first year student of undecided major, served as a representative of the fraternity Delta Chi, and hoped to find some ideas for community service at the MassPIRG meeting. "Our house is really involved in the community. We have 20-25 members and we can all corroborate on something. Also, I want to do something on my own to benefit the community, for my own self."

DeAngelis began the meeting with an impassioned speech, calling all concerned citizens to action. "Are you pissed off?," he asked the gathered students, and not getting a satisfactory response, shouted again, "...No, no...Are you pissed off!?" The audience responded with a loud, "Yes!" Encouraging student activism in the proposed campaigns DeAngelis said, "We're not going to let this continue, because MassPIRG is organized. MassPIRG is a group that has solutions to these problems. We have tactics for fixing these problems...MassPIRG is a solutions oriented group...We don't have a lot of money like the corporate people we're fighting. But we have students working for us."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1502 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a Associated publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sara Brownell Production Manager
Alan Burgos Editorial Production Manager
Eric Fisher Advertising Manager
Sue Perrenoud Advertising Production Manager
Tanya Monroe Diversity Editor
Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Meeke Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wiegardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majewski Assistant Operations Manager
Mary Pepin Classified Administrator
Brenda Blackmon Assistant Business Manager
Amy Clarkson Assistant Business Manager
Katie Bleh Assistant Advertising Manager

Financial Aid for SLOBS!
Win $10,000!

Are you a mess?

Knock us out with a brief description and up to four color photos of your messy apartment. You could walk away filthy rich!!

apartments.com™ messiest
college apartment contest

Go to www.apartments.com

NO PURCHASE OR ONLINE ENTRY NECESSARY TO ENTER OR WIN. Contest is open only to legal residents of the 50 United States and the District of Columbia, who are 18 years of age or older and currently enrolled as an undergraduate or graduate student in an accredited United States college, university, or institution of higher education as of January 31, 2001. Entries will be accepted starting at 12:01 a.m. CST February 1, 2001 and must be postmarked or submitted electronically by 11:59 p.m. CST March 5, 2001. Apartments entered in the Contest must be located in the United States or District of Columbia. One entry per apartment. Only apartments may be entered in the contest. Dorm rooms, student housing, sorority or fraternity houses, and military housing are not eligible. Entrants must reside in the apartment submitted for consideration through April 12, 2001. To enter, go to www.apartments.com, enter your email address, complete and submit the registration form, submit two (2) to four (4) color photographs of your apartment, and a paragraph or two of no more than 200 words answering the question, "Why is your apartment the messiest college apartment in the U.S.?" Or, print the registration form and send your entry via U.S. mail to: Apartments.com Messiest College Apartment Contest, 175 West Jackson Boulevard, 8th Floor, Chicago, Illinois 60604-2681. For complete official rules or a list of the grand prize winner(s), go to www.apartments.com or send a self-addressed stamped envelope to: Apartments.com Messiest College Apartment Contest, 175 West Jackson Boulevard, 8th Floor, Chicago, Illinois 60604-2681.

One (1) Grand Prize of $10,000 cash will be awarded to the winning entrant(s). Total retail value of the prize is $10,000. Void in Florida, New York, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, U.S. military installations and where prohibited by law. Contest is subject to complete official rules. The sponsor of this Contest is Classified Ventures, Inc.

The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
Beginning February 26th.
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)

DAVOR
Walsworth Publishing Company

Order Your 2001 Yearbook ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

Campus Perspectives

By Katy LoConte
Pictures by Ryan Benharris

If you could download any five songs from Napster, what would they be?

Kim McLaughlin
Communications and Theater major
Sophomore

"Wonderful Tonight" - Eric Clapton
"Elderly Woman Behind the Counter In A Small Town" - Pearl Jam
"Lovesnack" - the B-52's
"Baby Got Back" - Sir Mix-a-lot
Any song by the Dave Matthews Band

Joanne Vozzella
Psychology major, Italian minor
Freshman

"Butterfly" – Crazy Town
"Around the World" - ATC
"Stairway to Heaven" - Led Zeppelin
"With or Without You" - U2
"The Best I've Ever Had" - Vertical Horizon

George Matsumoto
Mechanical Engineering major Senior

"American Pie" - Don McLean
"Sandstorm" - Darude
"Around the World" - ATC
"Running On Low" - Surreal
"Stan" - Eminem

Dan Springer
Economics and Environmental Science major
Junior

"Just Wait" - Blues Traveler
"Lullaby" - Ben Folds Five
"Get It On" - Macy O'Parker
"Rainy Day" - Guster
"Seven Turns" - The Allman Brothers

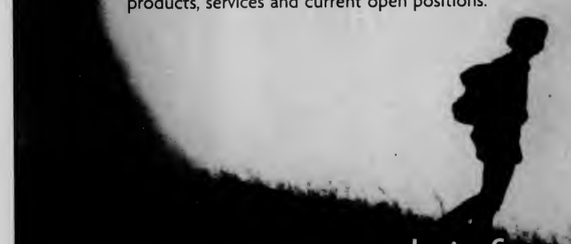
Matt Goldwasser
Economics major
Junior

"Live at Creme Fields" - DJ Tall Paul
"Live at Gate Crasher" - Paul Oakenfold
"Passing Me By" - Pharcyde
"Open Fighter" - Tupac Shakur
"Ill Vibe" - Busta Rhymes and Q-Tip

Rise
Focus. Excel. Seize the day.

You're on the move, and in today's competitive job market, your options can take you almost anywhere you want to go.

Sun Life Financial is also on the move, driving forward as a world-class, international financial services organization, providing lifetime solutions to our customers and building value for our shareholders. Our Vision, Mission & Va ues shape the way we do business and guide our employees toward excellence in their careers. If you are seeking that same career excellence with a company on the rise, visit our Web site to learn more about our products, services and current open positions:



www.sunlife-usa.com

Sun Life Financial℠

© 2001 Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, Wellesley Hills, MA 02481. All rights reserved. Sun Life Financial and the globe symbol are service marks of Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada. Sun Life Financial is an equal opportunity employer.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Jane Swift
Give her a chance

She's the most closely scrutinized woman in the state of Massachusetts, having juggled both a political career and family under the harsh spotlight of the Boston media while serving as Lieutenant Governor under Paul Cellucci.

Now, as Cellucci awaits Senate confirmation for his new role as United States Ambassador to Canada, Jane Swift is poised for center stage, hoping to silence the critics by letting her politics do the talking. As recent history suggests, however, those politics will have to be mighty loud to allow the focus to shift back to where it belongs: the job.

Criticism first began crashing down on Swift in 1999, when it was revealed that she had employed state aides, at times in her own home, to baby-sit her young daughter. Citizens of the commonwealth also squirmed when Swift used a state helicopter to take her to the Berkshires near Thanksgiving of that year to be with her ill daughter. Since then she has come out publicly, admitted poor judgment and suggested that we all move forward.

The question remains: will Swift herself be able to break away from past mistakes as she readies to enter the state's highest office? And will the birth of her expected twins raise new debate as she makes that transition?

Jane Swift as a mother should have no bearing on Jane Swift as Governor. Is the balance between work and family a difficult one to maintain? Yes. Will there be times in the near future that her thoughts will gravitate towards family rather than work? Yes. Does this make her any different, any less qualified than any of the other countless women in the working world, able to have both prosperous families and careers? No, it does not, and harsh criticism of that decision seems remarkably unfair.

The transition will be tough for Swift, complicated further with the arrival of the twins, and she will undoubtedly need to enlist help to ensure that things run smoothly. Swift has pledged herself to the job, and there is no reason to believe, as things stand now, that she can't do the job, and do it well.

It's not a case of Republican vs. Democrat, or male vs. female. It's a case of an individual who has taken on an enormous responsibility, and the ramifications of that decision will become apparent only as time unfolds.

To criticize and search out flaws in something that has yet to happen is ignorant; Swift, through the motions she makes in office, will eventually open those doors as every public official does. We should deal with those problems when they become real, and are not just imagined in the minds of a bloodthirsty public.

In her column for the Boston Globe, columnist Ellen Goodman made a strong point: Minnesota Governor Jesse Ventura spends his weekends calling action for the infant XFL. Is it a crime that ours spends time with family? Give Swift the chance to balance the two, and, if need be, criticize the work she was appointed to do, not the life she leads at the day's end.

This unsigned editorial represents the majority opinion of the Collegian diversity board.

Mexican troubles

At least once in my life I truly thought I was the survivor of a nuclear attack. Having just stepped outside one morning about a year ago, I remember seeing a landscape covered by thin black ash, as if after a massive explosion. What confused me was that the buildings around me were still intact.

I had arrived in Atencingo, a small village in Central Mexico just a night before, with a few other Americans who were studying abroad during the spring semester last year. We stumbled into one poor town that tourists would never visit in Mexico. The only reason we were there was because Diego, a Mexican friend, had invited us for a family celebration, and his place was close enough to crash for the night on the way to a larger city we wanted to visit.

Jose was an old man with a big mustache who used to be Diego's gym teacher. He met us the next morning at the town's shaded market, and pointed to the loud trucks, heavy laden with sugar canes, as a hint to the appearance of the mysterious black ash. While I was appalled at the level of contamination the town sustained, Jose explained to me that residents didn't have much of a choice. The town's main industry consists of a sugar processing plant, coughing up the ash by morning but employing thousands of people.

New technologies and free markets had ravaged sugar exports, he told us, and the plant will eventually be closed, "maybe next year, maybe the one after that. "His eyes turned gloomy and his kind smile disappeared, as he avoided my next question: "Where will those employees go?"

I hope that people like Jose were on the mind of Mexican president Vicente Fox, when he met George Bush at his lush Guanajuato ranch last week. U.S. policy, largely driven by corporate interests, wants to maintain towns like Atencingo exactly as they are now: hubs of low-wage workers and economic despair.

Why should we care? Not only because our policy might be immoral. Not even because we are breaking the rules of our own trading game. We need to level the playing field between Mexican and US relations because our current policy is eventually going to hurt us as well.

NATTY YAGUDIN

Take illegal immigration as an example, never mind the fact that NAFTA is responsible for far more layoffs in the US than illegal immigration ever was.

Illegal immigrants cross the border not to flood our labor market, as many people may think, but because there is great demand for them. While discussion over illegal immigration was called a "thorny issue" in the talks between Fox and Bush, a person with half a brain can figure out a simple fact: people are migrating because they know there is a good chance they can find a better job in the U.S. There simply doesn't exist any other good reason.

I see this as a kind of osmosis. The disparity between Mexican wages and US wages is so large that people run to the border in the same way that moisture escapes from a steamy room through a window.

The facts at hand bring about a fairly ridiculous situation. On the one hand, U.S. corporations are pressuring Mexico to keep wages low in order to exploit the wage difference for their profits. On the other hand, the U.S. is pressuring Mexico to deal with the illegal immigration problem. However, one effect cannot be treated without considering the other. I wonder why labor was never considered as an issue when NAFTA was signed. After all, it is the most valuable product that any country possesses, and it is a product that will move across borders, even when we don't want it to.

How do we lose from the illegal immigration phenomenon? We lose by the disturbing poverty, education and healthcare issues it brings to our communities, and the bigotry and racism that abound as a result. Of course, it is hard to count these social ills with numbers. However, it doesn't mean they don't exist.

Take the drug trade as another example. This past week, Bush finally acknowledged that "rampant U.S. drug consumption was in large part the cause of the international narcotics trade in which Mexico has become a key player," according to a recent CNN article. Good morning, America! Lack of real understanding has plagued the US government in its war on drugs, perhaps because it is fighting a strong, surprisingly capitalistic economic concept: the law of supply and demand.

Unless the U.S. government takes a real look into what is the root of the drug problem, it is going to fight an uphill battle with Mexico regarding that issue. Unless the U.S. government looks at things in a different way, the final losers in this war are going to be Americans.

Take environmental concerns as a third example. Now oil plants are setting up shop in Northern Mexico, to streamline cheap electricity to power-starved California. The U.S. loves the lax environmental regulation in Mexico, brought on by decades of economically impoverished regions that welcomed dirty U.S. factories as a primary source of income. But we ignore the fact that, admittedly, Mexico is fairly close to us. Sooner or later, we will breathe the air coming from our own factories. We will learn that we are spoiling our own back yard, however far and desolate it may look from Washington or New York. We may not share the same land, but the effects on nature, especially air and water resources, are border blind.

It's about time that the Bush administration develop a real vision into US-Mexican relations, not only to foster fairer and cleaner trade, but also to protect US interests in the long run.

However, don't expect the laid-off people of Atencingo to do better anytime soon. The attention they will probably get culminates as an anecdote in this column, because no one seems to care about them. It is too bad, because it is people like them that eventually end up at the forefront of the hot issues between the US and Mexico: illegal immigration, drug trade, and environmental damage. It is true we can't see them from here. But it doesn't mean they don't exist.

Natty Yagudin is a Collegian Columnist.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBEJ
EMMA, MASTER MIME, ILLUSTRATES THE FAMOUS "I'M REALLY DROWNING THIS PERSON AND NO ONE CAN STOP ME HA HA HA" AT EACH RECITAL © 2001
www.monkey-box.net

Napster: furthering artistic goals

MIKE DELANO

On the subject of Napster, one view often heard is that artists should be able to decide whether or not they want their material on the service. Many people who, for all intent and purposes, use and support Napster, take this position, viewing the prior consent of individual artists with relation to their work as a common courtesy. I take a different perspective.

When an artist records music and puts it out in the public domain, they give up a certain level of control over the music. They want that recorded music out in public, but only so far as people have paid for access to it. These artists would probably not object to people making burned disks or cassette replicas of their CD recordings, but they would object to those same people as Napster users sharing it with millions of people rather than their close friends.

At this point the argument shifts from the ethics of sharing music to compensation, since sharing is not seen as the problem but the side effects of sharing, and what sharing on a larger scale will mean to them monetarily. Artists that support limited sharing of their music, since it doesn't do much damage to their money earned, become angered that millions of people are getting their music for free, since it will supposedly result in no one going out to buy the album in a store. This brings up two different problems for not wanting one's music on Napster.

First, if you are an artist that has millions of people interested in your music and you are receiving millions of downloads, chances are some of those people will be buying your album. Next thing you know you'll be signed to a major record label, and it will be the golden road from there on in, thanks to either your innate star power or the profile-boosting of Napster.

Second, if you are an artist that doesn't generate much interest, and you feel that Napster is sucking away the small amount of money you may have made on album sales, think positive. Chances are the small amount of people that went out of their way or stumbled upon your music online is greater than the number that followed you out to your car trunk after a show to buy the album the "right" way.

There is also the viewpoint I hold that is removed from strict copyright law and centered on personal beliefs. Not being a musician, I cannot pretend to know how musicians feel about their art or how they want it to be distributed. What I do know is that if I had exhausted myself creating a piece of art I would rather have it be widely distributed at a loss than sold only to people in my neighborhood at 100 percent profit. The reason people display art, whether in a gallery or on record, is to have it be seen, to possibly light people's lives and maybe even change the world. Having that art online, in a format that won't rip or warp or deteriorate, for countless generations to appreciate, or at least have the opportunity to appreciate, is something special. It is something even more special every second it is out of corporate control, out of the hands of those that would selectively preserve what they saw fit.

If people living generations after I am born come to appreciate my work, I would feel the joy they experience is worth loosening my control over my art. And there are people that would agree with my outlook, but then wonder why one would spend all of their time and soul creating art when they can't support themselves or put food on the table. They wonder why they shouldn't abandon their dream and get a steady paying job at a retail store, because then at least they aren't hungry. Well, chances are that if their work was going to sell in the millions, then Napster or not, they were going to be a huge star. And if their work wasn't going to sell in the millions, then without Napster they'll still be an unknown, and with Napster the future can only get brighter for a potential fan/consumer base.

By insisting that music continue to be sold/transmitted the way it is now, which almost anyone would agree is flawed unless they love watching artists get screwed over while middlemen roll in dough, people are essentially saying that the current system is great and there is no sense in change. I simply can't imagine any musician or music consumer not recognizing the benefits of Napster, and even if one is wary about it, able to see it as at least a step towards some alteration of the system we have now, one that needs change. Napster is a step to demand that change. Now that the big corporations have wised up to Napster's corrosion of their control, the public stands tall with ample bargaining power to demand music corporations change their ways and find some middle ground between complete music freedom and complete music control. The other option is letting the record execs storm into court with high-powered attorneys, stamp Napster out, and laugh as we return to business as usual.

Being a writer, I can imagine somewhat as to how artists must feel. When my work for the Collegian is sent all across the world (through www.dailycollegian.com) available for anyone who may be interested, I see it as progress. Progress to a goal I don't even know yet, but one I'm excited about. Although it is progress to me, I try to sympathize with my colleagues who would prefer their work more tightly controlled. I try to sympathize, but there's the issue of the medium we work in. Music, like writing, is a public medium, and when someone gets a song stuck in their head or is touched by a sentence on a page, they can't return that feeling or give it back, it is theirs forever. If a Napster-like device existed for writing, which it essentially does in the Internet, one has to be prepared for everyone to have access to your work, and not necessarily just the people who bothered to pick up a hard copy of the Collegian. Myself, I don't want the amount of people who have access to my work to be limited to those lucky enough to go to school at UMass Amherst or live in the Valley.

As corporations weigh more heavily on the minds of many people, it comes as little surprise that the big music companies don't like anything that cuts into their expensively attained market control. A recent unsigned editorial in the Collegian gave support for Napster in endearing-by empowering language. "Napster threatens the dominance of the large companies in this country...this does not strike us, by any means, as a negative thing." The key to holding the ranks in this battle against corporate music control is recognizing which side the artists should be fighting for.

The company executives, farthest removed from the actual creative process, are the ones that feel the sting of Napster. They'll watch their artists, or 'content providers,' become more empowered through Napster, and less happy with their label treatment. They'll cringe as their artists demand more of a cut and less restrictions. Then the suits will bring out the big guns.

The suits will try to sell you sob stories of how artists are the real losers in the Napster battle, the ones whose back contains the knife you twist every time you download their songs on Napster. But it's the big companies that lose out, and the artists that have the most to gain.

The courts are narrowly focused on existing copyright laws and trying to apply them to a previously nonexistent new technology. Rather than see how the old rules can help out the massive music companies in shutting down Napster, I would much rather hear the courts talk about changing the existing rules and applying them to this new technology that is quite obviously out of the bounds of current legislation.

Shawn Fanning went ahead and developed the next big thing for the music business free of charge, and their shock that their own high paid development gurus didn't get to it first has transformed into anger. Anger that they don't have a piece of the pie at the moment, and everyone's getting to listen to music they love without their consent and without first greasing their palms. Big companies would love to see Napster shut down. The idea is already out there, their development team is already fired.

If Napster is shut down, they can eliminate the free aspect, and apply simply the sharing idea to their own business practices at a price. Definitely don't expect to see a technology as revolutionary as this disappear, regardless of court rulings. It will just return under customer friendly corporate control.

Cherish Napster now, not only the service but also the name; because the service will be around but the name might not. It will be some new corporate name like Fleetster or Bertlesmanster. Right now the name Napster is about freedom, community, about us (the music fans) versus them (the businessmen). But if artists like Metallica and smaller ones start siding with them under the misguided premise that it's protecting their own best interests, then the battle's a lot closer to over, and not for the good guys.

Mike Delano is the Collegian*'s music editor.*

Sister: a metamorphosis

ROBERTO DELGADO

Julienne, your name is like that of a flower, and you're starting to blossom now, sister. As a brother I've been feeling the responsibility recently to talk to you to let you know that I care about what kind of young woman you're becoming.

When I walk into the bathroom we share in our apartment, the walls seem to tighten. There's an abundance of female products—tampons, lipstick, wads of hair in the shower—everywhere. It seems like we're all a part of your growing; witnessing your changes; watching your likes and dislikes come and go. Now the arguments between you and mom have escalated; no longer will you be told what to do and accept passively. A little attitude is revealing itself.

I remember when you wore full-body pajamas—head to toe in pink. Now, you require nothing less than GAP, Abercrombie and Old Navy. I remember when you bathed your Barbie's, their hair all kinked up after it dried, it looked like brillo. Now, you require nothing less than Britney, Christina and Riqui. I remember when, fresh from the hospital, I saw you in mom's arms, sleeping, wrapped like a burrito in white. So young then, I saw you as a toy, a new thing to play with. I was so excited to know you, and to have seen you peacefully sleeping in your crib that very first day was a beginning for you as well as for me.

Since then, things have changed. We've grown older, wiser. More of the world is in relief for me now, and, sadly, more of the bad is also apparent now. As a brother one of my responsibilities is to let you know that you are beautiful. And since our time in this world is limited, you need to make the best of the moments you'll spend crying, loving, shouting, giggling, smiling, knowing and understanding.

Life awaits you, sister. When I go into your room I see you interests. Looking through your books, I found one entitled Sex, Lies & the Truth. The first page has a dedication to none other than Roberto, from Mami. On the bottom of that first page there's a date: February '95. I was fifteen then, just two years older than you are right now. As I leafed through the pages, I thought of time and how it slips away so suddenly.

You will learn so much, sister, all that's in store! Know your body; embrace all of its mystery. When you reach that stage, when having all the right proportions will be the number one priority in your life, remember that you will always be papi's preciosa. All the insecurities that are those teenage years will pass – for a while. They will assume other forms later. But, alas, the battles of the future are just that, future battles. But, prepare yourself now with what you have. Let your character grow in relation to others, but don't be afraid to stand alone once in a while. You come from a bloodline saturated with the strength of Boricua women. Let your hair rich in Aztec black hang long and strong. Wear your ethnic emblems with pride: caramel skin, wide hips, and all…

As a brother I will do my best to try to bridge the gaps that divide us. I will be a model for the best in men, and, if it came to it, I will protect you from the worst. Sexually, don't tease, for it's the quickest way to be despised by men. Be decisive in your intentions: clear in word and action. There is no reason to doubt yourself if you always make your position clear. Respect a man's boundaries; but when it's time to wage war be confident in what you've learned from me. Hold fast to my actions as examples; always be critical of what you hear.

It is amazing to watch you grow. And I'm eternally grateful because through you I am learning how to be a better man. Be patient with me and I'll be patient with you. I'm still learning about who you are as a young woman, and I'm sure there will be times when I wont understand. Regardless, I would like you to feel comfortable in approaching me whenever you need to; I am ready and willing to help you with anything that I can.

There's so much beauty in you, sister. There's so much that you have. When I go back home on Sunday mornings I can hear you playing our out-of-tune piano. The sound reverberates off the apartment's walls, no doubt, creating a disturbance upstairs, downstairs, and all about. For me, the songs I've heard you practice over and over in that clustered living room have meant more than the ones I've heard you play in spacious cathedrals. Tears have flooded my eyes on many occasions, just lying there on my bed on a bright Sunday morning. I'm always astounded by your innate sincerity; your generosity is genuine. From you I've learned to give the best of what I have, whether personal or material. After some coaxing, you understand that your old clothes, no longer in style by your standards, will have to do. Your dimples preserve your innocence, and your onyx locks will someday be eternal inspiration for some poet like me.

My sister, you have to find strength within yourself because ultimately no one can give you the strength necessary to face life alone, which we all must do at some point. Sister, guard your heart above all. Make the man who will be blessed with it work for it. Let him work assiduously to attain that gem you have to offer. A nation is a body; its boundaries must be protected at all costs. And so it must be with your body; more precious than that of any nation, sister. You must protect it resolutely. Men must bow to the miracle that is a woman's body. You have within, sister, potential motherhood: to be a creator of life! Don't be too enticed by what you see in the pages of Seventeen. The plastic femininity that is advertised there doesn't exist. Instead, grow close to our grandmothers: stalwart symbols of resolute womanhood. Embrace our mother's stories; make them your own, for there you will find what it really means to be a woman.

I trust that you will read these words with an open heart. Maybe some of the things I've written here you will not understand, not yet at least. You are a tender thirteen years old; much of what is written here you have yet to live, and that's okay. Nevertheless, know that your brother has been inspired by you, and as you continue to blossom, life has many surprises in store.

I'm here, Juli, and I love you very much.

Roberto Delgado is a Collegian staff member.

LIFE IN HELL
©1997 BY MATT GROENING
MY LIFE IS NOTHING BUT ANGUISH AND TORMENT.
I AM IN CONSTANT PAIN OVER MY LOSSES, MY SETBACKS, MY FAILURES.
I WANT TO LAUGH AGAIN.
LAUGHTER HELPS PUT MY TORMENT INTO PERSPECTIVE.
WITH LAUGHTER, I WILL FEEL WHOLE AGAIN.
IF I COULD LAUGH, MY SOUL WOULD BE HEALED.
I FEEL TORMENTED TOO.
BWA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA!!
THANK YOU.

Telemarketing joy

KEN CAMPBELL

Up till now, my columns have been pretty harmless. I can say this because I haven't gotten any death threats. Yet.

Anyway, my target du jour today is the base of anybody living in the continental United Sates that owns one of Alexander Graham Bell's snazzy little telephones. That's right, I'm talking about telemarketers, the morons you love to hate.

Is it really so hard to believe that I don't want to discuss my credit options at 9:15 on a Monday morning? I realize that UMass has sold my name, address and DC dining preference, and I don't have a problem with that, but please be a little freaking selective about it. I don't mind getting "junk mail" because I like getting mail, junk or otherwise. Opening up that little lock box in my dorm's lobby and finding an envelope or two reminds me that I'm alive.

A few mornings ago, I was rudely awoken from a wonderful dream involving several winning lottery tickets and myself by the double ring of an off-campus call. (Side note: anybody go home and whenever the phone rings, you automatically, just for second think "on campus"? Anybody go home and dial nine to "get out?") As I groggily reached toward the phone, I thought who could possibly be calling me at that hour. It was 9:30, which granted, isn't too early, but when your first class isn't until 11:15, 9:30 a.m. is the last loop-the-loop on the roller coaster ride of REM sleep.

It turned to be a woman who wanted to talk about magazine subscriptions. I don't know about the rest of you, but the only magazines I have time to read are the ones left on the DC table as I scarf down my oh so healthy Franklin Food Surprise in my little twenty minute break between classes. While I realize I am missing out on glossy covered literary gems with articles such as "Sexy Abs in Sixty Days" and "The Secret Sigma Everybody Knows Except You," I'm sure I don't care. So I hung up on her.

There is nothing I hate more than telemarketers. Well, maybe insurance companies, but that's another column.

Whenever I get one of these idiots on the phone, I use that opportunity to practice my "piss people off" skills. And because I'm such a nice guy, I'll share some of my favorite tactics in dealing with scum of the universe, telemarketers.

TACTIC ONE: The Tower of Babel

Since almost all of us are required to learn a second language, use a telemarketing call to practice your verb forms.

Nothing says "I really care nothing for what you are saying" than switching languages on some poor sap that's prattling on about how great an interest rate of 400% is.

Telemarketer: "Good morning, Mr. Campbell, I'm calling to tell you about ScrewYou Bank's special college Visa card."

Me: "Ich wünsche etwas Kase, Herrn poops Kopf."

Telemarketer: "Um, excuse me?"

Me: "Vendez votre âme sur eBay."

The telemarketer will usually hang up after this. On the off chance that the dork actually understands the language you're speaking, don't panic. Simply repeat the words "cream cheese" over and over, and they will leave you alone.

TACTIC TWO: Rear Window meets Scream

This tactic requires two people. Now, since most telemarketers are glad you didn't just hang up them right away, simply tell them you have another call. Call up one of your more sinister friends and conference them in. This can produce some incredibly funny results.

Telemarketer: "So as I was saying, you could get incredibly gouged. I mean credible, through this ten-step process."

Me: "Really? Do tell."

Bastard Friend 'O Mine: "I know where you live."

Telemarketer: "What? What was that?"

Me: "What was what? I didn't hear anything. Please go on."

Telemarketer: "Ok. I guess it must be on my end. So anyway-"

Bastard Friend 'O Mine: "Ever dance with the devil in the pale moonlight?"

Telemarketer: "What the hell?"

This tactic doesn't usually last long because one of you will eventually burst out laughing. But man, enjoy it while it lasts . . .

TACTIC THREE: Threatening legal action

The Federal Government does care about you. In fact, it cared so much that in in 1991 it passed the Telephone Consumer Protection Act. This is basically telling these geniuses to put you on a do not call list, although I think this only works for sales calls. If they call you again within ten years, you can sue. Nothing brightens a tele-idiots day like this tactic.

Telemarketer: "How would you like to pay 40% off the cover price for your favorite magazines?"

Me: "How would like to pay me $500 for breaking Chapter 47 Code of Federal Regulations Section 227 subsection 2277"

Telemarketer: "Umm . . . what?"

Me: "Because every time you violate that law, I can sue you for that amount or higher. Got it? So put the phone down, and cross my name off the list. Spiffy doesn't live here anymore, pinhead."

I guess you could always just hang up on them, or politely listen to what they have say before explaining that you're not interested in owning a deluxe limited edition Blink 182 sheet set with matching dust ruffles, but where's the fun in that?

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Staff Member.

THINGS TO DO:
• GO TO CLASS
• PLAY VIDEO GAMES
• WORKOUT
• SEE A MOVIE

WHAT COULD YOU DO...
IF YOU WERE DONE WITH WORK BY 9AM??

THE COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR STUDENTS TO DELIVER NEWSPAPERS MONDAY THRU FRIDAY

INTERESTED: CALL SHAWN @ 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT

Applicants Must Have Own Car

McMurphy's
Uptown Tavern
The Mighty Ross Tones
Every Sunday Night
No Cover
Positive ID Required
37 North
Pleasant St.

When someone asks you What you did in College,

What will you say?

The Amherst Fire Department is recruiting members for its Student Force.
Stop by the Campus Center, Feb. 26- Feb. 28 for more information.
The North Fire Station will host an Open House on
March 2 from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

The Station is located at 603 East Pleasant St., up the road from Sylvan.
Call for more information 549-5419

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING

Arts Editor •
David Toupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Local blues, Local brews

By Joe Cardozo
Collegian Staff

This Saturday, February 24th, The Alan Marcus Blues Project will be appearing at the Amherst Brewing Company at 10:00 p.m. The group is a trio featuring Alan Marcus on guitar, Jerry Ellis on bass and David Maxwell on drums. The band is currently celebrating the recent release of their CD The Alan Marcus Blues Project: Live! which was recorded during a televised performance this past fall on GCTV in Greenfield, MA.

Marcus is a native of Brazil, who was raised in the blues early on, performing in bars and nightclubs by the time he was 14. He gained a great deal of fame in South America with his power blues trio of the time, The Blue Jeans. At that time he was considered by many critics in South America, including newspapers such as the Folha de São Paulo and Folha de Tarde, to be "the best blues guitarist of his generation." The band's video for "O Cachaçeiro" was featured on MTV and was named one of the top ten independent videos of 1992. The band's highlight came in headlining the AfterSport Blues Festival in São Paulo, Brazil, 1992.

At the peak of their fame, Marcus left to take a break from the music industry. After taking some time to rest and travel the world, he settled in Greenfield, MA in 1997. He contacted Jerry Ellis, whom he had seen perform six years earlier, and David Maxwell in 2000, and the Alan Marcus Blues Project was formed. The band has a classic blues-rock sound and Marcus' style is very reminiscent of Stevie Ray Vaughn. Their CD is a combination of originals and classic blues tunes such as "Red House" which was made famous by Jimi Hendrix. The band is very tight and Marcus' guitar work is excellent. For a fan of classic blues-rock, The Alan Marcus Blues Project is a sure bet.

The Alan Marcus Blues Project will appear at Amherst Brewing Company on Saturday, Feb. 24 at 10:00 p.m. There will be a $3 cover charge.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE \ COLLEGIAN STAFF

C60 was part of a solid night of metal this week at Skybox.

Aces High: Metal storms the Skybox

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

6GIG, C60, and SEVENTEEN
Skybox
February 20

A spirited night of heavy music took place at Skybox Tuesday night for the few that showed up for the mid-week show. "It's a night of numbers" noticed 6 Gig's Walter Craven, as his band along with C60 and Seventeen propelled a bill that was at times big-ger, at times smaller, but always at home in the cozy high-rise venue.

Boston's Seventeen is a power-trio at heart, and sometimes seemed lost with their four members. Their songs are straight-ahead rockers in the Supersuckers variety, but with a distu rhing lack of flashy guitar solos. And for a band that has a CD entitled Bikini Pie Fight!, I'm sure it's not below them to unleash some overblown excess. Unfortunately, except for a few breakouts, when you hear the guitar riff start the song, enjoy it while you can, because when the bass and drums kick in, it's all gone. This gives Seventeen live a rumbling, driving sound like Motorhead, and while that sound would never garner complaints from me, it kind of dilutes their playful stage presence and light-hearted lyrics.

Regulars on the Boston club scene, Seventeen acted the role, breaking two strings throughout the course of their set, doing impromptu songs during string changes, and urging the crowd to get ready for the two upcoming "real" bands. Small setbacks didn't hold the band back at all, though, and they looked to be having a great time despite almost total crowd ignorance of their music.

Fellow Bostonians C60 were up next with a more metal-oriented set. The dreadlocks and sing/scream vocal style of lead singer Keith Smith is reminiscent of Lajon from Sevendust, although C60 is less tricks and more straight metal than those Southern folk. Although not overly mobile (heralded ed-op editor Rob Schulze informed me that he tore his abdomen onstage (11), Smith is definitely an imposing presence onstage, stalking around the small stage and making direct eye contact with the crowd rather than staring into space. It's no wonder that few fans took him up on his offer to come closer to the stage, adding that "we only bite if we really like you."

C60's set, while not completely grabbing, was nonetheless solid and varied, and the band wasn't afraid to slip more groove-oriented heavy numbers into the middle of their set. The band also had many people familiar with their material, singing along and dancing/channeling anger. Local rock radio hit "Crazy" closed their set with a huge burst of energy, even if Smith wasn't up to belting out the roar that opens the song. The brutally groovy riff and melody of that song is what, in abundance, will make their live shows more memorable.

6 Gig, touring in support of their debut album Tmean Experiment, were the most energetic act of the night, seemingly as at home at Skybox as they would have been in venues much larger. Their set was heavy, in effects pedals and microphone distortions, which were not overly used or annoying, but blended many songs together into an undistinguishable blob of noise. Noise in the good way though, and the 6 Gig live show is similar to that of Taproot, where a cohesive, although not totally original, sound and mood is established in favor of the strength of individual songs. Also similar to Taproot, 6 Gig has one song that simply towers over the rest of their collection.

"Hit the Ground," introduced as "the song you've probably heard" and the one the band has recently shot a video for, transformed the guys from Portland, Maine into something much bigger than the band that just performed a mediocre set. Heavy, but polished and shimmering guitar work and excellent use of the vocal distortion gave the feel of a band that is firmly in their groove and doing their best work. This is the song that will take them places, and if only their whole set could have been so uplifting. The spaced-out unreleased closing song, heavy on pedals and distortion, suggests that while an over-reliance on effects has dragged down many other bands, it may be the key to 6 Gig's future success.

Mo' Money Mo' Problems

In a shocking development, Jennifer Lopez – J.L.O if you will – and Shawn "Puffy" Combs announced last week that they are ending their nearly two year relationship.

Although neither could be reached for comment, it is believed a major factor leading to Lopez dumping Puff Daddy is the fact that he is likely headed to prison for a long long time after shooting an innocent woman in the face in a New York night club last year. Reportedly, Lopez was deeply saddened by the fact that conjugal visits would not be allowed when Puffy went to the big house. Therefore she gave him the boot.

In addition to being on trail for the shooting incident, Puffy is also being charged with bribery. According to the charges, Combs attempted to bribe his limo driver the night of the shootings to "pretend the gun was his" during police questioning. Reportedly, Puffy offered a fake diamond ring, a pack of cigarettes, and the new 112 album as collateral.

Although neither could be reached for comment, it is believed that both will attempt to somehow continue with their lives without each other. Lopez recently has been busy shopping for the worlds sluttiest dress, and hopes to where it at this years Grammy's. Puff Daddy meanwhile, while not in the courtroom, is keeping himself busy in the studio producing the eighth Notorious B.I.G album in the last four years, despite the fact that B.I.G has been dead for four years. With no more unreleased Biggie material left, Puffy has resorted to using Biggie's voice on his answering machine message, with a ripped off Police sample in the background for the first single on the "new" album. Also, Puff has been busy investigating the laws of New York State trying to determine whether it is legal to wear shiny Tommy Hilfiger jumpsuits as prison uniforms.

The plan for a Lopez-Combs musical collaboration has also been put on hold due to the breakup. Reportedly, the couple was planning on doing a Combs produced duet which would include Lopez whining into a microphone, and having her voice electronically altered to actually sound passable, while Puffy rapped over a Milli Vanilli sample. The duet, which was an early candidate for next years Grammy's, may never come to fruition due to the untimely breakup.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian staff member.

COURTESY OF DAVID MAXWELL

Blues and Brews

The Alan Marcus Blues Project plays a set at Amherst Brewing Company this Saturday.

Bluegrass soundshine

By Sudheer Goddam
Collegian Correspondent

O BROTHER WHERE ART THOU?
Various Artists
Uni/Mercury Nashville

Selecting music for a film soundtrack can be quite difficult. Not only must the songs add to the cinematic experience, setting the tone of a scene or expressing a feeling that the characters on screen cannot, they should also convey some sense of coherency among themselves.

Given the range of music available to a producer – conceivably every song ever recorded – you would expect movie soundtracks to sound better than the mishmash marketing schemes coming out of Hollywood nowadays. Thankfully, independent filmmakers, who've given us most, if not all, of the best soundtracks in recent times, care just as much about their music as they do their script. In no case is this more apparent than in Joel and Ethan Coen's O Brother, Where Art Thou, the soundtrack to their Depression-era film about three prison escapees making their way home.

Together with famed producer T-Bone Burnett, the Coens have unearthed a robust collection of early bluegrass, folk, and gospel that not only defines the foundation of their film (according to the Coens, the script was laid out around the music, which was recorded first), but also reestablishes roots music's position on the contemporary map.

Rather than using previously released recordings, Burnett and the Coens recruited the finest talent in alternative country – Allison Krauss, Gillian Welch, Emmylou Harris, Norman Blake and more – to perform new versions of old songs. In addition, vintage equipment and recording styles were used (all performers worked around a single microphone, without the benefit of headphones) to replicate the sound of the period recordings. The result is a refreshing and authentic musical overview of a time and place where life was hard and community was built on perseverance and stoicism.

The centerpiece of the album is "Man of Constant Sorrow," presented here in four versions, two instrumental and two vocal. The resounding vocals are performed by the Soggy Bottom Boys, the on-screen trio of John Turturro, Tim Blake Nelson and George Clooney (who lip-syncs to the voice of Union Station's lead guitarist, Dan Tyminski). The great Norman Blake deftly renders the first of the two instrumentals, but by far, the best reading of the song is John Hartford's sublimely rueful take on the fiddle. In contrast, Hartford's interpretation of "Indian War Whoop" is absolutely gleeful.

Allison Krauss lends her honeyed voice to the spiritual "Down in the River to Pray," which is no less affecting when removed from the film's visuals. Gillian Welch and Emmylou Harris join Krauss in performing the subtly menacing acapella lullaby "Didn't Leave Nobody But the Baby," depicted on-screen as a hypnotic lure by three watery Sirens. Chris Thomas King presents us with a soft version of the seminal blues song "Hard Time Killing Floor Blues," and Welch and Krauss return for a delightful duet (accompanied by a nimble guitar and mandolin set) in "I'll Fly Away."

Also included in the mix are period recordings of Harry "Mac" McClintock's canny ballad of a hobo's paradise, "Big Rock Candy Mountain," and an actual chain-gang's rendition of the prison chant "Po' Lazarus." The best track on this album, however, is the elegiac "O Death," septuagenarian bluegrass legend Ralph Stanley's chilling lament to Death to spare him for another day.

What makes this track, and nearly every other on the album so special is the primacy of the lyrics. There are no teenagers crooning about love here, and this isn't the country-pop pabulum that passes for Nashville these days. Each of the songs is deeply resonant with its period and smacks of an integrity that makes it credible and important even today. Bluegrass fans already know what to expect out of this album, but for the rest of us O Brother is, literally, as pure as a breath of country air.

Television's finest an underrated classic

By Ping Chu
Collegian Staff

Of all the albums featured on the recent VH1 special The 100 Greatest Rock Albums of All Time, number 85, Television's Marquee Moon seemed the most out of place. Not because of it was not worthy of the company of classics like AC/DC's Back In Black or The Beatles Revolver, but because of its obscure and sometimes desperately unique nature. Many rock aficionados adore it. Critically acclaimed singer songwriter Elliot Smith declared it his single favorite album and punk rock poet-laureate Henry Rollins referred to front man Tom Verlaine as being a "monster guitar player." So exactly what is all the hype about? What makes this album, which has never managed to sell more than a handful of records, worthy of such massive acclaim?

Marquee Moon was the first full-length album from the band formerly known as The Neon Boys. The group featured guitarist Tom Verlaine, drummer Billy Ficca and bassist Richard Hell. By the end of 1973, the group added rhythm guitarist Richard Lloyd to the roster and reformed under the name Television. By 1977, Hell would leave to form The Heartbreakers and would be replaced by former Blondie bassist Fred Smith. It was this lineup that would produce this classic album.

Though they are often grouped with the then burgeoning punk rock scene that revolved around the infamous New York club, CBGBs, Television distinguished themselves from their peers in many ways. Indeed, their songs were a far cry from the two-minute power chord blitz that would characterize many of the bands that made CBGBs their home. Instead, their guitar lines were dramatic and their songs complex, often transitioning in ways that would baffle rock traditionalists and breaking the mold of the Verse/Chorus/Bridge style. Verlaine's songwriting was lengthy, with the shortest songs being about four minutes and the title track extending to almost ten. Verlaine and Lloyd trade solos on this album that seamlessly transition between the chaotic and the subdued, a characteristic that would have a profound impact on future bands such as Sonic Youth and The Pixies, pushing the envelope of rock improvisation. Such innovation would lead one to believe that Television was attempting to be a progressive rock band, but that is certainly not the case, and Marquee Moon is in no way another try at Dark Side of the Moon.

Though stylistically divergent from punk, in many ways it becomes obvious that this album took many of the same cues from punk's predecessors. Verlaine's vocals share an uncanny resemblance to Lou Reed during his Velvet Underground days. Especially as he croons and shouts his way with a sometimes frantic and other times slight falsetto. The feel borrows from that same ethic as well, having a low-fidelity quality that permeates it, a notoriously Velvet Underground characteristic. It is often loud and bombastic but has a delicate, even elegant quality throughout. Marquee Moon fails to let down its intensity and takes you through all 46 minutes without a single dull moment. From the annals of rock 'n roll history, this album stands tall among the greatest albums ever conceived and executed on LP, and its legacy lives on in the songs of today's rock pioneers.

Club d'Elf: funk majesty

Album is no sub for show

By Joe Cardozo
Collegian Staff

CLUB d'ELF
As Above: Live at the Lizard Lounge
Grapeshot Records

A band that isn't really a band, but rather an amorphous pool of artists, the only truly consistent member being bassist/composer/conductor Mike Rivard...songs that aren't really songs but rather ideas, forms upon which the musicians improvise, painting a new picture every time they grace the stage...instrumentation that varies widely from night to night –everything from guitars and keyboards, to brass, to turntables, to didjeridoo, to accordion, to electric violin, and percussion instruments such as the oud, doumbek and garaqab. What exactly is Club d'Elf? Certainly not typical.

Club d'Elf is the brainchild of Rivard, in his own words, "an evening of improvisational trance and dub music." For the past two and a half years, d'Elf has appeared regularly at the Lizard Lounge in Cambridge, MA. The Lizard Lounge is small, with the capacity to hold no more than about 140 people. Yet in this cozy room, d'Elf has developed quite a cult following. I once met a fan at a show in Providence, RI, where d'Elf was opening for the Slip, who assured me that he never missed a d'Elf show, and to do so would be tragedy...the man did not even stay for the Slip, but rather ducked out early to go see the Derek Trucks Band. d'Elf has seen a variety of guest performers. That night in Providence, Kenwood Dennard substituted for Erik Kerr on drums. Kenwood has performed with a huge variety of artists, including Miles Davis, Sting, Vanessa Williams, Harry Belafonte and an Infinite many more. Other guest artists have included John Medeski of Medeski, Martin and Wood, DJ Logic, and Dr. Didg, a didjeridoo master who consistently appears across the jamband scene.

Club d'Elf's double disc As Above is an attempt to capture the pure energy of that room, that which would drive a fan to such devotion—for fear that some new musical idea would be explored or some random guest would make an appearance that would forever be lost. Though all the tracks on these discs are very listenable, the magic of d'Elf is not captured here. At best, such as in "Left Hand of Clyde," the album provides a groove heavy soundtrack, that will keep your head bobbing for the entire 12:40. Throughout the discs are examples of what makes d'Elf so riveting. Every instrumentalist is a master, yet each knows his place. Rivard rarely displays his bass playing chops, content to hold a solid groove and oversee operations, yet when he does, as in "Left Hand of Clyde," it is clear that he is a master. Instruments weave in and out at his call, each finding the perfect addition to the mix. The song "Lass Business" appearing once on each disc is a perfect example of how greatly varied a single composition can be from night to night. Unfortunately, too often this compilation falls into the category of background music. The motion and improvisations are subtle, and the magic of such music is really in watching it unfold and experiencing it as it comes. To listen to something like this on CD simplifies the sound, often leaving the listeners unable to absorb themselves fully in the recording. My recommendation—go see Club d'Elf.

COURTESY OF CLUBDELF.COM

Club d'Elf delects from the Lizard Lounge this weekend to grace the Iron Horse Music Hall.

Strings and Jazz in Noho

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

This coming weekend brings a very diverse mix of music to the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. The funky Club d'Elf makes their way to the Western portion of the state with a performance Friday night at the Club Helsinki in Great Barrington followed up with a performance Saturday night at the Iron Horse. Sunday night brings the Colorado-based bluegrass quartet the Yonder Mountain String Band.

Club d'Elf is a five-piece core band that has a reputation of bringing along many special guests. Guests that have played with d'Elf range from jazz legend Kenwood Dennard to the famed DJ Logic, when not playing with his group Project Logic. Club d'Elf brings with them for their winter tour one of the most famous keyboardists on the jazz scene, John Medeski of Medeski, Martin and Wood fame. Medeski is complemented onstage by Mike Rivard laying down some phat bass grooves, Mat Maneri on violin, Brahim Fribgane on the oud and other percussion, Eric Kerr on drums and another special guest, Tom Hall on sax.

This power ensemble usually calls the Lizard Lounge in Cambridge, Massachusetts home, where they have been performing bi-weekly jam sessions since 1998. With meager initial crowds, word-of-mouth began to drive in the fans. Club d'Elf brings a very diverse sound, filled with many layered tight jams. Be sure to get there early as the show begins promptly at 10 p.m. on Saturday night. Tickets are available in advance from the Northampton Box Office at 1-800-THETICK for $12.50 or $15 if any are remaining at the door.

While you are getting your tickets for the d'Elf show, you might as well pick up tickets for the Yonder Mountain String Band on Sunday Night. The Yonder Mountain String Band (YMSB) is a four-piece bluegrass ensemble that is taking the jamband scene by storm. In only two years of existence, this band has done what many other older jambands have only dreamt about. They have played the mainstage at some of the nation's largest bluegrass and jamband festivals including the Telluride Bluegrass Festival and the High Sierra Mountain Music Festival as well as the Berkshire Music Mountain Festival held in Great Barrington, MA each summer.

While listening to this band, you will be able to recognize many of their great attributes right off the bat. First, you will notice how young and talented these musicians are to be playing such time-honored, traditional music. Next you will notice that there is no one playing the drums. This allows the listener to hear a very unique, crisp clarity from YMSB's music. This clarity is unrivaled by almost all other bands of the genre except for possibly The String Cheese Incident. Please allow yourself to open your ears and eyes to enjoy music that is nothing like anything you have ever heard or seen before. The show begins at 7pm on Sunday night at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. Tickets are $8 and are available from the Northampton Box Office by calling 1-800-THETICK or at the door on the night of the show.

Rival gym Owls flock to Amherst

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The best never rest.

It was only Wednesday that the Massachusetts men's gymnastics team trampled Southern Connecticut, 154.150-141.500, to move to 4-3 on the season.

The trip down to New Haven marked a big step toward this weekend's meet against rival Temple. The Maroon and White is looking to improve its season by pulling up more alternates and new members to the team and ask them to perform the duties of an elite gymnast. The matchup at Southern Conn. proved that the Minutemen behind the scenes could help build the team as much as the more noted gymnasts.

Junior Ryan Roberts took first place in the all around with a score of 49.250. Roberts also took first place in the parallel bars at 8.20 and the vault at 9.00. The junior gymnast added a second-place run on the rings, scoring 8.45.

Senior Ben Kandel took first-place honors on the rings above his teammate with an 8.90. Classmate Andy Leis came in second in the all around, scoring 49.200 for the day.

The Minuteman gymnasts will take on Temple tomorrow in a meet that is part of a long-standing rivalry. The No. 13 Owls will be competing here in Amherst after a second place finish in a tri-meet with William & Mary and Penn State. The Owls were able to conquer the W&M Tribe, but fell to the Nittany Lions, who are currently ahead in the national standings.

"This will be the closest meet in the conference," UMass coach Roy Johnson said. "Temple always comes ready, and I think we're ready. I think it comes down to who can stay on the appratatus the longest, who can hit their routines – execute their passes and put the ball in the hoop, so to speak."

Two of Temple's strongest gymnasts, sophomores Alex Weber and Rich Maguire, are coming off a strong weekend at home. Weber is ranked 8th nationally and took three first place finishes. Maguire is just behind his classmate (sitting in the number 10 spot) and placed first in the all around last Saturday.

"They're the top two," said Johnson of the Temple duo. "But I think that we've got five guys can match up with their top two."

The Minutemen fell short of the Owls last season in a tri-meet by just over two points. Last year the Maroon and White was on the road to Philadelphia for the close call, and still had a strong day placing an all time mark on the vault at 38.700 and a season high on the floor exercise at 37.700 as a team.

"It should be a great meet," Johnson said. "It's usually well attended and I anticipate another great crowd this time."

■ Hockey

continued from page 10

tender Scott Clemmensen has also had a strong year, as he holds a 21-7-1 record.

"They might individually have a little more talent than we do, but the best team will win on Friday and Saturday nights," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

Sophomore forward Tim Turner leads the Minutemen with 22 points. Junior Martin Miljko and Jeff Turner are right on his heels with 21 and 20 points, respectively.

However, despite all of the adversity that is facing UMass, it can remain confident in the fact that it has played well at Conte Forum in the past. Earlier in the year, the Minutemen hung with the Eagles for two periods before running out of gas in the third. Last year, UMass defeated BC in Chestnut Hill, 5-1. And, two seasons ago, the Minutemen gave the Eagles all they could handle before dropping a heartbreaking 3-4 overtime decision.

"We've got four games left, starting with BC, who's No. 2 in the country and probably could be No. 1," Wallis said. "It's going to be a big challenge for us."

■ Lacrosse

continued from page 10

48 goals last season and placed fifth in the country for goals per game average.

The Pride's offense also ranked fifth in the nation in scoring with a total of 212. Its 118 assists were good enough for sixth. Saturday's opener will mark the fifth time UMass has met Hofstra in a season starter. In those games, The Pride is 4-0. It also leads the all-time series 13-10 and has topped the Minutemen the last two contests. Last season, the Maroon and White fell to Hofstra 10-7 before its home crowd at Richard F. Garber Field.

"Hofstra is an excellent team," Cannella said. "They're very physical and very athletic. It's going to be a dogfight."

One factor leaning toward the UMass side is that a good chunk of Minutemen are from the New York area. Cannella hopes the homecomings will play in his team's favor.

"A lot of our guys are from Long Island," Cannella said. "It's a tough place to play, Hofstra's good at home."

"To go home and beat Hofstra in front of a good crowd will definitely give us some respect that we deserve," N.Y. native Gabrielli said.

■ Hoops

continued from page 10

doesn't always know what you're going to do. If they know you're going to try and block everything, they'll start pump-faking and you'll start fouling. You've got to be choosy when it comes to blocking."

In other words, patience is the recipe for UMass' success. The team (and its fans) had to be patient during the struggles of the early season. Guys like Rhymer had to be patient when they were having trouble putting up the numbers. And come tournament time, the Minutemen will have to be patient while they are watching the first round.

McMurphy's
Proud Sponsor of The 2001 Guinness Toast
Friday February 23 11:00pm

Shimmery halter top
Assorted patterns...$28
ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

MOLSON
SUN • SNOW • PARTY
CollegeFest
Tremblant, Quebec, Canada
ONLY $389
Springbreak
5 Days & Nights
5 Parties • Condo • Lift Tix
SKI TRAVEL
1.800.989.ski.9
WWW.SKITRAVEL.COM

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

CARLA'S CREATIONS
Tanning Hair & Nail Salon
Largest Tanning, Hair & Nail Salon in the Valley!
*All New, Top of the Line Tanning Equipment
*Nail Services *Waxing *Hair Services!
10% off any HAIR SERVICE w/this Ad
New Market Center • 61 University Drive • Amherst, MA • 549-1828

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Hampshire College Professor seeks native Trinidadians for language study. Must have grown up in Trinidad. Call Joanna Morris 559-5462

AUTO FOR SALE

Pocket Rocket. VW Golf GTI 1996 VR6. Green, leather seats, alloy wheels, sunroof. Perfect condition. Call Ellie (413) 527-4627

1993 Saturn SL2 Clean, well maintained. 100k miles $2700. 549-8000

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition. $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Do you need money$? Will you be in the Amherst area over the summer? Do you like working outside? Are you reliable, hard-working and friendly? If so call Amber for a great job. 537-3348

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

EMPLOYMENT

The UMass Football team is looking for interested students to video practices and games for the spring 2000/2001 season. Experience preferred but will train. Scholarship and work study programs available. If you are interested please contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319. Come be a part of a championship tradition.

CAMP CANADENSIS, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours form New York and Philadelphia), Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, gymnastics, fishing, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20-8/17. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

2 Summer Jobs on Nantucket Island, MA. Office Assistant, Mothers & Household Helper. B. Auction Gallery Assistant, Furniture Porter, Display, Deliveries. Salary plus housing. Drivers license required. 508-228-3942 or send resume, P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584

EMPLOYMENT

French & or German Speaking candidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or e-mail diane@remi.com

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME

Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.50 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for : Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama, Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.camp-waynegirls.com

EMPLOYMENT

PT Help Wanted Amherst Greenhouse growing pesticide free, hydroponic herbs. 549-3558

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life

5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

HOUSE FOR SALE

3 Bedroom House close to University. 549-6157

INSTRUCTION

Kickboxing Instruction and General Personal Training. All levels and abilities. Joe 548-8979

Aerobics, Circut Training, cardio kickboxing. 4 week program only $20. Call 5-1962 for details.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Long distance relationships CAN WORK! Find out how at www.sblake.com Do you want your band recorded? Call Hellbent Studios. Digital and Analog Recording. $20 per/hr. 413-549-5942

ROOM FOR RENT

One Bedroom in two bedroom. 3/15-6/15 (flexible). Laundry, furnishings, near bus route. $375/month. Inc. HEAT 584-4664

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

To Take Over Lease Boulders Apartments Call Rob or Jackson 256-0386

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

STEREO EQUIPMENT

JVC Stereo: 3-disc, dual tape deck, 240 total watts, mint condition and includes all packaging. Call Rob at 549-4275 for more info.

TO SUBLET

1 Bedroom & Study in 4 bedroom apt. Avail 3/4 $375/month. Call Julie 413-364-1430

TRAVEL

Spring Break Airport Rides: Students want to save $5 Bucks on a ride to the airport? Call to reserve a roundtrip from Campus to Bradley Airport by February 28 to get your discount. Just mention this ad when making your reservation. Valley Transporter. 253-1350

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $179 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplash-tours.com 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guaranteed 1-800-367-1252. www.spring-breakdirect.com

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

Classified Clerk Needed

Apply at The Collegian

Hours Available

Mon 12:00-1:20
Tue 1:00-4:00
Wed 10:00-12:00
Fri 8:30-12:00

Contact Marty

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS Hartford
4 - CBS 3 Springfield
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - FOX 61 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - PBS 24 Hartford
13 - NBC 38 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - WGBY (Member Choice)
16 - WB 30 New Haven
17 - WHPX
18 - ESPN2
19 - UPN 20 (Member Choice)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Closed to Cable
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - Sci-Fi
30 - Nickelodeon
31 - Discovery
32 - Nick at Nite
33 - TV Land
34 - Comedy Central
35 - MTV
36 - Univision
37 - Boomerang Financial Network
38 - College TV Network
39 - ESPN
40 - MTV2
41 - VH1
42 - The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING C - Campus FEBRUARY 23, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		G. Auriemma	Women's College Basketball	St. John's at Connecticut. (Live)		CeCe Winans Live in Concert			Filler	Wash. Week
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Fugitive "Strapped" (N)		Nash Bridges "Slam Dunk"	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Fugitive "Strapped" (N)		Nash Bridges "Slam Dunk"	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20	News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Sabrina-Witch	Popstars	Popular (N) (In Stereo)		News	Friends	Sudden-Susen
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "The Invisible Man"		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	7th Heaven "Love Sinks"		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Sabrina-Witch	Popstars	Popular (N) (In Stereo)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date
WVIT		8	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Providence "The Invisible Man"		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Seinfeld	Friends		"Starship Troopers" (1997) Casper Van Dien (In Stereo)				News	Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "The Invisible Man"		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Wee	Wall St. Week	Slate We're in (Time Goes By		Vicar of Dibley	Manor Born	Cherie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	11	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20	News	Nightline
WSBK	12		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Gary & Mike	Celebrity	Gateway (N) (In Stereo)		Frasier	Med Abt. You	Spin City
WTBS	13		Roseanne	Roseanne	Friends	Fresh Prince	"Crocodile Dundee" (1986, Comedy) Paul Hogan, Linda Kozlowski.					"Kazmoohoo" (1992) Jeff Daniels.
A&E	14		Night Court	Nawsradio	Law & Order	"Disappeared"	Biography: Jimi Hendrix		Competition "Memphis BBQ"		Point "Yellow Ids"	Law & Order	"Purple Heart"
CNN	15	23	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point		Larry King Live	CNN Tonight	Spin Room
COM	16	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Pulp Comics	Pulp Comics	Pulp Comics	Pulp Comics	"Romancing the Stone" (1984, Adventure) Michael Douglas
DISC	17		Wolves of the Sea		Meanest Animal in the World?		Casino Cops		Casino Cops		Casino Diaries	After Midnight	Justice Files
ESPN	18		Sportscenter		Death of Henk Gathers		NHL Hockey	St. Louis Blues at Detroit Red Wings. (Live)					Sportscenter
LIFE	19		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Healthy Start: Begin Before		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Sweet Dreams" (1996, Drama)		Fitzsh-Amber Thiessen		Division "The Fast Factor"
MTV	20		Real World	Real World	Fear Of Stress		Grammys	Dave	Cribs	Diary	Sports Illustrated Uncensored		Undressed
NICK	21		Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Rugrats	Hey Arnold!	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Roc (In Stereo)	Jeffersons	All in Family
SCIFI	22		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Black Scorpion "Crime Time"		Farscape (In Stereo)		Adventures of Jules Verne		Black Scorpion "Crime Time"
TLC	24	28	Trauma: Life in the ER		Reunited Lighthouse		Rock & Roll Moments-Grooves		Mick Jagger: The Ultimate		Eric Clapton: Crossroads		Rock & Roll Moments-Grooves
TNT	25		ER "Mask of Two Hearts"		Pretender "Over the Edge"		"Desperate Measures" (1997, Suspense) Michael Keaton.					"Desperate Measures" (1997, Suspense) Michael Keaton.
USA	26		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		"The Runner" (1999, Drama) Ron Eldard. (In Stereo)			Fernclub.com (In Stereo)
HBO	31		"Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith. PG-13				"The Patriot" (1998, Action) Steven Seagal. R		"Blood Money" (1996) Wings Hauser. R			Mexican: Fest	Dennis Miller
MAX	27		(4:45)		"Ghostbusters II" (1989, Comedy) Bill Murray. PG		"Cruel Intentions II" (2000) Robin Dunne. R					"Drop Zone" (1994) Wesley Snipes. R	Passion Cove
SHOW	29		(5:00)		"A Night at the Roxbury" (1998) Will Ferrell		"Bringing Out the Dead" (1999, Drama) Nicolas Cage. R				Stargate SG-1	Stargate SG-1 "Watergate"	Beggers

Buttercup Festival By Eliot Garbauskas

WOW, TWENTY FLAVORS OF JELLY BEANS!
WE ARE OF ONE MIND. PREPARE YOURSELF FOR THE FULL REALIZATION OF OUR HORRIFIC VISION.
...NOAH
TEN DOLLARS PLEASE.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

HEY, KID— YOUR RIDE IS HERE!
I KNOW.
BUT BEFORE I GO, I WANT TO MAKE ONE THING VERY CLEAR TO YOU.
I WILL DO ANYTHING— ANYTHING!— IN MY POWER TO STOP YOU FROM MARRYING MY MOTHER!
WHOA! BIG WORDS FROM A LITTLE...
UNCLE, STUDY-BEACH STOP IT! OW!

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

WELL, TURN UR MIDDL NR AGAIN'S DOORS
ROSES?
WHAT'S UP, LOUIE?
WE GOT A PROBLEM.
ONE OF THE BUBBOWS WON'T CUT BACK FOR A SECOND. CLOWNS AND MR. POINT-TO-POINT A SHOWDRIFT.
MR. DUKE!
GOT IS HE BLOCK-ING THE SERVICE ALLEY?
NO, NO. I'M JUST THROW-ING MY LAW SUIT.
I'M DOIN' HAIR, SUE!

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

MARRIAGE. BAH! I DUNNO. ZERO.
WHY NOT, MAN?
WELL, I THINK THAT LIVING TOGETHER HAS GIVEN US SOME VERY USEFUL CHECKS AND BALANCES.
THE VERY PRECARIOUS-NESS OF IT INSPIRES A CREATIVE TAUNCH OUR GETTING MARRIED MIGHT COMPROMISE THAT.
ON THE PLUS SIDE, IT'D REALLY KICK OFF MY EX.
MARRIAGES HAVE BEEN BUILT ON LESS, MAN.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

I PUT CANDLES ON THE DINING ROOM TABLE.
THE CANDLES ARE RIGHT HERE
I USED THE YELLOW ONES FROM THE GARAGE.
THE CITRONELLA CANDLES? THOSE ARE FOR REPELLING INSECTS, YOU FOOL.
HAVE YOU TAKEN A WHAFF OF PETER'S SPAGHETTI SAUCE?
OK, GOOD POINT.

Horoscopes

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Take care that you're not too flighty, mercurial or noncommunicative today. Strive to keep your feet planted firmly on the ground at all times.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You can do things in a manner that attracts a great deal of positive attention today, or you can remain in the background. You know your place.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may find yourself in a more dangerous position today than expected – but you are better equipped than anyone else to deal with it well.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You're in the mood for nothing but the best today, and you may have it – provided you are willing to make one single, initial sacrifice.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Concentrate on finding the most direct route today – literally or figuratively. Today, you'll learn that getting there is not half the fun!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – It may be time for you to examine your own character a little more closely – and with a little more objectivity. You may reveal a surprise!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Someone close to you is likely to ask you the key question today – quite unexpectedly. Your initial response will tell the tale.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Sure, you've been talking about taking that vacation with a good friend for some time – but when is it going to happen? Make firm plans today!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Take care that you're not trying to manufacture other people's responses to your affairs today. Stick to the rules at all times.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Tell the truth about yourself today and you'll impress even those who have been most critical of you. Honesty can prove quite disarming.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're going to get the news as it happens today – and you're not willing to give up without a fight! You want to be on the cutting edge.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Despite your ups and downs recently, you should be able to look at things with bright expectations and a willingness to forge ahead today.

Adam & Eric By Ross Burach

HEY, YOU TWO GUYS WANT TO PLAY SOME BASKETBALL TONIGHT?
SORRY, NOT TONIGHT. MICHAEL, IT'S LINDSAY'S 21st BIRTHDAY
LINDSAY, WHO?
LINDSAY

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WHAT DO YOU THINK PEOPLE WOULD CALL ME IF I WERE RULER OF THE WORLD? ALL I CAN THINK OF IS MEGA COMPLETOR, BUT THAT SEEMS TOO OBVIOUS.
COULDN'T I JUST CALL YOU "BUCKY"?
WELL, YOU'RE A LITTLE WEIRD AND MEGALOMANIACAL. I'M GOING WITH "NAPOLEON."

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

RJ'S GUILT RELIEF! YEAR 2000 ABSOLUTIONS FOR BLOWN RESOLUTIONS
I RESOLVED TO BECOME THE PERSON I ALWAYS KNEW I COULD BE, BUT NEVER WAS.
WHAT HAPPENED?
I ALMOST BECAME THE PERSON I ALWAYS THOUGHT I COULD BE.
AND YOU ENDED UP MISSING THE PERSON YOU ALWAYS ARE...
YEAH, WHY'S THAT?
SOMETIMES YOU HAVE TO LOOK DOWN TO LOOK UP

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HIYA, BUCKY! HOW'S IT EEW. WHAT IS THAT?
MY RABBITS FOOT. IT'S FOR GOOD LUCK. WELL THAT AND THREATENING RABBITS, OBVIOUSLY.
UHHH, THAT MUST BE WHAT ROB IS TALKING ABOUT WHEN HE SAYS "SICKLY AND ALL HIS FAUX PAWS."
ACTUALLY, THERE'S JUST THE ONE.

Quote of the Day

"She's pasty white with a touch of Coors Light"

-Nullset

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Hot Turkey Sandwich

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan) (B, H, W)

Cuban Black Beans (vegan)

DINNER

Lemon Pepper Cod (B, F, W)

Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)

Zucchini Mushroom Crepes (vegetarian) (B,H,W)

Chicken Jambalaya (F)

Au Gratin Cod (H)

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 26	HIGH: 42 LOW: 34	HIGH: 53 LOW: 40

Solid Custom Tattoo
460 West St. Amherst, MA
Route 116 549-0093
tues-sat 1-9
sun appt. only
A Tattoo is for life
Know your artist

ACROSS

1 Movies
7 Country addr
10 Catch a fly
14 Win back (losses)
15 Brewery product
16 Select carefully
17 Schedule
18 Foot part
19 Pierre's girlfriend
20 Canada's place
23 Liver spreads
26 Soak as flax
27 Encumbered
28 — the Red
29 Exclude
30 Limpwrists part
31 Helped a hood
33 Actor Harrison
34 Lawyer's thing
37 Prom-goer's decoration
38 Perfect example
40 Oral pauses
41 Ben
42 Large stork
43 Crib
44 Bless
45 Young foxes
46 In the black entry
49 Above, in verse
50 Digs for ore
51 Minivan predecessor
54 Nomad's shelter
55 Female sandpiper
56 Deadlock
60 Division word
61 Snortstop Ripken
62 Bright colored bird
63 Waterfall sound
64 Yankovic and Molinaro
65 — tiger

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ROOST SWAP GAVE
ANWAR MAYA OBIS
JUNTA EVEN WILT ASSEMBLE CANDICE PIT GAL BEAR
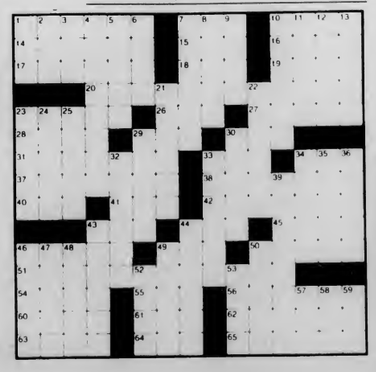
SASSED NAKED
ASKED WISECRACK
RAIN JEEPS ORAN
INNOCENCE SLIME
RHODE MILDEW
IST UPSIDE
STIGMA STAGGERS
LOBE RICE LIMIT
AVER DRAMA ELITE
METE VAMS SALEM

12 14 00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN

1 Angelico's title
2 Limb
3 Cube material
4 Joins
5 Praise
6 Practice boxing
7 Instead
8 Ice cream treat
9 Judge
10 Pharaoh's charm
11 Damp
12 "— in Wonderland"
13 Collect bit by bit
21 Merchant
22 Panacea
23 Harmony
24 Shady spot
25 Strata
29 Already started
30 Give back the money
32 Papeete's island
33 Fish that hitches a ride
34 Batman's pal
35 Overact
36 "Green Eggs and Ham" writer
39 Absorbing
43 Gambler
44 Sapphires: a.g
46 Up and about
47 Office worker
48 — Fe Trail
49 Basketballer Shaquille
50 "The Lone Ranger" star
52 "Free Willy" whale
53 Serving of mashed potatoes
57 Trot
58 In the style of
59 Hall-of-Famer Ott



Today's Staff

Night Editor — Rob Schultze
Photo Technician — Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor — Matt Despres
Production Supervisor — Roberto Delgado
Production Staff — John Zawislak, Adi Huseinovic

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Friday, February 23, 2001 | 10

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith

collegian_sports@yahoo.com

BYE, BYE, BYE

UMass eyes GW, tourney

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

It might sound crazy, but it ain't no lie.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team looked up a first-round bye-bye-bye in the upcoming Atlantic 10 Tournament on Thursday by taking the day off. As the Minutemen got a break from the drills and whistles, Xavier stymied St. Bonaventure 77-60 at the Cintas Center to insure UMass a spot in the bleachers during the first round of the conference playoffs in Philadelphia.

"We haven't had a bye since I've been here," said head coach James "Bruiser" Flint, whose team has beaten Duquesne in the opening round of the last two A-10 tourneys. "It gives you a chance to go down and scout the other teams."

One of those teams is George Washington, whom the Minutemen will have to worry about a little sooner than the postseason: UMass faces the Colonials at 2 p.m. tomorrow afternoon at the Charles F. Smith Center. This is the second meeting this year between the two teams; the Minutemen (12-12, 10-5 A-10) cruised to a 76-60 home victory on Jan. 6 against the Colonials (12-14, 6-7 A-10).

That game marked a definitive turning point in the Maroon and White's season, as the team won seven of its next eight games and climbed into the upper echelon of the conference standings. The GW game itself was like a microcosm of the team's season; the Minutemen struggled early and trailed 37-25 at the half before coming together at the break and pummeling the Colonials with total team basketball.

"In the first half, we were rushing shots and making bad decisions," said UMass guard Monty Mack, who scored a season-high 28 points in the win. "In the second half, we cut down on the mistakes and really played harder than they did."

It wasn't just that the Minutemen played harder than GW; they also played smarter. Colonial sparkplug and reigning A-10 Rookie of the Year SirValiant Brown struggled on both ends of the floor (five fouls, five turnovers) and spent much of the second half driving into the teeth of the UMass defense and pleading with the officials for foul calls.

"Brown likes to jump into you and try to make contact," Mack said. "We did a good job of moving our feet and keeping our hands up, making every one of his shots tough without fouling him."

Flint echoed his tri-captain's sentiments by commending his team for playing aggressive D on Brown without "bailing him out" with fouls. Mack's partner in UMass' all-Boston backcourt, junior Shannon Crooks, wasn't nearly as diplomatic in his assessment of Brown's charity stripe strategy.

"He does a good job of acting sometimes," said Crooks, who canned 8-of-10 of his own foul shots against GW. "The refs are quick to whistle on him, too. You can't let it get to you."

There is another defensive strategy that can effectively shut down a slasher like Brown as well: UMass' hulking front line defenders can lurk down low and swat anything that comes near the rim. Senior Kitwana Rhymer did just that in the Jan. 6 melee, rejecting a game-high four shots as a nice compliment to his double-double (11 points, 16 rebounds). Rhymer again played the part of one-man rejection committee in Tuesday's win over Rhode Island, sending five URI shots sailing off into the stratosphere to bring his team-leading season total to 54. Factor in blockheads Micah Brand (29 blocks) and Ronell Blizzard (25), and UMass' swat team appears to have a pretty nice trend going defensively this season.

But like so many things in life, anything this fun can't be good for you.

"We go shot-block crazy sometimes," Flint said. "That leaves us vulnerable to weak-side rebounding. I tell the guys to stand in there and take some charges, so [the opposition]

Turn to HOOPS, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Monty Mack and the Massachusetts men's basketball team have secured a first-round bye in this year's Atlantic 10 tournament.

Minutemen looking for basement ladder

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

These days, the Massachusetts hockey team can feel its backs pressing against the hard concrete. With four games remaining in the regular season, the Minutemen reside in the Hockey East basement and are currently on the outside looking in at the league playoff picture.

Merrimack holds a one-point lead over UMass for the final post-season spot, but the Minutemen will face two of the Top 10 teams in the nation in successive weekends. If UMass wants to reach the HE playoffs for the third consecutive year, then it will need to take the first step this weekend in a home-and-home series against No. 2 ranked Boston College.

Tonight the two teams will face off at Conte Forum before making the shift to the William D. Mullins Center tomorrow night. Game time is slated for 7 p.m. on both nights.

"BC brings a lot to the table," UMass senior captain Jeff Turner said. "They have a Hobey Baker candidate in Brian Gionta, a good defense and [sophomore forward] Krys Kolanos. They're a very good team, but we're ready for what they will bring Friday and Saturday."

A season ago, the Minutemen faced the same predicament, only they were chasing UMass-Lowell for the final spot. UMass took three points in its final four games – against the same two clubs – and edged out the River Hawks for eighth place. Needless to say, the Minutemen are looking for at least the same result this time around, if not better.

However, UMass hasn't won since Jan. 20 against Merrimack. Since then, it has posted a 0-6-1 mark. And, to make matters worse, BC drubbed the Minutemen 9-5 in the first meeting between the two schools in October, 2000.

"We haven't won in a while, and for the senior class, we're eager to get a couple of wins under our belt," senior assistant captain Kris Wallis said. "We need at least one more point to prolong our senior season and that's what we want to do. When you get to the playoffs, upsets can happen."

Added Turner: "BC is going to be a couple of exciting games. We went through kind of the same situation last year and we did very well for ourselves. The boys have been working hard the last couple of weeks."

Boston College (23-8-1, 14-5-1 in Hockey East) enters tonight's game stationed in first place in Hockey East. The Eagles have posted a 9-3-0 mark at Kelley Rink this season.

The boys from the Heights are paced by the explosive scoring ability of senior All-American Gionta (24 goals, 17assists) and sophomore Kolanos (21 goals, 19 assists). The addition of freshman Chuck Kobasew has also been beneficial, as he is third on the club in scoring (18 goals, 18 assists).

Defensively, the Eagles are solid as well, with seniors Bobby Allen and Rob Scuderi, and junior Brooks Orpik patrolling the blue line. Senior goal-

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

Battle for the final spot

Remaining UMass Schedule

This weekend:

HOCKEY EAST

2nd @ N.H.

March 3rd vs. N.H.

March 9th - H.E. playoffs

Merrimack	14
UMass-Amherst	13

Men's lax run and gun into season and No. 9 Hofstra

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

During the last two seasons, Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella implemented a high-octane policy. His Minutemen approached each game with an up-tempo, offense oriented style.

Don't expect anything different tomorrow when his Maroon and White opens its season in Hempstead, N.Y. at No. 9 Hofstra. Because the only disparity from last year's 6-8 squad is that this one is a year older. You might even see a rise in the level of intensity.

"It's a lot more run and gun," senior co-captain Jeremy Gruski said. "I think we guys who can really step in and score goals dodge and create, and feed as well. It's the most talent I have ever seen, most talent I've ever been a part of at UMass."

Experience is at a maximum. UMass returns 12 seniors, 13 of its top 15 scorers, two of its starting defenseman and its starting goalie from last year. All will combine to battle the eleventh-toughest schedule in the nation, as cited in the Face-Off College Lacrosse Yearbook.

"The seniors want to go out on the right note," Cannella said. "They want to be remembered as winners."

Senior Rich Kunkle, who scored 28 goals and notched 15 assists last year, leads the Minutemen's deep front line. UMass has the most depth at attack where Cannella has potentially seven starters to pick from.

Gruski and fellow seniors Alex Racioppi and Jeff Seals lead a well-built midfield that Cannella describes as being the strong suit of the team.

Senior co-captian Chris Gabrielli, junior Matt McFarland and sophomore Tom Fallon form the majority of the defensive wall for UMass. All-America candidate McFarland will again provide the bulk of fear for opponents as he did last year with his ability to keep top threats in check. The strength and versatility of Gabrielli and Fallon also give McFarland the opportunity to be more aggressive and take chances.

"To go home and beat Hofstra in front of a good crowd will definitely give us some respect that we deserve," Gabrielli said.

The Pride is headed by senior midfielder Doug Shanahan, a second team All-American who compiled 16 goals and eight assists last year while ranking third in the nation in face-off percentage. The Hofstra offense is driven by junior Tom Kessler, who scored

Turn to LACROSSE, page 7

2001 Men's Lacrosse Schedule

SATURDAY:
@ Hofstra

MARCH
03: Stony Brook
10: Navy
17: Albany
21: B.C.
25: Vermont
31: Penn State

APRIL
07: UMBC
14: Yale
18: Harvard
21: Georgetown
28: Syracuse

MAY 02: Rutgers
05: Brown
12-28: NCAA Tournament

HOME GAMES IN BOLD

Owls and Flyers head final weekend ticket

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

It's the beginning of the end.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team enters its last weekend of the season looking to end a two-game losing skid and garner some much-needed momentum heading into the Atlantic 10 postseason tournament.

The Minutewomen head south to Philadelphia to battle Temple on Friday night and then hurry home to play their last home game of the 2000-2001 season against Dayton. UMass (11-14, 6-8 A-10) needs to win both games if it wants a chance to finish the season in fifth place in the A-10 standings. The top five teams in the A-10 receive a first round bye in the tournament, which opens next Friday. Dayton, LaSalle and Duquesne are also seeking that final fifth spot.

But it all begins against third-place Temple Friday night at the Liacouras Center.

"They're a good basketball team," head coach Jeanie O'Brien said. "Dawn Staley has come over with her coaching staff and taken that same group that struggled so much last year and changed their attitude a little bit. They're doing a great job together."

Temple is coming off a 69-60 victory over LaSalle, a game that featured 14 points and seven assists from sophomore standout Stacey Smalls.

In the paint, center Lisa Jakubowicz scored her second double-double in a row, posting 13 points and 10 boards in the win. If the Minutewomen are going to emerge victorious, it all begins with shutting down Jakubowicz.

"She's the one who got us last year," O'Brien said. "I remember she played very well against us last year and she does a solid job for them. She's really their only legitimate post player. She plays very hard. She knows what she's doing."

Jakubowicz (6-foot-1) will be forced to battle larger UMass post players Jennifer Butler (6-foot-5) and Caroline Nehls (6-foot-2) in the paint. Butler, who is still not playing at full strength due to a leg injury, and Nehls, who is foul prone, will share the responsibility of covering Jakubowicz, who averages 10 points and 6.8 rebounds per game.

Temple defeated the Minutewomen last season at the William D. Mullins center by a bucket, 42-40.

The regular season ends Sunday afternoon at the Mullins. Dayton hits the Pioneer Valley after a Friday night showdown against Rhode Island, and will look at the UMass match-up as a way to secure its place as one of the top five teams in the A-10.

The Flyers (13-12, 7-7 A-10) currently share the fifth spot in the A-10 with Duquesne, with LaSalle one game behind and the Minutewomen two games back.

The Maroon and White defeated the Flyers handily, 69-57, at Dayton in January, and hopes to repeat that outcome again this Sunday. But in order to do that, the Minutewomen's defense must bring its 'A' game.

"I think the biggest thing with Dayton is that they play a lot of people, much like Temple," O'Brien said. "They run people in and out of there. [Stefanie] Miller is the kid that runs the show though. To play well, she needs to play well. And they have a couple post players who do a nice job. We've got to cut off penetration; we got to make sure that we don't give up uncontested threes."

Miller, a sophomore guard, averages 10.7 points per game and is the key to the Flyer offense. If Miller can be shut down, Dayton can be shut down. The Flyers don't run many plays, as their offense revolves around the premise of basic motion and perimeter passing.

No matter what happens this weekend, senior guard Kathy Coyner will experience her last regular-season road trip and her last home game at the Mullins Center.

Coyner was recently named to the Verizon Academic All-District I Women's Basketball First Team by the College Sports Information Directors Association for her outstanding performance on the court and in the classroom.

"On Sunday, I think whatever emotions she feels, happy or sad, no matter what happens, she'll walk off the court knowing she's given every day everything she's had to give," O'Brien said. "She's got the most out of what God has given her, and that's something that I'm very proud of her for."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Cleo Foster will be a key backcourt factor in UMass' final stretch before the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Nullset rocked out at one of the sketchiest venues our fair state harbors, and we've got the report from the front lines.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

His teammates call him "E." Whatever you choose to call Eric Williams, keep in mind that he's 6-foot-8 and he went 4-for-5 in the win over G.W. Respect!

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 1

Volume CVII Issue 88 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, February 26, 200

Garage foes not ready to give up

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Opponents of the proposed downtown parking garage failed to collect enough signatures to call a town-wide referendum vote on the issue, despite having their deadline extended by a day.

One of the people collecting signatures, Alan Root of the Ann Whalen House on Kellogg Ave. said that despite the petitioners' failure, the garage is far from a forgone conclusion.

"There is some question of legality that is being pursued," said Root.

Root explained that there are at least three lawyers currently looking into legal issues surrounding the garage's construction. He also explained that there are still access and public safety issues which need to be resolved, and that each one could theoretically be challenged in court.

Petition organizer Vincent O'Connor of 179 Summer St. hinted to the Daily Hampshire Gazette that the fight was not over and legal avenues were being sought out.

"The proper people are looking at [legal] options," he said.

The controversy over the signature deadline was a matter of Amherst town bylaws. According to the bylaws, opponents had five days from the Town Meeting's Feb. 15 vote to submit their petition. Thereby, the deadline for collecting signatures was thought by the petitioners to be Friday Feb. 23. However, town officials said that Saturday Feb. 17 should count as an official day of town business. Therefore, the official deadline was set as Thursday Feb. 22 at 4:30 p.m.

However, the deadline turned out to be a moot point. Petitioners delivered 375 signatures on Thursday, the town's deadline, and then an additional 178 on Friday. The 553 total names were still well short of the required 995, or five percent of Amherst's registered voters.

O'Connor claimed that town officials had taken only three of the four necessary steps to change a 30-year-old town policy. The town policy, in its original form, states that only 200 signatures are needed to force a referendum. O'Connor contended that between 750 and 800 signatures were necessary.

"The right of petition is historically an important right, even within the Constitution," Root said. "You can make the bar so high that you can't meet it. You can also make it so low that it can be a nuisance. I would suggest that, at a time, it was too low. And now, they went in the opposite direction and it's too high. It's too high for anyone to have any right of petition."

Now that the opponents' petition drive has failed, town officials are ready to accept a March 15 bid of $3.85 million for the garage's construction. Palladium Corp. of Wakefield, MA made the bid and construction is slated to start this spring.

Root said that the garage issue is still not clear-cut. He believes that town politics will continue playing a role right up to the actual construction.

"It might be that the garage will proceed in a matter of a few weeks, said Root, "but it also might be that it might not proceed at all. The financing could become difficult. There is also a land case to be heard on March 2."

Root pointed out that the Ready Resource Grant, in the amount of $390,000, had not been given by the state. The Grant is designed to create jobs in and remove blight from a particular area. According to Root, the Amherst parking garage would accomplish neither of these tasks.

"If you go to the construction site, it's obvious that jobs will be lost, not created, in the area," said Root. "There is also not a single parking vacancy around the Boltwood Walk area. That is the yardstick for blight."

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this article.

SGA senatorial elections ratified

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) elections for senate seats were ratified last night at a coordinating council meeting. The ratification brings an end to six months of procedures and overturned elections that prevented the SGA from having a fully functional senate this far into the 2000-2001 academic year.

"I'm looking forward to a great semester," said Speaker of the Senate Jim Eltringham last night, when he led three recently elected senators in a meeting that barely made quorum.

The motion to ratify the elections was the only agenda on the coordinating council's meeting, and it was passed unanimously. Only 6.5 percent of students from the University of Massachusetts voted in the elections, but since it broke the bare minimum of 5 percent, there were no problems with the small amount.

Last semester's problems with the Senate elections were with the commuter seats, and what the SGA called the University's vague description of the difference between on and off-campus housing. SGA tension was heightened by an argument about an abundance of senators with Greek influence capturing seats.

The new elections saw Junior Social Thought and Political Economics major Meir Hamilton earning the most votes for the commuter seats. Of the remaining 28 winners, Andrew Spagnoli, Max Miller and Steve Gill followed Hamilton in order.

Gill, who was in attendance at last night's meeting commented on this semester's elections as opposed to the last.

"I'm very happy with these elections," he said. "I had problems with a single group taking over the senate, but now we have a nice core of people to start with."

Aaron Saunders, a commuter Senator who did not run for a seat last semester said, "The only thing I can think about [in comparison of the two Senate elections] is the 1994 baseball strike. After they went on strike, they came back, they played the best baseball I've ever seen."

The strike Saunders referred to was the 1994 Major League Baseball (MLB) players' strike that lasted from Aug. 12 to March 26, 1995. The strike inhibited the World Series, baseball's championship, for the first time in 89 years.

Eltringham had difficulty mak a comparison between the two tions, but said, "I think a lot of senators who came back after semester are in for the long h Those are the optimistic people want in the SGA."

Eltringham also brought up Senators who did not run for re tion.

"We had about thirty or so pe who were pushed out, and some the projects they were working were really good," he said. "I th [those projects] get picked

Turn to SGA, pag

Undergrad. students create computer center in Africa

By Natty Yagudin
Collegian Staff

An almost-empty glass jar stands on Dennis Hanno's desk, and in it floats the dead maggot of an African Tumbu Fly. The students and professors who wander into his office look at it with amazement, as he holds the glass jar up.

Leave it to Hanno to tell you how the worm twisted into his arm after he was bitten by a spider in Ghana, West Africa, this past January. For the goat-teed Isenberg School of Management Dean, whose arm has since healed, the experience was just a part of the job.

Under Hanno's direction, a team of 12 undergraduate students and two alumni completed what might be the most unusual three credits offered thus far at the Isenberg School of Management at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. In a class titled "Business Development and Global Citizenship," the 15 visitors spent the last 10 days of their winter break creating, maintaining and guiding a local computer center in Sekondi, Ghana.

The center provides residents of Sekondi with public education and access to computers. The idea for the project was initiated by professionals in the Nursing School at the University of Massachusetts. The Nursing School operates an ongoing program in the same locale, in which student nurses get a hands-on experience in their healthcare studies.

"Students from the nursing [program] had gone there for 5 to 6 years, to operate a health clinic for people in the community," said Hanno. "Leda McKenry, a nursing professor, asked the leaders of the community what other [type of help] would be useful."

Hanno visited Sekondi last August, meeting with local business leaders. He recognized the need for training and access to computer technology, namely in the area of personal computing. Upon returning to the United States last fall, he designed a special course that would take undergraduate students abroad during Winter Break. The students would create the center, applying what they learn at business and computer classes.

While over 40 students were interested in the program, only 12 were chosen to participate, due to the unusual nature of the trip, said Hanno. The 12 Students who participated were either business or economics majors, and most of them were

Turn to AFRICA, page 3

From right: Douglas White, Sekondi woman, Megan Conway, another Sekondi woman and Kate Mansfield. Doug, Megan and Kate, as part of the class "Business Development and Global Leadership," help form a computer center in Sekondi, Ghana.

Black Renaissance 2001 gets a passionate word out

By Tanya Mannes
Collegian Staff

The pink paper tablecloths and soft lighting could have been transplants from a suburban prom, but the performers were past the days of awkward adolescence, and they chanted, recited and sometimes sang their poetry with complete self-possession.

Mount Holyoke's Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority hosted Black Renaissance 2001, an evening of spoken word, soul food, reggae and acoustic guitar at the College's Chapin Hall on Saturday night.

Alison Carney, member of the sorority, opened the event with a spiritual. "Troubles of the World," which she sang without accompaniment, demonstrating control and a strong sense of timing. This haunting song set the mood for an evening of gritty poetry that confronted issues like obsessive love, the AIDS epidemic, domestic abuse and police brutality.

Many of the performers hailed from the New York and New Jersey poetry scene, one nexus being the Nuyorican Poets Cafe, a notable spot on the Lower East Side of NYC that has offered 25 years of spoken word performances. Others came from as far away as Maryland.

In an earnest performance, Baltimore Slam Team Champion Derrick Chase blasted singers like Lil' Kim and Foxy Brown for fostering precocious sexuality in "my little princess/ strolling down the street/ to the beat of lap-dances." The audience gave loud shouts of assent to his line about such performers dressing like "prostitutes" "Foxy Brown got our kids playing games/ got 'em thinking/ tricks are for kids."

Jamaal St. John, a 2000 Nuyorican Slam Team Champion, similarly criticized female appearances in a set that focused on the negative effects of consumer culture on blacks. He disdainfully described black women who try to embody the commercialized white image of beauty by getting permanents and lightening their skin.

"It was inspired by a woman I met on a train," he later said, standing next to his manager / fiancée. "She had purple contact lenses and a weave with blond streaks that stretched about 36 inches." He said he wanted to show that looking fake would make it hard for her to find a real man.

Men, however, were not exempt from St. John's indictment of personal appearance as a commodity. In a piece addressed to basketball superstar Michael Jordan, he sang to the tune of "The Wind Beneath My Wings:" "I can fly higher than your average Negro/ 'cuz I've got your shoes on my feet." His insistent style was reminiscent of KRS-1, a group he listed as one of his influences.

St. John also criticized men for perpetuating domestic abuse and creating dysfunctional families. "Off the Wall" talked about men who "walk around without family ties to match their paternity suits."

The Family, a group of four nationally recognized spoken word artists, sent a nicely match duo, Chuck Maddox and his Black Book of Thoughts and co-performer The Dri Fish, who touched on a variety of topics in their rhythmic, often synchronized performance.

In a nostalgic piece, "Back in the Days," punctuated by a "mood-enhancing" sung chorus by Fish, Maddox spoke of when "AIDS was that cool cherry-flavored drink/ I made the next before."

Later, the duo raised fears about police brutality in "Order in the Court," a monologue from the point of view of a man whose crime "was bearing witness to a police crime in a demonstration."

Maddox and Fish, both of whom mentor and support youth in their communities in addition to working day jobs, met through the poetry scene.

"We roll off each other very well," said Fish.

Some artists strayed from the political and got personal, airing beefs with the opposite sex. Standout Helena D. Lewis, another member of the 2000 Nuyorican Slam Team, began her set with a deceptively demure greeting, but soon had the audience in stitches with her brazen delivery. "One Finger in my Cooch" was a rant about men who do not automatically "make the grade," explained to be preferred alternative to sleeping with those men.

In another piece, dedicated to "Punk-Ass Dwayne," Lewis talked about a former boyfriend who wanted to resume their relationship, which he had ended, on Valentine's Day, with her less-than-enthusiastic response. Accusing him of playing "STD free tag," she lamented the impossibility of "taking him out without servicing time."

Lewis works as a New Jersey social worker by day, and a poet by night, traveling in both capacities as an educator. She runs a food pantry, works with prostitutes, and leads workshops on HIV education in high schools.

"Most women love me," said Lewis when asked about reactions to her work, "but most guys think I'm crazy." She added that some men, however, tell her that they can identify with the patterns of behavior she ridicules in her poetry.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

A Fond Farewell

UMass point guard Kathy Coyner, here flanked by coach Joanie O'Brien (left) and her parents, played the last home game of her career yesterday against Dayton.

State and National Briefs

Compiled by Catherine Turner, Melissa Hammel and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

State Briefs

Cellucci administration to end patronage in courts

In an attempt to overhaul the existing funding to Boston courts, Gov. A. Paul Cellucci is trying to eliminate the current system of patronage and to replace it with a system that relies on a need basis.

Opponents of the current system say that legislators control the budgets for 161 courthouses and court rooms and that they reward courts in politically connected areas paying little attention to less politically powerful districts. The result is a vast discrepancy in budgets.

The proposition of the administration would condense the court budgets into 11 line items and would leave funding distribution questions to the office of Barbara Dortch-Okara, Chief Justice for the administration.

Teachers lose e-mail privileges; state forgets to pay

Teachers in the Massachusetts Public School System lost the ability to e-mail for a week after the Department of Education neglected to pay its bill.

Approximately 28,000 teachers were not able to use their state e-mail accounts after the state forgot to renew its claim to the Internet Domain massd.net. The $35 dollar bill has been paid as of Friday.

"We did in fact forget to pay the bill," said Department of Education Spokesman Jonathan Polumbo.

Boston city councilor arrested

Charles "Chuck" Turner the Boston city councilor was arrested with four others on Friday night for trespassing 36 hours after he promised to stage a sit-in at the Department of Public Health.

Turner spent two days and one night at the Department headquarters to protest state regulations that would force stricter background checks on new health department employees and people working for agencies run by the department.

Turner is against the new background checks because he believes that it will be more difficult for those who have been punished for committing crimes to then later find work. He felt that a sit-in was a good way to draw attention to his cause.

Information from the Boston Globe was used in these briefs.

Washington D.C.

Bush has bold proposal, wavering support

President George W. Bush has promised to curb government spending, lower taxes and pay down the Federal debt with his first budget, a tall order by most suggestions.

Political pundits have suggested that, because of a massive surplus the Federal government is expected to receive, Bush will have a hard time convincing anyone not to spend more. As it is, he's promised a five percent spending increase for the Pentagon and an 11 percent increase for education, two increases that will almost absolutely force cuts elsewhere in the budget if he's to keep his promises.

Perhaps the biggest contention that critics of the proposal have is Bush's $1.6 trillion tax cut. Massachusetts Senator John Kerrey told NBC's Meet the Press that Bush couldn't have both a tax cut and a spending decrease.

"There's going to be an enormous battle ... on this," Kerrey said Sunday morning. Bush's budget director Mitch Daniels said that Bush would target corporate subsidies as well as other recently increased governmental spending.

He has promised spending increases to the National Institute of Health as well as an increase in Medicare spending. The Justice Department and the Export-Import Bank may take significant hits from Bush's new budget.

Bush has recently been hit hard by Republicans who have abandoned his tax cut. Jim Jeffords of Vermont and Lincoln Chafee of Rhode Island have said they will not support a cut so large, joining a Democratic contingent who have lined up in opposition to the cut. Democrat Zell Miller of Georgia has come out in support of the cut.

Washington D.C.

Governors to meet in Washington

55 governors will meet in Washington for four days of meetings with members of the Bush's new cabinet and the President himself.

The leaders of all 50 states, and five assorted commonwealths and territories, will discuss everything from Bush's proposed tax-cut to a political flexibility for states if needed.

Most of the governors have expressed reservations about the impact that a big tax-cut might have on their revenue, but there is agreement that a tax-cut of some variety is needed.

White House Chief-of-Staff Andrew Card and education secretary Roderick Paige will address the governor on their first day. Others expected to speak include former New Jersey governor Christine Todd Whitman and former Wisconsin governor Tommy Thompson.

Mississippi

Storms leave 7 dead in Mississippi

Storms in Mississippi left seven dead.

Strong winds blew through several Pontotoc county towns, blowing over trees and leveling houses. The gusts, reported to be as powerful as 80 MPH, were accompanied by tornado warnings but none was confirmed.

Thirty additional people were injured and had to be taken to hospitals in Tupelo. Governor Ronnie Musgrove surveyed the area yesterday and the Federal Emergency Management Agency was called in to assist.

New York

More than half don't believe Hilary Clinton

According to a poll released Sunday, few New Yorkers believe that their newest Senator is telling the truth when it comes to Presidential pardons. Hillary Clinton, who beat Rick Lazio last November to replace the departing Patrick Moynihan, claimed in a Thursday press conference that she had no knowledge that her brother, Hugh, worked to secure the pardons of two convicted felons.

More than half the state, 58 percent, didn't believe Clinton when she said that she was "shocked and disappointed" by what her brother had done. Clinton had been previously hit by an allegation that four Hasidic Jews had been pardoned so that their home town would vote for Clinton.

Mrs. Clinton's popularity also took a hit, from a 56 percent approval rating before the allegations to a 51 percent approval rating afterwards.

Clinton is the first First Lady to have ever been elected to public office.

Kentucky

Law to expand definition of 'self-defense' redefined

Responding to criticism that a modified Kentucky state law would allow murderers to claim 'gay panic' as a defense, a piece of legislation was modified by its author.

Representative Bob Damron made the change when the loophole was pointed out to him and said that he would never write a law that would allow people to kill one another "because of his lifestyle."

The ACLU had expressed concern at how the bill was written before it was changed. The law had said that 'deviant sexual intercourse' was reason for self-defense (deviant meaning oral or anal sex) but offered no statement concerning force. "Compelled by force or threat" was later added.

Minnesota

Governor Ventura calls reporters "crybabies"

In yet another effort to raise the blood pressure of the political reporters in the state, Minnesota's former pro-wrestling governor called the news reporters of the Capitol a bunch of crybabies" "who would have never made it in professional wrestling", during his regular radio show, 'Lunch with the Governor,' according to the St. Paul Pioneer Press. The Governor made the comment after being asked about his new policy of making all the reporters wear special badges that say, "Official Jackal." Though Ventura told the national press that the badges are just a joke, he has continued to make the journalists wear the badges upon entering any press conference or interviews.

Ventura has implemented the new badges because he said the press is humorless and only interested in fluff and scandal, rather than reporting on serious policy issues. He has accused the Capitol press corps as being tabloid, writing fluff and only out to make money off of him.

Though the Governor has tried to implement his badges policy, the news institutions such as The Star Tribune and local Television news reporters such as WCCO 4 have told their reporters not to wear the "Official Jackal" buttons.

The governor also told his radio audience that he's planning on holding a press conference in which only the photojournalists are allowed to ask questions because "at least they have a sense of humor."

"Those guys I like," He said. "Those are your blue-collar reporters. They gotta lug all the cameras around, do all the physical work. You never hear the cameramen complaining."

The writers, however, have been ridiculed for being petty and biased, as well as inferior on other levels. "Rest assured," Ventura said on his radio show, "not only physically could they never be wrestlers, but mentally they couldn't be either."

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

President George W. Bush

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1993 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially and editorially independent of the University administration, operating solely on revenue earned by its advertising department. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 (voicemail between 9:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.)

Adam Weiss Editor-in-Chief
Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Sullivan Editorial/Opinion Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Chris Bernier Photography Editor
Joshua Segenhold Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirschner Promotions Manager

Sprint COLLEGE WEEKS!
GOTTA ROCK
MARCH 18-22
STARTING AT: $47
1 night midweek
(based on quad occupancy)
TURN UP THE VOLUME AND GET READY FOR COLLEGE FUN WITH DAILY APRES SKI PARTIES, GIVEAWAYS, GAMES AND LIVE BANDS
ADULT LIFT TICKET INCLUDES:
• 1 PERFECT TURN ADULT GROUP CLINIC
• 1 SKI/SNOWBOARD TUNE (SHARPEN & WAX)
• SKI & BAG CHECK DAILY
• UNLIMITED FITNESS & YOGA CLASSES
NIGHTS OF: 3/18/01-3/22/01 (SUN-THURS, 2-5 NIGHTS)
MOUNT SNOW VERMONT • USA
800.245.SNOW · WWW.MOUNTSNOW.COM

When someone asks you What you did in College,

What will you say?

The Amherst Fire Department is recruiting members for its Student Force.
Stop by the Campus Center, Feb. 26- Feb. 28 for more information.
The North Fire Station will host an Open House on March 2 from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

The Station is located at 603 East Pleasant St., up the road from Sylvan.
Call for more information 549-5419

Ash Wednesday
the Newman Center
472 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
(413) - 549 - 0300

Wednesday, February 28th 2001

8:00 AM
▸ Mass with distribution of Ashes

12:15 PM
▸ Mass with distribution of Ashes

5:15 PM
▸ Mass with distribution of Ashes

7:00 PM
▸ Liturgy of the Word with distribution of Ashes

9:00 PM
▸ Liturgy of the Word with distribution of Ashes

Join the Catholic community as we begin the 40-day Lenten Journey.

The offertory collection on this day will assist the Catholic Relief Services in its outreach to the earthquake victims of India and El Salvador

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Sweet Senorita

A Spanish youth, dressed up for a traditional religious ceremony, squints into the afternoon sun.

Flashing for beads: surviving Mardi Gras in New Orleans

By Cheyenne Mathews
The Reveille

(U-WIRE) - It's a time of wild abandonment, crazy attire and free beads. But perhaps the best part about Mardi Gras isn't what you get. It's what you see.

A party the size of New Orleans' Mardi Gras always guarantees a few kinds of behavior – people hanging off of balconies, women flashing for beads and the occasional indecent act.

"You always see the naked people, body parts are always exposed. guys and girls, promiscuous acts in the middle of the street and people throwing up on other people," said Shelley Carter, a psychology junior at Lousiana State University.

As much fun as Mardi Gras is, Alaina Becnel, a freshman in political science, warns that sometimes you have to beware of the other revelers in the crowd who will do anything for a good time.

"We were on a float, and my dad had some roses to hand out to all the pretty girls," Becnel said. "Some guy who was on another guy's shoulders took the roses and started handing them out. My dad grabbed him by the hair until he gave the roses back. They had to walk with us while the float was rolling, but finally the guy threw the roses back."

The people on the floats can almost be as much trouble as the ones in the crowd. Try to catch the beads and doubloons, but watch out for other flying objects.

"We were on a float in Butte Larose, and instead of throwing beads at the crowd, we threw beer cans," said Josh Fleig, an art history sophomore.

"Some kid got hit in the head, and we got into a fight with his dad."

It's not just the strangers that you have to look out for. You might want to be careful around your friends, because you never know what can happen when you get caught up in the excitement.

"I had a friend that we got really drunk. Then we gave him a bottle of vinegar and told him it was vodka, had him drink all of it, then got him a tattoo," said Mike Kober, a microbiology junior.

Of course, the epitome of the Mardi Gras experience is the notorious Bourbon Street, which promises more lewd behavior than anyone could ever imagine.

"I went to Bourbon Street. It's like the third circle of hell. People will flash you for anything. It's pretty bad," said Justin Thompson, an education sophomore.

Although not everyone has encountered the infamous New Orleans celebrations, most still have some interesting tales from their hometown parades.

"I've only had Mardi Gras in Shreveport, so far. We had a coach camped out by a truck and it caught on fire in the middle of the parade," said Steven Scales, a mass communication freshman. "I don't know if they put the fire out or if they left it burning. We just ran away."

While Mardi Gras is known for the free cups and beads, elaborate floats and costumes and non-stop partying, for some LSU revelers part of the appeal is watching how every one else acts.

"I think it's the people making fools of themselves that makes it so much fun, people fighting for little plastic beads. But it seems like gold at the time," Scales said.

Regardless of where you go or what you do to celebrate Mardi Gras, the annual extravaganza will definitely provide unique and unforgettable adventures.

■ sga

continued from page 1

again."

It is now up to the Senate to establish a Ways and Means committee to aid in funding and money distribution. Senator Mike Taugher said he has been extremely active in the Ways and Means department of the senate while all of the election confusing was taking place, and will remain to be that active in the future.

"I've been putting in a whole lot of work and it'll only get worse," he said. "We're hoping that all of the re-elected senators who were on [Ways and Means] before will come back. That's only like five or six people though."

Everyone present at the meeting expressed a slight concern for the amount of time the Senate has left in the semester.

"It is too bad we don't have much time," said Gill.

Also during the meeting, Saunders took time to note a job well done by Chancellor of Elections Sam Blasiak.

"I think Sam did an excellent job with everything," Saunders said.

Besides the elections for senate, three referendum questions were placed on the ballot. The first read, "Would you like an establishment such as McDonalds, Wendy's or Burger King in the campus center?" The second read, "Would you like to be able to purchase the UMass Index Yearbook through a positive check box on your fall semester tuition bill?" The third question read, "Should we have a bar on campus?" All three questions were answered in an affirmative manner by at least 60 percent of voters.

There will also be a meeting this Wednesday regarding the new Senate Ways and Means committee.

■ africa

continued from page 1

upperclassmen. They underwent cultural training and received vaccinations as preparation for their departure.

The students spent the first three days of their visit setting up six computers in what was officially announced as the "Center for Business Development and Training." The small room, whose walls were painted green, was open for business on the fourth day. The 12 University of Massachusetts at Amherst students "were inundated," according to Hanno. About 40 people showed up during the first afternoon, and "most of [them] ...haven't even looked at a computer," said Hanno.

The students trained locals to use Microsoft Word and Microsoft Excel. In addition to the work they did, students also traveled to different tourist sites in the country. The most profound cultural challenge that impressed Hanno was the amount of attention the group received.

"We were like the Backstreet Boys. We had to sprint to our van," recounted Hanno of one of the trips the group took. The group visit was also announced at the local newspaper and radio. "It was a strange sensation for the students to always be the center of attention. We were primarily white and not from the area."

About 50 to 100 people showed up to say goodbye to the class, said Hanno. The students, however, did not finish their work after coming back to the US. In fact, participants are currently putting together training materials to send back to Ghana.

The expenses of the trip were subsidized by various organizations, including the University of Massachusetts Alumni Association, the African Student Association, and Arthur Andersen, a consulting firm that also donated computers and paid for shipping costs. The Isenberg School of Management also contributed three computers for the center.

News meeting today at 6 PM

General Electric

PriceWaterhouse Coopers

NHL Corporation

MBNA Financial

Q: What do these companies have in common?

A: Former Collegian Finance Managers.

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR ASSISTANT FINANCE MANAGER.

CALL 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE, ROOM 113 IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT, FOR MORE INFORMATION.

APPLICANTS SHOULD CURRENTLY BE A SOPHOMORE.

UMASS The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
Beginning February 26th.
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Bush's tax plan does not spell relief

A recent comic strip showed a man buying a cup of coffee at Starbucks for a little over 2 dollars.

"There goes one month's tax cut," he muses.

The reality is closer to the truth than conservatives want to admit. President George Bush has said that his tax relief package addresses the concerns of working Americans. But lowering the income tax rates as he plans is not a sound way to "unlock the door to the middle class" for the working poor.

Although the working poor, on a percentage basis, will get a "higher" income tax cut than the well-to-do, their real incomes will not necessarily increase. In reality, many Americans who live near the poverty line, including those moving off the welfare rolls, do not make enough money to pay income tax. However, their total federal tax burden is considerable, including payroll tax. When their entire tax burden in considered, those people will not benefit from Bush's plan.

On the flip side, Bush has devoted a significant amount of money in his budget to ending the estate tax, which affects about two percent of taxpayers. Such a tax may hurt charitable donations from wealthy taxpayers to institutions. Some have argued that such a tax provides "relief" to those who need it least: people who inherit large amounts of money.

The elimination of the estate tax is a boon to the upper class and a bane to the working poor. Providing more money to the rich in such a disproportionate manner effectively takes it away from the poor.

Bush must address the needs of the low-income families with children, including a quarter of New England families (244,000 of them residing in Massachusetts) who will see no real change in income under this tax relief.

One way that has been suggested to ease the burden on such families is to increase the childcare credit. To do so would be to make it more feasible for parents to stay in the labor force.

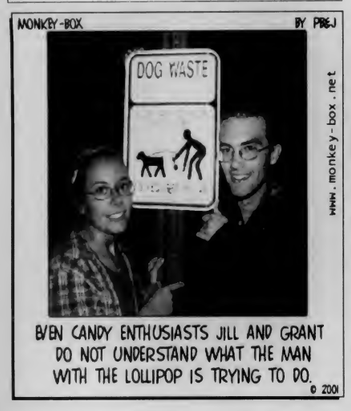
Another measure would be to fix the "glitch" that causes people with children to pay more taxes, sometimes as much as thousands of dollars per year if they marry, due to the federal tax credit system.

The Collegian believes that such measures should be considered in an effort to keep the tax burden equitably distributed. However, our concern is that the disorganized manner in which Democrats approach the problem will be ineffective, resulting in no tax cuts for Bush's plan rather than real change. We believe that Democrats should resist the repeal of the federal estate tax as an unacceptable gift to the upper class.

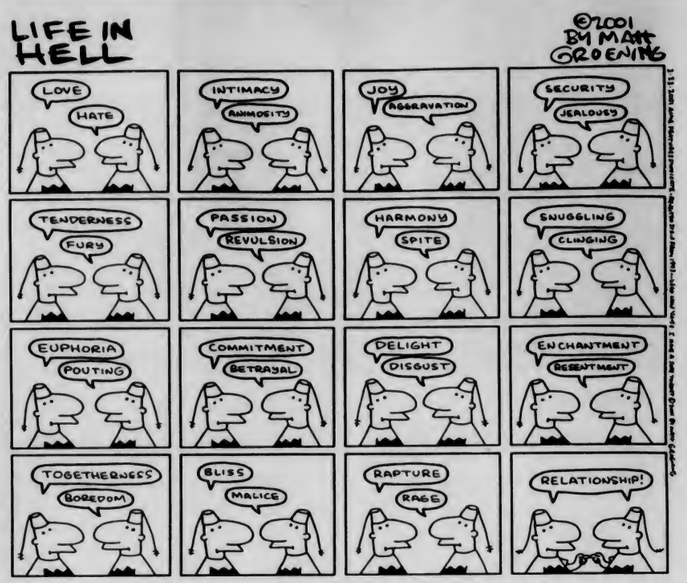
Democrats are divided on the details on making Bush's plan more friendly to low-income workers. However, we hope that they will insist on a plan that makes sense for the neediest families. The plan as it stands is an insult to the economic struggles of the working poor, and it will not in any way help them to enter the ranks of the middle class.

Information from the Boston Globe was used in this article.
Unsigned editorials represent a majority opinion of the editorial board.

visit www.dailycollegian.com



MONKEY-BOX
BY PREJ
DOG WASTE
www.monkey-box.net
EVEN CANDY ENTHUSIASTS JILL AND GRANT DO NOT UNDERSTAND WHAT THE MAN WITH THE LOLLIPOP IS TRYING TO DO.
© 2001



Grammy controversy

LAURA SICILIANO

He is slim, shady, homophobic, violent and grating. He is also regarded as one of the most influential and talented artists in music today. On Wednesday the 21st, the usually uncontroversial Grammy awards became the center of a conflict over how far music can go and whether or not controversial music should be rewarded.

In "Kim," Eminem rhymes about killing his wife Kim. Not exactly the stuff that romance is made of. However, Eminem is not the first rapper or musician to speak of violence in their lyrics. NWA, Snoop Dogg and Tupac have all been criticized for violent words in the past. Marshall Mathers has drawn so much attention because his music has been so popular and, parents fear, dangerously influential.

Eminem's lyrics are definitely offensive. But so are horror movies and novels, and you do not see large-scale protests outside of Stephen King's house in Bangor, Maine. GLAAD and NOW are especially up in arms about the misogynistic and homophobic themes that are clearly rampant throughout Eminem's work. Many people feel that it was especially horrific for the openly gay (and apparently very open minded) Elton John to duet with Eminem. All of these controversies seem only to point further to the wonder of the First Amendment.

Homophobia and violence towards women are terrible things, and I think it is horrible that Eminem seemingly advocates these things in his music. However, the fact that he can express these things and, in turn, those who are offended can respond in protest is great. In many countries (and sadly, sometimes in our country), homosexual rights are nonexistent and completely unprotected. In our nation's slow progression towards equal rights for all, we have reached a point where homosexuality is more open and more openly discussed. The hate that Eminem expresses (and which he says is only art), serves to bring these issues out into the open and helps us to discuss them. Eminem is making America talk about what is acceptable and what is not. In the ugliness of some of his songs, a bright light can be found. For once, discussions of the influence of music finally reached the pinnacle of the business, when the president of the Recording Academy, Michael Greene, addressed the issues in his requisite speech.

Greene expressed that the idea that tolerance breeds tolerance. The most tolerant man of the night was Elton John. John, the openly gay recording legend, ignored pressures from homosexual groups and did what he wanted to do. He graced the stage and performed alongside Eminem, in a touching, somewhat explicit live performance of "Stan." Stan speaks of many of the violent themes that Eminem's critics complain about and, ironically, Eminem supports some of their positions against violence in the song's conclusion. The real lesson of the night came when Eminem and Elton embraced at the end of the song. Elton John was tolerant of Eminem's expressions that 'it was just music' and perhaps Eminem became more tolerant of homosexuals. If one person learned tolerance from the evening's events, then Eminem may have used his music in a positive way for once.

There is an ugly side to music, movies, books and, sadly, life. The Recording Academy faced that ugliness head on, when the pressure was to ignore it and not give it any recognition. Eminem spews hateful words, but his hateful words are making people talk and think about issues such as violence, homophobia, and the influence of music. The problems that Eminem raps about exist in real life, not just on a compact disc. The issues are not going to disappear if the Grammy Awards do not recognize artists who speak about controversial things. If the Grammy Awards are supposed to recognize the impact of music, then Eminem's rhymes definitely had the largest impact in the year 2000. Hopefully, that impact was not all negative.

In the end, Eminem won Rap Album of the Year, beating out his mentor Dr. Dre, who also had violent undertones in his music. In the most controversial of a night filled with them, Album of the Year, Eminem faced off against Paul Simon, Steely Dan, Radiohead, and Beck. For days before, the 'experts' pondered whether or not Eminem would win and what it would mean to the world of music if the most violent album of the year was regarded as the best of the year. All of the questions and predictions turned out to be for naught, as Steely Dan pulled the upset and took home the award. Eminem remained the story of the night, however, and hopefully the main issue that was raised – what is music and art? – will continue to be discussed in the Grammys for years to come

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

UMass Conspiracy 101

ADAM MARTIGNETTI

The July 1947 Roswell landing by aliens. The government plot to assassinate John F. Kennedy. The faked 1969 moon landing (that was a good one, Fox). Marisa Tomei's Oscar win in 1993.

All conspiracies of varying degrees – believed by some and dismissed as silly and completely unsubstantiated by others.

My intentions in writing this column are not to expose some huge conspiracy hovering over this University. My intentions are not to accuse or to harm, but rather to inform. You see, in a few short days, Feb. 28 to be precise, Bernard F. Wilkes will (presumably) be removed for the University of Massachusetts payroll. Mr. Wilkes was not fired. Nor did he quit. Mr. Wilkes, who is still on the University payroll making $62,951.20 per year, is not retiring. Rather (and this is where every thing becomes very murky and unclear), a pre-arranged deal that Mr. Wilkes had with the University will finally expire and he will stop being paid, even though he has not been to UMass in over a year.

This story (and I suppose this column) started at the beginning of last semester. Now, I'll admit that what follows is probably a conflict of interest. I undoubtedly would have liked to run this on the front page, with some huge 70-point, bold-faced font. I undoubtedly would have liked to splash scandal and the like to 30,000 daily readers. However, since I could not get anyone to talk to me about this story, I am forced to reconstruct the events of the previous semester in column form, relegated here to page four. This column can definitely be construed as my feeble attempts to somehow enact revenge on people that have slighted me in the past. However, I assure you my intentions are nothing more than to inform you, the student body. Now that I sound all noble…

As you may or may not know, I am the News Editor here at our little college daily and have held that position, in some respect, for going on three semesters now. Last semester after we broke the story on one Mr. Jim Coopee and his abuse of University resources, I received an anonymous letter (presumably from a University employee) In my mailbox at the Collegian. This letter detailed the fates of three UMass employees: the aforementioned Bernard Wilkes, Elizabeth Dale and Director of Auxiliary Services Ashoke Ganguli.

This letter, which I still have in my possession, claims that Auxiliary Services is paying, has been paying and will pay, through Feb. of 2001, a "no show" employee – one Mr. Wilkes. The letter alleges that Mr. Wilkes was unfairly passed over for a promotion to the position of Director of the Campus Center. As a result, Wilkes filed grievances against Ashoke Ganguli. To settle the grievances, the University (supposedly) agreed to pay Mr. Wilkes an entire year and a half's salary for doing nothing. The letter also alleges that Mr. Wilkes' attendance records are being, and have been, falsified to make it seem as if he were actually showing up to work every week. It concludes that Mr. Wilkes sold his home in Amherst, MA and moved to New Hampshire.

Elizabeth Dale factors into my story in two ways. First, she was the person awarded the position of Director of the Campus Center over Mr. Wilkes. Second, she was the only one of the principal players who I could actually reach about this story in my subsequent investigation.

Here's what I found out…

Elizabeth Dale was promoted circa 1996. She told me as much on the record, though she did say that she was unsure of the exact time frame. However, the position to which she was promoted was not Director of the Campus Center (DCC), but rather Director of Business/ Facilities Services. According to Dale, the DCC position was "reformulated" Into this new position, which she assumed. I never received confirmation one way or the other whether the Senior Associate Director of the Campus Center, Mr. Wilkes' job at the time, was also "reformulated" into this new position.

The person who oversaw all of this was, of course, Mr. Ganguli, Director of Auxiliary Services.

Mr. Ganguli is a tough person to get in touch with. After calling his office for four weeks straight last semester, I never heard back from him. I was told he was on a business trip. I was told he was in a meeting. I was told any number of things, but never connected to him. I left many messages with his secretary and received promises of returned phone calls that never happened. To date, I have no idea what Mr. Ganguli's position on this issue actually is or whether he was involved at all.

Upon calling Mr. Wilke's office last semester, I was told by someone there that he had not been in that office for over a year. I was told that he had, in actuality, been at home "consulting" for a year – a fact that coincides nicely with my anonymous letter.

There is no listing for a Bernard F. Wilkes Jr. in Amherst, MA.

There is no listing for a Bernard F. Wilkes Jr. in any town in New Hampshire.

The attendance records, to which the letter alleges were falsified, are impossible to attain and are (presumably) discarded at the end of every week.

Elizabeth Dale has since stepped down from the Director of Business/Facilities Services position. She is now a special assistant to the Chancellor. She makes $87,182.68 per year.

Ashoke Ganguli is still the Director of Auxiliary Services. He makes $99,794.24 per year.

So, what have we learned from this little excursion? Well, unfortunately, not a whole lot. There is a book (it is perhaps ironically black, though it is by no means little) on the third floor of the library, in the reserve section. This magical book lists the salaries of all the University's employees – this includes your professors and those lovely administrators you love to deal with at Whitmore. Any student can check this out, for an hour, at any time. You have the right to know where your or your parents' money is going and exactly how much University employees are being paid. Take advantage of it.

When you can't find out where your money is going, dig a little bit. Ask questions. Even if these questions only lead to dead ends, you'll be much better off for having asked. You pay these people's salaries – through tuition and, for some of you, through state taxes as well. They work for you, not the other way around.

Finally, remember: the truth is out there.

Sam Wilkinson and Kristin Shrewsbury contributed to this column.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

Hannibal held onto the #1 box-office pull this weekend.

Nullset rocks at underground WAAF taping

COURTESY GREGYL BUSH

Nullset frontman Ken Smith.

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

NULLSET
Jarrod's Place
Feb. 24

Faced with television cameras, a full house and a sketchy biker bar, Nullset did the only thing they really could: rock.

From the opening notes of "Complacent" to the last crash of closer "Kingpin," Nullset kept the sweaty crowd packed into the spectacular sketchy hole which is Jarrod's Place roaring.

The band's hour-long set featured four songs from their indie album This Is Not a Test, with the rest of the material coming from their to-be-released self-titled major label debut on Grand Royal Records. This didn't hurt the crowd's awareness of the material, however; due to demo versions of several songs having been made available through the band's website and one track, "Smokewood," being in heavy rotation on WAAF, the crowd was even familiar with the unreleased tracks.

The live performance was typical Nullset (which is a good thing). Singer Ken Smith was all over the stage, lunging into the crowd, jumping onto the backward park benches, which serve as a makeshift crowd barrier at Jarrod's, and just generally lighting up the stage, all without missing a lyric. Bassist Jim Shippey was also in incredible form, with a loud, clear bass that shook the floor and provided the punch to Nullset's pounding sound, particularly on the insanely energetic "H-Bone," which stood out like a light among all the songs of the set as the one which got the crowd going the most nuts.

There were a few technical problems, such as the fact that the drum kit kept getting smaller as more and more pieces of it broke, but other than that the set was a flawless example of what's made Nullset the biggest band on the scene: a non-stop craze of energy with songs that all sound unique and all kick ass.

The bill was put together by radio station WAAF as a taping for their Real Rock TV syndicated show, and as such the undercard was also filled with much of the cream of the Massachusetts rock scene.

Luxx drew a sizeable fan base for their melodic hard-rock sound, mostly composed of women of all ages (despite the fact that it was a supposedly 18+ show) and some truly suspect middle-aged fat men in bondage gear. Judging by the reaction that these very disturbing and sweaty men had to lead singer Katrina (who made equal use of her voice and her thong onstage), their interest in seeing the show did not rely entirely on the musical qualities of the band. However, despite a certain similarity in the sound of their songs, Luxx had stage presence and rock chops enough to entertain and earn the respect of these non-sketchy fans in the audience, and exited the stage to enormous applause.

Powderburnt… well, let's just say that Powerburnt are exactly the type of band you'd expect to see in a biker bar like Jarrod's. Harley-Davidson patches, forearm tattoos, and tight ripped jeans only aided the band as they plunged through one speedrock song after another, only pausing one in order to perform a somewhat touching moment of silence for the departed Dale Earnhardt. "Johnny Rock" is a really fun song, and whatever the band lacked in musicality they made up for in sheer cliché biker-band hilarity.

Sadly misplaced in the opening slot, T-House of the Almighty got the show off to an awesome start with a fast, funky, and utterly entertaining set highlighting mostly songs from their new release Gnosexhotic. Vocalist J.J. led the crowd in several sing-alongs and hand-waving chants, including the obligatory House of Pain cover. (Under Massachusetts state law, at every local rock show at least one band must cover "Jump Around," or all will face the supreme punishment.) An unexpected "One more song!" chant got T-House back onstage one last time to close out their set with an impromptu cover of White Zombie's "Thunder Kiss '65," a fun end to a great set.

3000 Miles is putrid; Costner goes to waste

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

3000 MILES TO GRACELAND
directed by Demian Lichtenstein with Kevin Costner, Kurt Russell
playing at Cinemark Hadley 12

There are, realistically, three kinds of movies, the good, the bad and the bad that are so bad that they're good.

3000 Miles to Graceland, however, is just plain bad.

It's not as though I was expecting an Oscar winner, but this doesn't even qualify to be an MTV Movie Award nominee. It takes big name movie stars who have recently done romance movies ad nauseum, and throws them into the "anti chick flick," a man movie, if you will, that's loaded to the brim with carnage and car chases, pointless plotlines, and – let's not leave this out – pure, unadulterated sex. To some, this sounds great on paper, but when it's projected onto the silver screen for two and half hours, one begins to yearn for a re-release of Pauly Shore's Encino Man or a sequel to Dude, Where's My Car?

Dude, where's the plot? It has something to do with ex-cons Murphy (Kevin Costner) and Michael (Kurt Russell) who plan to hold up a Las Vegas casino where there's an Elvis impersonation convention taking place. With help from a crew of fellow cronies (including Christian Slater and David Arquette), the felons descend upon the casino in the guise of The King. It's expected that nothing goes as planned, and before the criminals make off with the loot, there's a shoot-out spilling more blood than the final scene of Carrie. As if casino heists and desert vistas rapidly zipping by weren't unoriginal enough, Elvis standards are being blazed in the background during the bullet ballet, which bears a striking resemblance to a similar scene in Face/Off with a lady Garland tune and a number of other action movies which attempt to pass off an action scene as graceful and – should I dare say it? – beautiful.

There's nothing beautiful about this movie except its only female star, Courtney Cox-Arquette. While she is lovely to look at, she gives the audience nothing that we haven't seen her do before in either Scream film or as her "Friends" persona of Rachel. Like everyone else, she's a mean-spirited, vengeful example of humanity, trying to get back at the world for plopping her down in the middle of nowhere with her hyperactive, rabble-rousing eight-year old son. Exposing a little more cleavage and putting on a Midwestern twang doesn't do the trick, and just like all the other stars in the film, Cox-Arquette is buried by the shallow dialogue and superficial story. ("You just shot him!" to which there is the reply, "Yeah, now I'll kill him!") Following his wife from project to project, David Arquette sticks out like a sore thumb in his role. Conversely, the best actor in

Turn to MILES, page 6

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Kevin Costner, taking a decided turn for the worst after 13 Days.

Style File on location: K-Mart Crushed Velvet

I shook my Style File booty at The Roxy in Boston on Friday night. But before I could shake it, I actually had to let it thaw… The Roxy is one of those clubs that feels the need to have a line snaking along outside it, so that is looks all hip and popular. I say if it's really all that sassy, it shouldn't need to work so hard to maintain an image.

I went with my friend Nancy and some of her Boston crew, all fashion design majors at MassArt. We were all psyched up, because there was supposed to be a big Dolce and Gabbana fashion show, and I was pumped to do some real fashion coverage. You know what? Two words – lying bastards. But more on that later.

So, my new fashion design friends and I chilled (in more ways than one – oh the humor is lame and painful!) outside for a good 40 minutes before we were let in the door. I was going to pull the whole, "Do you KNOW who I am?" thing, but then I realized that no one knows who I am… so I stood back and eavesdropped on the conversation of these two German guys wearing designer bowling shoes, who were gossiping auf Deutsch.

We got in around 10:45 p.m. and were told the advertised fashion show didn't start until 12:45a.m. so I had plenty of time to dance, check out bartenders and take notes on the club fashions I saw. It was a very well dressed crowd with a few exceptions. Many of the girls were sporting halter-tops and on-shouldered tanks, with leather pants and skirts with tall boots. Many of the guys were sporting designer duds, though there were quite a few khaki pant-wearing college guys, who seemed to have been dragged in by their girlfriends.

Of course, there were the fiascoes, such as one peach monstrosity… picture if you will a K-Mart purchased, iridescent orange crushed velvet number, complete with Seinfeld's puffy pirate shirt sleeves, bare midriff and huge flowy bellbottom pants. And to top it off, her blond locks were in a Christina Aguilera at the Grammy's coif. I know you think I'm lying, and I wish I were… but I have witnesses. Her friend was wearing a gold and black Nanny-esque ensemble that compared to her friend looked matronly and almost classy.

Okay, honestly guys? Girls aren't wearing that one-shouldered tight white tank top to impress you… It's so that when they are getting ready in front of their mirror and pumping up the Mystikal, DMX and Brittany, they feel all sass. Oh, and they want to look great because their friends are all doing the exact same thing. I can hear the snorts from the peanut gallery on the campus center couches, but it's true. Think about it – you go to somebody's birthday party, and it's the same crowd of kids you've been hanging out with for three years. Anyone looking up that night is going to do so because they've been dating for two years. So why do the girls still get decked out? Exactly, you have no answer. It's got nothing to do with the men. I'm not saying that girls aren't looking for guys, it's just that guys are not typically the end-all-be-all reason for the bustier/ halter/ tube/ tank/ tee/ blouse/ shirt/ sweater/ hoodie/ pants and hair straighteners.

That said, back to the club. The bass was pumping, the swirling lights had caused one poor girl to pass out in a corner, and the sweaty bodies were moving to the pulsating music. I was chatting with a head-nodder (a.k.a. one of those guys who lean against the wall all night and never venture to the dance floor), and watched as all the guys on the wall stopped their lames Dean "whatever" moves, and checked out a group of girls who had just moved to the dance floor. The girls danced in a little pack, laughing and whispering. Suddenly, from all sides, these guys were slowly surrounding them; there were a good eight or nine guys just chilling around the bevy of sequined girls. The ones that didn't grab a girl to grind with hung around for a while, circling like vultures, waiting to snag the first girl who ditched a suitor.

It's true, they were swarming like barracudas. Of course, that's only around certain Barbie-doll girls, something I've only observed while taking notes in the wilds of Boston's Landsdowne Street, or in the more local nightlife reserves like Delta Chi. And of course, my mom will smack me upside the head, because she'll say, "Shauna, if you say things like that, people will be afraid to dance with you." But fear not, barracudas are some of my favorite creatures… they have some crazy teeth.

Now, I didn't have many circlers… probably because I was the one standing in the middle of the dance floor furiously scribbling notes while my friends got down. And also because at about 12:00, the Roxy sent out two neon-thonged dancers in go-go boots who whipped glowsticks and their black waist length hair around while they got down to the international techno, and those glowing girls garnered much of the attention in the club. Damn them.

Just when I thought I couldn't stand to look at some girl dancing around in neon any longer, I was rescued, kind of, but the start of the fashion show. The show lasted about ten minutes, and displayed the line of clothing sold by Neiman Marcus, at outrageous prices. I was disappointed, as I had been expecting much more of a show, but I did get a peek of what would be big this spring.

The outfits were casual with kick-Dolce and Gabbana is showing knee length denim skirts in jean, Pucci print and black leather, and rhinestoned fitted T's with location names, like London and New York, or words like "me" and "stiletto." Animal print is still in for the spring, as they showed a pink zebra denim jacket and matching pants, as well as a leopard sleeveless shift dress. And all the tall girls will be happy, because capris and flood pants are being sold again for the spring. The best outfit of the show was a matching two-piece black rose printed ensemble with knee length straight skirt and a corset top to match. The show ended with a belly dancer swiping the corset top, and coming out with her crazy flowy dancing skirt pared with the D&G top. It was random, but I was just saying the other day how belly dancers don't get enough employment opportunities, so I was happy for her.

The crowd was a little hostile after the show, since many expected it to be much longer. But the masses were placated when the house music came back up, and the sweaty throngs and the neon-thonged started dancing again. And the barracudas circled the Euro-style girls, and the peach velvet girl stood alone. All was right in the world again.

Style File WITH SHAUNA BILLNGS

STYLE FILE SPECIAL FEATURE

Top Eight Fashion Moments of the Wednesday Night Grammy Awards

1.Madonna spent the night in Maternal Girl T-shirts (a black tank top for her performance and a white one for the rest of the show), but forget diamonds… a true material girl needs a new shiny statement… A kicking holographic limo. Hands down the best accessory of the night.

2.The low cut suits ala Faith Hill and Heather Locklear were hip and edgy, showing off peaks of lacy black bras. Although this style has been around for a while, it tends to look rather trashy in most circumstances. However, at the Grammys it just worked.

3.N'Sync really stood out during their set, which had them in glowing technicolor and the rest of the stage in black and white. The group looked great in red and orange, especially notable was Lance's long red leather jacket. Justin's red shirt was oddly reminiscent of a fencing jacket, though it worked. And J.C. should really have ditched the red velvet cummerbund that matched his sunburst colored shirt.

4.Destiny's Child looked amazing in matching teal sparkling outfits – one in a mod dress with thigh high boots, another in pants and a mid-riff baring top, and Beyonce in a one shouldered, tummy-showing mini dress. Then the group ripped them off to show some sassy daisy dukes and bikini tops, in the prerequisite shiny seagreen. It was all very Supremes 2001.

5.Too many people were trying to pull off a Jennifer Lopez look at the Grammy's though. Toni Braxton came out in a white dress with a deep-V and no sides… just one center strip. Shakira was in a golden lace barely there number. Why don't people just skip right to the fig leaf, which is what they're going for, right?

6.Macy Gray wore her cloud of confusion in style as usual, and had her hand backed her up in fun pink wigs that matched the streaks in her sleek and choppy new hairdo. She started the night off in a white coat made from the tails of dogs but she ditched that when it got stuck on the arm of her chair and stood proud in her "Goody" shirt. I like a person who can admit their kookiness.

7.Shelby Lynne, winner of Best New Artist, who performed with Sheryl

Turn to FILE, page 6

Good live, better on disc

By Anisse Gross and Vanessa Pomiechowski
Collegian Staff

LABRADFORD
Middle East
Feb. 16

Walking in after LaBradford had started playing was like waking up somewhere you can't remember falling asleep. The upstairs at the Middle East Club in Boston was chock full of pretentious looking post rockers from MIT who were swaying to the drone; some were seated, some were barely standing, others stood with their eyes rolling into the back of their heads. The sonic landscape consuming the room seemed to have transported the audience elsewhere.

The set was just beginning, and it sounded like some sort of train or mechanism churning, tinkering away in the background, stationing the otherwise fleeting chords which would have escaped by then. But the consistent repetition kept it in gear, so to speak. The guitar and bass behind the sometimes-hesitant keyboards maintained an ever-present and rarely changing background, upon which the train failed into a chorus of angelic reverie. Angelic reverie was then annihilated by static. The mechanistic noise turned holy then obsolete is a metaphor for the introduction of a spatial landscape starting with the most base of sounds, a gear. The succession of the gears by holiness transforms the physical landscape into one of the spiritual or sublime. Often regarded throughout history as the most powerful of cognitive and psychological spaces, the spiritual is then questioned by the suggestion of the complete obliteration of space as being the neospiritual.

The next set confirmed this notion, reiterating the basic questioning of sonic landscape. Instead of a gear, the music began with the effect of what sounded like two metal spoons clanking together. Other than that effect, the guitar/bass/keyboards changed little from before. The sound of the spoons was then replaced with not the reverie from before, but a more abstract and futuristic effect, like a choir of martians. This science fiction heaven was then obliterated by an even more sophisticated version of static. It seemed as though the first set introduced us to this trinity of progression, and the second set called for a more elaborate and obscure referencing of sound as medium for a cerebral and transcendental experience.

LaBradford, coming out of Richmond, Virginia and consisting of bassist Robert Donne (who implemented a flathead screw driver during the show), Mark Nelson on the guitar and vocals, accompanied by Carter Brown on keyboards, can be lumped into the category of experimental ambient post rock. Championing the use of electronics and non-traditional arrangements tagged with effects, this band confirms the rise of the drone aesthetic as being relevant to contemporary experience. Post rock emerges out of a complex intersection between minimalism, psychedelic rock, krautrock, prog-rock, old dub reggae, experimental rock, etc. A poststructuralist notion applied to music theory, postminimalist music is often characterized by repetition, static harmony, rhythmic complexity, process and impersonality. LaBradford evidently relies heavily upon the use of repetition of a sound effect, static harmony to create atmosphere by use of long chords, process orientation over product and impersonality to create accessibility. Rhythmic complexity, however, is less emphasized.

Represented mainly by Kranky Records, a label started in order to release LaBradford's first LP Prazision, LaBradford is most closely associated with bands such as Flying Saucer Attack, Experimental Audio Research, and others, but the music of LaBradford can also be linked circuitously with Stockhausen, Can, Faust, and the like. The rising popularity of the genre of post rock can be explored through many other fields of contemporary thought. For example, the complex polyrhythmic and polymetric structuring of postminimalist music exemplifies the multifaceted notion of identity and subjectivity, revealing a counter position to any notion of a fixed "truth." The emphasis on process over product is a postmodern notion harking to the transient nature of works of art and the way in which they are experienced over time. Overall, this type of music appeals to those who reject modernist music which was alienating, elitist, and maintained the division between high and low brow, employing dissonance and atonality. Ironically, however, post rock is often only a reminder of how little has changed. While wearing the guise of accessibility, LaBradford's music can often be seen as equally alienating and elitist as its predecessors. However, as alienating as it might have been at times, there was a sense of a communal experience in the room, a spatial uniformity.

LaBradford's music seems like the kind that is more suited to interpersonal travel. The music was less compelling live than on record. The show, however, gave us a context of comparison for future listening of their music. They are worth seeing live, but if you miss them on tour, an album is more than a sufficient substitute.

Club d'Elf comes out at Iron Horse in a tapestry of sound

By Joe Cardozo
Collegian Staff

CLUB d'ELF
Iron Horse Music Hall
Feb. 24

Northampton – This past Saturday, the Iron Horse was fortunate enough to play host to Club d'Elf's coming out party. The show was a phenomenal and intoxicating display of delicate grooves and bizarre sounds that weaved in and out of the mix seamlessly. The live trance/dub/groove band out of Boston, led by bassist Mike Rivard, had previously played mainly at the Lizard Lounge in Cambridge, MA. They are currently on a week-long tour in support of their recent release, As Above: Live from the Lizard Lounge on Live Archive records. The tour features John Medeski on keyboards, Mat Maneri on electric violin, Brahim Fribgane on oud and percussion, and Erik Kerr on drums. The tour also features various guests including DJ Logic, Joe Maneri on sax, Tom Hall on sax, Jerry Leake on tabla and percussion, and several others. Saturday's show included Hall and Leake.

I spoke with Rivard before the show. The following are selected portions of the interview.

Joe Cardozo: So, it's been about two and a half years for d'Elf?

Mike Rivard: It's been three years, actually... We just celebrated our three year anniversary. Three years and finally there's a record out.

JC: How did you get this idea in the first place? I mean, [Club d'Elf] is sort of a unique setup.

MR: I had this idea for a situation where, all of my friends, all of the guys I like playing with could play together...all these musicians who I've gotten to know over the years. So, I thought it would be nice to have more of a groove oriented situation where everyone's thinking more like a rhythm section player...you know, sort of dub, trance thing keeping it really improvisational, but not having it be like an open jam session where people just come in. Having some people in charge of the structure, you know, like I rehearse with the drummers and percussionists, keeping the rhythm pretty solid and letting the other people kind of come in and play over the top of it.

JC: So how do you set up your compositions...you start out with a bass line...?

MR: Yeah, I usually write out the bass part, the different grooves for the songs.

JC: Do you write out the other parts?

MR: Sometimes, sometimes it's just left to other people. Sometimes it just grows over time, people contribute parts that get written into the tune. It doesn't have to happen the same way every time, and it's better when it doesn't. So, even if there is a melody, it doesn't matter if it doesn't happen on one particular occasion. It's remixing...it becomes a different song. Like on the disc, that tune Last Business [which appears twice], it's two very different tribes.

JC: Do you ever come out and just do it totally free?

MR: Yeah, we do that...The way I look at it, the tunes are just something to hold on to, to get us on the same wavelength, and once we're there it can go, wherever. That's what I like to do is once everyone's kind of clicking, and the groove is there I'll just do something, or cue some breakdown and we'll just go from there.

JC: So is this the way first time you guys are branching out from the Lizard Lounge?

MR: Yeah, this is it. This is us, breaking away from the gravitational pull of the Lizard Lounge.

JC: So how's the tour been going?

MR: Good, good.

JC: Good crowds.

MR: Yeah, the crowds have been good. Logistically it's been a nightmare. I'm used to touring with other people...having a tour manager, not having to deal with everything myself. So this has been tough, you know, playing taking care of everything.

JC: So what are you thinking for the future of d'Elf? Are you gonna stick with this for a while?

MR: Yeah, it feels good right now. I'd like to go on. It's hard because it's not just a bunch of young guys who are gonna pile into a van...everyone's a little older, more established. You have to offer them something to get them to come out. It's been great doing this tour with John.

JC: So how long will this tour go?

MR: Just until Wednesday...it's a week. It's good, we all get along. It's great playing with great musician's and all, but a lot of it's just the hang, you know, how well you get along.

COURTESY PHILIPS CLASSICS PRODUCTIONS/CHRISTIAN STEINER

Guitar God (non-rock variety)

Celebrated guitar player Pepe Romero joins the renowned National Orchestra of Spain in a concert featuring the works of three nineteenth and twentieth century composers on Thursday, March 8 at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Betrayed characters explored

By Irene Yadao
The Daily Aztec (San Diego State U.)

IN THE MOOD FOR LOVE directed by Kar-wai Wong
with Tony Leung Chiu Wai, Maggie Cheung

(U-WIRE) SAN DIEGO – One of the great traits of a Wong Kar-wai film, and something missing from much of today's cinema, is the concentration on character rather than plot, on its revelations of and examinations into the human mindset.

"In the Mood for Love," Kar-wai's latest, is yet another cinematic character study. Set in 1962, the film centers on Mr. Chow and Mrs. Chan, two neighbors who have just moved into adjacent rooms in a Hong Kong hotel. After piecing together various clues, they come to the conclusion that their spouses are having an affair with each other.

They attempt to re-enact possible scenarios for the development of their spouses' love affair and, in doing so, create a bond based on kindred sentiments of betrayal and pain. They also find themselves creating an affair of their own, but not an explicit one – no, Kar-wai is much too prudent and fatalistic to make it that simple. The affair he creates, sadly, never comes to fruition, and is instead resigned to furtive glances, seemingly innocent evening rendezvous and consoling phone calls.

The film is characteristically rife with symbolism. Kar-wai utilizes vibrant reds in specific scenes to evince the intensification of the neighbors' stifled desires. He also uses a continual onslaught of rain to signify the jolting interruption of reality, and smoke to symbolize not only the restlessness of the two characters, but of the unwritten and universal law of impermanence. The film also exhibits Kar-wai's mastery of tone and composition, and his penchant for varied camera and production tactics.

Tony Leung and Maggie Cheung are remarkable as Mr. Chow and Mrs. Chan; their performances are punctuated with a controlled sensuality.

While "In the Mood for Love" probably won't boast as great acclaim as some of Kar-wai's past efforts ("Chungking Express" and "Happy Together"), it's a great introduction, nonetheless, for those looking to familiarize themselves with his work.

■ Miles

continued from page 5

the film is Christian Slater, but he is rubbed out after only an hour, for some baffling reason.

If you judge his recent film roles, it is to be somewhat expected that Kurt Russell would take part in a crapshoot of a film like this. (Soldier or Escape from L.A. anyone?) But the truly jaw-dropping, slap in the face comes when Costner shows up. It could be argued that his role in the current critical favorite Thirteen Days was one of the best roles of his career, and to follow it up with this is just, well, stupid. It's perfectly understandable if Costner wants to get in touch with his masculine side after the inner-child explorations covered in Message In A Bottle and For Love of the Game, but this project leaves fans all shook up.

As the gun-toting Murphy, he has a personal agenda involving something about him being one of Elvis' illegitimate children, and his mission to prove it. But this interesting subplot goes nowhere for no other reason than more unnecessary violence. Even worse than this, though, is when the movie becomes a farce, as Con's son becomes Michael's partner-in-crime. Instead of this ridiculous notion, the filmmakers should have concentrated more on the intriguing Costner subplot, which with more screen time could have been easily further developed.

The decision, though, falls ultimately to the director, Demian Lichtenstein, a music video and commercial director. What could have been a very tasty formula crumbles in this novice's hands only moments into the movie. To have wrangled up a posse of showbiz superstars such as he did, takes the stage, I didn't know what was going on. At first look, it appeared she was going for the Cruella DeVille look. But on closer inspection it was apparent that the coat was made not from the fur of 101 poky little Dalmatian puppies, but from the lace tatting skills of a 101-year-old granny from Palm Springs. What the doily? That frilly coat was intense. But in the grand tradition of ripping off an ensamble, halfway through an act, Christina lost the lace to salsa in a white dress complimented with black embroidered roses and white fringe.

Shauna Billings is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Courtney Cox-Arquette joins the doomed cast.

clout in Hollywood, and while I have never seen his previous body of work, 3000 Miles to Graceland is dead upon arrival.

If the King is still alive as the tabloids report, and if he were to see this movie, it would not only cause him great shame, but make him wish that he were actually dead. Just like the old saying, while watching 3000 Miles to Graceland I wanted to be like Elvis Presley and leave the building.

■ file

continued from page 5

Crow, showed off her abs in two different midriff-baring ensembles. However, she was lacking the most important accessory for someone who just won one of the highest honors available to musicians, and no I don't mean a holographic limo... she needed a smile.

8.When Christina Aguilera came onto

Sour ending at Mullins for Coyner, Minutewomen

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

It's all over.

Senior point guard Kathy Coyner completed her four-year career in a maroon and white uniform on yesterday at the William D. Mullins Center, as the Massachusetts women's basketball played out its regular season finale in a disappointing 59-55 lost to Dayton.

On Friday night, UMass lost its last road game of the 2000-2001 season in Philadelphia as Temple's Natalia Isaac hit a trey in overtime that proved to be the difference in the 72-69 defeat.

Coyner's final home game got off to a strong start. The point guard fittingly scored the first hoop of the game to put UMass up, 2-0, and the last basket of the game to pull the home squad within four, 59-55. But the baskets in between, or the lack thereof, are what spelled the difference.

UMass was up by 16 (39-23) with 1:16 left in the first half when Dayton's comeback began. Two of Dayton's best perimeter shooters, Chrissy Donovan and Sarah Schloss, each hit a three-pointer in the last minute of the half to pull the Flyers within 10. Dayton entered the second half with enough momentum to continue its comeback in the second stanza.

"They played well," UMass head coach Joanie O'Brien said. "We had a 16-point lead and did everything we wanted to until the last minute of the first half and then they hit those two threes. And to be honest, we never recovered."

The Flyers took the court in the second half looking like a new team. The Dayton squad that was outplayed in the first half stayed in the locker room as a new and more focused Dayton unit took control for the last 20 minutes. The Flyers' attempted comeback proved to be successful, as an 8-1 run with 13:33 tied up the contest at 40 thanks to a jump shot by point guard Stefanie Miller.

Dayton couldn't pull away from the Minutewomen, but held the lead for the last 9:58 of the match-up as poor shooting once again plagued UMass.

Just as two different Dayton teams took the Mullins Center court on Sunday, two much different UMass teams showed up on Senior Day. The first UMass team that took the court was the one of the best UMass teams that O'Brien has seen all season. That team shot a whopping 53.3 percent from the field while turning the ball over only five times. That team was composed, patient and determined.

The UMass team that took the court in the second half was the exact opposite. That team couldn't hit shots, repeatedly missing easy hoops around the basket. That team shot 21.1 percent from the field for the half, as Dayton won the game by shooting a humble 32.1 percent.

"They kept it going in the second half," O'Brien said. "Composure has been our problem all year. We got excellent shots in the second half. There comes a time when you have to step up and finish shots off. We got good looks, but it's a hard game when you can't put the ball in the basket"

The biggest difference between the two Minutewomen teams that showed up on Sunday may have been Jen Butler. Butler epitomized the best of the first half UMass team that was ahead by 10 going into the break. The sophomore center put forth a solid effort with nine points and five rebounds and it appeared that she was on pace to score her 12th double-double of the season. But it didn't happen. Butler scored eight more points, to finish with 17, but only gathered two more boards. She shot 5-for-14 for the afternoon, and most of her missed shots came inside the paint. In the end, it was missed put backs and poor perimeter shooting that spelt doom for UMass.

"We struggled offensively," O'Brien said. "We struggled getting the ball inside, and when we got the ball in there, those guys got good looks and didn't finish them."

On Coyner's last home game, she put forth a solid effort with 17 points and five assists. The senior played with a newfound sense of confidence and it appears that she has overcome her recent shooting slump.

On Friday night, UMass went to Philadelphia in hopes of upsetting third place Temple, and came as close as possible without leaving with the "W."

With less than a minute left in regulation, Temple grabbed its first lead of the game at 55-54. Both teams hung tough, and the score was even at 57 at the end of regulation.

The overtime period was much like regulation – full of action without either team pulling away with a strong lead. With nine seconds left in the extra frame, UMass was down three, 69-66.

It was time for one of the Minutewomen to step and score, and like the primetime player that she is, and Coyner did just that.

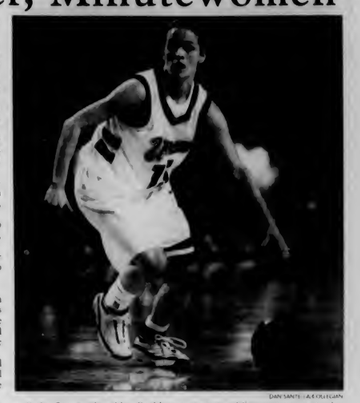
With the seconds on the clock dwindling, Coyner nailed a shot from downtown that evened the score up at 69.

But Temple had a prime time player of its own.

Isaac, who already had 36 points, took a shot from three-point land with two seconds left. As the seconds on the clock ticked, the shot went up. The Minutewomen watched, and hoped that it would bounce off the rim in a miss. But no such luck. Isaac hit the shot, and Temple won the battle, 72-69.

Coyner led the Minutewomen with 16 points, and the sophomore frontcourt tandem of Butler and Amherst Sneed each accounted for 11 points in the heartbreaking loss.

With this weekends two losses, UMass finishes the season with a 6-10 record in the A-10 and an 11-16 record overall.



DAN SANTOS/COLLEGIAN

Kathy Coyner played her final home game as a Minutewoman yesterday in a 59-55 loss to Dayton. The senior scored 17 points and dished out five assists in her last appearance in Amherst.

■ lacrosse

continued from page 10

away goal that gave the Maroon and White a 13-10 advantage.

While the UMass attack squad was firing on all cylinders the defense was getting it done as well.

"We really shut them down in the second half and played great defense," Canella said.

That stingy defensive core was bolstered by the play of goalie Chris Campoletano. The senior made 17 saves on the afternoon, none more important than the flurry he turned back at the end of the third quarter.

With the Minutemen clinging to a two-goal lead the Pride garnered a one minute extra man opportunity. Campoletano all but cued the fat lady, as he made two remarkable saves in shutting down the Hofstra advantage.

"We really needed Campy – he played great for us." Canella said of his keeper's rock solid performance.

The Pride was merely puppets to the Minutemen in the final period, as UMass controlled the flow of the game.

After three minutes of sustained pressure the Maroon and White were still attempting to kick the home team off their heels.

Leveille answered the call again; prying open the jaws of the Pride with a five hole laser off a feed from Racioppi.

The extra man goal gave UMass a 15-13 lead and a strangle hold on the contest. Campolettano continued to make key saves down the stretch while John Madigan notched his second goal of the game and Leveille netted his fourth for some added insurance.

Hofstra's offense clicked like a cube through a spherical hole in the second half. McFarland and bruising sophomore Tom Fallon helped to push Hofstra around like a tackling dummy, as the Pride managed only three goals in the final thirty minutes of play. Whether it was "Big Nasty" feeding up some turf or Campolettano making stone cold stops the UMass D had the Hofstra O talking to themselves as they left the field.

It all came together for the Minutemen on Saturday – balanced scoring, ferocious defense and strength in numbers.

Canella preaches work ethic during the week but he emphasizes performance on game day.

"We've always worked hard Monday through Friday," Canella said. "These guys made a decision to get the job done on Saturday."

Homecoming of sorts for lax

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. - He stepped off the artificial turf surface of Hofstra Stadium prepared to forge his way to the visitor's locker room. The only hurdle was a group of friends bloated with customary congratulatory sentences.

After he finished saying his last "thank you," he continued his march over to the locker room entrance. But his journey was again halted.

"Greg," yelled an older man, standing about 20 feet in the distance.

Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella turned and saw a rather familiar face – Larry Glenz, his former high school lacrosse coach from Lynbrook High School in New York.

The two coaches shared an embrace and some words before going on their separate ways.

Cannella entered the locker room, smiling – his Minutemen had just knocked off the No. 9 team in the nation, 17-13, on its home turf.

Glenz made his way over to the post-game tailgate party being set up in the parking lot by the UMass parents – joining Glenz for some barbecue was his son Kevin, a freshman on Cannella's Maroon and White squad.

"His son plays for me," Cannella said, back in the locker room. "That's just unbelievable."

But the connections don't stop there. Cannella's father, John, is the founder of the lacrosse program at Lynbrook High School. And it was there that Glenz coached the present UMass skipper to a high school All-American selection. So, for the Cannella and Glenz families, playing lacrosse in the Empire State, especially Long Island, gets a little personal.

Check that. For the Cannella, Glenz, Shay, Managan, Gabrielli, Gaski, Kunkel – let's just say the UMass roster (coaches and players) is filled with a lot of New Yorkers.

And that's why Saturday's victory over Hofstra in Hempstead N.Y., was rather exciting for the men in maroon. When the final buzzer sounded and the Minutemen had put away Hofstra, 15-13, the Pride, UMass had gained some well-deserved respect, not only for themselves but for the Massachusetts lacrosse program as a whole.

Apparently, lacrosse is the number one sport at Hofstra. And rumor has it that it was the main reason for the $9 million major renovation and expansion of Hofstra Stadium in 1994 – a project which pushed the seating capacity from 7,000 to 15,000 and developed the new athletic department building which includes a new press and club suite level, making it the largest outdoor sports complex on Long Island – was lacrosse, not football.

None of this served as any form of intimidation for the Minutemen. If anyone proved shaky in warm-ups, it was the old Flying Dutchmen. Because when UMass senior Jeff Seals bent down for the first face-off, there were more UMass shirts in the bleachers than Hofstra ones.

"The crowd was great," Cannella said. "The women's (lacrosse) team was there which was great to see. 'Again, you got a lot of guys coming home for this. There's a lot of families – I had a lot of family and friends here today. I do think that has an effect but what these guys do on the field and how hard they work makes the difference."

Less than one minute into the first quarter, junior All-America candidate Matt MacFarland went after a ground ball in the UMass zone and was pushed from behind by The Pride's Tom Kessler, the fifth-leading scorer in the nation last year. Kessler was immediately flagged and MacFarland pumped his fist strongly into the air. The Minutemen were all fired up and ready to go.

"When you're playing a Top 10 team and you're a team that had a losing record the year before – and you come through and win a game like this – everything you coach and everything you talk about comes true," Cannella said. "So there's an instant boost in confidence not only in their ability but in what we're doing as a team."

Sophomore Kevin Leveille's parents, Nancy and George, made the drive from Delmar, N.Y. Saturday morning to watch their son begin his second year in a maroon and white uniform. And after two quarters, the young Leveille had wracked up two assists. He was, however, still looking to extend his six-game goal-scoring streak that he ended last season with.

Early in the third quarter, the Leveilles saw their son find the net twice in a span of three minutes to give UMass the 12-10 lead. In the fourth stanza, Leveille short-hopped a shot into the left corner to give his team the 15-13 lead and with 15 seconds left in the contest he added his fourth for good measure. At this point the UMass fans who were now all on their feet.

"You can't really focus [on the crowd] when you're out there," Leveille said. "But it all helps. And it's all fun now, especially."

Leveille's four goals and six total points (two assists) were both career highs for the 5-foot-10 attackman. Last year he finished with 10 goals and seven assists for 17 total points.

"I've been looking forward to this game since last year," Leveille said. "This is pretty big. We knew this was going to be one of our biggest contests the whole year. This is our first step, a big step I think."

It was really a decision that the team made which was the difference in the game," Cannella said. "They decided to play tougher and harder than Hofstra and I think we accomplished that goal."

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

■ hockey

continued from page 10

Johnson. The Minutemen were unable to clear the rebound and Jeff Guiliano scored to tie the game at three.

The score would remain that way until the final horn, as both teams were unable to solve the opposing team's goalie.

"It was important for UMass, but it was important for us, too," BC head coach Jerry York said. "Both of us had a lot on the table.

"We certainly put a lot of shots on Johnson, but the finishing part wasn't very good for us. UMass battled hard and stayed right in the game."

Saturday night the No. 2 Eagles showed the crowd at the William D. Mullins Center why they ranked so highly in the national polls and sit atop the conference.

BC came out of firing as it peppered UMass goalie Markus Helanen with shots early in the first period. Helanen was up to the task for much of the period, but the relentless Eagles showed that they could score goals in a hurry as it took down the Maroon and White, 6-4.

Freshman Chuck Kobasew opened the scoring at the 15:23 mark, when he scored on a shot from the high slot. Just over two minutes later Gionta would net his second of three goals on the weekend when a clearing attempt by Helanen hit him on the shaft of his stick and trickled into the net.

Gates would cut the BC lead in half with a goal midway through the second, but Bobby Allen would get it back less than a minute later.

Scott Horvath would again cut the lead to one goal as he scored his sixth goal of the season on a rebound in front of the net.

Marty Hughes would double the lead when he finally solved UMass goaltending for his fifth goal of the year. Hughes has had numerous chances in previous games versus the Minutemen, but has been blanked in the score column.

Tim Turner would score his second goal of the weekend early in the third to cut the Eagle lead to one goal, again, but it was as close as the Maroon and White would get as BC netted two goals on breakaways late in the third period to seal UMass' fate.

"We had a couple of breakaways early in the game and I don't even think we put the puck on net," Cahoon said. "Trade that off with a couple of breakaways that they had at the end of the game. They get two goals out of their breakaways and we don't, and that tells the difference in the game."

With the loss, the Minutemen gave up their advantage in the Hockey East standings as Merrimack and Maine skated to a 1-1 tie. The tie puts pressure on UMass to earn points in its final series of the regular season this weekend against No. 7 New Hampshire.

Merrimack has a single game left Friday night at Walter Brown Arena when it takes on Boston University.

■ men's hoop

continued from page xx

The Minutemen do not have a lot of time to enjoy their over .500 record, as they must get ready for tomorrow night's battle in Philadelphia with A-10 leading St. Joseph's (23-4, 13-1 A-10).

"It's a really important game and we have to play it like it's a championship game," said Crooks of the St. Joe's game. "They're going to be real hyped up to play in front of their fans and we just have to go in there and play our game."

■ Minutemen

continued from page 10

ingly at each other as if to say, "that's how champions do it." Nelson doesn't plan to the crowd after shooting a defense for an easy deuce; he instead drops immediately into his defensive stance in hopes of getting another swipe and keying another explosive Hawk fast break. St. Joe's is anything but surprised at its own success.

The Minutemen, meanwhile, have yet to develop that swagger. Winning 8-of-9 conference games had the team believing in destiny; lopsided losses to Dayton and Temple since have served as painful reminders of the Maroon and White's mortality. The players know what they are capable of – "we know we can beat anybody" is a common Minutemen quote – but as soon as the Owls began taking charge at the Mullins on Feb. 17, UMass all but rolled over and played dead. This is a team that, in order to beat the best, has to believe it can.

And that's precisely what a victory Tuesday will give Flint's troops. Heading into the A-10 tournament with confidence, the Minutemen will be a solid pick to win it all and a very easy team to root for.

After being forced to play Duquesne fan for a day, that will be awfully nice.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

UMASS BALLROOM TEAM presents
SWING into SPRING
Feb 28, 2001 • Student Union Ballroom
Free Admission and Refreshments
Demos by UMass Ballroom Dance Team
7pm: Free Lesson
8-12pm: Open Dance
no experience or partner necessary!
Questions? Call Danielle 546-2973
http://www.umass.edu/rso/ballroom/

STUDENT TRAVEL
London.....$211
Paris.....$286
Amsterdam.....$273
Tokyo.....$609
student airfares
BEDS ON A BUDGET
rail passes
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

summer is just .....
FUN IN THE SUN, NINE FRIEND-FILLED FANTASTIC WEEKS IN THE GREAT OUTDOORS!
Overnight camp in beautiful Upstate New York seeks staff for the Summer of 2001.
THERE'S SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE!
Great salaries, amazing place to work!
CAMP IS FOR STAFF TOO!
Surprise Lake Camp
The Best in Jewish Camping!
For information and applications call, email or visit us:
(212) 924-3131
SLCamp@aol.com
www.surpriselake.org
Special bonuses for counselors who have been to Israel or done Jewish tutoring or teaching. Call for details!
UJA Federation of New York
around the corner !!

THE CRUCIBLE
UMASS theater

MOLSON
CollegeFest
ONLY
Springbreak
5 Day 4 Night
SKI TRAVEL
1-800-SKI-TRAVEL
WWW.SKITRAVEL.COM

Munchie Madness 3-6PM MONDAY-FRIDAY
Vegetarian Potato Skins $8.50 4.25
Sweet Potato Fries $8.50 3.25
Shrimp Tempura $7.25 3.00
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
515 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491

springbreakparty2001.com
Message Board-Picture Post
Streaming Video- Online Contest

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Learn to bartend in a weekend!
Classes Begin
Fri., March 2nd 6:00pm
Valentine Hill, Amherst College
Call now! Space is limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 Mazda Red, extremely reliable, tidy, new clutch, new exhaust. $850 obo. 253-1933

1993 Saturn SL2 Clean, well maintained. 100k miles $2700. 549-8000

1995 Geo Prism 51,000 miles, manual, excellent condition. $5,100 call Warren 253-3844

COMPUTERS

Mac & Apple Laptop, Desktop, PC Laptop, desktop repair. Lowest rate. Pentium Laptop $599 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

TEENAGE BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED; Be at Teen Tour Leader this summer. Trips in USA, Canada, Europe. We need a 4-week time commitment - end of June through July, salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, CONWAY, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, bicycletrips.com

WATNED: Native Speakers of American English for listening experiments $8/hr ph545-6837

PT Help Wanted Amherst Greenhouse growing pesticide free, hydroponic herbs. 549-3558

EMPLOYMENT

Counselors Wanted Co-ed Jewish overnight camp in Maine offers competitive salary plus room and board. All positions available! For more information, contact Ava or Meridith at 617-244-5124 or via email at info@kingswood.org

The UMass Football team is looking for interested students to video practices and games for the spring 2000/2001 season. Experience preferred but will train. Scholarship and work study programs available. If you are interested please contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319. Come be a part of a championship tradition.

Do you need money$? Will you be in the Amherst area over the summer? Do you like working outside? Are you reliable, hard-working and friendly? If so call Amber for a great job. 537-3348

2 Summer Jobs on Nantucket Island, MA. Office Assistant, Mothers & Household Helper. B. Auction Gallery Assistant, Furniture Porter, Display, Deliveries. Salary plus housing. Drivers license required. 508-228-3942 or send resume, P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584

EMPLOYMENT

French & or German Speaking cadidate needed for part-time work. Contact Diane at 549-1169 or e-mail diane@remi.com

CAMP WAYNE FOR GIRLS - NE Pennsylvania (6/19-8/17/01). Directors for Gymnastics, Fine Arts, Camping/Nature, Golf, Swimming. Couselors for : Tennis, Team Sports, Ropes, Self-Defense, Gymnastics, Aerobics, Cheerleading, Swimming, Sailing, Waterskiing, Fine Arts and Crafts, Piano, Drama, Photography, Guitar, Video, Group Leaders. On Campus Interviews March 6th. Call 800-279-3019 or go to www.campwaynegirls.com

Crabapple Whitewater is hiring whitewater raft guides for the up coming season. Full & part-time summer jobs. No experience necessary. Must be athletic & outgoing. We will train. Call for info & application. 413-625-2288

Photographer Needed for whitewater trips. Full time summer job. Weekends Spring & Fall. Experience necessary. Call 413-625-2288

EMPLOYMENT

Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life 5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals free delivery 253-9742

HOUSE FOR SALE

3 Bedroom House close to University. 549-6157

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons Recreational & competitive boxing. 256-0364

INSTRUCTION

Kickboxing Instruction and General Personal Training. All levels and abilities. Joe 548-8979

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MUSIC

Do you want your band recorded? Call Hellbent Studios. Digital and Analog Recording. $20 per/hr. 413-549-5942

ROOM FOR RENT

One Bedroom in two bedroom. 3/15-6/15 (flexible). Laundry, furnishings, near bus route. $375/month. Inc. HEAT 584-4664

ROOMMATE WANTED

To Take Over Lease Boulders Apartments Call Rob or Jackson 256-0386

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

1 Bedroom & Study in 4 bedroom apt. Avail 3/4 $375/month. Call Julie 413-364-1430

TRAVEL

Spring Break Airport Rides: Students want to save $5 Bucks on a ride to the airport? Call to reserve a roundtrip from Campus to Bradley Airport by February 28 to get your discount. Just mention this ad when making your reservation. Valley Transporter. 253-1350

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Europe $179 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Go with Local Spring Break Company! Don't get screwed space still available. Call Flip at 800-227-1166 or email flip@goflip-trips.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001 Jamaica, Cancun, Florida, Barbados, Bahamas, Padre. Free Meals, Free Drinks and Up to $100 room credit...Call for special weeks or go to www.sunsplash-tours.com 1-800-426-7710

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida. Group rates still available. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $499. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Go Direct! #1 Internet-based Company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252. www.spring-breakdirect.com

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

WANTED

Seeking University Students with Insulin Dependent Diabetes for research project - $10 paid interview. Call Amy 250-7934

Need to Advertise?

Don't hesitate.... call NOW!

545-3500

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

We Advertise to Thousands!

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE!!!

ADVERTISE TODAY

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS 3 Boston
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - Cable Springfield
6 - FBN 22 Springfield
7 - WGBY Music Channel
8 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - WHCT Hot Shots Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - UPN 34 Hartford
13 - NBC 8 Springfield
14 - Intercultural Channel
15 - WMAV Christian Channel
16 - WTNH New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - ESPN2
19 - UNC TV Carolina Channel
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Travel Channel
22 - C-Span
23 - ESPN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - E!
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Nesn
32 - Nesn
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Shopping Channel Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV2
42 - MTV
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 26, 2001

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience "Race for the Superbomb" (In Stereo)				Great Performances (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "The Liars' Club"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "The Liars' Club"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Best Commercials-Never		"Life With Judy Garland: Me and My Shadows" (2001) Judy Davis.				News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "Parents" (N)		Roswell "Viva Las Vegas"		News	Arrest & Trial	Friends	Sudden-Suaden
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)				Third Watch (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	7th Heaven "I Love You"		Street Smarte	Blind Date	7th Heaven "Parents" (N)		Roswell "Viva Las Vegas"		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)				Third Watch (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Boston Public (N) (In Stereo)		Ally McBeal "Falling Up" (N)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)				Third Watch (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience "Race for the Superbomb" (In Stereo)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	22	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Best Commercials-Never		"Life With Judy Garland: Me and My Shadows" (2001) Judy Davis.		News		Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Moesha (N)	Parkers (N)	Hughleys	Girlfriends	Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	42		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Dilbert "Dilbert's Dating Tips" (1997) Daniel Stern.		Masked Dropout "Masked Dropout" (1998) Jennifer Grey.				Foxtrot
A&E	45		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Consultation"		Biography: Drew Barrymore		100 Centre Street "Lady Paris"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Hot Pursuit"
CNN	20	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sporte	Moneyline
COM	25	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Com.-Presents	Premium	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	29		Raging Planet "Lightning"		Raging Planet "Earthquake"		Wolf in the Water: The Piranha		95 Worlde and Counting (N)		Survive Vill. (N)		Justice Files "The Hustler"
ESPN	31		Sportscenter		College Basketball: Notre Dame at Connecticut. (Live)				College Basketball: Missouri at Texas. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	49		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait (In Stereo)		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Country Justice" (1997, Drama) George C. Scott.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53		Direct Effect	Andy Dick's	Kathy-Reality		MTV's 20th Anniversery: 20 Most Outrageous Moments				Daria (N)	2gether	Undressed	Tom Green
NICK	55		Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	61		Hercules: Legendery Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		First Weve "Skywatchers"		Invisible Man "Beholder"		Lexx: The Series (In Stereo)		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	62	24	Paramedics "Seven Minutes"		48 Hours "Who Killed Jane?"		Junkyard Wars "Power Boats"		Bounty Hunters		Best Kept Secrets: Law		Junkyard Wars	"Power Boats"
TNT	63		ER "The Birthday Party"				Pretender "Exposed"		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo)
USA	67		Walker, Texes Renger		JAG "With Intent to Die"		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)							Martin
HBO	33		★★½ "Oscar" (1991, Comedy) Sylvester Stallone. PG				★½ "Lake Placid" (1999) Bill Pullman. R		Reel Sporte (N)				★★½ "Desperate Acts" (2000) Wesley Snipes.
MAX	43		(4:30)		★★½ "Three Kings" (1999) George Clooney. R				★½ "The End of the Affair" (1999, Drama) Ralph Fiennes. R		★★ "Hitman's Run" (1999) Eric Roberts. R		"Sleeping"
SHOW	65		★★ "Lovebyo" (1999, Comedy) Patrick Dempsey. PG-13						★★★ "Bringing Out the Dead" (1999, Drama) Nicolas Cage. R		Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		★★ "The Program" (1993) R

Buttercup Festival By Elliott Garbauskas

Dilbert By Scott Adams

HELLO, ALICE. I'M YOUR SOUL.
YOU'RE A MANAGER NOW; YOU WON'T BE NEEDING ME.
HERE'S A CLAIM TICKET IN CASE YOU GET DEMOTED OR LEARN TO PLAY SAX.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

ALICE THE MANAGER
HOW DO I COPE WITH THE EMPTINESS OF HAVING NO SOUL?
TRY DOING THIS WITH YOUR TEETH WHILE YOU DANCE.
IS THERE ANOTHER WAY?
I CAN TEACH YOU TO PLAY AIR GUITAR.

Masked Dropout By Robert Huwitt

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

NO MOM OR DAD AROUND TO TELL US TO PICK UP OUR MESSES...
NO MOM OR DAD AROUND TO TELL US NOT TO SNACK BEFORE DINNER...
NO MOM OR DAD AROUND TO TELL US NOT TO WATCH TV ROUND THE CLOCK...
HIGH FIVE FOR ASKING FOR A PLAY-STATION 2 FOR CHRISTMAS.
SO WHAT COUNTY AND STATE ARE THEY SEARCHING TODAY?

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

I'd say there are two issues here.
The secret plans are in the safe.
Then they'll be safe while we make our own secret plans.
You roguish devil.
And I thought I was just a dervish rogue.
I SEE I WROTE A REAL PAGE-TURNER!
HE USED THE SAME CHEESY LINES WITH THE LAST GIRL!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WOW! WHAT IS THAT SMELL? BUCKY! ARE YOU BRINGING TRASH INTO MY HOUSE AGAIN?!
WHOA, WHOA, WHOA! YOUR HOUSE?! BUDDY, I HATE TO BREAK THIS TO YA, BUT I'VE "CLAIMED" THIS HOUSE IN EVERY POSSIBLE WAY!
eeew

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Robotman By Jim Meddick

LATER THAN NIGHT
ROBA!
I WANT TO KNOW MORE ABOUT THIS THING YOU CALL LOVE
PSST! ROBOTMAN
YOU WERE WARNED! TALK OF LOVE IS FORBIDDEN HERE!
BUT BUT IT'S MY FAULT! I TOLD HER ABOUT LOVE! I'M THE ONE RESPONSIBLE!
AS YOU PREFER TO BE CONTINUED

Horoscopes

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20)- You should be joyous over the creative opportunities that have come your way through your associations with others today. You could be quite the charmer now.

Aries (March 21-April 19)-You may be able to increase your income through quiet conversations with people who look to you as a leader and guide. Don't doubt your ability to raise large sums of money or get perks that will make your life easier.

Taurus (April 20-May 20)-Your golden way with words could melt even the most skeptical heart, and your contagious good humor is only part of the package. You have the ability to ease tense situations, but beyond this skill, you also try to find what is fair and right for everyone.

Gemini (May 20-June 21)-Focus on projects at a distance. You may have a chance to create a new home life in conjunction with a very magnetic partnership. Be aware of your need for the right environment.

Cancer (June 21-July 22)-You may have to pinch yourself to be sure you're not dreaming today. Never doubt your creativity or your ability to work on important projects. Be on the lookout for investment opportunities.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22)-Financial ease makes everything fall into place without stress. Trust your lucky stars and know that whatever you do, you'll end up smelling like a rose. People seem to idolize you and expect you to be the ideal person, the stuff of their dreams. It's a tall order to fill, but you can and will walk in those shoes.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)-A project you and your friends have been thinking about for ages is starting to take shape. You'll assume a leadership role, naturally. It's important for you to do that; otherwise, nothing will get accomplished.

Libra (Sept. 23- Oct. 22)- You want to do whatever you feel like doing, but there's a dominant leader who wants to boss you around. You want to be nice, but that's not a requirement. If you don't want to go along with the crowd, just say so.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)-You need to get out and play with your friends. If you don't have a mate or a date, get your friends to set you up. If you already know who you'll be with from now on, get together with your other favorite people for a day of unexpected delights.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)-You want to do whatever you feel like doing, but there's a dominant leader who wants to boss you around. You want to be nice, but that's not a requirement. If you don't want to go along with the crowd, just say so.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)- You should be in a great mood, adventurous and outgoing. You have friends who'll take you over the edge if you let them. Make sure the trouble you get into is the fun kind, not the dangerous kind. You can tell the difference.

Aquarius (Jan. 29-Feb. 19)- You're concerned about taking care of others, and that's good. Today somebody's concerned about taking care of you. If this is a person you know well and trust, relax. You're still in control of your own well-being.

Quote of the Day

"Hey, look at the size of that mullet!"

–Overheard

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Teriyaki Beef

Native American Stew (vegan) (B, H, W)

Tofu with Snow Peas (vegan)

DINNER

Fried Shrimp

Madras Tofu Curry (vegan) (B, H, W)

Ratatouille Polenta Pie (vegan)

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 33 LOW: 22	HIGH: 43 LOW: 19	HIGH: 37 LOW: 18

Solid Custom Tattoo
460 West St. Route 116 Amherst, MA 253-0003
tues-sat 1-9
sun apt. only
A Tattoo is for life Know your artist

ACROSS
1 Journals
5 Online discussion
9 Rushed
13 Lease out
14 Narrow track
15 Felt ill
17 Green veggie
18 Algerian city
19 Asimov's genre
21 Vind
22 Kind of computer
24 Ode
25 Free-for-alls
26 Ophelia's love
29 Migratory fowl
31 Bay window
32 Prolific auth.
33 Final letter
36 Tanker cargo
37 Fibers
40 Ammo
41 Brief fashion
42 Sunbonnets
43 Hall-of-Famer Banks
45 Social climbers
47 Reinforced
48 "Racing Thoughts" artist, — Johns
51 From — to nuts
52 Really old
54 Game fish
58 Like AOL users
59 Piece of music
61 Mattress man
62 Kiosk
63 Lease
64 Precious garment
65 Cathedral recess
66 Tibetan beasts
67 Fitness centers

DOWN
1 Hef's father, in myth
2 Arabian Peninsula country
3 Gold leaf
4 Bell tower
5 Storage place
6 Seraglio
7 Literary collection
8 Look after 9 Talks back to
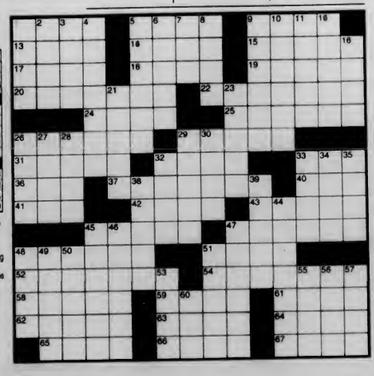
10 Hot water, so to speak
11 Ritzy group
12 "Pokemon Crusoe" author
16 Party staples
21 Carole
23 Correct text
26 Deer foot
27 Diva's rendition
28 Blend
29 Tiny bugs
30 Ages and ages
32 Shelli, e.g.
33 Brass component
34 Cleveland's lake
35 — out: used thrifitily
38 Rose-bush part
39 Antitoxin
44 Emulating Eminem
45 Harangues
46 Tailor's tool
47 Lifts
48 1975 Spielberg film
49 Elsberg or Loos
50 Bit of blarney
51 Gumpston
53 Whig's foe
55 "An apple — ..."
56 Standard
57 Early automaker
60 Pool item

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	E	A	M		I	B	I	S		C	H	I	C
L	A	M	A		P	O	A	C	H		R	O	A	R
E	R	I	C		I	N	O	T	A		Y	O	G	A
U	P	S	H	O	T		E	E	R		S	T	O	W
		E	W	E	R		R	I	O	T
M	E	A	T	L	O	A	F		F	R	A	C	A	S
U	R	G	E		U	K	E	S		B	L	A	N	C
F	R	I		S	E	A	M	S		M	A	R	I	A
F	O	L	D	S		D	R	A	Y		S	O	U	R
S	L	E	E	P	S		S	C	H	A	M	B	L	E
		A	V	E	S		K	I	L	O
T	R	O	O		N	O	R		A	P	L	O	M	B
H	A	R	P		A	L	I	E	N		D	O	O	R
A	R	E	A		T	A	N	G	S		E	Z	R	A
N	E	O	N		E	R	G	O			R	E	N	D

3-26-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam White
Photo Technician — Jaret Barr
Copy Editor — Melissa Hammell
Production Supervisor — Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff — Margery Smelkinson, Jarrett Brimmer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Men's lax upends No.9 Hofstra

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. – It is always a special day when the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team travels to Long Island to take on the Hofstra Pride.

It is special because a bus trip to Hempstead is a return home for many of the Minutemen, as numerous players have roots in the area. Unfortunately for the Maroon and White however, success has been left stranded at the bus stop on the last three occasions.

What began as a simple visit turned into a homecoming fiesta for the entire UMass squad and a coming-out party for one player – highly touted sophomore Kevin Leveille.

Although Leveille is a native of Delmar, N.Y., he looked right at home on the turf of Hofstra Stadium, notching a career-high four goals and six points in a 17-13 victory.

The Minutemen (1-0, 0-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) made Hofstra (0-1, 0-0 America East) the first victim of a run and gun style that should become a trademark of 2001 UMass lacrosse.

"We have decided to play up-tempo," head coach Greg Canella said.

The contest began at a ferocious pace with nine goals in the first quarter. UMass was in control for most of the opening frame until Hofstra's Tom Kessler notched two goals and Mike Tierney netted another to give the home squad a 5-4 lead as the first quarter ended.

The style of the game remained consistent as ten more goals were scored in the second quarter. Senior captain Jeremy Guski led by example, as he found the back of the net twice in the second frame, helping the Minutemen stay within one goal of the Pride at 10-9.

"It was a tough day to be a goalie," Canella said.

The way the contest had shaped itself going into halftime the question was which team could sustain its offensive explosiveness and which team would sputter?

That question would be answered immediately by UMass' mountain of a defenseman, Matt McFarland.

"Big Natty" speaks softly but carries a big stick that loomed over the Hofstra offense like a vulture over a rotting carcass.

The junior All-America candidate provided a second half spark by flexing his muscles on a helpless Hofstra attacker. After the bone crushing hit McFarland audaciously ran through three Hofstra players before springing junior Paul Hutchen for a breakaway tally to knot the game at ten.

The sequence of events that led to Hutchens goal swayed the game, as the Pride was struggling to match UMass' intensity for the rest of the contest.

Leveille went for the jugular, as he took a feed from the point and fired a 15-yard shot into the side netting.

"He's a tremendous shooter, so if he can get his chances he'll put the ball away," Canella said.

Less than a minute after giving UMass a lead the phenom struck again, this time on a goal truly indicative of his talent and potential. The sophomore exhibited his outstanding one on one skill by breaking down a Hofstra defender and embarrassing the Pride's net minder on a short hop shot that found the upper corner.

Alex Racioppi then found fellow senior Rich Kunkel for another break-

Turn to LAX, page 7

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Rich Kunkel netted a pair of goals as the UMass men's lacrosse team defeated No. 9 Hofstra 17-13 on Saturday.

Hoops finds the "Will" to win

Defense the story as UMass dumps George Washington

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON, D.C. – On Nov. 18, the Massachusetts men's basketball team was over .500 with a record of 1-0.

Now, 98 days later, the Minutemen are back over the .500 mark for the first time following a 64-56 win over George Washington at the Charles F. Smith Center. It was the second win over GW this season for the Minutemen, who handed the Colonials a 76-60 loss at the William D. Mullins Center on Jan. 6.

In a building where it has had more than its share of problems in recent years, UMass (13-12, 11-3 Atlantic 10) produced one of its best defensive showings of the season in holding the Colonials to 34 percent shooting and their lowest point total at home this season. Keying the defensive effort on the afternoon was junior guard Shannon Crooks. Crooks held George Washington's Siriki Ahant Brown, the nation's second-leading scorer last season, to just one field goal and eight points.

"Shannon did an outstanding job of guarding him [Brown]," UMass head coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "I've been saying that Shannon is the best defensive guard in the league, by far."

The Maroon and White went into halftime with a 27-19 lead after holding the Colonials to seven field goals, only one of which was made by a starter. That lone field goal was a layup at the 1:47 mark by Antxon Iturbe for GW's first points of the afternoon.

The Colonials then proceeded to go more than 33 minutes without a made field goal from a starter, a string that was broken by senior Mike King's jumper with 5:17 to go. GW (12-15, 6-8 A-10) finished the game with a mere four field goals made and 23 points from its starting five.

"They played great defense today and really made us work for everything," GW head coach Tom Penders said.

Despite the Colonials' inability to score, the Minutemen were unable to put the game away until midway through the second half, when senior shooting guard Monty Mack caught fire. Mack made three jumpers and a pair of three-pointers in a five-minute stretch to give the Minutemen a double-digit lead for the first time on the day. Mack finished with a game-high 24 points, including five three-pointers.

"He made big plays for us," Flint said. "We were trying to go inside but the big guys missed a few layups so I said 'go with the girl that always brings you to the dance.'"

"They just kept running 'the play' for me," said Mack. "I was just reading the way they were playing me on D and I was coming off [the screens] looking to shoot. I'm just glad the shots went in."

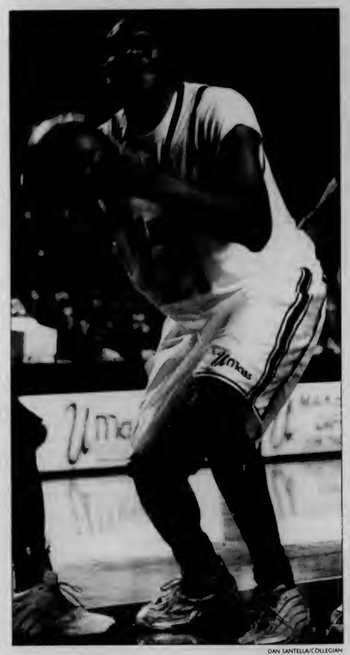
While it was Mack who gave the Minutemen the lead, it was fellow senior Jonathan DePina who sealed it. In the last 45 seconds of the game, DePina made all eight of his free throws to put the game out of reach.

With 17 seconds left Monroe hit a three to cut the lead to five at 60-55, but once again DePina came through for the Maroon and White by making two crucial freebies to keep the Colonials at bay.

Joining DePina in coming up big off the bench was junior Eric Williams. In 19 minutes of action, Williams tallied eight points and six rebounds, including four on the offensive glass. But it was his effort on the defensive end of the floor in shutting down GW's Attila Cosby that drew praise from Flint.

"Today [Williams] showed he can make baskets in the post but the most important he did a great job on Cosby," Flint said. "Cosby got it going a little bit and Eric got into the game and did a great job of shutting him down."

Turn to MEN'S HOOP, page 7



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Junior Eric Williams scored eight points and ripped down six rebounds as the Minutemen eclipsed the .500 mark for the first time since the first game of the season.

Is first place worth the pain? One game as a Duquesne fan

Rooting for the Massachusetts men's basketball team is often painful enough. Trying to will the Dukes of Duquesne to victory is like spending 40 minutes in a dentist's chair.

Had Darelle Porter's squad found a way to upset St. Joseph's at the A.J. Palumbo Center yesterday, the stage would have been set for true Maroon and White glory on Tuesday. The Minutemen could have marched into Philadelphia and, by defeating the Hawks, locked up at least a share of the regular-season Atlantic 10 title.

But hanging your hopes on a 9-18 team stopping the conference frontrunner's eight-game winning streak is probably setting yourself up for failure to begin with. Those holding their breath and waiting for a Hawk collapse have since turned blue and passed out; Phil Martelli's team has hacked through the A-10's best and finally reached the national spotlight at No. 23 in the Associated Press Top 25 Poll.

St. Joe's looked every bit as good as the hype indicates yesterday, using dizzying efficiency in the second half to bury the Dukes, 90-70. Duquesne (9-19, 3-12 A-10) showed some life in the early goings of its Senior Day battle by opening up a 23-14 lead, but simply had no answer to the inside-out balance of the Hawks (23-4, 13-1).

But was it too much Hawks or not enough Dukes that spelled the 20-point drubbing? Is St. Joe's really this good? Swingman Marvin O'Connor (28 points, 10-of-18 from the field) and point guard Jameer Nelson (10 assists) would make a compelling case that they are. Anyone who watched O'Connor's final three-pointer yesterday roll achingly around the rim before dropping in would swear that this team has the roundball powers-that-be on its side.

Such divine assistance wasn't really necessary, though, against what Duquesne calls its defense. Nelson's third field goal consisted of the 6-foot floor general dribbling through four Duke defenders before popping a 10-foot jumper from the right baseline. It was, quite literally, a 4-on-1 in favor of Duquesne; Nelson never once looked to pass the ball. The Dukes are that bad.

With only one conference loss and two games remaining, the Hawks can wrap up the regular-season A-10 crown by winning either Tuesday at home against the Minutemen or Saturday at La Salle (10-14, 4-9 A-10). Should St. Joe's drop both games and UMass win its regular-season finale at home against St. Bonaventure (16-10, 7-7 A-10), the Minutemen would capture a share of the conference title.

ADAM WHITE

Is such a finish really that important for the Maroon and White? The team has already locked up a bye in the first round of the conference tournament. A No. 1 seed gives you the luxury of playing the lowest seed in Round Two, but does Flint's squad really gain a huge advantage by facing a Fordham or a La Salle instead of a St. Bonaventure or a George Washington? UMass came within a last-second three of beating all four of these teams, and can avenge that lone loss by bouncing the Bonnies from the William D. Mullins Center on Saturday.

That's not to say that a win on Tuesday wouldn't be HUGE for UMass; in actuality, it would be the hands-down biggest win of the year for the Minutemen. Forget the over-time thriller at Temple. Forget either of the decisive victories over Xavier. Forget the home trouncing of Dayton.

The difference Tuesday can be summed up in one word. Confidence.

The Hawks are playing with a bravado that is beyond dangerous. O'Connor and forward Bill Phillips are past the point of whooping it up after big plays; they now nod know-

Turn to MINUTEMEN, page 7

Playoffs remain within reach for Minutemen

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – Both teams had something to play for, albeit entirely different things.

The Boston College hockey team was playing for position in the upcoming NCAA tournament, while Massachusetts was trying to keep pace with Merrimack for the last playoff position within Hockey East.

For one night both teams played for the same thing, a win.

But a win would elude the Eagles, and the Minutemen escaped with a much-needed point in the conference.

At the end of 65 minutes of feverish hockey action, the contest at Conte Forum would end in a tie. The tie allowed UMass to move into a deadlock for eighth place with the Warriors, as they lost to Maine 5-4 in overtime at the Volpe Complex.

The Maroon and White was able to escape with a tie due in large part to the play of goaltender Mike Johnson. The junior made a career-high and UMass Division I record 60 saves en route to the draw.

"Good goaltending is like good pitching: it can do a lot of things to help a team out," UMass head coach Don Cahoon said. "I thought our guys competed. Obviously, we are what we are and they [BC] are what they are. Clearly they're very good offensively and put so much pressure on you. But we were resilient enough and never got discouraged when they got goals back and we stayed within ourselves."

"I didn't really feel that great before [the game], but you feel good after the first save and a few saves later It turned out okay for us," Johnson said. "I'd rather have a night like tonight where you're just diving around. You're into the game the whole time. The guys helped out, [denying] them third and fourth chances. I just had to make one and they'd clear it."

Diving around and making saves was an understatement, as Johnson was forced to make numerous saves while down and out to keep the Eagle sharpshooters from finding the back of the net.

UMass got on the board first when a Brad Nizwantowski shot was saved by BC netminder Scott Clemmensen, but the puck was batted around in front of the net and Kris Wallis banged home the rebound.

But the lead would be short-lived, as Johnson was unable to keep Hobey Baker Award candidate Brian Gionta off the scoreboard. With Darcy King In the penalty box for tripping, the vaunted BC power play knotted the game.

Freshman forward Ben Eaves made a beautiful cross-ice pass with the man advantage to a wide-open Gionta at the left post for the goal.

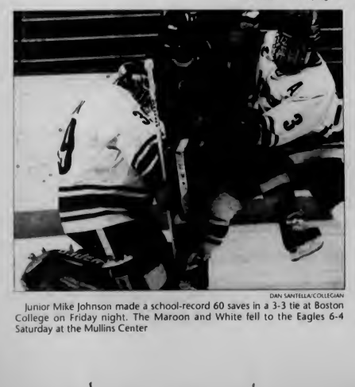
The score remained that until midway through the second period, when R.J. Gates tallied a goal on a wrist shot from the slot. The Gates goal was made possible by a superb individual effort by Jeff Turner. Turner led a two-on-one up ice, but as he skated into the Eagle zone the puck was poke-checked away. This did not bother the senior captain, who made a diving pass to Gates who was all alone in the slot.

But the lead would be relinquished just over a minute later, when Keyu Kolanos beat Johnson with a wrist shot from the left faceoff circle. The goal was the end result of a powerful one-on-one effort in which the sophomore outmuscled UMass defenseman Samuli Isikanen.

The Minutemen would one again grab the lead late in the middle frame, when Tim Turner scored his team-leading 15th goal of the season. The goal occurred after a BC penalty had expired, but Kolanos was unable to get back in the play before the goal.

The Eagles would get the equalizer at the 7:08 mark of the third period, when Gionta broke from behind the net and ripped a shot that was stopped by

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Junior Mike Johnson made a school-record 60 saves in a 3-3 tie at Boston College on Friday night. The Maroon and White fell to the Eagles 6-4 Saturday at the Mullins Center

People who thought Tim Burton directed the new release Monkeybone can find out who really directed it in today's Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

UMass hoops looks to keep its hopes for an A-10 title alive with tonight's St. Joe's showdown. Check out Sports.

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 89 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, February 27, 2001

Amherst prepares for select board elections

By Mark Ramirez
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor and several alumni are among the nine candidates competing in the April 3 election for two seats on the Amherst Select Board.

Paul Bobrowski was a UMass student and lived in Amherst from 1975-1985. He moved back into town three years ago. He is running for the Select Board because he believes it needs a fresh perspective.

"I am disturbed by the lines drawn on issues like the parking garage," he said. He attributes some problems to a lack of communication," he said. "For example, I can't get a definitive answer when I ask how many parking spaces will be gained with the new garage."

Bobrowski also believes his skills as a lawyer would help on the Select Board.

From his time attending UMass, he explained that he has seen improvement in the relationship between the town and the University. He added that because town policies affect student life, students should participate in local government.

"As an ex-student, I certainly have sympathy for students who live here," he said.

Marjorie Crossman has lived on the same street in Amherst for 81 years. She said that there is no accountability in local government.

"There are so many things in this town that are not right," she said. "It's not right to take money out of the sewer fund and put it into another project [the parking garage]. It could lead to major problems."

Crossman believes more should be done for the elderly.

Aaron Wilson graduated from UMass in 1994 with a degree in History and Legal Studies. He claims a primary base of support from the town's three colleges, particularly UMass students.

Election 2001

"Undergrad students," he said, "are a force to be reckoned with in Amherst politics.

"You're not going to find someone who cares as much about students, in a town hostile to students in general."

He explained that he is concerned about relationships between the town and the University, real estate development and the increase of the town's population.

"The urbanization trend is threatening the quality of life and the character of the town," he said.

Wilson wants to repeal the towns keg-licensing law. Another concern for him is the potential removal of the voting machine in Southwest.

Wilson wants to strike down the regulation that prevents more than four unrelated people from living together. He also objects to landlords using records from the University's student judicial system in deciding whether to rent to them or not.

"The judicial system is arbitrary and unfair and it's disturbing that the ability to rent is based on that. It's an anti-student ordinance," said Wilson.

Wilson was a founder of UMass's Cannabis Reform Coalition. He organized a campaign to pass a pro-marijuana town referendum. He also campaigned for Anne Awad, who won a seat on the Select Board on a pro-student platform.

Rob Kusner has been a professor of Mathematics at UMass since 1988. He has been on Amherst's transportation committee since 1990, was its chair from 1998-2000, and is now a non-voting member. Kusner is a member of Town Meeting, and of the town's conservation commission, which enforces state and federal wetland protection laws.

One of his concerns is the phenomenon of sprawl and the consequent loss of farmland.

"We have some of the best farmland here in Amherst," he said, "and it's disappearing under parking lots."

Kusner would also like to see more affordable housing for UMass faculty, students and staff, and good choices regarding school budgets at all levels. He also questions the enforcement of marijuana laws, and how police resources could be put to better use.

Kusner is considering withdrawing from the race and endorsing another candidate if the issues he cares about are addressed.

"It might be better to come back in a couple of years," he said. "I just want to see the town governed in a way that is good."

Jacqueline Brown-Hazard has been a member of Town Meeting and has served on school committees, but said she's new to town politics. She said she was approached to run by several people.

"They feel the town needs a progressive choice," she said. "I was raised to believe that when you're called, you do your civic duty."

She claimed that the issue of the parking garage didn't affect her decision to run. Her concerns include transportation, specifically the PVTA— "somehow expanding it to there's more service to the north and south ends of town, and more accessibility for seniors."

Brown-Hazard also hopes to address racism in the community and is concerned about how the town's open spaces are used. She believes marijuana should be decriminalized and is concerned about how marijuana laws are enforced.

Brown-Hazard is a UMass alumni and currently works for the university's Economics department.

"I look at the process as sort of an adventure," she said, "I'll try to do the best I can and bring my voice to the discussion."

Eddy Goldberg has been a member of the Amherst planning board for almost five years. With Select Board chair Bryan Harvey opting not to run for reelection, he was asked if he was going to run.

"I thought that I could serve the town better as a Select Board member than with the planning board," said Goldberg.

He said the key word is "balance." As a member of the planning board, Goldberg said he often hears from both developers who want to build and neighbors who want nothing built. He believes his five years of experience have improved his ability to balance the law with the needs of two sides of an issue, all with a view of long term good for the most people.

"I think I represent a voice of reason in tough times," he said.

Goldberg said he is "all for student participation in local government. Although it's hard to feel like you're a part of it if you're new and will soon be leaving."

He said he's not sure how students should participate.

"If they're interested," he said, "they can attend Town Meetings and learning for a while and if they feel they know enough, participate."

Pruddy Gomez owns Pruddy's in downtown Amherst.

"I'm running because I believe that the Select Board, besides being racist and unfair, doesn't represent the majority of thinking In town," he said. Gomez also ran for Select Board in 1999, but lost.

Gomez said that town government "has the same ideas as 20 years ago – the same format, the same people. That has to change."

The 11 percent voting rate, he said, means that only a few people are interested in keeping the town as it was two decades ago.

"The town government talks about multiculturalism and being open," said Gomez, "but there are no minorities in positions that make a difference. It makes me wonder."

Gomez added that he is pro-student. "I love students," he said. Three of his children are attending UMass while one has already graduated. Students, as well as minorities, the poor and working class, are "ghosts" to Amherst government, he explained, because their voices are not heard.

Gomez believes, however, that things are changing.

Turn to SELECT BOARD, page 2

SGA senate seats officially filled

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Amidst months of frustration and an incredible story, the Student Government Association (SGA) at the University of Massachusetts finally has a fully functional senate.

Jim Eltringham will remain the Speaker of the Senate, and within the next few weeks, a Ways and Means commitee will be put in place to aid the SGA with monetary distribution.

The SGA will now be able to concentrate primarily on the elections for President and Trustee that will take place in April. As of yet, no candidates have been announced for either position.

Last Tuesday's election saw 6.5 percent of the student population voting at all dining halls and in the campus center. The following is a list of the results of the Fe.b 20 SGA's senatorial election. These results were ratified Sunday night in a meeting of the SGA's coordinating council. The number next to the winner's name is the amount of votes he or she earned.

COMMUTER
Steve Gill (49), Meir Hamilton (48), Jennifer Teixeira (44), Aaron Saunders (41), Andrew Spagnoli (40), Nir Kronenberg (41), Michael Whitehouse (37), Mike Marin (36), Michael Stevenson (36), Michael Riendeau (36), Mihcael Banchick (29), Malcolm Beckwith (12), Mik Froimowitz (8), Kate Schiavani (4), Melissa Robinson (4), Lindsay Dipesa (4), Josh Wayne (3), Marc Togneri (3), Jeremy Slatken (3), Jed Levine (3), Zach Spillman (3), Jaime Testa (3), Rachael Zippin (3), Peter Amstutz (3) Scott Turnberg (3), Michael Goldstein (3), Natimma Arrastia (3)

(Note: There is an 11-way tie for 10 of the 28 seats. Zach Spillman has indicated that he wishes to decline being a senator. If that is true, then there is no longer a tie.)

ON CAMPUS NON RESIDENTIAL LIVING AREA
Mike Taugher (14), John Feldman (13)

CENTRAL RESIDENTIAL AREA
Baker
Matt Sherman (29)
Van Meter
Mandy Zuckerberg (3)
Gorman
Thomas Fleenor (19)

MAUREEN MASKE / COLLEGIAN

It may have taken four months, but after last week's elections, twenty-eight empty commuter seats in the SGA senate are now officially filled.

Central At Large
Jessica Lider (52), Ratdavone Yotharath (40), Jame Jee (38), Andrew Bucaddo (39), Peter Zwahlen (38)

NORTHEAST RESIDENTIAL AREA
William Allen (55), Edward Krammerer (51), Rui Wang (44), Thao Tran (43), Lakeisha Wilson (9)

SOUTHWEST RESIDENTIAL AREA
John Quincy Adams
Tom Murphy (29), Jeremy Laubinger (24)
John Adams
Chris Carlozzi (42), DaveSynott (29
Washington
Danielle Arsenault (40), Pat Morin (18)
Coolidge
Olvyemi Famuyide (7), Jill McHale (2), Tina Gagas (2), Casey Gordon (2), Noelia Santana (2), Victoria Matchek (2)
(Note: There is a 5-way tie for one seat in Coolidge)

Kennedy
Mark Whitmore (23), John Interbartolo (18)
Cance
Alex Lastin (30)
Patterson
Sarah Melville (4)
Pierpont
Kerri Simpson (2)
Southwest At Large
Michael Bond (175), Michael Boyer (170), Luis Nieves (169), Brian Santos (168), Effi Baeshen (158), Nathan Carter (150)

ORCHARD HILL
Grayson
Justin Provencher (40)
Field
Courtney Horrocks (43)
Webster
Matt Pelnar (45)
Dickinson
Umonijude Naval (50)
Orchard Hill At Large
Bill Powers (185)

SYLVAN Cashin
Brian Berry (131)
Mcnamara
Mike Morin (141)
Brown
Seth Curtis (6)
Sylvan At Large
Ioanna Scheerer (25), Brian Thompson (24)

Referendum Question 1:
Would you like to see an establishment such as McDonald's, Wendy's or Burger King in the Campus Center?
Yes (704), No (430)

Referendum Question 2:
Would you like to be able to purchase the UMass Index Yearbook through a positive check box on your fall semester tuitoin bill your senior year?
Yes (725), No (430)

Referendum Question 3
Should we have a bar on campus?
Yes (767), No (305)

Herald recount assures Bush's win

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

George W. Bush would have still won the presidential election even if the Miami-Dade County recount had been completed, according to a study sponsored by the Miami Herald, its parent company Knight-Ridder and USA Today.

Using liberal standards, including counting every dimple, pinprick and hanging chad identified in the section for presidential votes on the ballots, the Herald concluded that Democratic candidate Al Gore did not receive enough votes to swing Dade County, the state of Florida and, ultimately, the Electoral College in his favor.

"There were many people who expected there was a bonanza of votes here for Al Gore, and it turns out there was not," Herald executive editor Martin Baron said Sunday.

The study, which reviewed all 10,644 uncounted ballots in Miami-Dade, concluded that Gore would have gained at most 49 votes in the county. The tally netted 1,555 ballots that might be interpreted as a vote for Gore, but also found an additional 1,506 that might be interpreted as a vote for Bush.

On 4,892 ballots, there was no presidential choice indicated. On 2,058 ballots, markings were made in spaces that had been assigned to no candidate. One hundred and six ballots bore markings for other candidates, and an additional 527 ballots were deemed to have markings for more than one presidential candidate.

Despite the new evidence supporting Bush's Electoral College victory, Gore remained the winner of the popular vote. Republicans maintained their staunch stance that Bush has always been the winner.

"President Bush was lawfully elected on Election Day. He won after the first statewide machine recount," Mark Wallace, a Miami lawyer for the Republican Party, told Fox News. "He won after the manual recount, and he won at the conclusion of all the litigation."

National accounting firm BDO Seiman was hired to count all 60,000 Florida undervotes – those on which the machine was unable to render a decision. Miami-Dade's results were the first to be released.

The Palm Beach Post had previously released results of its own review of the 10,600 Miami-Dade undervotes. In that count, the Post found Bush gained six more votes than Gore.

Upon hearing the results of the study, Bush maintained the position of confidence that he has had since he was named winner of Nov. 7 presidential election, despite enormous controversy surrounding the contest. He expressed a desire to put the election behind him and move forward with the affairs of the country.

"Hopefully all the focus on the past is over with. It's time to move forward," Bush told reporters as he met with his Cabinet to discuss his pending budget request, due on Wednesday.

Bush also said that he planned to reach out to any voters who might still feel alienated at tonight's address to a joint-session of Congress.

"[Tonight's] speech is a part of moving forward. We've worked hard here in this administration to reach out to people who may not have supported me. I think we're making pretty good progress," he said.

Following the November election, Gore had asked for a hand recount in four counties including Miami-Dade. The request was ultimately denied by the US Supreme Court. Democrats had widely predicted Gore would have gained 600 votes in Miami-Dade, enough to overcome Bush's margin in Florida and hand the state's 25 electoral votes, and the election, to Gore.

Florida Secretary of State and co-chair of the Bush campaign in Florida, Katherine Harris made the crucial decision to stop recounts in three Florida counties and to refuse their revised tallies. On Nov. 17, she certified Bush the winner in Florida by 537 votes.

Information from the Associated Press and Fox News was used in this article.

MAUREEN MASKE / COLLEGIAN

"... extra anchovies, please."
Brook Meyer's kitty, Destina

■ select board

continued from page 1

"There are two good people on the Select Board," Gomez said. "Awad and Seppala – but they're the minority and it's hard to fight the majority of the Town Manager. Select Board chair and the town lawyer, who are untouchable because they are not held accountable.

"In this town there are too many things to fix and I could not turn my back on it."

He said that he wants to "protect people without a voice from the bullshit that goes on behind doors."

Dolly Jolly is the incumbent running for reelection.

Nathan Salwen is a member of the Comprehensive Planning Committee and the Public Transportation and Bicycle Committee.

Bryan Harvey, associate provost for planning and assessment at UMass, has served as chair of the Select Board for the last seven years but will not be running this year.

Select Board positions are unpaid. Terms are three years long. To run for the Amherst Select Board, a candidate must be a registered Amherst voter, and must submit nomination petitions with 30 signatures from registered Amherst voters. This year's filing deadline was Feb. 13. The deadline for withdrawal is March 1.

Astronomy professor van Blerkom dies at 58
University mourns distinguished constituent

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Astronomy Department of the University of Massachusetts will miss distinguished Professor David J. van Blerkom, who passed away Feb. 16 at the Baystate Medical Center in Springfield. Van Blerkom was 58.

Van Blerkom has been a staple of the Astronomy department since 1969 when first arriving at UMass. In his years here, the honored professor served as head of the Astronomy department from 1980-1997 and was currently teaching the honors course of the Solar System for the spring semester.

"[Van Blerkom] was someone that undergrads to faculty could talk to," said close friend and colleague Tom Arnie. "He always had good advice and could always help."

The University frequently rewarded Van Blerkom's considerable accomplishments. The 31 year professor received a Distinguished Teaching Award in 1996, followed by the Honors Appreciation Award in 1998. While teaching at UMass, the Honors Program also benefited from his work. Van Blerkom was a passionate part-time scholar of Ancient Civilizations and taught honors courses in Egyptian Hieroglyphics. Van Blerkom was fascinated with the ancient civilization and was self-taught in the language. When the course was offered, he often attracted 15-20 students for his teachings.

The University of Colorado-Boulder also had the opportunity to have van Blerkom as a visiting fellow at the Joint Institute of Laboratory Astrophysics.

"David was a great person, a great friend, a superb teacher. He was compassionate, and was an excellent scientist," said Arnie.

As well as being a faculty member at UMass, van Blerkom served on the Board of Directors of the Pioneer Valley Symphony Orchestra. During his time on the board, the state provided funding for the orchestra due to the perseverance of van Blerkom.

Professor David J. Van Blerkom leaves behind his wife of 36 years, Janet van Blerkom, and three children, Daniel, Suzanne, and Derek, as well as a brother, Jonathan van Blerkom.

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this article.

UMASS BALLROOM TEAM presents

SWING into SPRING

Feb 28, 2001 • Student Union Ballroom
Free Admission and Refreshments
Demos by UMass Ballroom Dance Team
7pm Free Lesson
8-12pm Open Dance
no experience or partner necessary!
Questions? Call Danielle 546-2973
http://www.umass.edu/ballroom

racial equality environmental justice welfare reform reproductive justice freedom from violence HIV/AIDS globalization gay/lesbian/bisexual/transgender rights economic equality healthcare and childcare support for immigrants sexual health education

You are cordially invited to attend our fifteenth annual conference at Hampshire College:

FROM ABORTION RIGHTS TO SOCIAL JUSTICE:
BUILDING THE MOVEMENT FOR REPRODUCTIVE FREEDOM

March 30 – April 1, 2001
Hampshire College
Amherst, Massachusetts

The conference is free, open to the public, and wheelchair accessible. Housing, childcare, and sign language interpretation provided with advanced registration. Registration forms are available on our website at http://hamp.hampshire.edu/~clpp. To receive a registration form via snail mail, please call us at 413-559-5416.

STUDENT TRAVEL

London.....$211
Paris.....$286
Amsterdam.....$273
Tokyo.....$609

student airfares
BEDS ON A BUDGET
rail passes
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1944. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

SHOOT...SHOOT...DRIVE (away)
The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN PRESENTS
ATLANTIC 10 ShootOut
ROAD TO PHILLY

CO-ED TEAM HOOP SHOOTING CONTEST
Win a Trip to Philly and a 2001 Chevy Tracker

SHOOT... From six spots on the floor. Qualifiers shoot at halftime of a Men's Game
SHOOT... Winners ShootOut in Philly at the Atlantic 10 Championship— March 9 & 10
DRIVE... The ShootOut Champions drive away,
EACH* in a New Chevy Tracker*

2-Year Lease

Official Sponsors
CHEVY TRUCKS LIKE A ROCK
GMAC
US AIRWAYS
verizon
Festival Sponsor
Aloe Spring

QUALIFYING ROUND:
Thursday, March 1st @ The Cage @ 3pm
CAMPUS SHOOTOUT FINALS:
Halftime - March 3rd vs. St. Bonaventure @ Mullins Center

FREE & OPEN TO ALL STUDENTS TO ENTER:
LOG ON: www.atlantic10.org
Or See Intramural Director for Details

International Briefs

Compiled By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

ASIA PACIFIC

Indonesia- Hundreds of refugees are fleeing to Borneo to try and avoid the ethnic violence that has already lead to the death of hundreds of ethnic Madurese by ethnic Dayak in the city of Sampit. For more than a week there has been violence; leading to the death of 270 people as well as widespread looting and arson.

The government released a statement in which they claimed to be committed to putting a halt on to the killing, however, according to the BBC, the military has not yet begun to take serious action against the Dayak tribesmen who have been responsible for the massacre. As many as 25,000 people are attempting to leave the country, 10,000 have already left.

Thailand-The members of the Chinese spiritual movement of the Falun Gong have cancelled their meeting in Thailand that was scheduled for April. They called off the meeting after mounting pressure from both Beijing and Thai officials. They also cited concern from Buddhist organizations in Thailand as partly the reason for the cancellation. Apparently the group did not want to upset island unity between the ethnic Chinese and the Thai, as well as cause friction between the Thai government and the Chinese. The falungong is legal in Thailand but has been outlawed in China, where it is seen as a dangerous religious cult.

China- The United Nations has called for an end to labor camps in China, calling them a violation of universal human rights. The labor camps, who practice 'reeducation through labor' allow police to lock up people such as prostitutes, petty thieves or drug-users for three years of forced labor without trial. A New-York based human rights group said that there are up to 260,000 people in labor camps, and 60 percent of the people are in because of such small crimes as disturbing the peace. Other human rights organizations have claimed that the Chinese police send people who are supposed political dissidents to the labor camps for thought crime. UN human rights commissioner Mary Robinson condemned the country for this barbaric practice during a two-day seminar in Bejing.

Africa

Cape Verde-In a presidential election similar to that of the United States, there has been no official winner announced in the recent elections. Both parties, the Liberals and the Socialists, have claimed victory. Liberal candidate Carlos Velga claimed to have won by 1,000 votes, however, the Socialist candidate announced on the radio to have one by 500 votes. According to the BBC, there are approximately 1,000 votes left to be counted from six polling stations. Both candidates are former prime ministers and have been dominant political figures since the country's independence in 1975.

Congo- The United Nations announced that they have devised a step-by-step plan to withdraw troops from the war-torn nation. The plan, which was drafted by French officials in cooperation with the United Nations Security Council, representatives from several African nations and members of the Congolese rebel armies. The resolution outlines the plan for a 14-day period in the middle of March in which the foreign armies that are currently stationed along battle lines will begin to pull back. The goal is to have all armies away from borders by May and be out of the area completely by next fall. Uganda and Rwanda have already agreed to start pulling back. The plan also urges the Congo allies of Zimbabwe, Angola and Namibia to start pulling back as well. Secretary General Kofi Annan has called the plan the first step in an overdue peacekeeping process.

Somalia- Almost 30,000 people gathered in a stadium to celebrate the inauguration of new Somali President Abdulkassim Salat Hassan, the first leader in a centralized government in ten years. The transition of the new government was peaceful with a relaxed, but obvious police presence. In an unprecedented move the new president spoke in front of the crowd and thanked the teachers of the country for continuing to teach even through the long period of war. He also promised that the new government would start working and helping its citizens pull out of poverty soon.

Latin America

Colombia-President Andres Pastrana has arrived in the United States today to meet with President Bush to talk about aid to the country. President Clinton gave Pastrana $1.3 billion in aid last year to help fund both the military efforts to end the civil war and to destroy the fields of cocaine and stop the drug trade. So far the only thing that the US aid has gone to has been crop eradication, which has not only destroyed acres of cocaine fields but also acres of legal crops and hurt the surrounding soil to an extent that some critics have said that local farmers won't be able to plant anything. Several thousand people have fled the area into neighboring Ecuador and hundreds of the remaining Colombians have left the rural areas for the urban centers looking for work but not finding any. Since the US gave aid to the country, the human rights violations have increased, leading to thousands of homeless people and regular massacres. It is unclear whether or not President Bush will give anymore aid to the Colombians.

Mexico-Zapatista rebels have begun a 52-city March for Dignity across southern Mexico in an effort to draw attention to the Zapatista movement and call for new rights for indigenous peoples. Though there has been a cease-fire between the Zapatistas and the Mexican military, there are still tensions between the rebels and the government. President Fox has stated that finding peace with the Zapatistas is a top priority as well as finding a place for them within the society and meet the needs that they demand.

MOLSON
CollegeFest
ONLY $159
Springbreak
5 Days & Nights
Parties•Condo•Lift Tix
SKI TRAVEL
1 800 999 skit
WWW.SKITRAVEL.COM

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job

Learn to bartend in a weekend!
Classes Begin
Fri., March 2nd 6:00pm
Valentine Hill, Amherst College
Call now! Space is limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA

Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real barstyle setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Unplanned Pregnancy?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
413-584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten years Adoption Experience
19 Main Street, Northampton, MA 01060
ad-opinion@fullcircleadoptions.com

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
* See what you eat!
* See what you drink!
* See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS
See You There
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

Ash Wednesday
the Newman Center
472 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
(413) - 549 - 0300

Wednesday, February 28th 2001

8:00 AM
• Mass with distribution of Ashes

12:15 PM
• Mass with distribution of Ashes

5:15 PM
• Mass with distribution of Ashes

7:00 PM
• Liturgy of the Word with distribution of Ashes

9:00 PM
• Liturgy of the Word with distribution of Ashes

Join the Catholic community as we begin the 40-day Lenten Journey.

The offertory collection on this day will assist the Catholic Relief Services in its outreach to the earthquake victims of India and El Salvador

UMASS The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
Beginning February 26th.
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook
ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Four people? bad sign for semester

Our Student Government Association should be building on the monumental fact that it actually appeared to do something right. Its last election, while bringing out only a paltry 6.4 percent of the student population, was ratified and the students now have a Senate again.

To show just how important this was, the meeting to ratify said elections was attended by four people.

Four.

What is it, exactly, that leads the SGA leadership to have such contempt for students and their Senate? Jeff Howe brought charges against the last Senate and doesn't have the decency to show up for Sunday night's meeting? Gabriel Tavarez is one of two front-runners for the SGA Presidency and he doesn't show up? An over-zealous Judiciary threatens Jim Ehringham's future on campus and he does show up for the meeting?

Quorum for the meeting was four and initially, the plan was to have three in attendance and one person on a speaker-phone – an out and out embarrassment.

Our Student Government Association is a ridiculous, embarrassing mess and nobody seems interested in fixing the problems plaguing It.

What should have been the most important meeting of this semester could barely make quorum, a ridiculous reality that undercuts those who suggest that the SGA is an important body. Except for the fact that it is an important body, a group that controls more than $1.5 million of student money, which is simply sitting, collecting dust, while clubs go without.

For recently elected senators, there can be only one charge – the immediate distribution of budgets to RSOs and every senator had better find a way to make the process work well and work quickly. If clubs go without, then all the ballyhooed about the SGA not mattering will be for naught; somebody will have suffered.

Be it the sword-fighting-sci-fi club or the disc-spinning-Concepto Latino, clubs cannot be allowed to be underfunded or un-funded because of ridiculous and on-going SGA feuds. The Senate must come together, regardless of the ineptitude shown by the SGA leadership, to distribute the money that is desperately needed by clubs on campus.

Beyond that most simple of charges, the Senate must win back the faith, the trust, of a lackadaisical student body that could care less about its existence or its well-being. It must win back some simple, some small measure of respect from a student body that sees it as nothing more than a worthless joke, a blase calamity, and a collection of incompetence.

The Senate, for the course of this entire semester, has been a depressing lesson in how student government should not work. After firing itself, after endless political wrangling, after countless spats that could have been avoided, after repeated failure, the Senate finally has a chance to do something good and distribute the money it has been charged to distribute. In doing that well, perhaps it can earn back the respect of a student body that doesn't care about it.

But they had better not try to do so in the manner that Sunday's meeting was conducted. If meetings have to stretch for quorum, the Senate will be a disaster by the end of the semester; if people won't even participate, than why?

We aren't sure.

The lost weekend

BY AN BENHARRIS

I haven't showered for two days. That's probably the most disgusting thing I've ever admitted to 25,000 people in my entire life. The worst part about it is that the nasty smell emitting from the dirty core of my revolting body is the least of my worries right now.

The weekend I've just endured has given the phrase, "just one of those days," a much more sadistically twisted meaning. I'm not having just one of those days. I've been having just one of those days over and over and over again.

I suppose it started on Thursday. No, I take that back. It started the day I was born. Sometimes I forget that I was born brainless, spineless and with the least amount of luck you could ever imagine. I'm so unlucky; I make Bobby, the broken leg, herpes carrying, mono patient who lost his car keys, look like a Vegas crackerjack. Oddly enough, my cat's name is Lucky, so we know where all the good fortune went in my family.

Anyway, back to Thursday. Thursday was the day that I decided a higher being was having tons of fun with me. It started off as a regular day. I had my acting class. I pretended I could dance. People laughed; it was normal. Oh normality, why must you run far, far away from me? I'm distinctly sure that if you've ever read anything I've written before, you know that I'm not that much of a "ladies man." I've spent the past three and a half years whining about my lack of a love life, and trying to get you to feel sorry for me. (Hell, even when I write news stories about the Student Government Association, I'll throw a dig about my pathetic nature in there. "A motion was passed today. It ended with me asking some girl out and she told me to kiss her ass.") I ran into two of my ex-girlfriends last Thursday. You know what it feels like to run into your ex-girlfriend? It's like having blood taken twice in one day.

